"The book is a slight story of certain events in the Belgian Congo, told with a pleasantly ironical touch and a good deal of admirable, if somewhat excessive, economy. Its author is said to know the country he writes about, but not very much of Africa gets into the book; he is so careful about keeping down detail and his background is of little or no importance. . . 'Congo Gods' is a first novel, its author having written a good deal in other fields, after a lifetime of adventures." Herschel Brickell

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 Ag 18 '29 800w

Reviewed by S: M. Elam
New Repub 60:305 O 30 '29 80w

"The real interest in this translation from the Danish lies in its acute insight into racial psychology, white and black, in apposition, and in its swiftly colorful, brutally realistic pictures at first hand of life in the Belgian Congo by a man who lived it there for six years. . . 'Congo Gods' is worth reading; neither its characters nor its background have been 'prettied,' and its acrid irony has the tang of truth." F: H. Martens

+ N Y Evening Post p6m Ag 10 '29 450w

"A novel of power and striking characterizations of the Congo. Lütken knows at first hand what he is writing about. It is pleasure to read fiction with an authentic background, written by a novelist who can avoid the fixed fiction traditions."

+ N Y Times p24 Ag 25 '29 580w

"A slight but interesting story by a man who knows the country and the people." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 152:629 Ag 14 '29 110w

LUTZ, ALMA. Emma Willard, daughter of democracy. 291p il $4 Houghton

B or 92 Willard, Mrs Emma (Hart) 29-11532

A graduate of the Emma Willard school has written this biography of the young schoolmistress who took her stand for the higher education of women when in 1819 she presented to the New York legislature her "Plan for improving female education." The success of the female seminary she founded two years later at Troy, New York, made her a national figure.

---

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p4 N 27 '29

---

Booklist 26:28 O '29

"The writing of the book is, perhaps, at its best in the early chapters which give a vivid and delightful picture of Colonial life in New England at the time when Emma Hart was a child. The later chapters lose something of this spontaneity. The work reflects, one feels, something of the pompous periods of the many letters which come from Mrs. Willard's own pen." Mary Lee

Bookm 69:550 Jl '29 850w

"Miss Lutz has written a sympathetic biography of an important woman. If her own judgment of the life and character seems at times a bit clouded and unsure, that is perhaps because of her desire to be fair and appreciative." H. F. Whicher

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Je 23 '29 1150w

Reviewed by A. R. Marble
Boston Transcript p5 My 25 '29 1300w

J Home Econ 21:683 S '29 60w

"A straightforward biography of the sort one sees too seldom nowadays. It is a clear and undecorated narrative, soundly and convincingly documented, with all the dates and episodes in proper order. If this biography has a major fault at all, it is the comparatively generous fault of hero worship." Margaret Wallace

+ N Y Evening Post p4s Je 8 '29 520w

"Mrs. Lutz's account, while it is a bit heavy-footed and would have gained much by a more vivid and dramatic manner of telling, is a capable and authoritative biography." F. F. Kelly

+ — N Y Times p4 Je 9 '29 2000w

"Alma Lutz, a graduate of the Emma Willard school, has taken a career which although splendid could not be called picturesque, and has used it to make an absorbing book. By good use of rich stores of material, including many letters, she has told, simply and directly the story of Mrs. Willard's training and inspiration, of her labors and the years that crowned them with success."

+ Outlook 152:188 My 29 '29 420w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 80:20 Ag '29 100w
St Louis 27:290 O '29
Springf'd Republican p7e Jl 28 '29 900w
Wis Lib Bul 25:276 Jl '29

LUTZ, MRS GRACE (LIVINGSTON) HILL. Duskin. 304p $2 Lippincott

29-9931

Carol Berkley, secretary to the President of the Fawcett Construction, is sent to Chicago to fire Duskin who is falling down on the job. In place of the inefficient man she expects to find Carol meets a harrassed young executive working day and night to outwit the company's rivals. Instead of firing Duskin Carol stays to help him and to share his victory.

---

"A harmless romance this, with sentiment and a moral."
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Je 2 '29 80w

Typical of Mrs Hill's style at its best, the story is strongly tinged with a religious note, even though Carol is no goody-goody heroine who never makes mistakes."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 8 '29 200w

Reviewed by L. H. Titterton
N Y World p11m Ap 14 '29 120w

LUYTEN, WILLEM JACOB. Pageant of the stars. 300p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

520 Astronomy 29-4314

The author, assistant professor of astronomy at Harvard university, describes the amazing developments of modern astronomy with a readability that will appeal to the non-mathematical and a power that reveals the romance and unity of creation.

---

Booklist 25:311 My '29

"They are all vital questions, alive with interest; and all are brilliantly answered. There are, all told, fifteen major topics of discussion, stretching from our own earthly abode to island universes and spiral nebulae. The reader will undoubtedly be stimulated by this glowing drama of the heavens."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 3 '29 170w
N Y New Tech Bks 14:4 Ja '29
N Y Times p5 Ap 14 '29 170w

"Professor Luyten's book is excellent. It tells in readable style, with the romantic quality which is often the unconscious attribute of a scientist's writing, a great deal about astronomy and the methods of astronomers."

+ Outlook 151:110 Ja 16 '29 130w

"This book tells an interesting story in an interesting way. The illustrations, both rhetorical and pictorial, are excellent and fresh."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:675 F 9 '29 60w

LYMAN, EUGENE WILLIAM. Meaning of selfhood and faith in immortality. (Ingersoll lecture, 1928) 47p $1 Harvard univ. press [4s 6d Oxford]

237 Immortality 28-21211

"Repudiating a naturalistic philosophy of the self, the lecturer calls attention to the creative originality of human mental and moral life, and concludes that such a self is a psychic superphysical reality."—J Religion

---

"Every step is carefully presented, every point made clear-cut. It seems one of the most lucid, compelling presentations made in the Ingersoll lecture for many a year."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 9 '29 300w

"A closely knit argument for immortality based on a particularly well wrought out statement of a philosophy personalistic to the extent of stressing the reality of human selves and of the Cosmic Creative Reason and Moral Will. Worthy of very careful study."

LYMAN, E. W:—Continued
+ Christian Century 46:460 Ap 4 '29 40w
J Religion 9:332 Ap '29 50w
Times [London] Lit Sup p942 N 29 '28 120w

LYNCH, DENIS TILDEN. An epoch and a man; Martin Van Buren and his times. 566p il $5 Liveright

B or 92 Van Buren, Martin 29-23484

A biography of Martin Van Buren, the "master spoilsman," the first professional politician to become president. Mr Lynch treats Van Buren on the whole unsympathetically, tho he admits admiration for his legal abilities, his independence in general, and his real mastery of the political machine. He gives a clear picture of the Dutch background of the Van Buren family in the opening chapters, and the parts of the book describing early New York state politics are of special interest.

"While the biography is neither defense nor attack, while it is in no sense special pleading, it paints Van Buren in most unattractive colors. The reader is led into the mazes of New York factional politics and turned adrift, and the social and economic issues that underlay the quarrels of Clintons and Livingstons, Burrs and Van Burens, are ignored. Details, relevant and irrelevant, crowd the hurried pages of this biography. Mr. Lynch is apparently unable to distinguish between the significant and the insignificant, to correlate his myriad facts, or to synthesize them into a rational whole. Yet the book is not without interest to the casual reader nor without value to the student." H: S. Commager
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 D 8 '29 1700w

"Mr. Lynch has done a remarkably detailed and admirably articulated piece of work. He can be fair to the reader and fair to the character at the same time. In spite of all Van Buren's shortcomings, none of which are glossed over, he gives you a respect and admiration for him. No more than in 'Boss Tweed' does this book exploit Denis Tilden Lynch. In this the author turns his back on the flourishing school of 'new biography.' " S. L. Cook
+ Boston Transcript p4 N 16 '29 1750w

"Mr. Lynch has not written so successful a biography from the point of view of the general reader as in his '"Boss" Tweed.' The present story is more complicated. Mr. Lynch has mastered the web of alliance and intrigue which constituted New York politics during the rivalries of Livingstons and Clintons, of Barnburners and Hunkers, but it is impossible to present the mass of material adequately and interestingly. There are necessarily a good many obscure references, and some minor slips. Mr. Lynch makes out a good prima facie case, but he has not left himself space for its elaboration. He leaves us, however, with the conviction that, if any statesman could have substituted a political for a military solution of the problem of slavery, it was Van Buren, the supreme master of American politics." R. M. Lovett
— + New Repub 61:73 D 11 '29 2100w

" 'An Epoch and a Man' is more than a biography. In following the devious and canny steps of his hero from Kinderhook to Washington and back to Kinderhook and its little cemetery, Mr. Lynch has not been content to relate only the life story of Martin Van Buren. He has done something far more demanding on scholarship and research. He has written a history, social and political, of the epoch of 'Little Mat'. . . To the politician, to the historian, even to the romanticist, 'An Epoch and a Man' will speak much of sound value and enlightenment." F: F. Van de Water
+ N Y Evening Post p11m N 9 '29 150w

"This is unquestionably the best, the only definitive biography of Martin van Buren. Mr. Lynch has been indefatigable in research and resourceful in discovering new material as only an accomplished newspaper man can be. And the book is quite thrilling up to the point where the fascinating figure slowly walks, dignified and unbeaten, from the scene. The rest, I am sorry to say, is anticlimax. After his 545 well written, studiously documented and sympathetically interpreted pages Mr. Lynch has failed to sell this reader, at least, on his hero." L: Sherwin
+ — N Y Evening Post p12m N 23 '29 770w

"Mr. Lynch's method is that of a serious biographer and historian. He does not seek dramatic effect, but the dramatic effect of such a story cannot be lessened by his multitudinous detail and careful research. He wishes you to understand that his book is as much a history of the times as a life of Van Buren, and it is true that one does get a good idea of the times because of the immensity of his examination and the range it takes. Still, it is no more a history of the times than any equally complete biography would be. It is, however, no mere character sketch of a man, and to say this is to pay a compliment to the book even in these days of personality writing run mad." C: W. Thompson
+ N Y Times p3 D 8 '29 1850w

"Mr. Lynch has written with detail, too much detail perhaps, of that part of his career preceding Van Buren's emergence as a national figure, but he, too, fails to do complete justice to his subject in dealing with his statesmanship in Washington. The effect is to overemphasize the machine politician—to carry on the tradition that Van Buren was a man of intrigue and spoils. Even so, the chapters dealing with the earlier period are entertaining and of special interest to New Yorkers. The author has crowded a vast amount of information into these pages, and in numerous ways thrown new light on his subject, but the definitive biography of Van Buren still remains to be written." C. G. Bowers
+ — N Y World p10m D 29 '29 700w

LYNCH, RICHARD. Man and his powers. 281p $2 Dodd

150 Psychology, Applied 28-24733

A popular lecturer on psychology applies that science to the problems of everyday life, emphasizing the value of the imagination and of faith and the power of the suggestive mind.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ja 6 '29 260w

"These lay sermons are inspiring, stimulating and suggestive."
+ Boston Transcript p6 N 17 '28 160w
St Louis 27:5 Ja '29

Reviewed by E. R. Guthrie
Sat R of Lit 5:572 Ja 5 '29 130w

LYND, ROBERT S., and LYND, HELEN MERRELL. Middletown; a study in contemporary American culture; foreword by Clark Wissler. 550p $5 Harcourt

309.1 United States—Social conditions. Cities and towns—United States. Cost and standard of living. Social surveys. Community life 29-26177

Middletown is the name given to a representative American community studied by a group of field investigators whose reports are incorporated in the present book. All the cross currents of life in this small city of 30,000, located in the Middle West are observed and recorded here.

Reviewed by N. J. Ware
Am Econ R 19:328 Je '29 720w

"This pioneer study is excellent and the Institute of Social and Religious Research has performed a valuable service in making it possible."
+ Am Hist R 34:695 Ap '29 200w

Reviewed by D. L. Hunt
Ann Am Acad 146:271 N '29 900w
Booklist 25:244 Mr '29

"It is an admirable work, and to me, completely fascinating. I do not know how to convey the sense of excitement it gives as one gets closer and closer to the human beings, themselves intrinsically unimportant, who are the material of the study." Gilbert Seldes

+ Bookm 68:225 O '28 650w

"This book should be engraved upon tablets of stone and buried under a pyramid, so that posterity may know what type of culture prevailed in the Mississippi Valley in the year 1925 A. D. . . This is the first time to my knowledge that anthropology has swung its searchlight upon white Christian Nordics, carrying on their mores and taboos in the middle of the grain culture belt of the greatest Republic ever heard of. The whole book is a priceless document." Stuart Chase

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 F 3 '29 1400w

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 30 '29 480w

Cath World 129:634 Ag '29 320w

"The data collected and organized present an extraordinarily vivid and accurate composite portrait of both the overt activities and the mental processes of the community. . . Students of religion, as well as other students of society, will find it well worthy of careful examination." W. E. Garrison

+ Christian Century 46:265 F 21 '29 720w

Cleveland Open Shelf p152 D '29

"Nothing like it has ever before been attempted; no such knowledge of how the average American community works and plays has ever been packed between the covers of one book. . . Who touches this book touches the heart of America, nay, the heart of machine culture in the Western World. . . When you finish the book, you know how Middletown lives—and how, so often failing life, it drops to the level of existence." Stuart Chase

+ Nation 128:164 F 6 '29 1350w

"Their book, which is long and thickly packed with information, collected from both oral and written sources, is remarkably free from cackle. It makes fascinating reading, and can be recommended not only to the sociologist and anthropologist, but to everyone interested in the world which we inhabit." Raymond Mortimer

+ Nation and Ath 45:627 Ag 10 '29 1450w

"A fascinating and valuable book, one that will give the reader more insight into the social processes of this country than any other I know. Here, as never before, is proof, and plenty of it, that a man with stone-age ideas can drive around in a high-priced automobile. . . 'Middletown' is one of those rare books that can be used as a source in discussing almost any phase of American life. In it we see America of yesterday, today, and tomorrow, side by side, struggling." C. H. Grattan

+ New Repub 58:48 F 27 '29 1500w

New Statesman 33:300 Je 15 '29 1600w

Reviewed by M. A. Lerner

N Y Evening Post p8m F 9 '29 800w

"Authors of this book are scientific and sociological almost to a fault. They have looked at their sample American community with the cool eyes of anthropologists studying the habits of an alien species. . . Those who cling to their childhood illusions about their native land will wish that the Lynds had scrutinized the Patagonians instead. For the portrait of Middletown is not flattering. Not only does it make the reader wonder whether all that has happened since 1890 has been progress. It even arouses some doubt in his mind as to whether the present inhabitants of America have attained greater happiness per capita than did the Indians who preceded them." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p3 Ja 20 '29 1000w

"No one who wishes a full understanding of American life to-day can afford to neglect this impartial, sincerely scientific effort to place it upon the microscope slide." Allan Nevins

+ N Y World p10m F 17 '29 840w

"This book, while it may sound limited in its appeal, is really of interest to all thinking Americans." Herschel Brickell

+ No Am 227:adv Mr '29 100w

Outlook 151:158 Ja 23 '29 50w

Pratt p10 summer '29

"The authors have made a most readable report of their studies—the more attractive because it makes no attempt to prove anything, but records what was observed and like all books of this kind raises perhaps more questions than it answers. If it did not do this it would hardly be worth the time and labor expended on it." W: B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 79:28 F '29 250w

St Louis 27:157 My '29

"The result is a volume which must make the heart of every sociologist rejoice."

+ Sat R 147:866 Je 29 '29 420w

Reviewed by Whiting Williams

Sat R of Lit 5:824 Mr 30 '29 1250w

Spec 142:1016 Je 29 '29 1300w

Springf'd Republican p7e F 3 '29 1000w

"One could consume pages in an attempt to give a bare indication of the richness and penetration of this remarkable study, but the attempt would be about as fair to the Lynds' skillful orchestration of social themes as the effort of a man with a cold in the head to hum Bach's Toccata and Fugue. Middletown is a gold mine of social data." H: M. Busch

+ Survey 61:775 Mr 15 '29 2200w

"The information provided by this book, so complete and so invariably fascinating, is far too great to attempt any summary, and far too varied for any satisfactory generalization or conclusion to be made from it. One simply leaves the book with the feeling that one has learnt a great deal about a singularly curious and complicated community, and one could pay Mr. and Mrs. Lynd's work no greater compliment."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p155 F 28 '29 1150w

Wis Lib Bul 25:73 F '29

Reviewed by H. F. Ward

World Tomorrow 12:234 My '29 500w

LYNDE, FRANCIS. Young blood. 323p $2 Scribner

29-12063

Frederick Burdick, 28, takes over the management of a branch railroad and in trying to manage it honestly runs counter to the devices of the parent organization. The story of the struggle which culminates in a murder case, carries also an element of romance.

Booklist 25:405 Jl '29

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 My 5 '29 230w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 1 '29 230w

"It is very exciting, if you like business stories with an obvious dash of romance for flavoring." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p11m My 11 '29 70w

"Mr. Lynde knows railroads and how they are run—and probably the Van Sweringens. This book ought to please people who are bored with the present sex crop—and interested in railroads."

N Y Times p26 S 22 '29 180w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 26 '29 200w

Wis Lib Bul 25:161 My '29

M

MCALLISTER, ALISTER (LYNN BROCK, ANTHONY WHARTON, pseuds.). Murder at the inn. 263p $2 Harper

29-23790

In a lonely inn, on a stormy and bitter night, Tanquered was murdered. Colonel Gore, detective, was on the scene. So was the wife of the murdered man, her secretary—a beautiful girl—and two men who, it developed, had had dealings with Tanquered in connection with a South

MCALLISTER, ALISTER—Continued
African diamond discovery. Delving for motive into past history, genealogical and otherwise, Colonel Gore discovers from these tangled pasts the murderer.

"This is a meaty, baffling and generally worthwhile example of the literate school." Will Cuppy
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 D 15 '29 230w

"A good detective story."
+ N Y Times p40 N 17 '29 270w

"Introduction of the descendant of the famous murderer, Hare, is clever, and adds horror and a touch of reality." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 153:520 N 27 '29 80w

"In 'Murder at the Inn' the arrest of the culprit does not quite end the story, the author appending a little resume of the trial and admitting that the jury found the defendant not guilty. This is so unusual in a mystery story that it is worthy of note."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e N 17 '29 230w

MACARTHUR, CHARLES G. War bugs. 301p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

940.48 European war, 1914-1918—Personal narratives 29-14983

Here is the direct antithesis of the sensitive introspect shuddering at the brutalities of war. Here, rather, is the lusty and frequently rowdy tale of privates in the Rainbow Division living, objectively, zestfully, in the moment, whether fighting, drinking, slogging thru the mud, or making love.

"Flip, lively and cheery this picture of the war is—as remote from the picture given in recent translations from the German as if they were about different wars. It is in the vein of 'What Price Glory,' with a certain admixture of 'Dere Mable.' . . But this persistent, chipper frivolity is not realistic. It was possible, in 1918, to satisfy Americans with such a college-boy picture of the sport of war, and it may be that we live in a generation which, sick of guff, is still unwilling to accept any emotion as real and determined to make light of everything. But it is also possible, and the recent vogue of books which regard the war as rather a tragedy suggests it, that we are ready for sterner and honester stuff." L: Gannett
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Jl 7 '29 720w

"It has immense vitality. If some of it is crude, much of it is filled with humanity. Its virtuosity is tempered by sincerity. There are thrilling passages. It is a good mixture and will surely sell." C. A. C.
+ New Repub 60:305 O 30 '29 200w

" 'War Bugs' is a book that should be read on the heels of Remarque's terrible 'All Quiet on the Western Front.' The man who reads both may strike an average and achieve approximate accuracy. . . Of the two books, we suspect that 'War Bugs,' despite its lack of dignity and in the face of its probable exaggeration, is the more accurate. Mr. MacArthur writes vividly and humorously. His is the attitude of the man for whom the war stopped before it became bloody drudgery. To him and his fellow bucks of the 149th Field Rainbow Division, the conflict was a combination of football game, Mardi Gras, keg party and hike, pleasingly studded with felonies and misdemeanors." F: F. Van de Water
+ N Y Evening Post p6m Je 29 '29 400w
Springf'd Republican p6 S 9 '29 550w
Times [London] Lit Sup p824 O 17 '29 200w

MCBLAIR, ROBERT. Black gold. 234p $2 (7s 6d) Appleton

29-6449

A ship-load of coal is ordered for delivery at a turbulent spot in Central America, the scene of frequent revolutions and reprisals. Edward Braxfield goes with the shipment to insure delivery and to collect the money. A young girl who with her father has been a victim of the revolution, is also on board, under the care of a Spanish adventurer. The voyage gives Edward a thoroughly hectic time and, in the end, a bride.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 Mr 17 '29 90w
Boston Transcript p2 My 18 '29 100w
N Y Times p17 Ap 21 '29 200w

"The story is well planned and well told. What is more, the characters are recognizable, thoroughly satisfactory men, and an underlying note of domestic bonhomie softens the arguments and rough-and-tumbles in which hero and villain partake. The author makes a good job of it and leaves all safe with the American Navy."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p278 Ap 4 '29 90w
Wis Lib Bul 25:277 Jl '29

MACBRIDE, THOMAS HUSTON. In cabins and sod-houses. 368p $3 Ia. state hist. soc.

917.77 Frontier and pioneer life—Iowa. Iowa—Social life and customs 28-27377

Lengthily and in detail the story pictures the growth of a pioneer community in Iowa. The building of the schoolhouse, the church and Sunday school meetings, and the social life that centered about them, the political debates, and other intellectual interests of the community; all these are described in a story that combines fiction with reminiscence, but is without historical documentation. The author is president emeritus of the University of Iowa.

"The book is not a systematic treatment of the intellectual history of the founders of Iowa. It is written in a pseudo-poetical style, and the names of the characters in the informal, reminiscent sketches are fictionalized. None the less it is valuable in that it represents the characteristic idealization of the frontier by one who was himself a pioneer. The long prairie experience of the author enabled him to draw upon a rich store of memories." Merle Curti
+ — Am Hist R 34:656 Ap '29 420w

"The book is a unique one in its field, and will delight not simply the historian, or the native Iowan, but will give pleasure and satisfaction to the student of human nature, and to the lover of pioneer life."
+ Boston Transcript p3 F 2 '29 330w
Cleveland Open Shelf p72 My '29

"Instead of giving a mere chronicle of facts, related or unrelated, Dr. Macbride pictures the situation as a whole, with its philosophic background. He has used a method of presentation that might well be adopted by writers covering a corresponding phase of growth elsewhere."
+ R of Rs 79:20 Ap '29 80w

MCCABE, JOSEPH. Story of religious controversy; ed. with an introd. by E. Haldeman-Julius. 623p $5 Stratford

211 Religion—History. Skepticism. Christianity 29-14034

A series of essays on the growth of religious ideas—not a connected account—written from the point of view of a skeptic, formerly a teacher of philosophy in a Catholic college. The character of the contents is indicated by such chapter headings as the myth of immortality, the futility of belief in God, the forgery of the Old Testament, phallic elements in religion, did Jesus ever live? do we need religion? the triumph of materialism.

"The book covers much more ground than its label indicates and does it, moreover, in a manner which is vigorous and thought-provoking. A former teacher of philosophy in a Catholic college, the author comes to his subject with a store of knowledge which impels one to respect his conclusions even when one disagrees with them. He indulges in no promiscuous mud-slinging at religion; his attack is sharp and substantiated."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p29 S 15 '29 200w

"This book has the faults of its genre, especially a naivete displayed both in its bitterness toward religion and in its optimism about science. Most of his facts are incontrovertible, and it can do no harm to have them disseminated. Nevertheless, his approach seems old-fashioned and singularly unfruitful, for he is providing ammunition for a battle rather than resources for an effort toward understanding. One detects the same type of special pleading that one finds in works of Christian apologetics, and one turns from it with the same boredom." Granville Hicks

+ Nation 129:469 O 23 '29 270w

" 'The Story of Religious Controversy' is a réchauffé of brochures previously published by Mr. Haldeman-Julius. They are here thrown together in a haphazard manner, save that a general chronological order runs through the chaos. Containing much useful information, particularly in the chapters on medievalism, and evincing a far surer sense of grim fact than the mediéval apologists usually reveal, Mr. McCabe's work is nevertheless largely vitiated by its intemperate polemicism which constantly assigns wrong motives." E. S. Bates

— + Sat R of Lit 6:289 O 19 '29 300w

MCCAHAN, DAVID. State insurance in the United States. 290p $3.50 Press of the Univ. of Pa.

368.4 Insurance, State and compulsory 29-8341

A general survey of every type of insurance undertaken by the state, in the United States, based upon information secured directly from state officials and insurance men. The author is assistant professor of insurance, Wharton school of finance and commerce, University of Pennsylvania.

---

"The study is based largely on first-hand information gathered by personal visits in thirty-seven states, and is a most valuable contribution to the field of public administration."

+ Am Pol Sci R 23:783 Ag '29 240w

Times [London] Lit Sup p458 Je 6 '29 80w

MACCALLUM, ELIZABETH PAULINE. Nationalist crusade in Syria. 299p il $2.50 Foreign policy assn.

956.9 Syria—Politics and government. French in Syria. European war, 1914-1918 —Territorial questions 28-27690

"Miss MacCallum tells the complete story of how and why the Syrian rebellion started, how it spread, together with the political, racial, economic and general causes behind it."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

---

Booklist 25:279 Ap '29

"Miss MacCallum's sympathies are with the Syrians, and for that reason, I think, she leans over backward in striving to be fair to the French. But despite her carefully restrained language she has done an honest and brutal job, as well as a thoroughly documented one. In view of the fact that the French went into Syria originally not as conquerors, but as benevolent protectors, this book forms an illuminating comment on how these 'sacred trusts of civilization' occasionally work out in actual practice." W. B. Seabrook

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Ja 6 '29 1050w

"An admirable piece of scholarly work. . . The book is thoroughly documented, and appendices offer some important documents and a bibliography." W: MacDonald

+ Nation 128:320 Mr 13 '29 260w

"It will be appreciated as a skillful and delicate treatment of a subject which is as full of difficulties as the proverbial sore thumb." E: M. Earle

+ New Repub 57:354 F 13 '29 570w

"The task has been well done—and with almost impeccable impartiality." S. B. Clough

+ Pol Sci Q 44:471 S '29 500w

"Mrs. MacCallum's book must be unreservedly commended as admirable in balance and proportion and in the fullness and accuracy of its presentation of her subject. It is not often that a writer who feels as strongly as she does writes with such restraint and fairness throughout."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p132 F 21 '29 720w

MCCANN, REBECCA (MRS HARVEY FERGUSSON). Bitter sweet. 84p $2 Covici

811 29-4014

"Many who remember that whimsical little waif, 'The Cheerful Cherub,' will be agreeably surprised to learn that Rebecca McCann, the Cherub's originator, was a gifted poet as well as a delightful humorist. Upon her untimely death in December, 1927, she left a number of lyrics which are now published for the first time. Llewellyn Jones, literary editor of The Chicago Evening Post, an intimate friend of the poet, has admirably performed the difficult task of collecting and arranging these miscellaneous poems."—Boston Transcript

---

"This book of poems proves that in spite of her 'Cheerful Cherub' reputation she could write verse of a more solid, distinctive quality." C: Divine

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Mr 17 '29 80w

Boston Transcript p5 My 11 '29 180w

Reviewed by J. D. Tasker

Nation 129:254 S 4 '29 140w

"Rebecca McCann's posthumous collection of verse has momentary distinction. She has flashes of very real and deep emotion, working its way through youthful cynicism, and a healthy distrust of the world around her. But the results are unfinished. They are interesting because they disclose a charming personality." Horace Gregory

+ — N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 30 '29 70w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

N Y World p10m Ap 28 '29 100w

MCCLINCHEY, FLORENCE E. Joe Pete. 311p $2.50 Holt

29-28181

A novel picturing the life of the Ojibway Indians of northern Michigan. Joe Pete, a full-blooded Indian boy, whose father had left the squaw, Mabel, helps care for his younger brothers and sisters. Mabel at first earned money by basket-weaving; later she fell into disreputable ways and final degradation. Joe Pete, however, kept his fine character and his tribe's ideals, and thru the influence of friends, was given opportunity to go to the Indian school and receive an education worthy of his ability.

---

"Miss McClinchey has lived among the Ojibways, as a friend, for many summers. In Joe Pete she has perhaps imaginatively transmuted an ideal into the form of a man. But she has made him real, not a shadowy symbol; and his story, unpretentious, unforced, unpolished, is not propaganda." Isabel Paterson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 N 24 '29 1000w

"A strong and convincing first novel. The story of 'Joe Pete' is told in a simple, direct and rather bald style. It has none of the charming and external graces of phraseology calculated to impress the reader at a glance. But it is impressive in the end because of the evident authenticity of the material and the sincerity with which it is presented, because of the depth and reality of the feeling which emerges from its pages of rather awkward prose, because of the honesty and fidelity of the characterizations."

MCCLINCHEY, F. E. —Continued
+ N Y Times p9 D 1 '29 820w

"The details of the story are over-sentimental and smack somewhat of 'inspirational literature,' but the novel as a whole gives no such impression. The story is probably a true one, certainly the characters have the quality of reality and the events follow no artificial sequence. Miss McClinchey transmits to her readers the honest sympathy and admiration which she feels for her hero. Joe Pete is not an unusual literary achievement, but it is a fresh and touching story, well told." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 153:510 N 27 '29 270w

"A simple but moving story of Indian life in our own day. It is a story with a cutting edge, for its theme might be described as the inevitable and unfortunate pressure of white supremacy upon Indian mores, so that to succeed, to 'stay good,' even to stay alive is hard for the Indian. But 'Joe Pete' is no propaganda novel. The author is far more interested in the humanity she describes than in ideas of welfare." H: S. Canby
+ Sat R of Lit 6:472 N 30 '29 270w

MCCOMB, ARTHUR KILGORE. Agnolo Bronzino; his life and works. 173p 61pl $7.50 Harvard univ. press [35s Oxford]

759.5 Bronzino, Angiolo 28-28573

"Bronzino is one of those artists whose work has aroused practically no controversy. Nothing whatever has been written about him in English and very little in foreign languages. He has 'escaped violent detraction and passionate defense,' and thus has escaped the critical attention which he so justly deserves. He is not a painter of the highest imaginative gifts; his religious compositions are curiously inept; but in portraiture he is one of the enduring masters."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

---

"The first service rendered Bronzino in English will appeal to the scholar rather than to the artist or layman. Mr. McComb's account could hardly be called an appreciation; it is more properly a study in comparative anatomy after the scientific methods of Berenson, but in its own field it leaves nothing more to be said. An exhaustive catalogue raisonné is appended, and the sixty illustrations are exceptionally well printed."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Mr 10 '29 150w

"By his restrained yet very sensitive appreciations Mr. McComb is perfectly suited to the task of commenting upon a restrained and sensitive painter like Bronzino, and we should be grateful that this great Florentine of the dying Renaissance has fallen into such competent hands." A. H. S.
+ Boston Transcript p3 D 29 '28 530w

"Mr. McComb's essay, with its various appendices, is a model of sound academic procedure, with the positive merits and the limitations that this praise implies. Mr. McComb writes clearly and agreeably, if without pretensions to eloquence, marshals his facts chronologically, provides careful catalogues of paintings by the master and by close imitators, of the drawings and tapestries; and withal a full index."
+ Sat R of Lit 5:575 Ja 5 '29 280w

"Excellent, accurate, scholarly and well illustrated monograph."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p86 F 7 '29 280w

MCCONN, CHARLES MAXWELL. College or kindergarten? 275p pa $1 New republic

378.73 Colleges and universities—United States. Students 28-22405

"A study of college education. It is part of the author's thesis that many students now in college would much better spend the years from 18 to 22 in a sort of super-kindergarten. And instead of one kind of institution labeled 'college,' we ought, he declares, to have three. The super-kindergarten, which he calls the 'Gentleman's College' as distinguished from the 'Scholar's College,' and the professional or vocational school would meet the needs of those pleasant, charming, well-intentioned children of the rich who have larger possessions of the purse than of the intellect. He makes the suggestion neither in fun nor in scorn; he is very serious about it, and his 'kindergarten' would be a very attractive and very useful place."—N Y Times

---

"This is a very unusual and significant study to be made by a confessed, not an anonymous dean. It promises much for the regeneration of our colleges from within." J: E. Kirkpatrick
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 D 23 '28 520w

Reviewed by S. G. Cole
Crozer Q 6:256 Ap '29 230w

"Dean Max McConn of Lehigh University discusses the problems of the liberal college in a way which cannot be ignored. Though its theme is old and much-considered, the book is fresh and startling." Alexander Meiklejohn
+ New Repub 57:238 Ja 16 '29 3500w

"Dr. McConn's approach is scholarly, his point of view liberal, his style vivid. His book is thoroughly human in its understanding. It ought to be widely and carefully read."
+ N Y Times p27 N 18 '28 550w

"The book is stimulating, easy to read, cheap to buy, and worthy of consideration by all interested in the future of a rapidly changing institution,—the American college." J. L. McConaughy
+ Sat R of Lit 5:428 D 1 '28 800w

MCCONNELL, FRANCIS JOHN. Humanism and Christianity. 153p $1.75 Macmillan

149.9 Humanism. Christianity

Emphasis is placed in this series of lectures upon human worth and the attempt of the Church to safeguard it. "Instrumentalism" in America is described as an enemy to society and to the higher individualism which the true "personalist" strives for.

---

Boston Transcript p2 D 1 '28 180w

"The greater part of the little volume is occupied with an intelligent discussion of how life in this world can be made better. Only in the last chapter does the bishop shift the argument to the theological level, utilizing the personalistic philosophy of Borden P. Bowne to accomplish the transition." Granville Hicks
Nation 128:48 Ja 9 '29 230w

MCCORMICK, MRS ANNE (O'HARE). Hammer and the scythe; communist Russia enters the second decade. 303p $3 Knopf

914.7 Russia—Description and travel. Russia—Social conditions. Communism—Russia 28-28577

Based on articles written for the New York Times, the book makes no pretensions to being a study of economic, social and political conditions, but is rather a report of things seen and heard by the author during her travels in Russia, together with the commentary of an intelligent observer.

---

"Mrs. McCormick is a journalist with genuine intuition. Details are important to her only inasmuch as they illustrate a general impression and her impressions are fresh and convincing. . . Her epigrammatic flashing summaries make one forget the shortness of her visit and her ignorance of the Russian language." B. C. Vladeck
+ Bookm 68:602 Ja '29 280w

"Mrs. McCormick has an eager eye, a delightful talent for noting significant details, and an active intelligence which plays upon all that she sees. The result is a picture of Russia which is more engagingly and vividly written than any which I have read from an American pen except Albert Rhys Williams's 'The Russian Land.' Mrs. McCormick's book will be especially interesting for the American reader because she is clever in picking out just the things which Americans want to know about Russia. . . Her book is marked by temperate judgment, humor and acuteness." Dorothy Thompson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 D 16 '28 1100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p87 Je '29

"Mrs. McCormick writes in dashing, picturesque language which she can hardly intend always to be taken literally. Her book is brilliant, and flashes of real insight mingle with flashes of vivid, overdrawn journalistic bunk. It contains enough internal contradictions, enough living incidents flout her own conclusions, so that the reader may begin to want to find out what is the truth about this Russian business anyway. And that is all to the good." Jessie Lloyd

— + Nation 128:317 Mr 13 '29 500w

"It can be said for Mrs. McCormick's book, that none of the several journalistic accounts that have recently appeared tell more about Bolshevik Russia than hers, nor is any better written. She is wide awake, unprejudiced, intelligent, vivid. There are passages of real brilliance, and also a certain habit of metaphor, which, when it doesn't come off, gets a bit tiresome."

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:572 Ja 5 '29 530w

"Mrs. McCormick is the best informed of all three [Dreiser, Thompson, McCormick] in the achievements of pre-revolutionary Russia. Moreover, of the three writers, Mrs. McCormick seems to have the most sympathetic understanding of what is now developing not only on the surface of Russian life but in the depths of Russian psychology as well." G. Vernadsky

+ Yale R n s 18:600 spring '29 300w

MCCOWN, CHESTER CHARLTON. Genesis of the social gospel. 411p $3 Knopf

232 Sociology, Christian. Jesus Christ—Teaching. Jews—History. Civilization, Assyro-Babylonian 29-7306

Dr McCown traces the social teachings of Jesus back to their antecedents in Judaism, and still further back, to the social ideals of the ancient civilizations which centered about the eastern end of the Mediterranean Sea.

---

"This book is richly documented and presents a convincing thesis on the efficacy in modern life of the moral principles which are implied in a religion which had its inception in a primitive and peasant community."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Jl 14 '29 70w

"It certainly cannot be irreverence or heresy to find in Jesus the summary, the essence and culmination of social hopes and ideals that have been growing through the ages. This is the author's peculiar contribution to the theme and he has traced these ideals with thoroughness and care. There is food for thought here —plenty of it." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Jl 13 '29 500w

"A fine book, it is utterly untainted with barren theological speculation." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 6 '29 120w

"To know what Jesus meant by 'The Kingdom of God,' 'Blessed are the poor,' 'Woe to you rich,' we must know what such words meant to him and to the people of his time. 'The Genesis of the Social Gospel' is a painstaking and scholarly attempt to answer these intricate questions by the historical method." E. B. Chaffee

Outlook 152:108 My 15 '29 230w

"The work deserves attention, and if its generalizations sometimes seem to be too positive, they are based on a wide review of the facts."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p595 Jl 25 '29 240w

MCCOY, SAMUEL DUFF. This man Adams; the man who never died. 333p il $3.50 Brentano's

B or 92 Adams, John 28-24467

"John Adams's services to his country before, during and after the Continental Congresses are set forth in Mr. McCoy's volume at their full value, if not with a touch of exaggeration. John Adams the man, the very human being, also is pictured with devoted detail."—N Y Evening Post

---

Booklist 25:211 F '29

"One is never quite sure whether the John Adams of history is speaking or whether Mr. McCoy is talking for him. It is a decidedly dangerous way to write biography and can hardly be justified from any angle. The real merit of the book is found in a clear-cut appreciation of the fact that John Adams was a blunt, practical thinker who saw more clearly than most of his fellows the true forces that impel men to action and dominate the social-political order. Mr. McCoy renders a real service in making 'this man Adams' a living fact. The great faults in the work arise from an overdoing of a good thing." Avery Craven

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 Mr 3 '29 630w

"He tells of the early days of Boston and the Continental Congress in a fresh and interesting manner, especially in that he differs occasionally from other authorities."

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 24 '28 250w

Cleveland Open Shelf p42 Mr '29

"Next to misrepresenting the man of whom he is writing, a biographer can commit no greater crime than to get between the reader and the man. Mr. McCoy does this continually and with absurd complacency. He even invents dialogues between John Adams and himself. This bumptiousness leads one to turn pages rapidly in the hope of encountering Adams again instead of his biographer. Happily, one does."

+ — N Y Evening Post p10m D 8 '28 130w

"Mr. McCoy has not written a biography in the ordinary sense, and would probably repudiate any idea that he even professed to do so. He has turned out a historical whimsy and a good one of its kind, in a good cause, too. Justice to the life work of John Adams has been denied too long, and it is high time that some of the rescue squad, which has done so much for the reputation of his son, John Quincy Adams, should devote a fair proportion of the efforts to him." A. S. Will

+ N Y Times p3 D 16 '28 1050w

"There remains this satisfaction for the reader, that the book was a labor of joy. If one took exception to every single statement in it, it would still be pleasant and profitable reading. Mr. McCoy's chief sources were, of course, John Adams's own writings, principally his diaries. 'This man Adams' becomes in consequence a perfect companion to 'The Diary of John Quincy Adams.' " W. P. Beazell

+ N Y World p10m D 9 '28 220w

St Louis 27:61 F '29

"Much of all that McCoy tells us of him is true. He does not exalt him too high. The trouble with the picture he draws is that the other figures are made too small. Adams should not be reduced but the rest should be brought up to scale. And fantasy is handled a bit too roughly." J. T. Adams

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:459 D 8 '28 1800w

World Tomorrow 12:44 Ja '29 30w

MACCREAGH, GORDON. Last of free Africa. 361p il $4 Century

916.3 Abyssinia. Hunting—Abyssinia 28-27788

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

---

"An interesting, informative and well written book."

+ Bookm 70:xvii S '29 400w

MACCREAGH, GORDON—Continued

"Mr. MacCreagh is more intent upon making a contribution to the reader's entertainment than to his scientific knowledge. Even so, he imparts a good fund of first-hand information in the course of these chapters and brings that distant region of the earth's surface vividly before one's eye. And his camera tells much besides."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 F 3 '29 140w

"His comments on Abyssinian religion, economics and politics, and the possible trend of foreign enterprise there, are shrewd and enlightening, his style easy and accretive, his book a graphic story of life in one of the most unusual corners of the globe."

+ N Y Times p12 Mr 24 '29 330w

"He has written a book which will be read with interest and advantage by experts and novices alike." C: J. Finger

+ N Y World p11m D 9 '28 250w

" 'The Last of Free Africa' is a good book, an interesting book, a book to be recommended. Yet I cannot help wishing for a little more sensitiveness, a little more imaginative understanding. All that is recorded carries conviction, yet I can but believe that much is not recorded. To me it seems that the overtones of Ethiopia have escaped the author." Eunice Tietjens

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:827 Mr 30 '29 200w

MCCULLAGH, FRANCIS. Red Mexico; a reign of terror in America. 415p il $3.50 Carrier [15s Brentano's]

972 Mexico—Politics and government. Mexico—History—Revolution, 1910—. Roman Catholic church in Mexico. United States—Foreign relations—Mexico

29-6039

Captain McCullagh's book is full of sensational matter both in text and illustration. He has written not an historical account of the revolution in Mexico, but an impassioned recital of outrages committed against the Catholic church, and a denunciation of the policy of the United States toward Mexican affairs.

---

"As a contribution to general information on Mexican affairs, 'Red Mexico' divides itself naturally into two parts. Nearly all that Captain McCullagh has to say about the Mexican people and, in particular, the Mexican revolution, is of negligible importance. But if his history and his comments on the present-day leaders cannot be taken very seriously, Captain McCullagh's narrative of the violences and injustices inflicted on the Catholic clergy and those who have attempted to carry on the forms of their religion in spite of government prohibitions does, on the other hand, contribute something. It is a more complete and detailed account of these sufferings than most people outside Mexico have had access to before." Arthur Ruhl

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Ja 20 '29 1100w

Boston Transcript p5 F 23 '29 880w

"The volume achieves a new level of hysteria, fanaticism, and fantasy." Ernest Gruening

— Nation 128:110 Ja 23 '29 700w

"Captain McCullagh observes a peculiarly noxious dragon in Mexico, many-headed, but with the general form of President Calles, whose biography he writes in the style of the Newgate Calendar, observing that the subject, being 'morbidly sensitive,' 'may even object to the present book.' We doubt it. The Captain is impartial with his denunciations, large and small. All liberals and humanitarians whose eyes are not fixed on Mexican crimes—come under his censure."

Nation and Ath 44:sup228 N 10 '28 100w

" 'Red Mexico' is certainly sensational, and it has, even for a book about Mexico, a sensational number of mistakes and misstatements in it—393 by lenient count." Anita Brenner

— N Y Evening Post p8m F 2 '29 820w

"Most of his material is founded on either grossly inaccurate data or what appear to be deliberate half-truths, or perhaps actual misinformation. None of it has been documented. One's chief regret about this book is that along with all his sensationalism, Mr. McCullagh's work contains a modicum of truth. Charges that he makes against the apathy of the American press in general, his remarks about the Henry Lane Wilson affair, and certain other phases of the culpability of America—which he is not the first to publish—are certainly well-founded and little known angles of Mexico's problems." W: Spratling

— + N Y Times p6 Ja 20 '29 1000w

Reviewed by W: T. Adee

Outlook 151:158 Ja 23 '29 530w

St Louis 27:139 Ap '29

"It is a disgusting story that Mr. McCullagh has to tell, and he tells it with a burning indignation, which is obviously sincere, and is not to be discounted merely because his sympathies are notoriously on the clerical side. . . His indictment of the Calles Government is a powerful one and has not yet, as far as we know, been seriously disputed."

+ Sat R 146:825 D 15 '28 200w

Spec 141:380 S 22 '28 150w

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p195 Mr 14 '29 400w

MCCUTCHEON, GEORGE BARR. The Merivales. 303p $2 Dodd

29-18418

Ursula Merivale Spaine, at eighty-two, is the handsome and energetic head of a homestead in the Blue Ridge mountains that has housed many generations of Merivales. This is the story of her children and grandchildren, and how Ursula Spaine played the benevolent despot to all of them, wisely guiding without interfering with their lives and interests, managing their love affairs, and beneficially arranging their marriages.

---

Booklist 26:120 D '29

" 'The Merivales' keep up the McCutcheon ideal of noble men and gentle women, but it is modern in every respect. . . An absorbing novel." J. C. G.

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 5 '29 500w

"The age of the heroine must not serve to keep McCutcheon enthusiasts away from this novel, for her 82 years are only physical milestones; her spirit and energy, her will and understanding are ever youthful. Besides, there are three young and important women in the book and several good-looking young men, whose combined interests furnish enough romance to satisfy the most demanding."

+ N Y Times p18 S 29 '29 200w

MACDONAGH, MICHAEL. English king; a study of the monarchy and the royal family, historical, constitutional and social. 318p $3 J. Cape & H. Smith [10s 6d Benn]

942 Great Britain—Kings and rulers. Great Britain—Politics and government. Monarchy

[29-17292]

"Mr. MacDonagh has an enthusiastic reverence for the arcana of royalty. His book is a mixture of history, Court gossip, constitutional lore and details of ceremonials. He has chapters on the symbolism of coronation ritual; on the history of the king's prerogative; on royal marriages; on the relations of the king to his ministers; and on the home life of the royal family. He quotes many anecdotes of political life."—New Statesman

---

"Mr. MacDonagh, forty years an English journalist, has collected a great quantity of important and entertaining information about the British monarchy as an institution and the long list of occupants of the throne, much of it of a character conspicuous by its absence in formal histories. If he had not felt obliged to bestow such fulsome praise upon the late King Edward and George V he would have improved his story." W: MacDonald

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 S 22 '29 500w

"Told with a charming combination of humor and respect." Dudley Zuver

+ Churchman p17 O 5 '29 100w

"Written in a lively style that borders at times on the flamboyant, they are full of apt and interesting illustrative anecdotes, and, though obviously addressed primarily to the general reader, contains matter that deserves the attention of the student." R. L. Schuyler

+ Nation 129:443 O 16 '29 1000w

"His book usefully and entertainingly brings together much otherwise scattered information."

+ New Statesman 33:384 Je 29 '29 130w

"It is the unusual merit of Mr. MacDonagh's volume that it flavors information with gossip. Serious students will find that it is indispensable and, in colleges and libraries, it will be given its due place as a source of reference. But, at the same time, the quaint detail, the human touches, the elusive intimacies of the royal régime are woven with deft ease into the fabric of the tapestry. It was Bagehot's procedure, and of Bagehot Mr. MacDonagh is a disciple." P. W. Wilson

+ N Y Times p11 Ag 25 '29 2100w

St Louis 27:305 N '29

"Mr. MacDonagh gives a good deal of interesting information which is not too easily obtainable elsewhere, more especially in regard to exactly what happens in certain kinds of formal business. This is perhaps the most useful feature of the work."

+ Sat R 147:682 My 18 '29 700w

Reviewed by H. M. Clokie

Survey 63:168 N 1 '29 450w

"Such an enterprise is in danger from constitutional technicalities on the one hand and from popular gossip-mongering on the other, and Mr. MacDonagh has avoided the first pitfall more consistently than the second. He has, however, written a pleasant and sincere book whose humanity may be pleaded in excuse for its occasional errors in detail."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p372 My 9 '29 1000w

MACDONALD, DAVID. Land of the lama; a description of a country of contrasts & of its cheerful, happy-go-lucky people of hardy nature & curious customs; their religion, ways of living, trade & social life; with a foreword by the Earl of Ronaldshay. 283p il $5 Lippincott [21s Seeley, Service]

915.15 Tibet—Social life and customs. Tibet —Description and travel [29-15350]

An account of present day Tibet, its religion, method of government, customs, social life, festivals, literature and commerce, written by a man who lived in the country for sixteen years.

---

"It was written by one so specially qualified for his task that he has succeeded in contributing much new material to our knowledge of Tibet, as well as a thoroughly 'up-to-date' account of the Tibetans, their customs, religion, ways of living, social life and trade activities, such as, for detail and vividness, has not thus far been equalled." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p2 N 2 '29 550w

"Mr. Macdonald writes of the Tibetans with sympathy and without bias. He has been fortunate in being able to study this people at the beginning of a new and important period of its development. The book apparently has been revised by Tibetan scholars."

+ New Statesman 32:798 Mr 30 '29 920w

"It is a pity that an author so uniquely acquainted with Tibet and its people has failed to put more color into his book. As a source of information it is beyond reproach." L. H. T.

+ — N Y Evening Post p7s Ja 4 '30 250w

Spec 142:318 Mr 2 '29 180w

"We have here a simple, straightforward account, full of intimate and illuminating details, from the pen of a man who knows many Tibetans almost as well as he knows himself. And the reader's pleasure is enhanced by a good map and excellent illustrations."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p224 Mr 21 '29 1050w

MACDONALD, LOIS. Southern mill hills; a study of social and economic forces in certain textile mill villages [thesis]. 156p $2.25 A. L. Hillman, 80 E. 11th st., N.Y.

331.767 South—Social conditions. South—Economic conditions. Textile factories. Labor and laboring classes—South 29-19019

"This is a case study of social and economic forces in three textile mill villages in North and South Carolina. Before pointing out the conditions in the villages studied, the author presents the background of the textile industry in the South and outlines the general organization of the Southern mill village. In the detailed study of the three villages, the author presents her data under the following main headings: 'History and policy of the mill'; 'The workers themselves'; 'The social organization of the village.' The findings in the three villages were remarkably similar."—Am Econ R

---

"Dr. Macdonald confines herself rather largely to a report of the facts. Her work in this respect is extremely worth while, but the reviewer would have been glad if she had presented more of an interpretative analysis and had suggested more in the way of conclusions." E. R. Sikes

+ — Am Econ R 19:264 Je '29 550w

"This book on the southern cotton mill situation is something more than timely. It is the most human document yet written on the question. The author is a southern woman. She has mixed with mill people all her life, has worked in the mills, done social welfare work in the mill villages, conducts classes for girl workers every summer, knows her stuff thoroughly, is interested in it as a sympathetic human being and puts it together with the careful precision of a real student."

+ Christian Century 46:1506 D 4 '29 300w

"Miss Macdonald's study is objective and human. It is to be regretted that she did not include life histories of the more important mill types." Winifred Raushenbush

+ — Nation 128:674 Je 5 '29 450w

MACDONALD, PHILIP. White Crow. 302p $2 Dial press [7s 6d Collins]

28-24949

Sir Albert Lines-Bower, British financier of uncertain antecedents, was found in his sumptuous office, clad only in pink silk underwear, murdered. Colonel Anthony Gethryn, acting in an unofficial capacity, discovered the connection between the murder and The White Crow, an apparently harmless night club. And this was the most important clue of all.

---

"Readers of the Rasp will be delighted to learn that Mr. MacDonald has written another good detective story."

+ Bookm 68:xxvi Ja '29 50w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 N 18 '28 100w

"This story will easily rank with the highest class of mystery stories. It is stark murder against an original and thrilling background, with a stunning and ingenious climax."

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 14 '28 170w

" 'The White Crow' is a quite ingenious detective story, better written and more exciting than most." Raymond Mortimer

+ Nation and Ath 44:182 N 3 '28 60w

N Y Times p34 N 25 '28 200w

Outlook 150:1290 D 5 '28 120w

"Mr. Macdonald is gay, forcible and a fair player; his 'White Crow' is even better than his initial 'Rasp.' " H. C. Harwood

+ Sat R 147:137 F 2 '29 60w

MACDONALD, PHILIP—Continued

"Mr. MacDonald's latest is so able a thriller that we should unhesitantly award it a prominent place among the best detective stories of the season."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:494 D 8 '28 130w

Times [London] Lit Sup p968 D 6 '28 100w

MCDONALD, PHILIP BAYAUD. English and science. 192p $2 Van Nostrand

808 English language—Rhetoric. Technical writing 29-11689

A textbook on English composition adapted to the particular needs of technical and scientific workers, written especially for college engineering students. The two kinds of composition stressed in the text are letters and reports of a scientific nature, in which particular emphasis is placed upon clarity and conciseness.

"What many would consider a hopelessly dull subject is here made interesting by the author's own literary ability and sense of humor and the skill with which he provides the 'motivation' for such interest."

+ J Home Econ 21:607 Ag '29 140w

"There is a great need for a book like this and this one seems to be written quite intelligently. The pages on how to present a technical paper are excellent. The book is an admirable one and should be read by all chemists young and old. If the book will help an engineer—and the auther says that it does—the chemist should get much more out of it." W. D. Bancroft

+ J Phys Chem 33:1856 N '29 580w

MACDONALD, MRS SHEILA SCOBIE. My African garden. 279p il $2 Century

916.89 Rhodesia—Social life and customs 29-1322

From the shade of her favorite jacaranda tree the author writes a pleasant narrative of life in bungalow and garden of her Rhodesian home.

"The gay glimpses of a Rhodesian household which Sheila MacDonald awards us rarely seem exotic because she is so perfectly at home. Not feeling alien and left out, we follow with almost personal interest the doings of family, neighbors and natives, vividly and economically portrayed. All is set forth in a style equally pleasing for its real tolerance of human weaknesses, including the author's, and for its happy turning of humorous phrase."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 D 16 '28 200w

N Y Times p17 D 23 '28 500w

"'My African Garden' is the first of Mrs. MacDonald's books to be published in the United States, and it should not be her last."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:436 D 1 '28 230w

Wis Lib Bul 24:344 D '28

MACDOUGALL, MRS ALICE (FOOTE). Secret of successful restaurants. 245p il $3.50 Harper

647.95 Restaurants, lunch rooms, etc. 29-9105

Alice Foote MacDougall imparts to those interested in the restaurant or tea-room business the secrets of her success in managing her famous restaurants in New York.

Booklist 25:348 Je '29

Boston Transcript p2 My 25 '29 180w

"The head of a well-known chain of successful New York restaurants catering to a high-class clientele tells with much vivacity how she did it and, in so doing, provides practical advice and concrete suggestions for those interested in similar enterprises."

+ J Home Econ 21:370 My '29 50w

St Louis 27:198 Je '29

Wis Lib Bul 25:274 Jl '29

MCDOUGALL, WILLIAM. Modern materialism and emergent evolution. 249p $2.75 Van Nostrand [7s 6d Methuen]

124 Materialism. Evolution. Teleology 29-14453

In the course of these lectures Professor McDougall controverts the theory of mechanistic causation—to which the modern materialism of the title refers—and defends the theory of teleological causation, seeking to prove that "mental activity is an effective agency in the determination of the course of natural events, a designing and creative agency, capable in some degree of shaping the course of things in accordance with its desires, its purposes, its ideals."

Booklist 26:100 D '29

New Statesman 33:446 Jl 13 '29 300w

"The argument is conducted with that neatness and clarity which we expect from Professor McDougall. Not the least valuable part is the very full appendix of notes in which contrasting theories are explained and answered."

+ Spec 142:902 Je 8 '29 200w

MCEVOY, JOSEPH PATRICK. Hollywood girl. 243p $2 Simon & Schuster

29-20432

"In 'Hollywood Girl' J. P. McEvoy continues the career of Dixie Dugan of 'Show-Girl' fame, ending this time with love and marriage in the approved magazine manner."—Springf'd Republican

"The machinery is sometimes heavy, but nevertheless generally effective. Before long you will see it in your favorite theater with Messrs. Ziegfeld and Goldwyn in charge."

Boston Transcript p4 N 2 '29 200w

"The book is amusing, filled with Hollywood madness and Hollywood slang, but it lacks the easy, hilarious fun of 'Show Girl.'"

+ — N Y Times p31 N 24 '29 120w

"Mr. McEvoy is a master of the day's idiom, a genius in the juggling of the pointed topicality. Five years from now 'Show Girl' and 'Hollywood Girl' will need a glossary; to-day, however, they are quite first class and should on no account be missed by the alert-minded citizenry."

Sat R of Lit 6:491 N 30 '29 380w

"Now that the novelty of his method of writing a novel in the fashion of a revue has worn off and there is no greeting card salesman to brighten the pages, the work seems a bit thin and tiresome. Hollywood should be a fertile field for Mr McEvoy's satire, but he does not make much of his opportunities."

— Springf'd Republican p7e N 10 '29 100w

MCFEE, WILLIAM. Pilgrims of adversity. 443p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Heinemann]

28-25960

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

Booklist 25:166 Ja '29

Cleveland Open Shelf p31 F '29

"The situation is plausible enough and there is potential tragedy in the hopeless conflict of mutually incomprehensible temperaments. But it disintegrates under the reader's bewilderment among incoherent complications of subordinate events and supernumerary characters. These are presented with a sporadic brilliance all the more disappointing for the morass of verbiage its fitful and wandering gleams illumine. Mr. McFee's admirers will find this hard going as compared with the steady sweep of his early narrative." D. B. W.

— + New Repub 57:280 Ja 23 '29 120w

"He writes a fine prose; he portrays equally vividly, expansively, precisely, a ship's company, the romantic soul of a woman, and the political complications of a Central American republic; he has notable evocative powers, and his backgrounds are lavish. Pilgrims of Adversity is a tremendous effort—which doesn't, somehow, come off. What it principally lacks is form directed to an end. Two-thirds of the matter contained in these 450 closely-printed pages is totally irrelevant to the main issue."

+ — New Statesman 32:506 Ja 26 '29 140w

"The massive, brilliant vitality of this story, the first its author has published for several years past, impels us to regard the work as artistically the equal of his 'Casuals of the Sea' and 'Aliens.' Assuredly, none of his purely imaginative creations to appear in the decade since the publication of the latter book has attained the potent distinction of the present volume." E. C. Beckwith
+ N Y World p11m D 9 '28 640w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 33:612 D '28

"Mr. McFee writes extremely well. He owes something to Conrad, of course, but hardly anything to Conrad's mannerisms. His style is straightforward and unaffected and perfectly adapted to what he has to say. What Mr. McFee's work lacks is flavour. It is not exactly sterilized, but its air of seeing round the whole subject robs the subject of its mystery and gives an effect of monotony." L. P. Hartley
+ — Sat R 146:855 D 22 '28 420w

MCFEE, WILLIAM. Sailors of fortune. 415p [2] $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

29-28645

Fourteen sea stories and non-sea stories, the backgrounds of which are the Mediterranean and the Caribbean. The opening story, "A son of the commodore," takes the Vestris disaster for its theme. Others deal with the adventures of Captain Musker of a transatlantic passenger packet. In "The roving heart" Mr McFee has successfully represented the Anglo-American and the Latin views of love.

---

" 'Sailors of Fortune,' frankly, is disappointing. In the majority of these stories magnificent writing has been expended over inadequate plot. Two very poor stories are presented with writing power of superlative ability while beside them stands a third story in which the balance between style and matter is fully preserved. An uneven collection of material, but worth reading from cover to cover." Lincoln Colcord
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 D 15 '29 1050w

"His very ability makes the slight structure of his stories stagger with the color and character he loads on them. He is the very epitome of the novelist turned short story writer and not making very good at it. But this is only a technical view. From the viewpoint of the philosophic reader or the romantic reader, interested in how people comport themselves under unusual circumstances and in unfamiliar backgrounds, these are splendid yarns."
+ — N Y Times p7 N 17 '29 300w

MACFIE, RONALD CAMPBELL. Metanthropos; or, The body of the future. (To-day and to-morrow ser.) 96p $1 Dutton [2s 6d K. Paul]

575 Evolution 29-3934

Reviewing man's possible future in the light of his past the author concludes that the greatest change in the human body of the future will be increased brain-size. Despite his alarm at the present boyish feminine figure, he considers that because of the power of love in the selecting of mates, evolution upward instead of downward in the future is assured.

---

Reviewed by H. M. Parshley
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Jl 14 '29 120w
Boston Transcript p2 Je 12 '29 90w

"It is a brilliant and entertaining piece of work, with many a fantasy and many a whimsical comment or conjecture woven into its fabric, but none the less is it a serious attempt to peer into the future by means of the light which the past and the present afford, and it is full of meaty suggestions that tempt one to further thought."
+ N Y Times p13 S 1 '29 330w
Spec 140:984 Je 30 '28 100w
Times [London] Lit Sup p555 Jl 26 '28 350w

MACGOWAN, KENNETH. Footlights across [2] America, towards a national theater. 398p il $3.75 Harcourt

792 Theater—Little theater movement. Theater—United States 29-28817

A survey of the extent, nature and significance of the non-commercial theater in America, directed by the American association of adult education. Mr Macgowan travelled all over the country getting data on little theatres and various community playhouses: their architecture, plays, problems of production, finance, etc. He devotes considerable space to a discussion of student plays in American universities, and college courses in dramatics.

---

"Mr. Macgowan sees great hope in the new audience for drama that is being developed in the high schools. He includes a vast amount of practical information about producing, and caps all with a good index. This book is a real contribution to contemporary knowledge of the theater."
+ Christian Science Monitor p15 Ja 4 '30 1200w

"An informing, modest and pleasantly written book. He was obviously well equipped for the work. It is possible, however, that his report would be of greater public value if it were supplemented by a chapter written from the point of view of those who believe equally in the theater as a place of literary and artistic entertainment but see drawbacks in the widespread promotion of amateur enterprises. While Mr MacGowan is aware of these drawbacks, he is perhaps inclined, in celebrating the emancipation of the public from the commercial theater, to overestimate the educational and social value of the amateur drama."
+ — Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 3 '30 750w

MACGRATH, HAROLD. Wolves of chaos. 341p $2 Doubleday, Doran

29-6853

An American soldier of fortune and a Russian princess escape together from the terrors of the red revolution. They find refuge in Paris, but even there are not safe from the vengeance of the evil siren whose game they have spoiled, and who retaliates by kidnapping the little son of the American's best friend. A tale of love and intrigue at fast pace.

---

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p38 Ap 14 '29 100w

"It is not given to all authors to carry on the story of the characters of a former novel with unflagging interest, but Mr. MacGrath not only makes us read this volume eagerly but sends us back to the former, to read of Kitty and her Russian Grand Duke, of Clay and Olga, of Anna Karlovna and of those sinister jewels, the Drums of Jeopardy." G. B.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 27 '29 350w
Cleveland Open Shelf p112 Jl '29

"The tale has a satisfactory blood-and-thunder ending. McGrath fans will not find it boring reading, but it would have been more exciting to one reader at least if the author had worked out his climax more carefully."
Sat R of Lit 5:1080 Je 1 '29 90w
Times [London] Lit Sup p609 Ag 1 '29 220w

MACINTIRE, HORACE JAMES. Principles of mechanical refrigeration (a study course for operating engineers). 2d ed 317p il $3 McGraw

621.56 Refrigeration and refrigerating machinery 28-12952

"Moderately technical work, the first edition of which was published in 1922, now extended by about 100 pages, with the inclusion of new tables and diagrams. An explanation of fundamental thermodynamical principles pre-

MACINTIRE, H. J.—Continued
cedes descriptions of various apparatus, erection and operation, refrigerants, heat transfer, piping and pipe calculations, ice making, and applications of refrigeration. Author is Associate Professor of Refrigeration in the University of Illinois."—N Y New Tech Bks

Booklist 25:179 Ja '29
N Y New Tech Bks 13:50 O '28

MCINTYRE, JOHN THOMAS. Museum murder. 2 307p $2 Doubleday, Doran 29-22915

If Duddington Chalmers had discovered the nature of the enclosure in a packet of collars returned to him from his laundry, the identity of the murderer of Custis, museum curator, might soon have been ascertained. The tragedy deeply involves Mona Rogers, Custis' secretary, and a young artist, Billy Gregory, who both know more of the affair than they are willing to tell. It is Duddington, however, who solves the problem and keeps his young friends from possible arrest and disgrace.

Bookm 70:xxvi Ja '30 70w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 D 2 '29 100w
N Y Times p48 D 1 '29 120w

MACKAIL, DENIS GEORGE. Another part of the wood. 314p $2.50 Houghton
29-4533

In a style that has a touch of Wodehouse, particularly in the conversation, Mr. Mackail tells the amusing story of several appealing English youngsters: Noodles, eighteen, who runs away from school and joins a group of entertainers; Beaky, her slightly older brother inarticulately in love with the divine Sylvia; and his room-mate Snubs who rides to the rescue of Noodles in a battered motor car. This fiercely cherished and very temperamental two-seater, named Gertie, is an important character in the story.

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 Ag 31 '29

Booklist 25:322 My '29

"Mr. Mackail's jolly, carefree performance reminds one of the Varsity Show. His book was written, about a prankish girl named Noodles, in a burst of spontaneous good feeling. It is possibly a book intended for adolescent tastes; but all of us fall, now and then, into the same careless mood as Mr. Mackail's and can be amused by a gay book while the major part of our minds take a holiday."
+ Bookm 69:xxv Ap '29 80w

"If you love to smile at the goings on of adolescents—cherishing, at the same time, if you so desire, a sort of cosmic, brooding sadness at their happiness,—Denis Mackail is your author. He deserves exceedingly well of those readers who delight in innocent gayety, with or without a moral."
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 Ja 20 '29 130w

"Never before have I sat down with a novel which delighted me more in respect to its method of approach to what may seem to other readers as a somewhat commonplace subject. . . Mr. Mackail has in this novel a delightful story to tell. He writes with iridescent wit. He makes even walking upstairs in a London house exciting. . . It is a delightful story of youth at its best." D. F. Gilman
+ Boston Transcript p5 F 16 '29 920w

"The gay little story is told amusingly, and the reader is entertained from the moment Noodles leaves St. Ethelburga."
+ N Y Times p17 My 12 '29 450w

"The simple plot is provided by a competent constructor of very light and mildly humorous fiction."
Outlook 151:70 Ja 9 '29 120w

"It is fortunate that there is plenty of padding, for the padding is the best part of the book. It is impossible not to smile at Mr. Mackail's facetious zest in throwing fun at any target that offers itself, whether it be a fashionable girls' school, a dilatory postman watched from a window by the anxious awaiter of a letter, or the fussy 'local' train that connects Newcliff-on-Sea with Pippingfold and the Clewer Valley."
+ Spec 143:134 Jl 27 '29 150w
Springf'd Republican p7e Jl 7 '29 170w
Times [London]] Lit Sup p574 Jl 18 '29 420w
Wis Lib Bul 25:128 Ap '29

MACKAIL, DENIS GEORGE. How amusing! and a lot of other fables. 550p $3 Houghton [7s 6d Heinemann]

Thirty short stories, light and entertaining for the most part, with various themes, characters and situations. London society, the younger generation, seances, crimes, mysteries and humorous episodes are included. Among the best known of Mr Mackail's stories is the one entitled "The lost tragedy."

"This is an uncommonly generous book in point of quantity, and should silence once and for all those who insist that an Englishman cannot see a joke, or tell one. If the American reading public were to take one of these stories before retiring each night for a month, Anglo-American relations would improve perceptibly."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 D 8 '29 220w

"If one reads them in a collection, Mr. Mackail's stories become slightly irritating. They are like so many clockwork toys, different in appearance but all performing the same evolutions and all ticking in the same rhythm. I can believe, however, that, read in their proper surroundings—in the pages, that is to say, of the magazines—at intervals of not less than one month, they are very pleasing. He has certainly a gift of mild but effective unexpectedness which is not unworthy to be compared with that more robust gift of the same sort possessed by Mr. P. G. Wodehouse." E. S.
+ — New Statesman 34:57 O 19 '29 200w

"He writes in a spirit of good nature and obvious humor. There are always butlers, and much of the trappings of polite comedy are mixed up with some broad farce. A pleasing patter of English slang bristles through his dialogue, giving it a nice rippling movement. In fact, it is all very English."
+ N Y Times p9 D 15 '29 600w

"His humor may be classified as generally of the Wodehouse school, but it is never derivative or imitative; it is solidly and freshly his own. For the rest, Mr. Mackail is suave, intelligent, and well bred. He has many strings to his bow, and quick changes of temper and pace from one story to another prevent any suspicion of monotony."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:544 D 7 '29 250w

"Few writers are more considerate to their readers than is Mr. Mackail. He asks nothing of their laziness, never shocks or terrifies or antagonizes: he only arranges his diverting paper patterns in new poses against new backgrounds: he only surprises even in a gentle sort of way. How amusing the poses are too; how comfortable and easy and pleasant!" B. E. Todd
+ Spec 143:469 O 5 '29 60w

"Every one has his craft, and Mr. Mackail deserves nothing but praise for having so admirably realized his own."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p764 O 3 '29 320w

MCKAY, CLAUDE. Banjo. 326p $2.50 Harper
29-10435

In his first book Mr McKay told the story of a roving negro longshoreman who turns "home to Harlem." "Banjo" depicts the life he left, on the swarming waterfront of Marseilles. The book is less a story than a series of realistic pictures of the riff-raff of the world thrown up in the slum areas along the docks.

"If fault is to be found with the author's manner, let it be that he is more loyal to his characters than they are themselves, that his realism is a shade too natural and his naturalism too real. But such considerations need spoil no one's appreciation of a complex task simply and gustily performed." R. S. Bailey

+ — Bookm 69:311 My '29 350w

"The style at its most rhythmic is marked by prose outbursts more wildly poetic than any of the author's distinguished verse. At short lengths only, his narration is strong, vivid, polished, objective, unmotivated, moving in time with the inner action, and always marked by a certain newness." Clifford McGuinness

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 My 12 '29 750w

"Here is an unforgettable picture of waterfront life in Marseilles. Claude McKay has achieved a fine piece of characterization and description, depending for its effect upon a sure mastery of the material rather than on any particular sense of direction or of form." Freda Kirchwey

+ Nation 128:614 My 22 '29 850w

"Whether 'Banjo' is a better novel than 'Home to Harlem' is a question. It lacks the swift drive of the first book, but it has more substance. It is every bit as uncompromising in its use of material calculated to turn the stomach, but, as in 'Home to Harlem,' the dirt seems in proper place as part of a sincere picture."

+ N Y Times p8 My 12 '29 1000w

"On closing the book one has little consciousness of plot or form of the story. There is no carefully chiselled story. One does, however, have an overpowering sense of pity for the actors in the sordid drama—pity born of the conviction that a maladjusted economic and social order is crushing these puppets on the wheel." Walter White

N Y World p7m Je 9 '29 600w

"There are so many ways to be amused by this book that it is easier to urge you to read it than to try to write about the story. The last paragraph should be read first. It contains the keynote of the book." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 152:311 Je 19 '29 130w

"Here appear frankness and artistry, naturalness and abandon. Here are vivid expressions of what the Negro thinks in such variety as to represent regional portraiture, but far from the southern scene." H. W. Odum

+ Sat R of Lit 6:2 Jl 27 '29 180w

"A vigorous and full-blooded piece of writing in the racy negro idiom. These sketches are extraordinarily well done in their way; they are energetic and truthful and packed with incident, and they explore most aspects of negro character. But there is so little attempt to impose a narrative unity upon them that the mere repetition of negro characteristics is apt to make for monotony."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p512 Je 27 '29 400w

MCKAY, RICHARD CORNELIUS. Some famous sailing ships and their builder, Donald McKay; a study of the American sailing packet and clipper eras, with biographical sketches of America's foremost designer and master-builder of ships, and a comprehensive history of his many famous ships. 395p il $7.50 Putnam

623.8 Ships. Shipbuilding. McKay, Donald 28-22677

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

Booklist 25:270 Ap '29

"In a curiously complacent preface, Mr. Richard McKay introduces his book to the public with the remark that it is 'a work which will be found of unusual interest and merit.' . . The author has given the book about as bad a send-off as it would be possible to imagine. Yet it is a great subject—so great that any new contribution to it is always worth reading, however crudely presented. Mr. McKay has quite failed to make a living personality of his grandfather. . . But at least he knows his subject, and when he pauses by the way to tell the story of these famous sailing ships which Donald McKay designed he has many things to say which it would have been a pity to have missed."

— + New Statesman 32:388 D 29 '28 500w

"Mr. McKay tells the whole story with a fine gusto and a flair for the dramatic quality of those heroic days." W: McFee

+ N Y World p10m N 11 '28 820w

"All lovers of ships and the sea—and this seaman expresses pleased surprise at that growing multitude—and all admirers of a life of grim determination in face of prejudice and apathy, will welcome this fine book." D: W. Bone

+ Sat R of Lit 6:104 S 7 '29 1050w

Times [London] Lit Sup p253 Mr 28 '29 810w

MACKAYE, BENTON. New exploration; a philosophy of regional planning. 235p il $3 Harcourt

710 Regional planning 28-25333

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

"Coming as it does upon the heels of the change in American life from a rural to an urban economy, and the development of great metropolitan regions, the book offers a stimulating and interesting introduction to the problem of comprehensive planning." T: H. Reed

+ Am Pol Sci R 23:1050 N '29 420w

"This volume is especially significant in that it gives us a much broader and deeper interpretation of regional planning than most of us have been wont to consider. It is a work of exceptionally fine quality." M. L. Faust

+ Ann Am Acad 144:158 Jl '29 320w

Booklist 25:199 F '29

"An original and stimulating discussion. Of special interest to home economists are perhaps the chapters on 'Living vs. Existence,' 'Environment as a Natural Resource,' 'Planning and Revelation,' and 'Culture vs. Mechanization.' "

+ J Home Econ 21:210 Mr '29 100w

"A very interesting book, for which, in the complicated living of our modern day, there is a distinct place. It is not particularly easy reading, although it is well and sometimes brilliantly written. But it offers an important addition to our knowledge and understanding of the 'standard of living' and all that the phrase may imply."

+ N Y Times p17 D 23 '28 440w

St Louis 27:163 My '29

"The subject is one of enormous importance as well as enormous difficulties. MacKaye and his kind are blazing new paths into a new wilderness, the wilderness created by our modern mechanized civilization. Only a few people as yet realize its importance, though none of us would minimize the difficulties. How MacKaye would find solutions in certain cases for vividness, suppositious instead of real ones—is an illuminating part of his book." W. P. Eaton

+ Sat R of Lit 5:620 Ja 26 '29 800w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 30 '29 460w

"Many books have been written on town planning. This is one of the first which seeks to furnish a background for the larger study. Mr. MacKaye has performed a very real service in the presentation of what may be regarded as an introduction to a most important and difficult art." A. M. Bing

+ Survey 61:382 D 15 '28 350w

Wis Lib Bul 25:98 Mr '29

MACKAYE, PERCY. Weathergoose—woo! 185p $2.50 Longmans

29-18470

Seven tales in the Old English dialect of the Kentucky mountaineers. Folk-superstition, humor, and poetic imagination mark these stories, from the opening tale about ole Witch Big Poll to Weathergoose-Woo and the Pretty-pretty Flax-Gal.

Booklist 26:120 D '29

"Brief sketches give no idea whatever of the abounding vitality, the rush of narrative and the poetical conviction with which these tales are imbued. Action begins with the first word of every chapter. All of the tales hold a sort of diablerie of vitality and invention. One interesting departure from the conventional folk tale Mr. Mackaye makes is in dividing his major narratives into chapters. This suggests either that the author created the stories straight out of his own fancy, or that he spliced a number of genuine folk tales into a connected narrative. However, his device of chapters and a changing point of view permits a richness of characterization which the orthodox single track story lacks." T. S. Stribling

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 S 22 '29 780w

"In the peculiarly loose form, the dexterous facility of the present seven stories with their inter-woven poetry and song and music, one wonders if he has not at last found his form, if he has not at last become as much a preacher-man for Pine Mountain as erudite Preachin' Charlie and silver voiced Singin' Willie." W: E. Harris

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 11 '29 1700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p144 N '29

"It is because Mr. Mackaye with rare talent can transfer to the printed page the unique literary flavor of the mountaineer's speech and reconstruct in written narrative the dramatic intensity of a narrative that is never transmitted other than orally that his books have a peculiar appeal to the interest of a reader. Mr. Mackaye's latest contribution should evoke curiosity in all circles where the unusual in literature is acceptable."

+ N Y Times p5 S 8 '29 1400w

"Weathergoose-Woo! is probably the most convincing of Percy MacKaye's exploitations of realism as strange as fantasy. Again, and with much success, he has attempted to rescue from oblivion the superstitious mind and the dialect speech of the Kentucky mountaineers. Excellent characterization distinguishes this collection of Appalachian tales." J. D. Tasker

+ Outlook 153:69 S 11 '29 160w

"The stories are told in an intense, but intelligible, dialect, and Mr. MacKaye's treatment of this earthy material has transformed it from mere backwoods jargon to the dignity of romantic folk lore. It is no more true to nature than an artist's composition is a natural landscape, but in each case the work becomes art through the conscious process of interpretation. For something has happened to Mr. MacKaye. From being a conscientious transcriber of quaint idioms he has, with this latest book, entered that field of art that is concerned with fixing for all time the poetic—and therefore the essential—truth." Maristan Chapman

+ Sat R of Lit 6:103 S 7 '29 1110w

MCKEEHAN, HOBART DEITRICH, ed. Anglo-American preaching; with an introduction. 216p $1.75 Harper

252 Sermons 28-11114

"Mr. McKeehan has collected ten sermons by ten preachers in England and the United States and offers them as samples of the best preaching to-day in these two countries. His preachers are George A. Gordon, Joseph Fort Newton, Newell Dwight Hillis, Lynn Harold Hough and Frederick Franklin Shannon, for America, and Dean Inge, Bishop Henson, Bishop Barnes, Canon Storr and Layton Richards for England."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"These may not be 'our ten greatest living preachers,' says the editor in his Introduction, but 'we have no greater ten living preachers.' This judgment, to be frank, seems to us nonsense. . . The sermons, it is enough to say, are typical of the men. Dr. Hough's sermon is the ablest in the volume—a superb example of contemporary preaching at its best. As for the editor's biographical notes, they are almost without exception extravagant, and thus in bad taste." J: H. Holmes

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 Je 10 '28 300w

Boston Transcript p6 My 19 '28 500w

"Any clergyman who reads this book will find that the editor's purpose has been more than fulfilled. The sermons of Dean Inge and Dr. Gordon, of Bishop Barnes and Dr. Hillis, of Bishop Henson and Dr. Newton and of the several others, printed together, bring into sharper relief the fine qualities of each and do not, in the least degree, neutralize one another." E. J. Cleveland

+ Churchman p18 Je 30 '28 200w

"Whatever be their comparative worth, these sermons are fine examples of the best product of the modern pulpit on both sides of the Atlantic."

+ J Religion 9:334 Ap '29 120w

MCKELVEY, SUSAN DELANO. The lilac; a monograph. 581p il $18 Macmillan

583.71 Lilacs 28-30234

A comprehensive and authoritative monograph on lilacs, which the author has been more than seven years in compiling. Chapters are contributed by such authorities as Theodore A. Havemeyer, who has a famous lilac collection, Ernest H. Wilson and Alfred Rehder of the Arnold Arboretum. Species are enumerated and described with scientific detail; there are chapters on the history, distribution, methods of propagation and pruning of lilacs; and one chapter on the diseases and insects which infest them.

"All there is to know about the lilac must be in this impressive and beautiful volume, 450 varieties of the common lilac, which came to Western Europe in the middle of the sixteenth century, and to America soon after, being listed and described; and there are case histories of innumerable varieties of the other twenty-seven recognized species of the genus. The whole staff of the Arnold Arboretum collaborated in producing a work which for its scholarship at once becomes standard."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 F 3 '29 130w

"Susan Delano McKelvey's exhaustive book on 'The Lilac' ought to be a treasure-trove for professional botanists and horticulturists and a source of knowledge and benefit to the gardener."

+ N Y Times p7 Mr 3 '29 220w

"If we have any grievance against this book, it is that so much space should have been devoted to the history of all the varieties of the common lilac to which names have been given so lavishly, apart from their intrinsic merit. . . The species, which number twenty-three, are handled in so adequate and comprehensive a manner that the book should certainly take its place as the standard work of reference on the subject."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p294 Ap 11 '29 480w

MCKENNA, EDWARD L. Hardware. 287p $2.50 McBride

29-10301

"James begat Michael, and Michael begat Neil and Frank; and this is the story of their lives and their connection with politics and the liquor trade. The chapters narrating the rise of Michael from South Brooklyn saloon-keeper to district political boss are the best in the book and constitute an excellent picture of the ethics of the hard-boiled machine politician who is also an honest man."—Outlook

"It's a fine stimulating piece of work, what there is of it—pre-Volstead, private stock. It has the 'kick' of real character, instead of synthetic types." Isabel Paterson
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ap 14 '29 1400w

"Mr. McKenna's style is that of a natural realist and he has an agreeable manner of detail. In addition, there is a sense of the casual that makes the characters in 'Hardware' seem very real. Probably they are." R. D. C.
+ Boston Transcript p2 My 25 '29 300w

"His book isn't a great book, nor does it anywhere touch greatness; but it takes a very respectable place beside the better biographies of the day and leaves the rank-and-file novels far behind. It is a brave first robin of a better spring." A. B. Parsons
+ — Nation 128:652 My 29 '29 580w

Reviewed by Horace Gregory
N Y Evening Post p7m Jl 27 '29 480w

"A style which is weighted heavily with the curious Irish idiom of the late Donn Byrne in the early chapters becomes chaotic and blurred, for all its essential vigor, before the author has finished his work. Exuberance there is. But the virtues of form and careful selection are lost. Sharp, illuminating characterizations, or situations of melodramatic intensity, which one might reasonably ask for with this racy, hurried style, are absent. Yet with Mr. McKenna's vigor and his willingness to tackle difficult subject matter and difficult styles of writing, he stamps himself as a novelist of more than ordinary promise."
+ — N Y Times p14 Ap 7 '29 600w

"A formless but at times vivid story, straightforwardly told." W. R. Brooks
Outlook 152:153 My 22 '29 100w

"The story is told in a manner worthy of hard-fisted Cronins. The characters are three-dimensional and living, the style straightforward and firm. 'Hardware' should appeal to a large number of readers, and deserves to have them." Basil Davenport
+ Sat R of Lit 5:1110 Je 15 '29 450w

MCKENNA, STEPHEN. Between the lines. 301p $2.50 Dodd
29-18423

The action and thought that goes on "between the lines" of personal letters, social notes, and scraps of conversation in modern social life, form the substance of this novel. Lola Morchard, at 35, is the beautiful wife of a man much older and of opposite tastes. Hungry for romance, she falls in love with and becomes the mistress of Piers Shotton, a man of her social set. The affair progresses for six months, and then ends with the marriage of Piers and June Campion.

"Despite careful devices and experienced writing, the troubles of Sir Harrison, his wife, and her paramour remain politely unconvincing. . . Because Mr. McKenna has the skill to tell a live story, the flatness of his latest novel is particularly irritating."
— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p40 S 29 '29 460w

"An acute study of a continental situation this novel may well be. It is on the whole, however, very cynical and rather distasteful." W. E. H.
— Boston Transcript p2 S 25 '29 700w

"The book contains no small amount of deft analysis and some rather acrid portrayals of the talk and behavior of the pseudo-smart, would-be intellectuals who fear nothing so much as that they may inadvertently express admiration for something which is not quite perfectly up-to-date."
N Y Times p32 O 27 '29 550w

MCKENNA, STEPHEN. Shadow of Guy Denver. 326p $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d T. Butterworth]
29-929

Clifford Ottley, a London barrister, and Cressida Denver whose husband is in the colonies, are writing a play together. The play follows the course of their own love affair, which takes an abrupt turn when Guy Denver returns and Clifford finds in him the friend he has always longed for.

"One feels, closing the book, that there was no glow in it, but that it is pleasant and adroit writing."
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 F 10 '29 300w

"The novel is a brilliant piece of writing, original in conception, and constructed with great art." D. F. G.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 16 '29 1150w
New Statesman 31:572 Ag 11 '28 200w

"Cressida is the most exasperatingly selfish woman in fiction, and, for her, conversation is synonymous with bickering. The performance is altogether dreary." R. C. B. B.
— N Y Evening Post p8m Ja 26 '29 200w

"Mr. McKenna has a faculty, sometimes happy and often far otherwise, of turning even the most strenuous and magnificently conceived novel of action into a sober investigation of the minutiae of human motive. 'Guy Denver' was not originally strenuous in its conception, but it develops under Mr. McKenna's exacting hand into an exceedingly long and complicated story in which no least emotion is slighted. . . Guy Denver is Mr. McKenna's masterpiece. He grows under the author's hand, by almost imperceptible stages, from a dim and shadowy creation of Cressida's imagination into a commanding figure which absorbs and dominates the whole plan of the book."
+ N Y Times p19 Ja 27 '29 500w

"Mr. McKenna moves as easily as ever in his chosen sphere, his prose and his narrative technique are alike unexceptionable; but his polish is without brilliance, his grace without fascination; the credibility of his characters, their complete consistency and skilful drawing, somehow fails to impart to them impressiveness, interest, or more than a faint semblance of life. The story is commonplace, and mere technical facility, unaided by the tragic or the comic muse, can not ward off the shadow of boredom that hangs over it."
+ — Sat R of Lit 5:814 Mr 23 '29 140w

"Cressida is an admirable study. She is slowly revealed as casual, untruthful, selfish, vacillating, while The Shadow of Guy Denver, the husband, assumes a dignity she had denied it. The sophistries of Cressida, refusing all decisions, are ingeniously expressed: all the satirical part of the book is distinctly good." R. A. Taylor
+ — Spec 141:110 Jl 21 '28 130w

"He has been content this time to construct a love comedy pure and simple which, if not dazzlingly brilliant, is the work of a very capable story-teller."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p550 Jl 26 '28 550w

MCKENNY, MARGARET. Mushrooms of field and wood. 193p il $2 Day
589.22 Mushrooms 29-16265

An inexpensive handbook on mushrooms, designed for the use of young people and beginners in the study. One hundred and fifty of the larger mushrooms are described and illustrated. The book is sponsored by the Camp fire girls, Girl scouts, Boy scouts and the American museum of natural history.

Booklist 26:75 N '29

"Miss McKenny's volume is intended for the beginner. It is abundantly illustrated, and carefully keyed; and it eschews the use of those sesquipedalian polysyllables which seem to delight the hearts of most botanists. With its aid there should be little difficulty in identifying the common mushrooms of the Northeast, and of distinguishing beauty from edibility."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ag 25 '29 150w

The schematic diagrams and photographic illustrations are the finest of the kind that have yet come to our attention."
+ Boston Transcript p2 S 7 '29 60w
N Y Times p18 Ag 25 '29 350w

MACKENZIE, CATHERINE DUNLOP. Alexander Graham Bell, the man who contracted space. 382p il $5 Houghton

B or 92 Bell, Alexander Graham. Telephone 28-28948

This, the first authoritative, complete life of the inventor of the telephone, is called by the author "the story of a man's life told in terms of the work he did and the way he did it."

---

Booklist 25:211 F '29

"When the interest lags there is always Miss Mackenzie's sure feeling for character. A fine sense of the dignity of her subject has not kept her, as too often happens with semi-official biographers, from displaying Bell's foibles." Roberts Tapley

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ja 6 '29 950w

"Miss Mackenzie tells the story with a dignified restraint, a rare sense of values and a faculty of happy phrasing, which gives a distinct literary charm." Frances Bartlett

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 8 '28 1400w

Nation 128:593 My 15 '29 50w

"He is very much alive in this stirring book, for Miss Catherine Mackenzie has high qualifications for her task. For ten years she was Dr. Bell's secretary and confidante, the custodian of his papers, and the recipient of his genial reminiscences. She writes with clearness, force and humor." Bruce Barton

+ N Y Evening Post p8m D 22 '28 450w

"Catherine Mackenzie disclaims any pretence to exhaustiveness or to 'formal biography.' She has produced an exemplary biography for the busy reader who has scant time or patience for the ponderous, heavily documented, 'official' life of any man, whatever his eminence. Her book is spirited and inspiring as well as absorbingly interesting." G. W. Harris

+ N Y Times p26 My 19 '29 860w

"A simply written book, unbiased and well documented and enriched with quotation from letters and with photographs and cartoons."

+ Outlook 150:1372 D 19 '28 60w

Pratt p32 spring '29

"One of America's greatest scientists is presented here not only as a discoverer, but as a man; intensely alive, filled with enthusiasm about the human world, as well as about the world of ideas."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:607 Ja 19 '29 400w

MACKENZIE, COMPTON. Three couriers. 295p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Cassell] 29-10480

Continues the adventures of Commander Waterlow of the British secret service, begun in "Extremes Meet" (Book Review Digest, 1928). The European war is on, and Waterlow, together with his confrères of the Italian and French diplomatic corps, is busy trying to intercept couriers with important messages from one enemy ally to another. The story of his attempt is occasionally smothered by the minutiae of office routine introduced as background.

---

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Ap 21 '29 230w

"The story is very complicated, and its ramifications and characters are innumerable. But the latter are well differentiated and well drawn, with a touch of caricature that happily prevents the reader from taking too seriously a story which might at times seem brutal. Barring a little unnecessary roughness in what passes for vigor and virility, 'The Three Couriers' is a thoroughly enjoyable yarn."

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 18 '29 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p126 S '29

"At least there is plenty doing. There is so much doing, in fact, that it is almost impossible to follow either the separate threads or the general trend of the story. Perhaps Mr. Mackenzie intended that it should be so. Perhaps he intended us to read the book twice or even thrice, before we could be sure we had grasped the significance of every detail. But that is really asking a little too much. A single reading induces quite sufficient exhaustion." V. Sackville-West

— Nation and Ath 44:790 Mr 9 '29 260w

"It contains no love interest nor any other extraneous attraction whatever; it deals with the Secret Service from the first page to the last, and may perhaps be described as the first perfectly genuine Secret Service story that has ever been published. . . It is certainly a book which the curious should read."

+ New Statesman 32:638 F 23 '29 1000w

"No one who had not lived his story could have written such a deliberately untinseled, mordantly comic, astringent yarn of espionage and counter-espionage in the Balkans. The story has little or no plot, but it has atmosphere and incident so much above the usual run of tales in a like setting that we drank it down." F: F. Van de Water

+ N Y Evening Post p11m My 4 '29 120w

" 'The Three Couriers,' in spite of its treatment of material charged with interest, fails to sustain those elements of suspense and excitement, which are an indispensable accompaniment to a successful adventure story of any sort."

— + N Y Times p22 My 19 '29 200w

"The ghastly mixture of comedy and horror, the striking characterizations and the fact that the hero's schemes do not always succeed go to make these secret service tales of Mackenzie's read like fact, not fiction." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 152:351 Je 26 '29 100w

Pratt p37 autumn '29

"The impression of the scene is vividly rendered. . . and the reader acquires some queer experience of extremely mixed races." R. A. Taylor

+ Spec 142:292 F 23 '29 230w

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 23 '29 160w

Times [London] Lit Sup p138 F 21 '29 500w

MACKENZIE, FREDERICK ARTHUR. Clash of the cymbals; the secret history of the revolt in the Salvation army. 223p il $2 (6s) Brentano's

267.15 Salvation army. Booth, Bramwell. Booth, Evangeline Cory 29-14113

"Story of the cause, the progress and the final success of the movement in the Salvation Army that ended in the deposition of General Bramwell Booth and the reform of its organization. . . Mr. Mackenzie has known well practically all the high officials of the Salvation Army for many years and has been acquainted with the Army's work in all those many parts of the world to which his profession has taken him. He gives vivid sketches of several of these men and women whose names are known all over the world."—N Y Times

---

"Mr. Mackenzie's summary of the dispute is admirably compiled."

+ New Statesman 32:824 Ap 6 '29 150w

"Mr. Mackenzie's desire and intention of perfect fairness are evident throughout his narrative. Evidently, also, the account is authoritative, for it is based on statements to him of high Army officials on the hitherto secret documents, given in full in the appendix, which argued the case on both sides between General Booth and his revolting subordinates previous to the meeting of the High Council."

+ N Y Times p13 Ag 25 '29 500w

Spec 142:511 Mr 30 '29 230w

MACKENZIE, FREDERICK ARTHUR, ed. Landru. (Famous trials ser.) 244p $2 Scribner [10s 6d Bles]

343.1 Landru, Henri Désiré

The book contains a history of the case and a report of the trial of the notorious Landru who wooed and robbed scores of women, and disposed of at least ten victims who were never seen again, alive or dead.

"This sinister, yet fascinating man has given Mr. Mackenzie material which will interest the student of psychology."
+ Bookm 69:xxx Ap '29 80w

"The author gives a lively running account of the trial and provides photographs of the victims, as well as of the supposedly fatal oven."
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 My 19 '29 130w

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett
Boston Transcript p10 My 25 '29 100w
New Statesman 32:166 N 10 '28 170w

"Mr. F. A. Mackenzie has made a definitely good job of Landru, the latest of our many Bluebeards. There was wanting just such a detailed study as this and he has made the most of this material. His research is good; his presentation is forceful, and his conclusions seem to me sound." E: H. Bierstadt
+ Outlook 151:388 Mr 6 '29 90w
Springf'd Republican p12 F 5 '29 180w

MCKEON, RICHARD PETER. Philosophy of Spinoza; the unity of his thought. 345p $5 (25s) Longmans

193 Spinoza, Benedictus de 28-27781

This interpretation of Spinoza's philosophy explores first the background of his thought, the influences that molded it and the purpose which early manifested itself in his work. The second part of the study shows how the unity of his thought emerges. A bibliography is added and an index.

Booklist 25:231 Mr '29
Bookm 68:xxiv N '28 120w

"Mr. McKeon's scholarly and accomplished work succeeds deftly in doing important things. It makes Spinoza clear, in itself no mean accomplishment or negligible service. Secondly, without any parade or unction, it makes perfectly clear what his importance is. . . He has indicated beyond all obscurity why Spinoza's is so compelling, so significant and so solitary a philosophy. . . Not the least of Mr. McKeon's contributions is the clarity and comprehensiveness with which he surveys the historical sources of a philosophy, for all its complexities so clear and self-contained that one forgets it has sources at all. . . There is a sober directness about the style that puts the book in the realm of literature as well as scholarship." Irwin Edman
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Mr 24 '29 1000w

"A new point that the author has brought out is that Spinoza spent much time in experimental science. Another forgotten role of his was as higher critic of the Bible. . . We can especially recommend as the most interesting chapter of this work that on Reason, Religion and the State." Woodbridge Riley
+ Churchman 139:28 Ja 12 '29 300w

"The treatment is on the whole an exposition without critical defense. The discussion is so very sympathetic that one gains the impression that Mr. McKeon would second practically everything that Spinoza affirms, though such commitment is carefully not explicity stated. It is highly doubtful, however, if this sympathetic interpretation will be persuasive enough to convert any who have failed to find in Spinoza the unity and consistency assumed by the author." E. A. Burtt
+ — Int J Ethics 39:500 Jl '29 300w

"Dr. McKeon's book is a typical product of the schools. It is solid, profound, scholarly. It contains an exhaustive bibliography, a subject index, and an index of proper names; there are no pages without footnotes. This type of mind seems unable to deal with the anxieties and incertitudes of human existence, to meet which the systematic philosopher's thought, as well as the layman's, arises. For it, a man's attempt to liberate himself from his age is nothing else than a system—to be compared with other systems and classified."
— + Nation 128:233 F 20 '29 730w

"Written in admirable, grave prose and with a clarity which yet does not compromise with the frequent difficulty of the subject." Lionel Trilling
+ N Y Evening Post p9m F 9 '29 680w

Reviewed by W. Frauenglass
Outlook 152:513 Jl 24 '29 800w
St Louis 27:155 My '29

"Dr. McKeon, who is an American scholar, writes with unusual clearness, and even—considering the intricate nature of his subject—with simplicity."
+ Spec 141:968 D 22 '28 250w

"In devoting his profound work on Spinoza's thought to the purpose proclaimed in his subtitle—i.e. to a vindication of its unity or inner harmony, Dr. McKeon leaves the impression of having committed the refreshingly rare delict of promising less than he has in fact performed."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p54 Ja 24 '29 1000w

MCLAUGHLIN, FRED. Vale of Aragon. 314p $2 Bobbs

Bolivar, Simón—Fiction 29-17917

"A duel by night in New Orleans (the year is 1821), with the fair Doña Dulce for prize, starts the hero of this tale, a brawny veteran of Jackson's campaigns, upon the adventures which bear him to Venezuela and service there under Bolivar in the great liberator's war of independence against the rule of Spain."—Sat R of Lit

Reviewed by Donald Douglas
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 S 8 '29 170w

"Fred McLaughlin makes a very plausible story, full of romance. It does not sound exactly as though it really happened, but it does sound as if it really happened in South America, because that is an improbable place anyhow. . . If you love a nice, absurd young hero, and a lady like her name, the 'Vale of Aragon' is waiting for you."
+ Boston Transcript p4 N 2 '29 300w

"Most of the tale is the usual flatulent, swashbuckling stuff, and the best of it is contained in the battle descriptions and in the vividly etched portrait of 'South America's George Washington.' "
— + Sat R of Lit 6:252 O 12 '29 80w

MACLEISH, ARCHIBALD. Hamlet of A. MacLeish. 45p $1.50 Houghton

811 28-25478

A poetical soliloquy in which the man of ideals mulls over the world of materialism. Short italic notes at the sides calling attention to certain scenes of Hamlet serve as the point of departure for each new facet of the poem.

"Archibald MacLeish has technical genius. He can say things with a cunning, a brilliance, a suppleness, a power, which any living poet might covet. But he is a kind of slave of tradition: with the difference that the traditions which enslave him are contemporary ones. He seems unable to throw off the influence of T. S. Eliot, of Mr. Stevens, of various French poets of the last quarter century; an influence which is so deeply pervasive that it seems to have affected even his way of thinking and feeling." Conrad Aiken
+ — Bookm 68:577 Ja '29 400w

"While it is the poet's indebtedness that strikes one first, and sharply, one is left with a deep sense of the truth of his emotion and the excellence of his poetic gift. He may share the mood and even to a degree, the manner of other men, but his work is fed on his own feeling, not on mere literature, and his vigor of utterance is too great to be purely derivative. . . His difficulty seems to be that he moves like a bareback rider astride two horses at once: one, that Pegasus who remembers other hands on the bit; the other, his own private mount." Babette Deutsch

MACLEISH, ARCHIBALD—Continued

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 D 16 '28 620w

"Charm of imagery and felicity of expression, rather than profundity, or at least, clarity of thought, distinguish this poet's mystical interpretations of 'Hamlet.' Whatever else this curious poem may be, it is most certainly a fresh revelation of the latent capabilities of our language, and a striking reiteration of the apparently limitless versatility of blank verse." E. B. H.

+ — Boston Transcript p7 N 17 '28 300w

Dial 86:436 My '29 80w

"The conception of the poem is lofty, the design pure, the accent moving and true, the vocabulary rich and poetical. It will betray nobody's taste as false to affirm Mr. MacLeish a poet of true distinction, and, incidentally, the finest craftsman in verse now writing in English." L: Galantière

+ Nation 128:sup471 Ap 17 '29 900w

"Mr. MacLeish has the potentialities of an important poet, and his continued dependence on other experience than his own makes one wonder when he is going to fulfill them." Theodore Spencer

+ — New Repub 57:226 Ja 9 '29 450w

"It is neither his phrase-making nor his subject that distinguishes MacLeish's latest. It is the discipline, the order he imposes on the chaos of the subconscious, the employment of his difficult material. Beginning with the short breath, MacLeish proves he knows how to draw the long line." L: Untermeyer

+ Sat R of Lit 5:463 D 8 '28 480w

"The metre is an interesting experiment, a compromise between blank verse and free verse, which would be well worth further study. We cannot feel, however, that the author has yet learned to play his best on his own ingenious invention. In spite of the technical variety in rhythm, there is a regrettable sameness, sonorous but monotonous, in the general effect. Also the language, though stately and imaginative, is seldom poignant. The poem bears the stamp of a keen mind, but seems to us more ingenious than inspired." F: E. Pierce

+ — Yale R n s 18:364 winter '29 380w

MACLEOD, WILLIAM CHRISTIE. American Indian frontier. (Hist. of civilization) 598p $6.50 Knopf [25s K. Paul]

970.1 Indians—Origin. Indians of North America—History. Indians of South America—History [28-24819]

A history of the American Indian which goes back to his probable origin and his life before the coming of the white man and treats comprehensively of the conquest of the Indians by the Spanish, the trading period and the French and English wars, and the subsequent events which brought about the gradual submergence of the Indian by white encroachment.

---

"The material is entertaining as well as thought-provoking throughout and is admirably welded by constant attention to the rôle of 'big business' on the frontier. The anthropologist may be startled by some of Doctor MacLeod's theories, such as those growing out of his comparison of the policies of Latin and Anglo-Saxon settlers, but the fresh point of view and analytical ability which he brings to his work easily atone for a lack of orthodoxy in interpretation." Donald Young

+ Ann Am Acad 145:204 S '29 230w

Boston Transcript p7 D 15 '28 430w

"Historians will find this book stimulating and interesting; the reviewer hopes that the author's sweeping generalizations, some of which may be questioned, will not blind the specialist to the value of a work which portrays, from both points of view, the frontier between white and Indian." T. F. McIlwraith

+ Canadian Hist R 10:73 Mr '29 800w

"Mr. Macleod has fully demonstrated that he is well qualified for his task, and he has presented his material clearly and concisely." C. W. Hobley

+ Eng Hist R 44:326 Ap '29 860w

"Historians, as well as anthropologists and sociologists, may benefit from its chapters which should stimulate the reconstruction of many conventional narratives of the contacts between the whites and Indians." Michael Kraus

+ Hist Outlook 20:42 Ja '29 550w

"Prof. Macleod's book is a valuable contribution to ethnological and historical literature, but it is more than that. It is a document which should serve as a guide and a warning in our relations with peoples of non-European culture to-day."

+ Nature 123:159 F 2 '29 200w

"Mr. Macleod, assistant professor in the department of finance in the Wharton and Graduate Schools of the University of Pennsylvania, comes to his subject equipped with a rich background of previously published research in aboriginal North American economics and social origins. Most friends of the Indians are accused of being 'sentimental,' especially by those who approach the Indians with some ulterior motive connected with Indian real estate or oil wells. The author refuses to treat his subject 'sentimentally,' but there is no need for him to inject an emotional bias into the text. The facts, amply documented, speak for themselves." Elsie Weil

+ New Repub 57:sup120 D 12 '28 230w

"This volume represents the first attempt at an analysis of American frontier history made particularly from the viewpoint of the Indian side of the frontier development."

+ New Statesman 32:supxii D 1 '28 500w

Pratt p34 summer '29

St Louis 27:63 F '29

Spec 142:94 Ja 19 '29 130w

Times [London] Lit Sup p945 D 6 '28 3250w

"McLeod has turned off a superb job. I know of nothing in its field that can approach it, either as a textbook or an eyeopener for the general reader who wants to get the 'lowdown' on our sainted forefathers' brand of imperialism and to understand this ancient continent." D. A.

+ World Tomorrow 12:137 Mr '29 200w

Reviewed by F: L. Paxson

Yale R n s 19:196 autumn '29 330w

MACMANUS, THEODORE FRANCIS, and BEASLEY, NORMAN. Men, money, and motors; the drama of the automobile. 284p $3 Harper

629.2 Automobile industry and trade

A rapid and informal narrative of the dramatic rise of the automobile industry and of the men who made it. The authors had inside knowledge of the events they describe and personal contacts with many of the automobile makers.

---

Boston Transcript p4 Jl 13 '29 420w

"The authors of the present book seem to be in on almost everything there is to know about automobiles and their makers. They tell their stories in a rapid journalistic style that is quite readable." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p9m My 18 '29 200w

"Both authors have known their field, one as a journalist, the other as an advertising man, and their data seem accurate. A little less sentimentality and not quite so much playing to the gallery would have made their book even more valuable." R. L. Duffus

+ — N Y Times p6 My 19 '29 1000w

"The point of view maintained by these authors is that of newspaper men not over-inclined to hero worship, but realizing the bigness and the freshness of the facts that they are handling." W: B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 79:19 Je '29 320w

Wis Lib Bul 25:318 O '29

MACMILLAN, ERNEST, ed. Book of songs; comp. for the entertainment and delight of English men and women everywhere, but especially for those at home and in Canada. 180p $3 Dutton [7s 6d Dent]

784.8 Songs

A book of songs compiled especially for the Canadian home, club, school and college.

---

Reviewed by P: Bowdoin
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 My 19 '29 70w

"The National Council of Education, under whose auspices [this selection] has been published, may rest assured that the objects which they have had in mind have been fully achieved. Canadian music is in a healthy condition if its popular basis is the hundred odd songs, hymns and carols here gathered together from many countries."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p298 Ap 11 '29 230w

MACMILLAN, NORMAN. Art of flying; with a foreword by Sir Sefton Brancker. 159p il $1.75 Mitchell [5s Duckworth]

629.13 Aeronautics [28-16502]

"Captain Macmillan, who has had an experience of eleven years' continuous flying, writes not only for the aeroplane pilot but also for those contemplating flying as a career. He attempts here to present to the reader 'a picture of what flying is, with its possibilities and limitations, in relation to himself as the brains of the aeroplane.' "—Times [London] Lit Sup

---

" 'The Art of Flying' will satisfy the student or interest the general reader—will stand casual perusal or careful consideration." J. C. G.
+ Boston Transcript p2 F 9 '29 400w
Nation and Ath 43:618 Ag 11 '28 1500w
St Louis 27:16 Ja '29

"By far the best book on the subject we have read. Some of it is a little technical, perhaps, for the amateur. He who has not flown and expects to find practical hints as to what to do and what to avoid will have to delve about the book for his information—there is a need, indeed, for a simple handbook of what is, in its elements, a simple subject—but the reader will be rewarded here with some remarkably good and unsophisticated writing."
+ Spec 140:684 My 5 '28 270w

"Sir Sefton Brancker believes this to be the first work on aviation written from the test pilot's point of view."
Times [London] Lit Sup p811 N 1 '28 80w

MCMILLEN, WHEELER. Too many farmers; the story of what is here and ahead in agriculture; foreword by William M. Jardine. 340p $2 Morrow

630.973 Agriculture—United States 29-21268

"Mr. McMillen says more people are trying to make a living by agriculture than can under present conditions. A century ago it took nine-tenths of the population to raise food enough for the country. Now 25 per cent are so engaged and 15 per cent would be enough with the improved methods at present available. 'Back to the farm' is the wrong slogan. Food wants do not increase as rapidly as other wants. We need fewer and better farmers. Though this particular argument gives title to the book, it occupies but a small space in it. For the most part it deals with the present problems of the farmer and the things that may be done about them."—Christian Century

---

"The book is readable. It has many excerpts and ideas that have been handed to us for years in the agricultural and daily press. It is well and logically put together. It tells not only of the hardships of the farmer, but it offers logical and definite plans for betterment." C: L. Gold
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 N 10 '29 450w

"The author has no faith in political perunas, though he sees the remedy for some evils in legislation, especially in regard to taxation. Most of his remedies are technical, economic and social. The author knows his farmers."
+ Christian Century 46:1380 N 6 '29 150w

MCMURRY, DONALD LE CRONE. Coxey's army; a study of the industrial army movement of 1894. 331p il $4 Little

331.137 Coxey, Jacob Sechler. Unemployment 29-23512

Deals with the armies of the unemployed that marched to Washington in 1894, inspired by "General" Coxey of Ohio. Coxey thought to arouse Congress to an interest in unemployment by appearing in Washington at the head of his army. Other armies quickly organized in the West and commandeered railroad trains in the hope of reaching Washington in time to join Coxey's army, but long before they arrived Coxey had been arrested for walking on the grass and the whole movement had collapsed.

---

"Professor McMurry has given the episode, or rather the episodes, for the Western armies are epics in themselves, a true setting in the wider stage of the farmer-labor revolt. He contrives to make of it an ingenious link in the Populist alliance of farmers and industrial workers." J. A. Flexner
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 N 10 '29 800w

"The author has done his work well. His research has been exhaustive and exceedingly intelligent. Besides the authorities which would occur to the ordinary historical investigator, he has managed to find manuscripts written by members of the organizations which took part in the movement, of which he has made excellent use." S. L. Cook
+ Boston Transcript p5 N 2 '29 1900w
Reviewed by W: Frauenglass
Outlook 153:387 N 6 '29 280w

MCNEELY, MARIAN (HURD) (MRS LEE MCNEELY). Jumping-off place. 308p il $2 Longmans

29-16243

The four young orphaned Linvilles, ranging in age from eight to seventeen, went to Dakota at their uncle's death to take up his claim on the Jumping-off place. They endured heat, drought, snakes, blizzards and vindictive neighbors like the good sports they were, and at the end of the fourteen months the claim was theirs as well as the respect and liking of all their neighbors.

---

Booklist 26:37 O '29

"Here is a genuine home story of the Dakota prairies interpenetrated with that love of the land and awareness of its possibilities which is revealed only to one who has staked a claim and proved up. . . There is more genuine atmosphere and character in this story than we have found in any recent book for girls. . . If Mrs. McNeely can write like this she should abandon the practice of introducing irrelevant 'light touches' which get in the way of her story." A. C. Moore
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Ag 18 '29 700w
Cleveland Open Shelf p131 N '29
Reviewed by M. L. Becker
Outlook 153:590 D 11 '29 30w

"This simple and sincere story should have for young people the same sort of appeal as 'Robinson Crusoe' and 'Swiss Family Robinson.' . . . The book has a winning spontaneity and straightforwardness, and the author succeeds in capturing effectively the feeling of the prairie."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:428 N 16 '29 260w
Springf'd Republican p7e D 15 '29 80w

MCNEELY, MARIAN (HURD) (MRS LEE MCNEELY). Rusty Ruston; a story for brothers and sisters. 293p il $2 (7s 6d) Longmans

28-21226

The story of a plucky young red-headed girl who, when family resources failed, determined to earn enough money for her freshman year at college, and did it with a will.

Booklist 25:251 Mr '29

Reviewed by Helen Chrystie
Sat R of Lit 5:352 N 10 '28 100w
Springf'd Republican p7e D 16 '28 120w

"Rusty's spontaneity and charm are reflected in the style of the book. Spoiled somewhat by over-emphasis on the vulgarity of the rich next-door neighbors, but a story above the average of those written for older girls."
+ — Wis Lib Bul 25:78 F '29

MCNEER, MAY YONGE (MRS LYND KENDALL WARD), and WARD, LYND KENDALL. Prince Bantam. 229p il $2.50 Macmillan

29-9666

"This is the story mothers of Japan tell their children; of the beginning of the world and of how those beautiful isles of Nippon, the land of the Rising Sun, came into being. And this is the tale of Yoshitsune the brave, the generous, the loyal, and of his faithful henchman Benkei of the Western Pagoda, the strongest man of all the world."—Prologue

Booklist 25:400 Jl '29

"There is adventure in it, and excitement. And there is humor in it, and a pure, unstrained poetry that blossoms as engagingly in these pages as the plum trees in the Son of Heaven's palace garden." Josiah Titzell
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Je 23 '29 1050w

Cleveland Open Shelf p132 N '29

"Prince Bantam and his magnificent and excessive giant ally carry the reader straight to old Japan where legend and fact, beauty and humor blend in making this a book to read aloud and relish." M. G. Bonner
+ N Y Times p5 Jl 28 '29 20w

"A beautiful big book with drawings in the Japanese manner—one full-page in color—telling a famous hero-tale of Japan so well that young people will enjoy it and so accurately that older readers may respect it as authentic folk-lore. There is fun in the giant who goes about with Prince Bantam, and any amount of fighting in the good old broadsword manner, there is also a hint that the hero may have gone off afterward and become Genghis Khan." M. L. Becker
+ Outlook 152:392 Jl 3 '29 80w

St Louis 27:316 N '29

"The basis of the legend is the same as that wherever a child is born into an adult world. The hero is young and small; he always wins over incredible odds; the giant follows obediently at his heels. But the nomenclature and the customs are bewilderingly strange, and into this barrier of unfamiliarity the enthusiastic and well-informed authors simply crash. A further difficulty is that the excellently illustrated book is too large and too heavy for childish hands." C. H. Baker
Sat R of Lit 5:1153 Je 29 '29 170w

Springf'd Republican p7e My 26 '29 100w

Wis Lib Bul 25:163 My '29

"This charming tale of a great prince of Japan and his friendly companion, Benkei the giant, achieves admirably in sustaining its thrills and in conveying the atmosphere of rich old Nipponese legend. Lynd Ward's black-and-white illustrations have infused the weird romantic quality that fantasy required, and when they should, they stir with movement."
+ World Tomorrow 12:347 Ag '29 100w

MCNEILE, HERMAN CYRIL (SAPPER, pseud.). Temple tower. 319p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

29-10175

A new Bulldog Drummond story, containing two mysteries. The first concerns a closely guarded house on Romney Marsh where live an elderly recluse and a pugilist. The second mystery has to do with the identity of a murderous monster known as Le Bossu Masqué.

Bookm 70:xxvi S '29 80w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ag 25 '29 130w

"It is a clever mystery story that keeps one guessing and almost gasping to the very end. The style befits the theme and is full of dramatic action. One is carried eagerly and breathlessly along wondering what the next move will be. Bulldog Drummond lives up to his reputation and more."
+ Boston Transcript p2 S 18 '29 230w

Reviewed by Raymond Mortimer
Nation and Ath 45:655 Ag 17 '29 180w

"Bulldog Drummond is an utterly impossible character. No man could possibly drink as much ale as he does and yet keep so mentally and physically fit as to be ready at any time to meet the strongest or the wildest adversary. But for the length of time that it takes to read one of the Bulldog Drummond stories Mr. McNeile is able to make us believe that the marvelous exploits of his hero are as possible as they are commendable."
— + N Y Times p38 O 20 '29 180w

Reviewed by E. C. Beckwith
N Y World p10m O 13 '29 160w
Sat R of Lit 6:326 O 26 '29 200w

"The whole story is full of action, manly prowess, sturdy good-humour, affection for beer, and common sense of the kind that stands no nonsense."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p622 Ag 8 '29 280w

MCNIECE, MRS JESSIE SARGENT, ed. Library and its workers; reprints of articles and addresses. (Classics of Am. librarianship) 442p $2.75 Wilson, H.W.

020.4 Librarians. Library science. Libraries—Addresses, essays, lectures 29-12376

A volume of reprinted articles on library work viewed from within the profession. The aspects considered are: qualifications of library assistants; relations with readers; salaries; hours; vacations and holidays; standards; training; certification; civil service; staff meetings; organizations; welfare; pensions; the staff; interchange of assistants between libraries, and staffs of colored branches.

Booklist 26:7 O '29
Wis Lib Bul 25:272 Jl '29

MACPHAIL, SIR ANDREW. Three persons. 346p il $3.50 Carrier [10s 6d Murray]

B or 92 Wilson, Sir Henry Hughes. House, Edward Mandell. Lawrence, Thomas Edward

"Under the title of 'Three Persons' Sir Andrew Macphail, historian of the Canadian Expeditionary Force, has joined studies of three conspicuous figures of the war period, Sir Henry Wilson, Colonel House, and Lawrence of Arabia, as they are revealed in their own writings. . . Of the three sketches, the first, that of Wilson, must constitute the most impressive indictment of the professional British officer of the traditional type imaginable."—Sat R of Lit

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 My 26 '29 130w

"Sir Andrew Macphail seems to have started out in this book with an admirable purpose, but he has not quite achieved it. He is undoubtedly a master of restrained and effective irony, and writes extremely well, but every now and then he abandons the restraint and spoils the whole picture by lapses into unfair and sometimes almost vulgar sarcasm. His book, however, as it stands is certainly very well worth reading and in his final estimate of the 'Three Persons' whom he discusses he does not go so very far wrong."

+ — New Statesman 32:637 F 23 '29 1300w

"Sir Andrew's method necessarily lends itself to overstatement, but by the same token it produces extraordinarily interesting reading. One would like to see him try his dry biting style on a full-length piece of biography." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p3 Jl 7 '29 1900w

"Sir Andrew MacPhail has produced an exceptional work, not only of historical value, but written vigorously and entertainingly." J: W. Wright

+ Portland Evening Post p5 Jl 2 '29 1000w
Sat R 147:256 F 23 '29 150w

"It is not too much to say, at least as to the sketches of Wilson and House, that they deserve place in any war library alike for the shrewdness of the observation and the devastatingly brilliant phrase, which sets forth what is, after all, at once a clinical and a psychological diagnosis." F. H. Simonds

+ Sat R of Lit 5:969 My 4 '29 1800w

"We are not quite sure whether Sir Andrew Macphail has accomplished the extremely difficult task of drawing a coherent lesson from these documents. He succeeds very easily in showing the vanity of human prophesies and aspirations from the Wilson diary, and in showing the faults of that remarkable man; but far too much of the text is mere quotation and much else is little more than a précis. The Wilson document is such a remarkable one that this makes good reading: but the House papers are so much less extraordinary that the method does not work quite so well in this case. In the third, that of Colonel Lawrence, this method hardly works at all."

— + Spec 142:345 Mr 2 '29 380w

"Sir Andrew Macphail himself is an unsatisfactory judge, and there is ample cause in each case for appeal from his verdict. His very gifts tend to disqualify him; they are those of a very skilful but not very fair or thoughtful journalist, clever in making his points but not overcareful in reaching them. His methods would serve very well were the subjects in question of no great moment."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p155 F 28 '29 850w

MCWILLIAMS, JAMES ALOYSIUS. Cosmology; a text for colleges. 243p $2.50 (10s 6d) Macmillan

113 Cosmology 28-18227

"Cosmology deals with such topics as the magnitude of the universe, teleology, inorganic evolution (accepted as reasonable), the nature of time, space and matter, natural causation and miracles."—Christian Century

---

"Scholastic cosmology has few exponents at the present that would command much respect; it is in a rather backward state. The author has done much to modernize it and bring it abreast of the times. For this accomplishment he deserves a generous measure of praise and the gratitude of all who have become more or less bewildered by the exaggerated claims of modern science. In fact, it might have been desirable if the author had given more attention to the question of the limitation of science and brought home the point that it is not concerned with ultimate realities but only with more or less probable approximations. All in all, however, Father McWilliams's book is an outstanding achievement of great merit." C. B.

+ Cath World 129:374 Je '29 350w

"An excellent illustration of the neo-scholastic method used by approved Catholic writers and encouraged by the highest authorities of the Catholic church. Some of it is good philosophy. Some of it is ingenious word-juggling. All of it is perfectly orthodox." W. E. G.

Christian Century 46:393 Mr 21 '29 80w

Reviewed by M. G. Evans
Crozer Q 5:496 O '28 500w

"Non-Catholic readers will find the book of interest perhaps chiefly because it indicates the character of the philosophy that is being expounded in a modern Catholic University; it reveals how some of the significant data of modern science and current metaphysical notions derived from these are being correlated with an older tradition; and it reflects the thoroughgoing way in which a modern Catholic apologetic is being constructed." Vergilius Ferm

Int J Ethics 39:512 Jl '29 360w
J Religion 9:333 Ap '29 30w

"The viewpoint of the Catholic Church is taken throughout. It is impossible, therefore, for one who does not share that viewpoint to treat the discussion with much sympathy. . . We can only say that those to whom such arguments appeal will find here a systematically classified text-book, each chapter of which contains a concisely worded thesis, arguments in favour thereof, a statement of possible objections with the replies thereto, and a list of references to other relevant literature. The book is clearly written and well produced." H. D.

Nature 123:937 Je 22 '29 380w

MADARIAGA, SALVADOR DE. Disarmament. 379p $5 Coward-McCann [15s Oxford]

341.6 Disarmament. League of nations 29-8063

The outcome of six years' experience of international affairs gained while the author was director of the disarmament section of the Secretariat of the League of nations, this book looks at the problem of disarmament and the obstacles to it, the machinery of the League of nations as applied to disarmament and its results so far, and a possible program for the future. Senor Madariaga is a firm believer in the League of nations and he maintains that the chief responsibility for the failure of disarmament so far is the refusal of the United States to join the League.

---

"In no other work has so broad and comprehensive a treatment of the question been made, and nowhere else can one find so profound and searching an analysis of the forces favorable and unfavorable to disarmament. The book is one which deserves the attention of every one interested in the peace of the world. In preparing this work, the author has done a real service to humanity." L. S. Rowe

+ Ann Am Acad 145:202 S '29 350w
Booklist 25:345 Je '29

"Not since John Maynard Keynes released secrets of the Peace Conference in his Economic Consequences of the Peace nine years ago, has there been so intimate and so lively a book on the international scene as this. This Spaniard who has been director of the disarmament section of the League has a kind of French clarity of mind, and, as a Spaniard, protected by the Pyrenees, he feels entitled to blurt out honest opinions about British, Russian, Yankee, and—to a less degree—French policy. His whole argument is a plea for the League of nations." L: S. Gannett

+ Bookm 69:221 Ap '29 480w

"Senor de Madariaga is, I firmly believe, one of the most witty and facile writers in the English language to-day. This Spaniard, who can use the English language more ably than most Anglo-Saxons and who can write with equal authority upon international relations and Spanish literature, is a remarkable man. For six years he was head of the disarmament section of the League of Nations; now he is a professor of Spanish studies at Oxford, but this book is a product of his Geneva experience. . . Brilliant and important as his book is, its influence will probably be weakened by its

MADARIAGA, SALVADOR DE—Continued
failure to understand the foreign policy of the United States." R. L. Buell
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Mr 17 '29 1500w
Boston Transcript p7 Ap 6 '29 620w

"Mr. de Madariaga's study of disarmament is original, brilliant, ingenious, stimulating, provocative and at times wayward. The subject itself is bewildering. The author has high qualifications for dealing with it." J. W. Headlam-Morley
+ Christian Science Monitor p10 Je 5 '29 820w

"With his principal thesis it is impossible to disagree. Boldly stated it is that armaments, while in themselves a menace to peace, cannot be understood save as expressions of national policy, or banished save in an organized world community. With candor, clarity, and wit he first examines the dangers of armament and then the obstacles to disarmament." Norman Thomas
+ — Nation 129:44 Jl 10 '29 850w
Nation and Ath 45:99 Ap 27 '29 1500w

"It is not a technical treatise, and it is not a dull history, but an intensely interesting and successful attempt to show how disarmament has failed in the past, why it has failed, and the lines along which it must be approached if it is to succeed in the future. Personally I should like everybody who has read, say, 'All Quiet on the Western Front,' to read this book as well; and if it is too much to expect that everybody will, then I hope that every diplomat, and, indeed, anyone in any way connected with foreign affairs, will do so without fail." J: Hayward
+ New Repub 59:320 Ag 7 '29 950w
New Statesman 33:204 My 25 '29 2080w

"A brilliant study." Herschel Brickell
+ No Am 227:adv My '29 130w

"This book will appeal, among others, to three sorts of readers; men and women who hope for disarmament but who are unwilling to face the difficulties of disarmament, those who are primarily interested in the workings and the prospects of the League of Nations and those whose primary interest is in the outlawry of war as such but who wish to see a cogent statement of the negative side of the matter. This is hardly a 'popular' book. Reading it requires some attention, though the author's wit enlivens the pages considerably. So realistic is the tone of the book that I should expect military men and those whose hope for America resides in armaments rather than in peace proposals to find it a convenient handbook worth careful reading." V. B. Silliman
+ Portland Evening News p5 Jl 2 '29 1100w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 79:12 My '29 400w
St Louis 27:262 S '29
Times [London] Lit Sup p323 Ap 25 '29 1300w

Reviewed by E: W. Evans
Yale R n s 19:171 autumn '29 550w

MADELIN, LOUIS. Figures of the revolution; [2] tr. from the French by Richard Curtis. 342p il $3 Macaulay

944.04 France—History—Revolution. France—Biography 29-30571

Biographical sketches stressing the personal history and individual psychology of the following French revolutionary figures: La Fayette, Mirabeau, Talleyrand, the Girondins and Madame Roland, Danton, Robespierre, Dumouriez, and L'abbé Sieyès.

"Whatever M. Louis Madelin has to say about the French Revolution is always both well said and worth saying. He is one of those rare historians who can make history fascinating without taking liberties with it, and the same thing holds true when he becomes a biographer. In the present book he gives us eight biographical monographs, and he gives them in such a fashion that when one has read the book one has obtained a very vivid picture of the whole revolutionary period." Greville Vernon
+ Bookm 70:572 Ja '30 180w
Boston Transcript p2 D 28 '29 150w

"One feels a solid background of knowledge bred of research behind the author's fluid and brilliant style. It is a style that is sophisticated, breathless and often epigrammatic. Each great one is subjected to a scrutiny which is merciless though, one feels, eminently fair. It is a highly entertaining book."
+ Current Hist 31:828 Ja '30 230w
Outlook 153:350 O 30 '29 100w

MAETERLINCK, MAURICE. Life of space; tr. by Bernard Miall. 194p $2.50 Dodd [6s Allen & U.]

114 Fourth dimension. Dreams. Space and time 28-29903

The Belgian poet-philosopher advances his own mystical, non-mathematical ideas on the fourth dimension. Time is a fourth dimension of space, upon which he believes the theory of relativity to be built. From his imagined hyperspace come strange hyperspatial beings who mingle with men of three-dimensional bodies, until freed from these bodies men may stray into interstellar distances and remote worlds.

Boston Transcript p3 D 22 '28 150w
Nature 124:872 D 7 '29 240w
N Y New Tech Bks 14:13 Ja '29

"M. Maeterlinck speaks the language of the mystic with telling effect but makes of the abstract ideas of science nothing more than fantastic nonsense." R. M. Eaton
Sat R of Lit 5:681 F 16 '29 1050w

MAGILL, MARCUS. Who shall hang? 318p $2 Lippincott [7s 6d Knopf]

29-14761

A party of friends is making merry about the burning effigy of a Guy Fawkes. The merriment turns to horror as the mask of the effigy slips, disclosing in the flames the face of a dead man, their host. Who killed Maurice Strang and conceived this horrible method of concealing the crime? Two of the party, a man and girl, pursue the mystery to its gruesome end.

"This shocker is carefully plotted and generally agreeable, with a sufficiency of complications, some additional crimes and a final surprise package deserving of honorable mention." Will Cuppy
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 My 12 '29 120w
Boston Transcript p4 Jl 13 '29 230w

"The story combines swift action with baffling mystery and plenty of thrills."
+ N Y Times p16 Je 30 '29 150w

"While in no way remarkable, this is quite a good mystery story, pleasantly spiced with dialogue and love interest."
+ Spec 142:sup706 My 4 '29 80w

MAGRE, MAURICE. Kingdom of Lu; the virtuous reforms of Confucius therein, something about his rival sage Lão-tsze and more about that deplorable vagabond and clown Mong Pi; tr. by Eliot Fay (Eng title Confucius and his quest). 178p il $2.50 Cosmopolitan bk. [5s T. Butterworth]

Confucius and Confucianism 29-6376

"Mr. Magre describes how Confucius married a little sparrow of a wife who had nothing in her head but the notion of playing deliciously on a lute at a scandalously early hour of the morning, and who withered away when he shut her up for three years to mourn her mother-in-law. Mr. Magre's account of how Confucius rooted up the narcissi, stopped the music, and regulated the love-making in the Kingdom of Lu, and of what came of this may not be good history, but it is excellent fable."—Nation and Ath

" 'The Kingdom of Lu' is a tale which will bear more than one reading—for the sake of its implications concerning the nature of man, and for the graceful malice with which it is written. It is satire, but it does more than laugh. It weeps as well over Mong Pi and his dancing girl and poor little Ki Kioo playing her last soundless music before the dawn." Garreta Busey

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Ap 21 '29 1250w

"Neither history nor fairy-tale, this unpretentious little book does more than many libraries to bring to our comprehension something of the significance of Chinese philosophy." A. E. L.

+ Boston Transcript p8 My 18 '29 400w

"I do not know if Mr. Magre's book about Confucius is wise, but it is certainly extremely clever. It would be too heavy a compliment to call these delicately worked Chinese pictures a study of Confucius; and too light a one to recommend them merely as a curious entertainment. There is philosophy in this book, as well as poetry and an unusually well disciplined imagination." Barrington Gates

+ Nation and Ath 44:883 Mr 23 '29 170w

" 'The Kingdom of Lu' is a charming fantasy on Confucius, the rival sage, Lao-Tse, and a rather sentimentally conceived clown, one Mong Pi. The Confucius of 'The Kindgom of Lu' is a parody on the Chinese sage, and the portrait of him as the arch-reformer is as underwritten in lack of sympathy as the portrait of Lao-Tse is overwritten in a gush of sympathy which has no backbone of understanding." Edwin Seaver

+ — N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 23 '29 150w

Reviewed by J: Carter

N Y Times p7 Mr 17 '29 880w

— Sat R of Lit 5:1005 My 11 '29 200w

"This is a queer, tantalizing account of Confucius, his life, convictions and teachings. It is at times overdone, and again, at times, the author's irony pushes aside the flowery, calculated diction and struts unashamed. Those who do not wish to read learned lives of the Chinese sages will find this book pleasant, but not particularly convincing or satisfying."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p246 Mr 21 '29 170w

MAGRUDER, THOMAS PICKETT. United States navy. 179p il $2.50 Dorrance

359 United States—Navy 28-24910

"This book is a plain and rather elementary discussion of the various classes of vessels composing the fighting fleet, and of their characteristics and distinctive uses, with appropriate comments on their work in the Great War and their value for the future."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

---

Reviewed by W: L. McPherson

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 Ja 27 '29 450w

"It is an exceedingly readable and informative book. The author pays full tribute, too, to what he calls 'the first line of defense—diplomacy,' and has much to say of the naval disarmament conferences."

+ N Y Times p12 N 4 '28 400w

"A volume of constructive criticism."

+ R of Rs 78:adv42 N '28 30w

St Louis 27:11 Ja '29

MAHONY, BERTHA E., and WHITNEY, ELINOR, comps. Realms of gold in children's books. 796p il $5 Doubleday, Doran

028.5 Children's literature—Bibliography 29-26563

This fifth edition of "Books for boys and girls—a suggestive purchase list" appears in greatly expanded form and in handsome new dress. It contains reproductions from the work of every noted illustrator of children's books, and lists, with notes and quotations, and interesting bits about author and book, a rich collection of fine books for children of every age and taste.

---

Booklist 25:376 Jl '29

Reviewed by Helen Ferris

Bookm 70:310 N '29 80w

"How many open minds will be brought to new pastures by this refreshing book we can only guess. For in range and sweep it goes beyond any book lists we have ever seen. More than that, it meets alike the developing taste of the little child and the informed intelligence of an older reader to whom glorious deeds and great achievements still lift a beckoning hand." A. M. Jordan

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 My 12 '29 1100w

"For editors, publishers, librarians and teachers, this book should prove an almanac, directory and ship-register. But parents of growing children will find it the most useful of all." E. B. T.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 5 '29 680w

Cleveland Open Shelf p135 N '29

" 'Realms of Gold' becomes on publication a useful tool for all who stand in a position of responsibility for youthful literary diet, and to boys and girls themselves. Handily disposed in libraries, or bought for quiet study at home, it gives the prospective reader a view of all there is in much more convenient, beguiling and rational form than Mr. Dewey's alphabetical cards in their boxes." Ernestine Evans

+ N Y Times p10 Ag 18 '29 1450w

St Louis 27:316 N '29

"This is a Baedeker to the country of children's books. Like the good Baedeker it gives us a sense of competence and completeness in survey; it gives us, too, that sense of richness and variety that is a prompting to travel. . . 'Realms of Gold in Children's Books' is full, but it is by no means indiscriminate. It is excellent in its selection of material and editorship. An entertaining book to go through, it gives just the sort of information that is looked for by those who are giving children some training in literature." Padraic Colum

+ Sat R of Lit 5:1180 Jl 13 '29 520w

MAIRET, PHILIPPE. A B C of Adler's psychology. 116p $1.50 Greenberg

131 Psychoanalysis. Psychology, Pathological [29-26335]

M. Mairet undertakes to simplify for the general reader the gist of Adler's psychological theories.

---

Booklist 25:306 My '29

"M. Mairet's volume does not pretend to be exhaustive; it is a good introduction to Adler's Understanding Human Nature."

+ Bookm 69:x Ap '29 170w

Boston Transcript p10 Ap 6 '29 130w

"I doubt if Adler's is the best article on the psychological market. His writings, in themselves exasperatingly vague, are reduced to clear and definite statement for the first time in Mr. Mairet's excellent little handbook. Whatever view we may take of the doctrines expounded, there can be no two questions as to the merits of the exposition." C. E. M. Joad

+ Nation and Ath 43:654 Ag 18 '28 450w

"An excellent book. In this short summary, Mairet has made a very satisfactory presentation."

+ Nature 123:81 Ja 19 '29 100w

"Mr. Mairet's thin volume may be instructive to some of those general readers who are pleased by his flattering remark that they—all of them—are 'psychologists in practice, however unsystematic.' " Percy Winner

N Y Evening Post p10m My 4 '29 100w

MAITLAND, LESTER J. Knights of the air; with a foreword by C. P. Summerall. 338p il $3.50 Doubleday, Doran

629.13 Aeronautics—History. Aviators

The story of aviation from the pioneer work of the Wright brothers to the present. The book includes Glenn Curtiss' contribution, early cross-continental flights, the part of the aeroplane in the war, and modern record-flights up to Maitland's own crossing of the Pacific. Illustrated.

Booklist 26:106 D '29

Reviewed by M. L. Becker
Bookm 70:443 D '29 30w

"The volume hangs together as precariously as would the illogically joined parts of a Curtiss Hawk, Sopwith Camel, Sikorsky amphibian and Barling bomber. One must possess my gluttonous appetite for anecdotes aeronautical to pursue this bird's-eye view of the twenty-five years that have passed since the Wright brothers made their first flight from the slope of Kill Devil Hill in December, 1903. But it is greatly to be feared that the average reader will begin to lose flying speed mid-way in the volume, stall with the Liberty motor chapter, and go into a flat spin soon after." Bruce Gould
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 S 22 '29 520w

"This book is no 'Who's Who' of airmen. It is much more than that. It is a history of aviation written by a man who not only knows how to fly but how to tell other people what an interesting thing flying is and what interesting lives fliers live." F. L. Minnigerode
+ N Y Times p4 S 15 '29 1350w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 80:18 N '29 40w
St Louis 27:335 D '29

MALCOSKEY, EDNA WALKER. Unholy virgins. 332p $2.50 Century

29-9218

Two American girls learn about life and love for the first time, in the gilded settings of Monte Carlo.

"Miss Malcoskey's chief difficulty is that she does not trouble to back her fancies with any degree of truth."
— Boston Transcript p2 My 15 '29 80w

Reviewed by Florence Haxton
N Y Evening Post p9m My 18 '29 350w

"In its quiet, unobtrusive manner, 'Unholy Virgins' is sound and is exceptionally well written."
+ N Y Times p9 Je 9 '29 420w

"Strange mixture of tract and dime novel, the book's only clear-cut quality is the author's worship of her heroine—a worship embarrassing to the reader because of the strong autobiographical flavor of the story. . . Susanne is a heroine who could seem important only to her creator."
— N Y World p11m My 12 '29 220w

"It is a story that might be good but isn't. There is a decided artificiality about it: the characters are unreal, the situations not sufficiently dramatic, the dialogue forced, and the action laggard." Milton Byron
— Outlook 151:626 Ap 17 '29 100w

MALDEN, RICHARD HENRY. Religion and the New Testament. 204p $2.50 (6s 6d) Oxford

225 Bible. New Testament—Criticism, interpretation, etc. Bible. New Testament—History. Christian ethics [29-7589]

"The eight chapters range from primitive religion and the relation of fact and tradition to the discussion of the circumstances and authorship of the New Testament books, the determination of the Canon, the characteristics of apocryphal writings, Christian ethics with some not altogether happy observations on law, and a final section on institutional religion which may seem to some just to fail to grip because it does not go deep enough."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"Readers who desire to find the modern viewpoint of the New Testament set forth in nontechnical and readable form will enjoy this exposition which, while popular, is based on a scholarly criticism which builds rather than destroys faith in things eternal." R. R. M.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ja 26 '29 380w

"The book covers ground of value to the layman and to clergy who have not had recent opportunity to review their New Testament introduction. Primarily intended and given as lectures to a popular audience it makes an admirable handbook for all. It is accurate, fresh, stimulating; it commands attention; it is a trifle dogmatic in spots, not allowing, or even suggesting, that other points of view may be of force. Altogether it is one of the best of the New Testament handbooks." H: B. Washburn
+ — Churchman 140:30 Jl 6 '29 180w

"Canon Malden's course at Leeds which has been expanded into this volume well deserves to find a larger number of students. It is almost inevitably uneven and sometimes quite unnecessarily over-weighted with the accumulation of matters discussed or mentioned. . . Criticism is disarmed by consideration of the conditions in which a very readable book has come into being."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p942 N 29 '28 180w

MALINOWSKI, BRONISLAW. Sexual life of savages in north-western Melanesia; an ethnographic account of courtship, marriage, and family life among the natives of the Trobriand Islands, British New Guinea; with a preface by Havelock Ellis. 506p il $10 Liveright [42s Routledge]

392 Family. Sex. Society, Primitive. Ethnology—Trobriand islands [29-12927]

"Professor Malinowski describes for us the whole life cycle of the Trobrianders, from childhood, through puberty, to marriage and procreation, till the wheel comes round full circle. The later chapters are devoted to special aspects of Trobriand culture which emerge from the life history of the individual and the family. The whole is very thoroughly documented, and while the material will be of especial value both to the psychologist and the anthropologist, it will prove no less interesting to the general reader unacquainted with anthropological literature."—Spec

"Complete, authoritative and astounding. . . Doctor Malinowski's work will repay amply those who have long been waiting for it."
+ Bookm 70:vi S '29 230w

Reviewed by Ruth Benedict
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Jl 28 '29 650w

"A valuable contribution to the lore of the sex urge, not well suited for family reading, yet rich in materials useful for the sciences of anthropology, sociology and psychology." E. N.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 3 '29 800w

"Professor Malinowski has written a most interesting and informative study. He lived amongst the Trobriand Islanders, and he was able to correct what they told him in answer to his questions by his own day-to-day observations. . . Perhaps no other primitive community has been so sympathetically or so exhaustively explored." Alan Porter
+ Nation and Ath 45:166 My 4 '29 1000w

Reviewed by G: Pitt-Rivers
Nature 124:870 D 7 '29 980w

"Customs and practices in the field of sex form one tissue with the organization of domestic life, the rules and obligations of kinship, the conceptions of magic, and the economic basis of the community's existence. Treated in this way, sex loses the singularity which even in science has attached to its students the odium of a morbid interest. For this,

Malinowski's work is an excellent corrective. The field of the relationships of the sexes is treated with the same unembarrassed straightforward scientific candor that would be found in the study of a community's agriculture." J. W. Slaughter

+ New Repub 60:129 S 18 '29 750w

"Professor Malinowski is certainly to be congratulated upon a piece of careful, able and prolonged research, which is not only unique in its character and quality, but is likely to remain a classical and permanent work of reference in the general study of anthropology."

+ New Statesman 33:supx My 4 '29 980w

Reviewed by Max Lerner

N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 13 '29 850w

"Professor Malinowski's work is the first scientific and trustworthy account of the sexual life of any so-called savage tribe that has appeared in any language."

+ Sat R 147:539 Ap 20 '29 880w

"To write a fairly technical ethnographic treatise of six hundred pages with barely a dull paragraph is a literary achievement of no mean order. Professor Malinowski has achieved this incredible tour de force. If he ever nods, he fails to induce drowsiness in his audience. Something, no doubt, must be set down to the credit of the subject-matter, but certainly not a great deal." Robert Lowie

+ Sat R of Lit 6:132 S 14 '29 750w

"His is the grace of diction, the felicity of phrase, which allow the layman to follow the points of an analysis which in any other hands would be blanketed by the obscurities of scientific terminology. A light touch illumines the most intricate argument. Vivid metaphors, picturesque descriptions make of the Trobrianders a living reality." J. H. Driberg

+ Spec 142:427 Mr 16 '29 950w

Springf'd Republican p7e S 1 '29 280w

"The book is overpowering, and there is little doubt that Mr. Havelock Ellis will prove a true prophet in the words from his preface: 'It may safely be said that "The Sexual Life of Savages in North-Western Melanesia" will become a classic of which the value must increase with the passage of time.' This bulky book of 500 pages is well printed, and is admirably illustrated by more than 100 photographs and four plans."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p237 Mr 21 '29 500w

MALLOCH, ARCHIBALD EDWARD. William Harvey. 103p il $1.50 Hoeber [7s 6d Oxford]

B or 92 Harvey, William 29-1110

"This little book describes how a knowledge of the circulation was painfully and slowly won in the centuries before Harvey, and exactly how the latter arrived at the important conclusion that the blood moves in a circle. The illustrations are taken from many sources."—Boston Transcript

---

"Of the accounts of Harvey, this little book of Dr. Malloch's is in many ways the best. The style is informal and interesting, the significance of Harvey's work explained clearly and emphatically. . . Dr. Malloch has included a great deal of interesting personalia." Logan Clendening

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 My 12 '29 280w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 5 '29 110w

MALONE, ANDREW E. Irish drama. 351p $4 Scribner [15s Constable]

822.09 Irish drama. Theater—Ireland. Abbey theater, Dublin [29-18895]

"The Irish Literary Theatre was founded at the beginning of the present century by Mr. W. B. Yeats and Lady Gregory, with Mr. George Moore and Edward Martyn in the immediate background. As the name implies, the theatre was intended to serve art for art's sake rather than the propagation of philosophic or political ideals." (Nation and Ath) The present book is a history of the Irish literary theatre, together with an account of plays and players in Ireland today, and a consideration of the future of the Irish drama.

---

Booklist 26:111 D '29

"Andrew E. Malone, a Dublin dramatic critic, who evidently has attended the Abbey from the first, has written a fascinating history of the entire movement. Probably it is highly controversial. Everything the Abbey does is apparently highly controversial to that touchy and inflammable people. But to an outsider who has merely followed the movement from afar it seems to be written with authority, and without heat." W. P. Eaton

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p39 S 29 '29 550w

"Many of his opinions seem silly and some obviously wrong, yet this miscellany of personal details, desultory criticism, résumés of plays, and theatrical history, is the best book on the Anglo-Irish dramatic movement that has yet appeared. For those who are interested, it will replace the earlier work of Mr. Ernest Boyd, and not only because it is more up to date. It is written pedestrianly but clearly. It is full of facts, and it would be an impertinence to say finally that the facts are of no importance. The printing and binding are worthy of the high standard of contemporary English book production."

+ — Nation and Ath 45:369 Je 15 '29 1000w

New Statesman 33:278 Je 8 '29 650w

"Mr. Malone tells his story in detail. Matter is not wanting. The subject offers occasion for pertinent digressions. . . It should be added that Mr. Malone, for all his local preoccupations, has a wide knowledge of the modern theatre in general; and his outlook on things is much less provincial than that of many of his compatriots."

+ Sat R 147:802 Je 15 '29 420w

"The amount of material Mr. Malone has waded through is colossal. He mentions every play the Abbey Theatre has produced, and if he is far from believing that all the Abbey Theatre's geese are swans, he does not curtail his attentions to them on that account. His record of the personnel of the Theatre includes every one, from the great 'W. B.' to the least and latest actress. Unfortunately his arrangement of this material is not very skilful, and the latter chapters suffer badly from repetition. One is inclined to protest that the silver jubilee of the Irish National Theatre, which now has the distinction of being the only State-subsidized theatre in the English-speaking world, was worthy of a neater tribute than this."

+ — Spec 143:226 Ag 17 '29 860w

Times [London] Lit Sup p417 My 23 '29 1500w

MALRAUX, ANDRE. Conquerors; tr. by Winifred Stephens Whale. 270p $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d Cape]

29-21928

Written in a diary-narrative method, "The Conquerors" is a story of the Bolshevik-Nationalist movement in Canton. The two leading characters, Garine and Borodin, are professional revolutionists and propagandists.

---

Boston Transcript p10 N 2 '29 450w

"Obviously, the author's own experience plays a very large part in the story, if story it is. At all events, this narrative of a few months spent at the headquarters of the Kuomintang in Canton is unfolded almost as plainly and baldly as an official report. There is little expense in detail, in the picturesque; but such trimmings as M. Malraux allows himself are relevant and impressive. Their cumulative effect is oddly terrifying. . . The manner is abbreviated and staccato—too staccato sometimes for the English translator, whose rendering, though on the whole good, is apt now and again to blur the significance of the dialogue."

+ New Statesman 34:89 O 26 '29 750w

MALRAUX, ANDRE—Continued

"It must be acknowledged that the author has written a thrilling and colorful story, but merely to mention Canton, Shanghai, Hongkong, Sun-Yat-sen and Chiang Kai-shek is not to write a novel of the Chinese revolution. Garine might have lived and acted the same way in Russia, Bavaria or Hungary. The novel of the Chinese revolution has not yet been written." Bernard Smith

— + N Y Evening Post p6s Ja 4 '30 500w

"The picture is not a pleasant one, as there is much murder, torture, and treachery, and it is not fair to the Chinese, as it shows too little of the higher ideals and real patriotism of many of the leaders. As a novel, however, it is exciting, and carries the reader along like a detective story. Unlike most books of this class, it is entirely without any 'love interest.'"

+ — Sat of Lit 6:540 D 7 '29 300w

MAN, HENRI DE. Joy in work; tr. from the German by Eden and Cedar Paul. 224p $2 Holt [8s 6d Allen & U.]

331.015 Work. Psychology, Applied

Written by a German industrial psychologist, the book should appeal to employers and workers. Part I treats of the impulse to joy in work: natural instincts, social instincts, etc. In Part II the hindrances to joy in work are discussed: unfavorable technical conditions, unjust wage systems, disciplinary subordination, etc.

Reviewed by J. A. Flexner
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 D 15 '29 280w

Reviewed by V. F. Calverton
Nation 129:778 D 25 '29 450w

"The author does uncover a number of very pertinent facts, but he does not succeed in formulating the general hypothesis which is evidently his aim. . . In dealing with the positive factors he seems to me to be very much confused, to some extent because he depends upon discredited psychological terms." Bernard Smith

— + N Y Evening Post p4m S 14 '29 900w

"All in all, this penetrating, reassuring, and forward-looking treatise is a splendid tract for the industrial philosophy of tomorrow which is in the making." Ordway Tead

+ Sat R of Lit 6:240 O 12 '29 700w

"A much stricter and more scientific codification of the findings of analytical psychology seems to us necessary before much can be done. But this is not to say that M. de Man's is useless, for much of it has the great advantage of being first hand."

— + Spec 143:310 S 7 '29 880w

"Henri de Man's able commentary on a case study of the attitude of seventy-eight German workmen toward their work leaves the discriminating reader stimulated and encouraged. The force of this ably translated analysis lies not in the documentation of evidence but in the graphic veracity with which those cases described exemplify real tendencies apparent to the empirical observer of industrial relations." Bennett Schauffler

+ Survey 63:358 D 15 '29 120w

Times [London] Lit Sup p550 Jl 11 '29 1500w

MANLY, JOHN MATTHEWS, and RICKERT, EDITH. Contemporary American literature, bibliographies and study outlines; introd. and revision by Fred B. Millett. rev and enl ed 378p $2.25 Harcourt [7s 6d Harrap]

016.81 American literature—Bibliography

29-14937

"This book is not so much a revision of the Contemporary American Literature published in 1922 as it is a new book. Every feature of the original book has undergone the most searching scrutiny and revision, many new authors have been included, and hundreds of books and critical entries have been added. The new book aims to give a systematic account of contemporary American literature since 1900, a classified bibliography of all the significant writers of the period, with biographical information, suggestions for reading, and carefully chosen studies and reviews for each author of major importance. Limitations of space have forced the exclusion of a number of living authors who have produced no particularly significant work since 1914."—Foreword

Reviewed by B. R. Redman
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 N 10 '29 270w

Boston Transcript p5 N 2 '29 150w

Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 31 '29 1000w

Times [London] Lit Sup p850 O 24 '29 50w

MANLY, JOHN MATTHEWS, and RICKERT, EDITH. Contemporary British literature; outlines for study, indexes, bibliographies. rev & enl 345p text ed $1.60; trade ed $2 Harcourt

016.82 English literature—Outlines, syllabi, etc. English literature—Bibliography

28-28542

Textbook on British literature revised, with many new names and features. Contains chapters on: How to use this book; the new drama; the new novel; the new poetry; and additions to the index such as—classifications of philosophers, travelers, biographers and historians. Part I consists of an outline of the main types and schools of writing in contemporary British literature; Part II, has for each author a brief biographical note; bibliography of important works, and list of best studies and reviews.

Booklist 25:331 My '29

"One is under obligation to those who are able to provide in small compass, information so comprehensive as is given in this survey (revised) of types and schools of writing in contemporary British literature, with biographical data, bibliographies, reading-lists, and recommended studies and reviews. Compression requires succinctness and it would seem that experts have the right to be didactic; nevertheless one mourns the absence of such authors as Charles Whibley, George Saintsbury, John Eglinton, and Logan Pearsall Smith."

+ Dial 86:528 Je '29 90w

Wis Lib Bul 25:72 F '29

MANN, A. CHESTER, pseud. See Roberts, P. I.

MANN, HEINRICH. Diana; tr. from the German by Erich Posselt and Emmet Glore. 331p $2.50 Coward-McCann

29-10428

"Unlike his other social satires, this book of Mann's has historical authenticity. It revolves about the political destiny of the kingdom of Dalmatia during the fringe of the last century. The Diana who plays so mercurial a rôle in the fluctuating stability of this Adriatic dynasty, is the impetuous and beautiful Duchess Violante of Assy, whom history has only mentioned in passing. The Actæon of the piece is a certain perfervid Doctor Pavic, friend of the people, insurrectionist, sensualist and coward, who inspires the moping duchess to subsidize a revolution against the king in the cause of Slavic independence."—Outlook

"It is 'Graustark' and 'The Prisoner of Zenda' stripped of tinsel romance and incarnadined with a rich humor and a penetrating sadness." Donald Douglas

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Ap 28 '29 350w

Reviewed by E. M. Benson
Nation 129:45 Jl 10 '29 150w

"There are many admirable qualities in Mann's smooth prose which evidence a fine though not too original talent. . . It will be unfortunate if a writer with so sharp an eye for the grotesqueries and depravities of society is finally drawn into the whirlpool of his own curses. In his zeal to chastise those simpletons who have fallen out of his political good graces, Mann forgets that he is a novelist and will not forget that he was once a journalist." E. M. Benson

+ — Outlook 152:36 My 1 '29 330w

MANN, HEINRICH. In the land of Cockaigne; tr. from the German by Axton D. B. Clark. (Transatlantic lib.) 388p $2.50 Macaulay
29-9290

"With the good-natured cynicism of a Petronius—and with something of his license—it pictures the feasts and pastimes of a wealthy bourgeois circle in the 'nineties. The luxury, the waste, the horse-play, the casual morals, the horde of hangers-on—they are all thrown together in one bewildering farce."—Bookm

Reviewed by Rose Lee
Bookm 69:196 Ap '29 320w

"It is a German 'Antic Hay' without Huxley's lyric beauty and a German 'Sentimental Education' without Flaubert's elaborate dullness. . . There is none of the moon-haunted loveliness which softens the acrid pages of 'Antic Hay;' but there is gusto and absurdity and a panoramic trip to the zoo inhabited by ridiculous clowns and maskers. Its central curse is the curse of all venomous realism—no matter how skillful the telling or how keen the indictment. It is all eternal." Donald Douglas
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Ap 28 '29 400w

"Its exaggerated, though romantically naïve, realism, its rather patent attempt to shock in matters that have long since become literary commonplaces, frequently appear ridiculous unless the reader reminds himself continually that the scene is laid nearly thirty years ago in a Germany that was just awakening to the abuses of the capitalistic system. Yet the student will find it doubly interesting because it indicates the then unfulfilled promise of literary movements that have since been born, flourished and died."
+ N Y Times p22 Je 9 '29 450w

Reviewed by E. M. Benson
Outlook 151:628 Ap 17 '29 160w

"A book of great force and brillance in the vast gallery of its portraits, all revealing some degree of dissoluteness, there is not a single redeeming subject. Vindictive humor abounds, too broad for irony."
Sat R of Lit 5:1026 My 18 '29 270w

MANN, THOMAS. Three essays; tr. from the German by H. T. Lowe-Porter. 261p $3 Knopf
834 Goethe, Johann Wolfgang. Tolstoi, Leo Nikolaievich, count. Frederick II, the Great, King of Prussia. Occult sciences 29-25965

" 'The Magic Mountain' [was] a brilliant attempt to convey through concrete characters and incidents Mann's conception of forces which can be named only with such elusive names as liberalism, humanism, mysticism, sickness, and health. Now, in 'Three Essays,' he has gathered together three papers of which at least two may be regarded as pendants to that impressive novel. In one he describes his visit to the spiritualistic seance which suggested the curious supernatural interlude in 'The Magic Mountain,' and in the others he analyzes Goethe and Tolstoy in the light of the dualism which so much concerns him."—Nation

For biographical sketch of the author see N Y Times p2 N 24 '29

Boston Transcript p12 D 14 '29 800w

"Those who turn to 'Three Essays' in the expectation of finding there a simple key to 'The Magic Mountain' will be in some measure disappointed. Yet here is the same kind of work in much the same way, and here, by consequence, is as illuminating a commentary as one is likely to get upon a novel which will probably remain among the most distinguished of our time." J. W. Krutch
+ Nation 129:679 D 4 '29 850w

Reviewed by G. B. Munson
N Y Evening Post p12m N 16 '29 500w

"It is not often that a book like this, whose only unity is the profound mind and sturdy philosophy of the author, gets published in any generation—a book impregnated with wide humanism and culture, with powerful thought, enduring criticism and forceful personality. The classic German tradition is upheld here, as in the best of Mann's fiction, by the artist to whom it has proved most nourishing in our generation." L: Kronenberger
+ N Y Times p2 D 8 '29 1350w

MANNIN, ETHEL EDITH (MRS J. A. PORTEOUS). Crescendo; being the dark odyssey of Gilbert Stroud. 367p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Jarrolds]
29-12913

The psychological portrait of Gilbert Stroud, whose life is embittered by his step-mother, and who tries to wreak his revenge on other women. The one person who remains cold to him he violently loves and marries. She deceives him and in the "crescendo" of his passion Gilbert kills her and himself.

"It is a bad book written with a great deal of vigor. The trouble with Crescendo is a lack of depth in all of the characterizations and the assumption on the part of Miss Mannin that the reader will swallow such an impossible line of action as that followed by the seemingly intelligent Mary Thane. All the paraphernalia of an excellent problem motion picture are here, and if an astute director can get around the unhappy ending (at least someone must be left happy at the conclusion of a motion picture) it will not be surprising if Crescendo finds its way to the screen." Herbert Gorman
— + Bookm 69:662 Ag '29 330w

" 'Crescendo' is attempting to scale tremendous heights, but it does not carry the reader. The clever observation of little things, traits and reactions of people, the easy flow of language, the milieu in which the characters are placed will doubtless interest many people. It is only to be regretted that such facility is not wedded to the sharp simplicity that puts the spark of truth into a novel."
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Je 9 '29 380w

Boston Transcript p7 Je 29 '29 850w

"Though there is a grave lot of it in this book, Ethel Mannin's prose has no difficulty for the eye. It flows with a perhaps unintended familiarity. Her situations and characters are the inherently 'glamorous' ones. She writes in the romantic tradition of the war generation made familiar by Compton Mackenzie, with a broad nod in Mr. Arlen's direction. And as the author of 'Sounding Brass' she manages her complications with an address sufficient to the slightly Hollywood ensemble." Vincent McHugh
N Y Evening Post p7m Je 22 '29 620w

"In spite of the fact that 'Crescendo' is listed as the sixth novel of Ethel Mannin, it would be easy enough for her readers to suppose it the first. It has both the faults and the virtues one associates with youth and newness—it is awkward and uncouth, both in style and structure, yet it has a kind of strength which seems an integral part of its awkwardness. It contains a wealth of material, not always well or convincingly coordinated; but it is undeniably vigorous and full of the breath of life."
— + N Y Times p8 Je 9 '29 520w

"Miss Mannin devotes her undoubted abilities to making her unpleasant, improbable theme impose itself upon the imagination. . . She exaggerates, she over-states, and she writes always with an undertone of rhetoric that tires the mind though it contributes to the crescendo. She never lets the story tell itself; she deals it out in highly-seasoned slices: she is essentially a 'powerful' writer. Her understanding of her characters is intellectual rather than intuitive; real enough while she discusses them, they become abstractions directly they speak or act." L. P. Hartley

MANNIN, E. E.—Continued

— Sat R 147:254 F 23 '29 420w

"This turgid and too lengthy tale seems to have a serious purpose, and would have been better off without it. The 'dark Odyssey' of Gilbert Stroud apparently illumines certain aspects of the not altogether neglected topic of sex; but the illumination seems to this reviewer fitful and sometimes deceptive. Yet Miss Mannin, who often writes far too much and to too little point, has decorated her tale with one piece of vivid, direct, and brilliant narrative—the account of Gilbert's courtship of Mary Thane, the one sane and likable character in the book. A writer capable of such work as this might be better employed than in probing, none too profoundly, the abysses of sadism and inversion."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:299 O 19 '29 230w

"Nobody in the book has any value at all; and we are pleased when it concludes in sheer melodrama. Miss Mannin has this time chanced on a set of puppets without a tragic gesture in them." R. A. Taylor

— Spec 142:135 Ja 26 '29 180w

"The book has been written to a pattern, a pattern drawn, we imagine, in clear, firm outlines before the characters, other than that of Gilbert, were more than dimly perceived. Miss Mannin's facility of thought and expression never deserts her, and particularly in the scenes laid in Rome and Florence, does a great deal to draw attention from the rather unhappy choice of outline."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p187 Mr 7 '29 280w

MANNING, ELIZABETH. Lot houses. 301p $2.50 (7s 6d) J. Cape & H. Smith

"The centre of the story is a row of broken-down cottages in an old quarry called the Lot, and their effect in the lives of a small group of people. John Judas Marybud, a fisherman who has been forced by illness to give up the sea, unexpectedly inherits Lot Houses. He is a sullen, imaginative old man, nagged at by his wife and snubbed by his daughter; his only defence against them and against his own sense of uselessness is his pride in his chapel-going virtue. His inheritance pleases him at first, for it gives him importance; but in the end the Lot Houses are his undoing. They bring back into his life an old sin, whose discovery would undo the effect of all his years of virtue, the sin of his relations long ago with the disreputable slattern Ellen."—Times [London] Lit Sup

---

"Some will think the sense of brooding which is heavy over the book excessively saturnine. But reality is a shifting, incalculable thing, and the one that Miss Manning interprets for her people is true for their natures. It is her not inconsiderable achievement that she has given convincingness to their torture and made it ceaselessly credible."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 O 27 '29 380w

"There is originality in both the conception and the development of the story, told in a quaintly picturesque vernacular, and a terse, vivid style recalling the pungent tang of the sea-winds and the tonic odors of new ploughed earth in many an unfrequented corner of the English coast." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 30 '29 750w

"This is an unusually good first novel. It is written in a simple yet distinctive manner, which arises naturally from the word-forms the thoughts take in the different minds. Miss Manning possibly owes something of her method to Mrs. Woolf. She works through the minds of her people, passing rapidly from one to another, and these transitions are admirably managed. She falters once, for a page or two, when she abandons this method."

+ — Nation and Ath 44:854 Mr 16 '29 220w

"Its scope and circumstances are petty and sordid, but the book as a whole has a beauty difficult to capture and define. Like good poetry, it carries a suggestion infinitely beyond anything directly stated, and it creates an atmosphere lovelier in the whole than in any single part. . . 'Lot Houses' is the sort of book whose flavor will remain long after its substance has joined that of a hundred other unremembered novels."

+ N Y Times p6 O 20 '29 600w

Springf'd Republican p7e N 3 '29 150w

"Miss Elizabeth Manning's first novel is an excellent piece of work. The reader will be first impressed by her brevity of manner and by its success. She spends no time in explanations, and yet we are told all that we need to know. The first page shows us that we are in competent hands. We find ourselves among living people, and are taken at once into the heart of their lives."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p204 Mr 14 '29 300w

MANSFIELD, KATHERINE, pseud. (KATHLEEN [BEAUCHAMP] MURRY) (MRS JOHN MIDDLETON MURRY). Letters; ed. by J. Middleton Murry. 2v 517p $7.50 Knopf

B or 92 29-5743

Poignant, living letters filled with the little details of her daily existence, written by Katherine Mansfield during the last ten years of her life. The greater proportion of the letters were written to her husband, John Middleton Murry, who was in England while she was vainly seeking health in France.

---

Booklist 25:284 Ap '29

"There is a rare unity between her personality and her work, because she struggled so ardently to purge both of artifice and impurity. Her letters are a record of that struggle. They reflect, with exquisite clarity, the processes of a creative spirit which was singularly untainted." E. H. Walton

+ Bookm 69:207 Ap '29 450w

"These letters are filled with colors, shapes, lights, noises, people passing the window, fragments of conversation, happenings of all sorts. She breaks off in the middle of one to remark that a fly has just flown into the fire. She tells but little of her thoughts, and those thoughts which she tells are mostly sudden thoughts, impulses of the mind: such reticence, coupled with the vivacity with which she relates every thing that is of the moment, gives to her letters the fascination of a play of light over some reflecting surface." S. T. Warner

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 F 24 '29 2400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p154 D '29

"The core of the value of her legacy of letters is that she quickens the perception of everyone who reads. If ever life is momentarily stale, one has only to open her letters to sense this man in a green hat within one's own horizon, and that vast respectable woman with chins; or to feel clover and grass; or to be fat pillows, sunning themselves on a weathered box. With the specialist's power of discernment, she is somehow able to make of discernment a general power, a common faculty. Without ever writing a word about the vision of the artist becoming in time the vision of all, she merely quietly stimulates all who read her to share in that elusive vision. . . Besides extending human consciousness, these two volumes afford a thousand pages of amusement." Zona Gale

+ Nation 129:93 Jl 24 '29 1100w

"If the reading of these two considerable volumes enforces on us a sense of obtrusion and spiritual or domestic awkwardness, we have in them a fund of fragmentary beauties of expression and a self-portrait of one who will not soon be forgotten in her courage, her vivacity, and her grace." E. B.

+ Nation and Ath 44:296 N 24 '28 750w

"This edition of her letters is less irritating, but more tantalizing [than the 'Journal'], for it tells us so much about her that we feel entitled to know more." T. S. Matthews
+ New Repub 58:sup147 Mr 20 '29 1500w

"The letters contain singularly little that need have been withheld. But the editing is open to criticism. Mr. Middleton Murry doubtless felt that the writing of notes upon the correspondents would be too difficult. Nevertheless, they are necessary. The absence of notes creates a difficulty for the reader of today; the reader of to-morrow will be all at sea, and may be led now and again to draw unwarranted conclusions."
+ — New Statesman 32:226 N 24 '28 750w

"The record is invaluable to those who are interested in Katherine Mansfield's work." Dorothy Brewster
+ N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 2 '29 700w

"In the end, perhaps, her Journal and her letters are her real fulfillment. Their subjective truth is what she has best passed on to us. It has a very special, and perhaps a very lasting, value." L: Kronenberger
+ N Y Times p5 F 24 '29 1150w

Reviewed by Margery Latimer
+ N Y World p11m Mr 17 '29 700w

"Miss Mansfield was a good letter writer; indeed, she does not seem to have been able to write anything without revealing her unusual mind and spirit. There is an inevitable poignance about reading these letters, but, as Sylvia Townsend Warner has said elsewhere, the impression deepens that Katherine Mansfield's genius and her disease were a part of each other, so that the tragedy of her early death is softened by the knowledge of what she left behind." Herschel Brickell
+ No Am 227:adv Ap '29 100w

"They are extraordinary letters, among the best that have appeared in recent years, and they reveal the writer as an aristocrat in feeling and thought, alive as few contemporary writers have been. . . Her faith in art, her sincerity and devotion, were in every way exceptional, and these qualities too her letters reveal." Van Wyck Brooks
+ Outlook 151:311 F 20 '29 600w
Pratt p34 spring '29
St Louis 27:168 My '29
Sat R 146:542 O 27 '28 1100w

"The trouble about Katherine Mansfield is that it hurts to read her. She has only to let fall a casual sentence in a letter, and the person who receives it is pricked by some poignant reality. She is a sort of John Keats with an added feminine minuteness of intuition and sensibility." R: Church
+ Spec 141:597 O 27 '28 1050w

"The deepest and most important impression made by these letters places them as one in kind with those of Tchehov or of Keats—with whom, how surely! she was one in spirit. There are, of course, many other aspects which might have been stressed—the bounty of brilliant detail and vivid phrase, the casual beauty of some of the descriptive paragraphs, the sure truthfulness of comment, the courageous high spirits—the frank revelation of a continuously attractive and very honest personality."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p801 N 1 '28 1000w

"Her letters can be read as a sparkling commentary on a time still fresh in our memory. But they are much more profoundly significant than a commentary. They are a moving and noble record of the tragic suffering and victory of one of the bravest and purest of human adventurers." Theodora Bosanquet
+ Yale R n s 18:801 summer '29 750w

MANTELL, CHARLES LETNAM. Industrial carbon. (Industrial chemical monographs) 410p il $4.50 Van Nostrand

662.9 Carbon 28-29707

The monograph covers the industrial applications of carbon, aside from its use as a fuel. The chapters treat the elemental forms, such as diamonds and graphites; carbon pigments and fillers, like carbon black and lampblack; adsorbent carbons of the gas, decolorizing and metal types, including bone black; and manufactured carbon products such as electrodes, brushes, etc.

---

Booklist 25:272 Ap '29

"The author has gathered together within the confines of a single book a great deal of information that has hitherto been scattered in the literature. From a layman's viewpoint the subject is handled in a straightforward manner and sufficiently accurate to make a well-connected and interesting story."
+ Ind & Eng Chem 21:293 Mr '29 180w
N Y New Tech Bks 14:4 Ja '29

MANTLE, BURNS. American playwrights of today. (Modern Am. writers' ser.) 324p il $2.50 Dodd

927.9 Dramatists, American. American drama —History and criticism 29-10495

Brief biographical sketches of America's foremost playwrights beginning with Eugene O'Neill, with shorter mention of beginners in play writing, a chapter on novelists whose books have been dramatized, the veterans of the theatre world, etc.

---

Booklist 25:352 Je '29

"The volume has little value as a reference work. It is merely a pleasant and not very critical chat about the men and women who write most of the successful American plays." W. P. Eaton
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 Je 9 '29 80w

"It brings within the covers of one book much surface information about the dates and characteristics of the majority of American playwrights, and by its informal style makes this information easily assimilable. Its casual quality, however, discounts the value of the material offered and lays the book open to charges of superficiality and inaccuracy."
— Theatre Arts Mo 13:866 N '29 700w

MANUEL, HERSCHEL THURMAN. Master of my fate; a discussion of personality & behavior with emphasis upon self-direction. 329p $3 Century

170 Conduct of life. Personality 29-18533

A text on the psychology of behaviorism written for young people. Its aim is to assist in the development of personality and social acceptability. Problems of appearance, speech, character, morals, religion and education are successively discussed; and the closing chapter is devoted to the presentation of a "rating scale" by which the individual may check his traits and analyze his difficulties.

---

"As a guide to human conduct, this book overlooks nothing. It must be accorded recognition as one of the curiosities of the year—a medley of wise suggestions, obvious rules of conduct, old-fashioned standards, and what not. The author has informed himself concerning modern philosophy and psychology and retrieved a lot of stuff which was laughed off with the waning nineties."
— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p35 D 8 '29 220w

"There is good advice and there is much wisdom in this book on behaviorism, intended, primarily, to help high school and college students to determine what they are to do and be as adults."
+ Boston Transcript p5 O 11 '29 250w

"No attempt is made to iron out the inconsistency of identifying mind and body and still insisting on the power of thinking. The practical advice offered is sensible, if superficial and platitudinous." J. A. Leighton
Churchman p15 D 28 '29 100w
St Louis 27:328 D '29

MARBLE, ANNIE (RUSSELL) (MRS CHARLES FRANCIS MARBLE). Study of the modern novel, British and American, since 1900. 440p $3.50 (12s 6d) Appleton

823.09 English fiction—History and criticism. American fiction—History and criticism 28-25757

This study of the modern novel is comprised of sketches of British and American novelists, considered separately, and an analysis of their novels since 1900. The novels are classified as History and romance; Fantasy and mystery; Characterization and manners; Revolt and escape; Whimsicality and humor.

---

Booklist 25:202 F '29

"The inclusion of both biographical and critical material, and the extensive bibliographical references make the book valuable as a handbook. The amount of research which has gone into the task is self-evident. Naturally, the critical appraisals are somewhat cursory and there are many definitions which fail to define."

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p31 D 9 '28 180w

"As a 'study' Mrs. Marble's book is disappointing because of her constant use of such battered critical phrases as 'this character is vitally real' or 'this novel grips the imagination.' . . One regrets that Mrs. Marble did not ask a few questions that would lead the reader to search behind that vast display of meaningless labels that passes for criticism." Dorothy Brewster

— N Y Evening Post p8m D 22 '28 340w

"Mrs. Marble's comprehensive and competently worked-out volume ought to add value and interest to the study of such courses in schools and colleges, and enhance greatly the pleasure afforded by fictional current reading done by literary societies, women's clubs and unassorted individuals. One is impressed by the enormous amount of reading in careful, critical mood the author must have done, and by the pains she has taken to make her biographical information authentic."

+ N Y Times p14 Je 30 '29 450w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell

— No Am 227:adv Ja '29 80w

"A useful synopsis by the author of a similar work on the Nobel Prize winners in literature."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p46 Ja 17 '29 30w

Wis Lib Bul 25:72 F '29

MARCH, JOSEPH MONCURE. The set-up. 184p $2 Covici

811 28-29522

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

---

"The author has created an unique form of narrative poetry as fundamentally suited to the needs of his material as the spenserian stanza to The Faerie Queene. Mr. Marsh is a bold original and should be encouraged to entertain more daring and more comprehensive conceptions."

+ Bookm 68:xii Ja '29 100w

"Once under way, the poem sweeps with the frenzy of a cyclone to its thrilling climax. It is as utterly emotional as feminine hysteria, and more exciting than a tabloid murder."

Boston Transcript p3 Ja 9 '29 220w

"Taking the double-crossed prize-fight as a theme, he has produced a dramatic narrative of sustained suspense and interesting detail. As poetry 'The Set-Up' leaves much undone. No one can read these lines without realizing that fundamentally Mr. March has the gift of poesy. His verse is alive; moreover, here and there it displays that uncanny economy which is the essence of great poetry. On the other hand, the bulk of the descriptive passages show that the author has worked without much care. This carelessness and the crudities and solecisms of the poem are perhaps remediable but there is in his verse a fundamental lowness which Mr. March may find it more difficult to overcome." Johan Smertenko

— + Nation 128:207 F 13 '29 400w

"Mr. March is not a poet. His subjects are abominable, and his method that of a man suddenly emptying bricks out of a cart by tipping the back." Humbert Wolfe

— Sat R 147:288 Mr 2 '29 200w

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 24 '29 150w

"His staccato method, with its short, stabbing lines, is, indeed, peculiarly fitted to the presentation of a prize-fight, while his intimate acquaintance with the speech and habits of the underworld enables him to give it a setting which is not only a realistic background but a constantly shifting and vital element in the action which is concentrated in the ring. The poem is a remarkable piece of sensational reporting, and creates a tense excitement."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p166 F 28 '29 100w

MARCHANT, SIR JAMES, comp. and ed. Madonna; an anthology; drawn from ancient, mediaeval and modern sources; with an introd. on the Madonna in art, by Sir Charles John Holmes. 207p il $7 (18s) Longmans

808.8 Mary, Virgin 28-24497

This anthology from the literature, prose and verse, inspired by the Madonna, has been gathered from remote and diverse sources, and is illustrated with a great many reproductions from paintings of the Madonna.

---

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 F 10 '29 150w

"With much erudition and great industry Sir James Marchant has produced an excellent anthology devoted to the Virgin. His range in prose and verse allusions is a very wide one. Sir Charles Holmes contributes an introduction on 'The Madonna in Art.' The book is very fully illustrated, but one could have wished it to be more fully indexed." J. B. S. B.

+ Nation and Ath 44:sup384 D 8 '28 70w

"The anthology is more theological than ecstatic; and a reverent piety insists on the gentler, simpler aspects of the Madonna story rather than on the mysterious and romantic dreams that have gathered round her figure."

Spec 141:595 O 27 '28 280w

MARCHANT, SIR JAMES, ed. If I had only one sermon to preach; English series; sermons by twenty English ministers. 307p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Cassell]

252 Sermons 28-21999

Following the series of sermons by leading American clergymen Sir James Marchant has gathered under the same title twenty outstanding messages from the English pulpit.

---

Booklist 25:148 Ja '29

Cleveland Open Shelf p38 Mr '29

"In the volume edited by Sir James Marchant, we have a distinct addition to the fast-growing sermonic literature of the day. It would be presumptuous to try to pass judgment on the pulpit work of the twenty English ministers represented in this volume. . . If one might make a suggestion, without intending it as a criticism, could not the compilers of volumes of sermons render a still greater service by introducing us to men whose work is not already so familiar?" C. S. Patton

+ J Religion 9:147 Ja '29 110w

Wis Lib Bul 25:69 F '29

MARCU, VALERIU, Lenin; tr. by E. W. Dickes. 412p il $5 Macmillan [21s Gollancz]

B or 92 Lenin, Nikolai, pseud. (Vladimir Ilich Ulyanov). Russia—History—Revolution. 1917-. Bolshevism—Russia 28-20827

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

---

"Marcu's book is an indication that it is now possible to write a life of Lenin without being an uncritical apologist or an equally uncritical accuser. The style is vivid, if somewhat mannered and overburdened with metaphor, and the profuse quotations from Lenin's writings and speeches are judiciously chosen. The man who emerges from these pages is a man whose life was a strange and startling unity." Barnet Nover

+ Am Hist R 34:646 Ap '29 330w

"It is a colorful and dramatic story, not only of Lenin, but of Russia, including Nicholas II, his wife, the church and the peasants. It is so colorful, so dramatic, that one loses the thread of the story. The pictures are powerful, but one misses the Anglo-Saxon, clear-cut, stark way of making the big things stand out in relief from the rest. One misses the summary, the character sketch, the analysis in the fervid and emotional presentation, which, however, is necessary to understand the Slav." T: C. Richards

+ — Boston Transcript p3 F 2 '29 1500w

Cleveland Open Shelf p72 My '29

"It is encouraging to read a popular biography of a puzzling world figure which can preserve a fair balance between Lenin's highest aspirations and what Russia let him achieve." Bartlett Brebner

+ Hist Outlook 20:40 Ja '29 620w

"Of the many published biographies of Lenin, written either by uncritical party-eulogists, or by political opponents, equally unwilling and unable to see the 'whole' man, Mr. Marcu's Lenin is the winning exception. This biographer neither accepts nor rejects Lenin. He wages no battle for the Lord or against the Devil. Successfully enough, he tries to portray Lenin and to elucidate Leninism." J. B. S. Hardman

+ New Repub 57:251 Ja 16 '29 700w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 33:638 D '28

Pratt p33 winter '29

"This volume on Lenin is most interesting for the general reader. Its style is vivid, and reading the book is an intellectual and aesthetic adventure." A. J. Muste

+ World Tomorrow 12:232 My '29 1000w

"Marcu's style is that of an extravagant romanticist, at times degenerating into poor melodrama. His book, moreover, is not a learned investigation nor a reliable reference work. . . In spite of evidences of bias and inaccuracy, Marcu's book gives a compelling picture of a powerful leader of men and is worth reading. Only it must be read with caution and reservation." G. Vernadsky

+ — Yale R n s 18:600 spring '29 240w

MARCUS, SHMUEL (MARCUS GRAHAM, pseud.), comp. Anthology of revolutionary poetry; with an introd. by Ralph Cheyney and Lucia Trent. ltd ed 360p $3 Active press, inc., 26 Union sq., N.Y.

821.08 Labor and laboring classes—Poetry. Socialism—Poetry. English poetry—Collections 29-12077

"Duly if discreetly red of binding, and with red rules framing each page in a very pleasant revival of Victorian styles in bookmaking, this anthology does not quite claim that every great poet who ever wrote in English was a revolutionist, but it does intimate that the red flag was hidden in the hearts of many who did not flaunt it to the breeze. Marlowe is not here, nor Milton, Wordsworth, Keats, but the canny and propertied Shakespeare, the courtier Raleigh, the country parson Herrick, the laureate Tennyson, are brought into the same incendiary ranks as Byron and Shelley, Blake, Morris, Henley, Whitman. Even Edgar Allan Poe is represented."—N Y World

---

"The editor's own contribution is neither poetry nor verse, and rather less effective than prose, recounting a painful personal experience, should be. Of course there is some good poetry in this anthology, but there is less than might be expected in view of the fact that the editor has been so thorough in his quest of material that might be considered even faintly revolutionary, having gone to the length of eviscerating a portion of E. A. Robinson's 'The Man Against the Sky.' Indeed, I am somewhat at a loss to determine what tests have excluded certain poets from Mr. Graham's heterogeneous company." B. R. Redman

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 S 1 '29 350w

Reviewed by C: Divine

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 S 8 '29 100w

Boston Transcript p7 Je 22 '29 250w

"Altogether it is the best and most copious collection of radical verse so far made. That much of this verse is bad is declared by Ralph Cheyney and Lucia Trent in their introduction not to matter. It does, however, to the extent that bad verse is ineffectual. If the world is to be saved by poetry, let the poetry be good. Otherwise we shall have too long to wait."

+ — Nation 129:125 Jl 31 '29 150w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p9m My 18 '29 280w

"Marcus Graham, if we read the evidence aright, is a gentle soul who really loves all high poetry with a fine passion. He has an equal passion for social justice. So he has searched the pages of the poets he loves with a determination to find in each something that can be nailed to the mast where the red flag floats. . . For all that, this is a rich book. If the chant of sans-cullotism is not sustained with full lungs, the voice of poetry is here in many inspiring keys. We have not for a long time come upon a book more pleasant and rewarding to browse in."

+ N Y World p7m Jl 7 '29 360w

"Some are merely complaint, or lament; Henley's 'Invictus' voices individual courage and endurance; the extract from Emerson, the two bits from Lanier, and Poe's fantasy, 'Eldorado,' and more, have no connection with the matter in hand. Nevertheless, there is enough of the spirit of revolt to mark the very general movement of the world against the senseless waste and injustice of industrial conditions which injure and debase human life. The second section is much more to the purpose. It is far more personal, sprinkled with bitter grief and outrage of individuals, and thrilling with revolt. Still there are verses, as Jean Starr Untermeyer's 'Clay Hills,' or Max Eastman's 'Diogenes,' and others, which seem quite on the side." C. P. Gilman

— + Sat R of Lit 6:155 S 21 '29 550w

"Anyone who wishes to discover how far the concept of the social revolution has penetrated literature will find this collection a useful and interesting document, though it may only serve to support the generally accepted thesis that propaganda is not the material from which art is created. Though the inclusion of some poems seems rather far-fetched, as with Henley's 'Invictus' and some of Emerson's and Blake's poetry, generally the anthology is significant as indicating the range and intensity of the poetic protest not only against the cosmic enigma but also against specific social injustice."

Springf'd Republican p7e S 1 '29 260w

MARIE, queen consort of Ferdinand, king of Rumania. Magic doll of Roumania; a wonder story in which East and West do meet; written for American children. 319p il $3 Stokes

29-25351

Nancy, a little American girl, received a Roumanian doll for a Christmas present. Now Florica was a magic doll and presently Nancy found herself whisked off to Roumania. Here Florica, suddenly grown into a real little girl, showed Nancy the ways of Roumanian life.

---

"The author has a gracious style in presenting the attractions of her country in juxtaposition with the ways of the West, but we feel that it is her country as she would like it to be, rather than as it is. She has cast the glamour of the poetry and romance of the Near East over her work, and we are sure that to many of its young readers, this land of the Rising Sun, will mean fairyland."

MARIE, queen consort of Ferdinand—Continued

Cath World 130:379 D '29 250w

"One cannot but feel the shadow of information falling across the page too often, and too great a desire to instruct the young reader in the ways of another people,—too much 'hands across the sea' idea, and do not think for a moment that children do not scent such attempts as quickly as the rest of us. We also resented the way the Queen introduced herself and her daughter into the last part of the story." Rachel Field

— Sat R of Lit 6:270 O 12 '29 380w

MARIEJOL, JEAN HIPPOLYTE. Daughter of [2] the Medicis; the romantic story of Margaret of Valois; tr. from the French by John Peile. 261p il $4 Harper

B or 92 Marguerite de Valois, queen consort of Henry IV, king of France 29-29532

Margaret of Valois was the daughter of Henry II and Catharine de Medici and wife of Henry of Navarre, afterward Henry IV of France. Her biographer attributes her claim to fame not to her beauty and her many loves, nor to the part she played in politics, but to her talent as a writer, as shown in her Mémoires.

Boston Transcript p1 Ja 4 '30 900w

"An excellent, carefully written and thoroughly adequate biography of the most flamboyant of all the Valois women, in a good translation from the French original." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p7s Ja 4 '30 100w

"The book is beyond praise in what it sets out to do, which is to present a chronicle of the events of Queen Margaret's life, gathered by research which has neglected no source, omitting nothing of importance, inserting nothing trivial, taking nothing for granted and making only the most careful deductions. . . His style is crisp, compact and unadorned. One is told just what is necessary, and with the utmost precision." H. L. Matthews

+ N Y Times p15 D 23 '29 1500w

MARITAIN, JACQUES. Three reformers: Luther—Descartes—Rousseau. 234p il $2.50 Scribner [7s 6d Sheed & W.]

194 Luther, Martin. Descartes, René. Rousseau, Jean Jacques [29-8562]

"Three men, each for very different reasons, dominate the modern world, and govern all the problems which torment it: a reformer of religion, a reformer of philosophy, and a reformer of morality." M. Maritain, a distinguished French philosopher, studies the character and the thought of these three reformers —Luther, Descartes, and Rousseau.

Booklist 26:9 O '29

"No one can call this book of Maritain's an easy or a simple book; there flow through it the currents of a dozen streams of high intellectual contemporary thought. The author is profoundly religious, with that mystical and intellectual Catholicism backed by philosophy that seems almost the peculiar property of the Latin peoples. His mind is totally unlike any other mind that I know of in writing today." M. M. Colum

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 My 19 '29 3600w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 19 '29 760w

"The whole work is a triumph of clearness and penetration. In particular, the section dealing with Luther sets forth the essential features of his spiritual and intellectual revolt and the real line of demarcation between his errors and Catholic truth, as they have never before been set forth within the same limits." G. D. M.

+ Cath World 129:785 S '29 480w

"A brilliant, provocative and wholly fallacious interpretation of the characters and influences of the three reformers named, and incidentally of the course of civilization from the reformation to the French revolution. . . While the author's major argument is completely vitiated by his devotion to the idea of ecclesiastical authority as the criterion of truth and of solidarity under the guidance of the church as the formula for the organization of society, many of the details of his criticism are penetrating and suggestive."

— + Christian Century 46:1123 S 11 '29 170w

"Of the beauty of M. Maritain's thought and of the elegance of its expression there can be no two opinions. But in spite of this, indeed, because of this, readers of this charming and subtle book will be well advised to have their wits about them; for M. Maritain begs a question as one conferring a benediction and never seems more sweetly reasonable than when he is beside the mark. In his treatment of his chosen trio individually we find him continually confusing the issue."

— + Nation and Ath 44:368 D 8 '28 380w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p10m My 11 '29 500w

"Of M. Maritain's erudition there can be no doubt. His work is well documented with authoritative reference. He writes brilliantly and interestingly. But the book is nothing more than a polemic against 'heresies of modern thought,' against 'intellectual individualism,' 'romantic idealism' and unorthodox thinking in general. These three essays are, essentially, elaborations of purely personal beliefs and dogmas, and, as such, of no very great consequence to mankind in its quest for truth and knowledge. There is some wisdom to be garnered from his book, but it is, unfortunately, clouded by the controversial character of the writing." Dino Ferrari

— + N Y Times p8 D 22 '29 750w

"While the merits of the argument will be variously estimated, and the general tone cannot but make the judicious grieve, the book contains much fine writing, especially in the matter of some striking figures of speech which both illuminate and adorn the discussions." M. M. Knappen

Sat R of Lit 5:1091 Je 8 '29 750w

Springf'd Republican p12 Je 27 '29 220w

"As M. Maritain is both philosopher and (in the best sense) a popularizer of ideas, his essays are worth reading both for their individual merit and because they indicate a very significant current of contemporary thought."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p818 N 8 '28 1750w

MARJORIBANKS, EDWARD. For the defence; the life of Sir Edward Marshall Hall; with an introd. by the Earl of Birkenhead. 471p $5 Macmillan [25s Gollancz]

B or 92 Marshall-Hall, Sir Edward. Trials 29-25463

"Sir Edward Marshall Hall, with his eyeglass, his Roman features, his vehement eloquence, his air-cushion, smelling-salts and medicine bottles, his great bulk and the infirmity which gave him the privilege of addressing the Court sitting down, was in recent years a famous figure in the Law Courts. But he had already made his name as a great criminal advocate before this century opened. Mr. Marjoribanks has given us a big book of the cases in which the late Sir Edward appeared, tied together by a somewhat slender thread of biographical narrative."—Spec

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p10 N 23 '29 1750w

"Mr. Marjoribanks's life of the late Sir Edward Marshall Hall has been acclaimed as a classic of legal biography; but the truth is that, though it is one of the best and most arresting biographies published this autumn, its legal interest is almost nil. The interest in the book is purely a 'human' interest, centring first upon the masterful personality of Marshall Hall himself, his handsome appearance, his headlong, unconsidered oratory, his frequent encounters with judges and the Press, and his amazing successes in defence; and secondly upon the eccentric characters of many of the people he was called upon to defend."

+ New Statesman 34:162 N 9 '29 1300w

" 'For the Defense' is a book brimming with what is commonly called 'human interest.' Therefore its appeal to readers will go without saying. We imagine that lawyers, especially young lawyers, will find its pages highly instructive. And for those who like detective stories here is the material for scores."

+ N Y Times p3 D 29 '29 1400w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p13 D 2 '29 960w

"It turns out not quite so good as the paragon London reading fashion will have it, yet all the same is well worth buying, if only for the large, generous portions the author supplies of accounts of his subject's most celebrated cases." W: Bolitho

+ N Y World p15 D 12 '29 1300w

"This biography is a fine example of a story told without the slightest intrusion between reader and subject of the author's personality or point of view."

+ Outlook 153:466 N 20 '29 370w

"I suppose that I have read a dozen or more books dealing with the lives of English barristers or judges. This one is, by far, the most entertaining of them all." Edmund Pearson

+ Sat R of Lit 6:582 D 21 '29 700w

"There is not enough shade in Mr. Marjoribanks' picture to make the subject of it stand out alive. . . That these shadings are not given may not be the biographer's fault. Sir Edward kept always a bold front to the world and was a consummate actor: we must be content with the man as he would himself be seen."

Spec 143:sup455 O 5 '29 700w

Springf'd Republican p6 Ja 6 '30 360w

"It is no small service to have given this picture of an advocate without whose history the records of our time would have been incomplete."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p758 O 3 '29 850w

MARKEY, GENE. Stepping high. 310p il $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

29-8723

The simple and attractive annals of a vaudeville dancer whose young wife loses her head when she is made a musical comedy star and is taken up by society. Benny is worth two of Flo, and a very nice young woman notices it and makes friendly overtures; but Benny is faithful. He cheerfully takes Flo back when her brief popularity is over.

---

Bookm 69:xxiv My '29 160w

"It closely follows the standards of 'The Saturday Evening Post,' in that magazine's most anxious moments to please the little old lady from Dubuque. Here is the usual formula of the rewards of virtue and fidelity and love." Beatrice Kaufman

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Mr 10 '29 680w

"Mr. Markey writes with the lift, the humor and at times the pathos of Tin Pan Alley at its best. He has stretched a clever but relatively simple plot over many pages of lightly frolicsome writing. But his characters for all that are scarcely more than tintypes, the prevailing character sketches which Broadway quite often finds plausible."

— + Boston Transcript p5 My 4 '29 200w

" 'Stepping High' is done in the Broadway manner throughout, containing some good wisecracks by way of entertainment, and presenting a standard story in an agreeably light manner."

N Y Times p9 Mr 24 '29 160w

"This tale resembles a good musical comedy. It is not overburdened with plot. There are even the wisecracks that you want to remember but never can. But these people are real people, and the humor is good, authentic, indigenous American humor."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:866 Ap 6 '29 200w

MARKEY, JOHN FORDYCE. Symbolic process and its integration in children; a study in social psychology. (Int. lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 192p $3.50 Harcourt [10s 6d K. Paul]

153 Social psychology. Behaviorism (psychology). Child study. Children—Language. Symbolism 29-9444

Beginning with a discussion of the views of American sociologists on the symbolic process, Dr Markey turns to the application of behaviorism to symbolism in child study, and the relation of the latter to social control. Tables of illustration showing the action-content of words used by children, the order of appearance of the personal pronoun and other parts of speech, etc., are given.

---

"While Dr. Markey is to be admired for his valiant attempt to give a behavioristic explanation of 'thinking,' one must recognize its inadequacies and weaknesses. It is the opinion of the reviewer that Dr. Markey has added little in theory to what Dewey and Mead have said of the reflective process, and has missed much of what they have written." Herbert Blumer

— Am J Soc 34:927 Mr '29 400w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 18 '28 280w

"The more theoretical part of the discussion is disappointing. There is a tendency to confuse the question how a child learns to speak with the larger and more difficult question how the use of symbols arose. . . Too much of his theorizing strikes us as an abuse of the symbolic process, vague and general terms being used with an appearance of precision which is not justified by the underlying ideas. . . Dr. Markey's merit is that he insists throughout on the social character of the 'symbolic process.' It presupposes relations between persons."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p722 O 11 '28 680w

MARKHAM, VIOLET ROSA (MRS JAMES CARRUTHERS). Romanesque France; studies in the archæology and history of the 12th century. 521p il $7 Dutton [18s Murray]

723.44 France—Antiquities. Church architecture. Architecture, Romanesque. Sculpture, Romanesque. Architecture—France. France—History—Capetians to 1328 [29-23755]

"This book is an attempt to make better known to English travellers the beauty and interest of the ancient churches of France." (Preface) The author studies particularly the twelfth century architecture and sculpture in the provinces of Burgundy, Languedoc and Toulouse, Auvergne and Centre, Poitou and Aquitaine, Provence, Normandy and Ile de France.

---

Boston Transcript p7 N 2 '29 200w

"There can be no better introduction than Miss Markham's book to the general spirit of Romanesque and its particular examples. Her plan, which is to follow it at once geographically and chronologically through France has been exceedingly well worked out, and though the pilgrimage is long, art and history are so harmoniously blended that not a hint of monotony is felt. Miss Markham, without any of that tiresome 'reconstruction,' effectively reawakens a whole period." Sylva Norman

+ Nation and Ath 45:sup137 Ap 27 '29 530w

"Instead of passport and vaccination certificate, tourists to France should be compelled to produce evidence that they had read Miss Markham's book. It is likely to remain for a long time the standard work on its subject, but it is also full of informing sympathy, most readably expressed, for the country as a whole. . . It is because she keeps to the fore the living associations of her subject, and because her legitimate digression always contributes to its vitality, that her book is a triumphant success in its class."

MARKHAM, V. R.—Continued
+ New Statesman 33:90 Ap 27 '29 700w

"Setting about, apparently, to write of architecture for the general reader, Miss Markham's fine background and wide interest have led her into archæology, history, and social criticism. Her observations are enlivened by a delightful sense of humor."
+ Outlook 152:672 Ag 21 '29 40w

"This book makes no pretensions to original scholarship, but the author has made good use of the excellent French treatises on the subject and has a personal acquaintance with the churches described. Moreover, her descriptions of places and personages are lively and readable." W: B. Shaw
+ R of Rs 80:18 S '29 110w

"The text is written with a breadth of reference and a breadth of view rarely found together, and, with one or two curious minor exceptions, the level of accuracy is high. Although she has views of her own on many points the author has steered her way through controversial areas with conspicuous fairness and good judgment; it will be a long time before her book is superseded. . . The map is not very satisfactory and some of the plates are photographed from plaster casts instead of the originals."
Sat R 147:715 My 25 '29 540w

"Miss Markham's enthusiasm is infectious, and her instinct for the romantic in architecture is unerring. Moreover, she has a very wide knowledge of her subject, and her descriptions and historical references are commendably clear, even without the numerous excellent illustrations; so that her book commands a respectful welcome."
+ Spec 142:833 My 25 '29 420w

"Miss Markham writes with an infectious enthusiasm, and she has judiciously sandwiched her less easily digestible matter between charming reminiscences of personal travel. Her book can be whole-heartedly recommended, and to the experienced seeker after antiquarian entertainment as well as to the novice."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p355 My 2 '29 1350w

MARKOVITS, RODION. Siberian garrison; tr. from the Hungarian by George Halasz. 407p $2.50 Liveright
29-23490

A dejected convalescent opens a hospital window and looks out. The activity in the street awakes in him the joy of being alive. He remembers his wife and child, and his responsibility to them—the need of earning a living. The joy wanes. The war interrupts. The Russians capture him and send him to a detention camp in Siberia. There, whilst man is becoming terrifyingly primitive, officers still try to re-establish their shallow values. Famine is eating into the body of man, yet his mind's eye visualizes dream-trains speeding homeward. Freedom comes at last. He returns home, a worn, torn man.

" 'Siberian Garrison,' the work of an obscure Hungarian newspaper man who was taken prisoner in 1915, now being translated into nine languages, belongs to a genre that I believe is going to be more popular than biography ever was. In the revolt against artificial plot in fiction we are getting a new realism, and not merely the lives of a few human beings yanked from their context, but the whole scene as the news reel might present it." Ernestine Evans
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 N 17 '29 1550w

Reviewed by Francis Snow
Current Hist 31:628 Ja '30 100w

Reviewed by L. L. Irvine
Nation and Ath 46:403 D 14 '29 700w

"Siberian Garrison is an unwieldy book, containing a mass of vivid, jerky descriptions and a number of characters few of whom successfully materialise. It is not a novel of personal adventure like Sergeant Grischa, though at times it attempts to be, but rather a school-story in which the class is always kept in and the 'chaps' all happen to be grown-up men. It is original, diffuse, and certainly worth reading."
New Statesman 34:338 D 14 '29 650w

"This is the story of Hungarian prisoners of war in Siberia during the late conflict, written by one of them. . . For one who has seen the inside and outside of many Siberian garrisons, Markovits's picture of them appears amazingly true to life. . . Whether or not it is considered a book of fiction, 'Siberian Garrison' has once more demonstrated that real life often puts the ingenuity of novelists to shame. It might have lost some of its value as a human document if it had been further fictionalized." Emil Lengyel
+ N Y Times p8 N 3 '29 1900w

"Bernard Shaw once remarked that the suffering of a thousand was less effective than the suffering of one. That principle is aptly demonstrated in 'Siberian Garrison.' The whole cruel spectacle of the final pages, with the Cossacks murdering right and left, lacks the dramatic power of one sharply-etched picture of personal torture and suffering. It demonstrates also why 'The Case of Sergt. Grischa' is art, incomparably greater than 'All Quiet on the Western Front' and 'Siberian Garrison.' Yet the latter books have an important place in the revelation of war's misdeeds." Harry Hansen
+ — N Y World p10m N 24 '29 530w

"The narrative is vivid, amusing, horrible, piteous. Nothing is left out. Although it often over-accents, harps too insistently on the favorite ironic note, and may always be read for entertainment like any novel, it is, nevertheless, a serious and important contribution to the case-history of the time." Arthur Ruhl
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:616 Ja 4 '30 850w

MARKS, JEANNETTE AUGUSTUS. Thirteen days. 132p $2 Boni
343.1 Sacco, Nicola. Vanzetti, Bartolomeo
29-9814

" 'Thirteen Days' is an intimate, detailed, first-hand description of the experiences of the Defense committee during the thirteen-day reprieve from August 10 to August 22 before the Sacco-Vanzetti execution. The author, sensitive to the momentous and dramatic elements of this case, stirred by its historical and political significance, portrays in artistic fashion the chief figures, the social cross currents and the intense emotionalism of this perplexed period in the summer of 1927."—Christian Century

"Miss Marks was among those who served at the defense headquarters and her recital of those tense hours is stirring and impressive."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 My 26 '29 100w

"When this post-war period and this particular trial are studied by the social historians of the future, this book will be valuable not only for the intimate detail and concrete data given by an eye-witness of the chief events during the thirteen day reprieve before the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti, but illuminating in showing how a large number of the intelligentsia viewed this case and how a contemporary analyzed her own epoch." E. P. Kimball
+ Christian Century 46:745 Je 5 '29 1000w
Nation 128:539 My 1 '29 80w

"Altogether the book is an appropriate memorial record, and it will be wanted by everyone who would recall the Sacco-Vanzetti case in the interest of a justice which is clean, even-handed, and honest, which can stand before the face of heaven with no recourse to foulness, cruelty and lies." R. M. L.
+ New Repub 60:53 Ag 28 '29 700w

"Dealing with the Sacco-Vanzetti case during the last days of that tragic episode of American cruelty, cowardice and dishonesty, Miss Marks has written a dramatic recitative of vivid power, touched with the quality of poetry, and alive with idealistic indignation. The book speaks well for her, not only as a competent writer, but as a woman of a free and enlightened mind, whose courage was equal to her work of seven years in behalf of these unfortunate men." E. L. Masters

+ Outlook 151:625 Ap 17 '29 480w

"If Miss Marks has over-sentimentalized the characters in her book . . . the wonder should be that, given her disposition, she has been as restrained as she is in this book. For the period of emotions with which she deals needs perspective to be assessed and to be portrayed in its ultimately realistic basis of terrible fact and implication. . . Miss Marks has been a faithful reporter of events and her book, in addition to serving as a guide to future students of the Sacco-Vanzetti case, contrives to connect the events of the two weeks before the execution hour in such a manner that they take on the stirring aspects of their true significance." Gardner Jackson

+ Portland Evening News p5 Ap 23 '29 1100w

"For the trained student the official record, sponsored by such men as Elihu Root, is obviously the unimpeachable source. And study of the record has already revealed points for debate, which future investigations may clear up. But something more is needed than the dry bones; and that is the heat and passion of the moment when life or death hung in the balance. That is what Miss Marks has to give to the literature of this unique case."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 21 '29 650w

"The value of her book is in its simplicity, its sincerity, and also its sense of long perspective and its vivid presentation of a subordinate but moving phase in a most moving drama." V. D. Scudder

+ Survey 63:50 O 1 '29 700w

"The book moves with a sombre sweep of power, with a style as bare and stern and supple as a sword-blade's steel. The chapter entitled 'The March of Sorrow,' for example, is superb poetry." E. M. Root

+ World Tomorrow 12:315 Jl '29 300w

MARKS, PERCY. A dead man dies. 351p $2.50 Century

29-4534

Nora loved Norman, her first husband, so much that she married a second and a third time to forget her loss of him. But her three grown children balked at a fourth husband, and Nora, still amazingly young and amazingly attractive, refused to marry the one man who supplanted Norman in her heart, only to have her children marry and leave her one by one.

---

"There is material here for a fairly powerful book, but Norah is a childish and undisciplined figure, rather than passionate and dramatic."

Bookm 69:xxv Ap '29 100w

"The book is fluently written, without grammatical error, and superficially innocuous."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 F 24 '29 300w

— + Boston Transcript p2 Mr 27 '29 200w

Churchman 139:28 My 11 '29 60w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p10m F 23 '29 50w

"His characters are often interesting and sometimes credible, but a genuine concern over their fate is difficult to muster. Then, too, lacking an original situation strong enough to sustain his narrative, Mr. Marks is a little at a loss to secure depth and vigor. The provocative title of this book covers a situation long since worn rather thin."

— N Y Times p14 F 24 '29 480w

"The characters of the children are well, that of Nora, excellently handled. She represents a fairly common type of American woman in whom super-abundant vitality and hysterically exuberant sympathies often mask a meagre emotional nature."

Outlook 151:350 F 27 '29 180w

"Nora alone would have made a bookful, but there are Paul and Ted and Susan, each, with Mr. Marks' richness of characterization, worthy of a book of his own. So it is that, though Nora's 'children' (they are all in their twenties) make the story more interesting, they also make the novel unwieldly. As a result Mr. Marks calls in coincidence to solve his problems and the attendant evil of poor motivation strains our credulity here and there."

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:1003 My 11 '29 230w

MARKS, PERCY. Unwilling god. 338p $2.50 Harper

29-21552

Bill Royce, an athlete unfortunately afflicted with brains, went to college to get an education. He was paid to play on the Raleigh college team, and he enjoyed football from a professional point of view, though he hated the rah-rah spirit. Bill turned down the best fraternities, he declined campus honors, he studied hard, and got himself pretty well hated. His girl, Patricia, turned him down also, because he didn't know "how to play." But Bill, in the football season of his senior year, suddenly catches college spirit at the crucial point of the big game, wins a moral victory, the adoration of his classmates, and the heart of Patricia

---

"A very pretty, exciting story, whether one can believe in the curious twistings of Bill Royce's alleged character or not. It has pathos, drama, gin-drinking, dancing, snowstorms, sweet sentiment, campus atmosphere and just about everything else that goes to make a moving tale of fledglings under the elms." Stanley Walker

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 D 22 '29 550w

Boston Transcript p3 D 28 '29 280w

"Some passages of 'The Unwilling God' read like an essay on education in the columns of The Nation; others are as full of wisecracks as a Vina Delmar short story. But on the other hand, there is a perfect characterization of a shuffling dean, a subtly scathing interview with the president of Raleigh, a persuasively real friendship with a non-conformist professor of history that are memorably done. They give every evidence of being brilliant portraits from life. I find Mr. Marks's 'Unwilling God' a vastly entertaining, if inconsistent, novel, well worth a reading." Florence Haxton

+ — N Y Evening Post p12m N 2 '29 800w

"Again writing a college story, he has turned a sermon into a scenario. Until the end one is rather interested in Bill's case. His is a real problem. One is interested in his love affair, even though it is obviously fiction, but the conclusion that college is all the stickily sweet things Bill's favorite professor says it is doesn't quite go down."

— + N Y Times p24 D 8 '29 350w

"As a novel, 'The Unwilling God' is unimpressive; as one more Marksian tract upon college life, however, it distinctly has its uses. Mr. Marks analyzes the American small college confidently and sanely; it is safe to say that he knows what he is talking about. His point of view is sensible and humane, and his undergraduates are normal except when he tends to oversimplify them."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:594 D 21 '29 260w

MARLATT, EARL BOWMAN. Protestant saints. 104p $1.25 Holt

922 Augustine, Saint, bp. of Hippo. Bernard of Clairvaux, Saint. Francis of Assisi, Saint

28-23933

Psychographs of Saint Augustine, Saint Bernard and Saint Francis of Assisi.

---

"We should read the book not as adequate history but as a meditation. As such it is winning and gracious; and doubtless many readers will be led by it to go further into these great careers."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 D 9 '28 200w

MARLATT, E. B.—Continued

"Professor Marlatt, though a philosopher, is everywhere a poet. The book has a breath of loveliness harmonious with its subjects. Thrice he takes us to a presence that disturbs us with the joy of elevated thoughts." E. E. Turner

+ Christian Century 45:1364 N 8 '28 380w

MARLOW, LOUIS, pseud. See Wilkinson, L: U.

MARNAS, MELANIE. Who is then this man? tr. from the French by Henry Longan Stuart; with an introd. by the translator. 363p $2.50 Dutton

232.9 Jesus Christ—Biography 29-2125

A Frenchwoman writes this reverent biography of Jesus, with documented touches of verisimilitude and with very few departures into the imaginative method. The simply told story closely follows the gospel narrative.

---

Reviewed by W: L. Sullivan

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 S 15 '29 130w

"Her moving story is full of intense feeling and disarms criticism because she does not pretend to write a technical, scientific treatise. Her aim is more like that of Papini's and similar lives of Christ."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 3 '29 220w

"A French Catholic life of Christ. A limpid style clothes but does not conceal the underlying scholarship. But the scholarship busies itself, for the most part, with minutiae and does not touch the more crucial questions."

+ — Christian Century 46:811 Je 19 '29 30w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p1 D 29 '29 400w

St Louis 27:192 Je '29

MARQUIS, DON. Variety of people. 316p $2 Doubleday, Doran

29-22137

A collection of tales on a variety of people and a diversity of subjects, most of them humorous or ironical in tone and content. The Old Soak reappears in a new yarn, and the book concludes with a very moral tale on the vices of a glass-eater.

---

Bookm 70:xxviii D '29 70w

"One has the feeling that all these stories, some running scarcely a thousand words, others longer, are more in the nature of preliminary sketches rather than final editions. They have a wealth of interesting material in them, but the form is often loose and indefinite in its lack of finish. Thus the story of 'The Strong Grasses' is an excellent study that ought to hit the reader much harder than it does. The irony is there, but the emotional quality has not wholly been gained; the sketch seems wordy."

— Boston Transcript p5 N 13 '29 200w

"Some of the stories are mildly funny, two are very funny, several are very sentimental, and at least one, the allegory of the Greek boy, very dull indeed. Mr. Marquis is at his best in the story of the glass eater. . . Some of the stories seem needlessly prolonged, being woven of none too heavy material in the first place and strung out to magazine length."

— + N Y Times p7 O 20 '29 350w

"Comedy and roaring farce rub elbows with tragic tales in which human hearts are really wrung and bled. Some of the stories included will not add to the author's fame, but some will. 'The Strong Grasses' is a notable short story."

+ — N Y World p11m D 1 '29 250w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 153:350 O 30 '29 80w

Sat R of Lit 6:623 Ja 4 '30 280w

Springf'd Republican p10 N 22 '29 180w

MARRIOTT, SIR JOHN ARTHUR RANSOME. How England is governed (Eng title How we are governed). (World's manuals) 110p il $1.25 (2s 6d) Oxford

354.42 Great Britain—Politics and government 29-26158

A brief popular handwork of British political institutions. "The audience that is addressed comprises 'beginners of all ages from fifteen to fifty,' and for them Sir John offers first a description of the Parliament buildings and other government offices at Westminster, and then a sketch of the organization and work of the various governmental departments and bureaus. Both local and national institutions are included, and there is just enough of history to show where the political roots began and how they grew."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

---

Am Pol Sci R 23:228 F '29 60w

"It is elementary and uncritical description, but it will be valuable for those who wish to learn the outstanding characteristics of the British system without prolonged or intensive study." B. W. West

Ann Am Acad 143:385 My '29 90w

Booklist 25:233 Mr '29

"For those who want a quick and readable survey of the British political machinery shorn of technicalities and minor details nothing more useful than this little book could well be desired. Naturally, there is nothing in such a manual to challenge controversy, and nothing that is new except the skillful form of presentation."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Mr 3 '29 280w

St Louis 26:376 D '28

"Considering the reputation of this series and of the present contributor to it, we find this little book disappointing. No one, except the printer, appears to have taken much trouble here: we get the impression of a lump of pabulum dished up anyhow for consumption by an undiscriminating public."

— Sat R 146:272 S 1 '28 400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p555 Jl 26 '28 70w

MARSHALL, ARCHIBALD. Simple people. 159p il $2 Brentano's [7s 6d Harrap]

[28-28364]

"Like Stephen Leacock's nonsense it is a book to be read aloud. Its subjects are varied: English monks, policemen, chivalric knights, plumbers and butlers talking and acting with suspicious naivete; a Centaur who studied at Oxford; a good fairy at work in a girls' boarding school, and many others equally absurd. . . The illustrations by George Morrow are as whimsical and charming as the stories themselves."—Boston Transcript

---

Booklist 25:360 Je '29

"Once before, and with great success, Archibald Marshall abandoned his usual style for sprightly and entertaining nonsense. 'Simple People,' the second deviation from his studies of English country life, is as amusing and cleverly written as 'Simple Stories.' The book proves that Mr. Marshall is greater in his recreation than in his study; it has a delicate touch that his works usually lack."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 13 '29 180w

Cleveland Open Shelf p56 Ap '29

"The grave, breathless earnestness of the imagined child narrator is always perfectly natural; and Mr. Marshall never yields to the temptation of facetiousness or 'uplift.' Mr. Morrow's illustrations are inimitable." R. E. Roberts

+ New Statesman 32:supxxii D 1 '28 90w

"Mr. Marshall's humor lies chiefly in the naive gravity of his style. The effect is amusing enough to produce an occasional smile, although there is not an audible laugh in all the series."

+ — N Y Times p9 My 12 '29 220w

"These things are as light as thistledown, perfectly inconsequential, unsalted by wit—just smileful nonsense. Moreover, that prose seems to us very charming of its sort."
+ N Y World p11m Ap 28 '29 260w

Reviewed by Gerald Gould
Sat R 146:300 S 8 '28 600w

MARSHALL, EDISON. Fish hawk. 290p il $2 Cosmopolitan bk.
29-7494

"In which Kris Nansen, captain of the halibut trawler Chelsea, in Alaskan waters, superpatriot and no slouch with the women, wins an American victory over a set of Russian fiends intent upon using the Aleutian Islands for a Soviet coup d'etat."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 My 5 '29 110w

"A gruesome as well as an exciting scene. The mystery itself is handled with considerable ingenuity."
+ Boston Transcript p5 My 11 '29 150w

"The book is concerned fundamentally with the glorification of American manhood, particularly of Scandinavian descent, at the expense, of course, of the Russian bear. The author has enlivened the tale with melodramatic fireworks in plenty."
N Y Times p24 Je 9 '29 300w

"The story does not amount to much, and its author has never done worse."
— N Y World p11m Ap 7 '29 80w
Springf'd Republican p7e S 1 '29 230w

MARSTON, WILLIAM MOULTON. Emotions of normal people. (Int. lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 405p $5.50 Harcourt
157 Emotions. Psychology, Physiological
28-27972

"Professor Marston's work is based on a large experimental program including several ingenious methods of recording the physiological accompaniments of emotion. These include both the introspective and the experimental records in the presence of so complicated situations as the dramatic moments of motion pictures, as well as records of students in actual situations from love-making to the exuberant customs of college life. . . The keynote of Professor Marston's solution is to regard as the two great orders of emotion dominance and compliance. In the one case we command, in the other obey; in the one rule, and in the other are ruled; in the one insist, in the other yield; and it is this opposite pattern that he regards as implying equally an opposite physiological process. Here lies the essential component of character: howwe dispose of our dominant and how of our compliant impulses."—Sat R of Lit

Booklist 25:268 Ap '29

Reviewed by J. S. Temple
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 F 17 '29 300w

"It is a book that gives evidence of deep and careful consideration on the part of the author; the conclusions are never the result of hasty judgment nor of overstrained speculation and those interested in the 'new psychology' will find it worth their while to read it." G. R. B. R.
Boston Transcript p2 D 29 '29 350w
Pratt p7 summer '29
St Louis 27:124 Ap '29

"Mr. Marston has written a very stimulating book. He has thrown down challenges which many may consider outrageous. There is no reason why anyone should take them up; but we can all be grateful to him for having thrown them down at a time when objective methods reduce imaginative speculation to a minimum." R. G. R.
+ Sat R 147:48 Ja 12 '29 1150w

"Professor Marston offers a notable contribution to the psychology of emotion." Joseph Jastrow
+ Sat R of Lit 5:978 My 4 '29 500w
Times [London] Lit Sup p270 Ap 4 '29 1200w

MARTIN, A. RICHARD. Death of the claimant. 316p $2 McBride [3s 6d Methuen]
29-7497

"Lord Thameslade, after being unfortunate to the point of scandal in his matrimonial experiments, is ready to adventure again. A Russian exile is eager to share the adventure, but suddenly, out of a blue sky, comes doubt about his lordship's right to his barony and estates. A man, believed to be the claimant, is found with his brains blown out, in company with another corpse, on Hampstead Heath, and the next heir but one to the peerage is arrested for murder."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"Once before Branders Noble solved a baffling mystery, the Cassiodore Case, and no one who followed his procedure in untangling the clues to that puzzle will be disappointed in his efforts to elucidate this later riddle."
+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 3 '29 280w

"The usual amateur detective keeps information up his sleeve, and the usual confidant makes a fool of himself in the Watson manner. There is, of course, a Russian adventuress. Also a wild but honourable young man who is wrongfully accused, while the real murderer is kept in the background until the last moment. That we cannot guess his identity is due to the author's lack of scruple rather than his ingenuity, and the climax holds no reward for our efforts to follow the complicated plot."
— Nation and Ath 44:724 F 23 '29 80w
N Y Times p26 Mr 17 '29 200w

"A story of frustrated intrigues and blighted hopes which is, however, not without its lighter moments."
Times [London] Lit Sup p188 Mr 7 '29 120w

MARTIN, ABE, pseud. See Hubbard, F.M.

MARTIN, ASA EARL. History of the United States; v 1, 1783-1865. 806p $3.28 (16s 6d) Ginn
973 United States—History (28-25440)

The volume begins with the establishment of the independence of the United States and ends with 1865, stressing the growth of democracy and nationality and the development of the West. This is the first volume of a two-volume text book on the national period.

"Professor Martin is an impartial chronicler and cautious commentator. He steadfastly refuses to sit in judgment on men, motives, or measures. Where he does venture to fix responsibility or apportion praise and blame (as in the case of the Mexican War, p. 499), his decision is carefully hedged about by qualifying clauses. To many teachers this hesitation of the author to inject his own convictions into the discussion will seem wholly admirable. It does, however, leave the narrative less stimulating to the reader. In format the volume is attractive, though the division of the chapters into extremely short sections, which will probably be welcomed by the average undergraduate, tends to make the narrative appear more 'choppy' than it actually is." J: A. Krout
+ — Am Hist R 34:609 Ap '29 700w

"The English reader who is no specialist will find this a useful and trustworthy compendium. The opening chapters are rather heavy reading, but the story begins to be interesting with the account of the 1787 Convention and the character sketches of Washington's Cabinet. As soon as we approach the Civil War the narrative goes with a swing. The tone of the book is free from spreadeagleism."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p686 S 5 '29 230w

MARTIN, AYLWIN L. The gambler. 350p $2 Crowell

29-5217

The highly romantic story, lavish in setting and style, of a gambler of old New Orleans and the girl he loved and would make his wife, despite the taint in her blood.

"Searching for fair words to greet a budding author, one may perhaps congratulate Mr. Martin on having got this undeniably dire production off his chest. 'The Gambler' cannot in truth be said to show the traditional promise of a first novel; its author, however, is unlikely to err any worse in the future—a situation not without its bright side."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 My 12 '29 80w

"A first novel with very definite promise of better things to come. . . Mr. Martin can and undoubtedly will do far better once his technique becomes less uneven and his knowledge of people deepens with experience."

+ — Boston Transcript p2 My 1 '29 230w

Outlook 151:556 Ap 3 '29 30w

MARTIN, CHARLES EMANUEL. Politics of peace. (Stanford bks. in world politics) 458p $4 Stanford univ. press

909.82 World politics. Political science—History. Peace 29-8524

"The author wastes no time over the theoretical 'essentials of civilization.' Rather does he study concrete constitutionalism in the United States, England, and France; analyze the forces of individualism, collectivism, nationalism, imperialism, militarism, as at work in many countries and among many peoples; survey Bolshevism, Fascism, Americanization, Mexican nationalism, British imperialism, American imperialism in the Philippines, Latin America, and the Far East; study war in the light of the League of Nations, the mandate system, and the Briand-Kellogg pact; note the political and social trends of the time, and forecast the new tasks and new achievements of civilization."—Nation

Am Pol Sci R 23:790 Ag '29 80w

"Curious volume to be published by a university press."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Je 23 '29 100w

"His chapter on Bolshevism struck me as inadequate and distorted—never once did it penetrate to the heart of that most amazing and baffling of contemporary phenomena. To consider India, as Mr. Martin does, with only the most casual reference to Gandhi, seemed to me as remarkable as to discuss the outlawry of war with no mention at all of S. O. Levinson. But Mr. Martin's study of Fascism is admirable; his chapter on Mexico a clear and on the whole a just survey of a highly complicated problem; his story of American imperialism, the best we have seen; his analysis and defense of the Briand-Kellogg treaty, almost wholly excellent; and his closing chapter on the New Internationalism, a masterpiece of constructive thinking." J: H. Holmes

+ — Nation 128:719 Je 12 '29 720w

Reviewed by W: MacDonald

N Y Times p11 S 1 '29 1300w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw

R of Rs 80:12 Ag '29 200w

"He has covered so broad a field that time after time it has been necessary to cram into a brief chapter material which might well be a book in itself. The result is that homeless wanderer of the literary world—an excellent book addressed to no conceivable audience. This is not to quarrel with what is in the book. It may be repeated that the material is excellent and the presentation no less so. The difficulty is simply that the degree of concentration is so great that anybody who can follow Professor Martin through the first 336 pages of this work must already have been sufficiently familiar with the field to follow the remainder of the argument without reading the first part of the book at all." H: K. Norton

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:1113 Je 15 '29 330w

MARTIN, CHESTER B. Empire and commonwealth; studies in governance and self-government in Canada. 385p $5 (21s) Oxford

971 Canada—History. Canada—Politics and government [29-15655]

"Professor Martin's book covers three successive phases of evolution: the first British Empire, all but ended by the American Revolution; the second Empire; and its passing into the third phase of a Commonwealth of Nations. The only British legislature in North America to survive the American Revolution is that of Nova Scotia, and two of the six long chapters deal with its growth into control of its own affairs. The chapters on 'The Old Colonial System' and 'New Subjects in Quebec' are fully documented and form a valuable addition to the literature of the American Revolution. Professor Martin's two concluding chapters explain the older Canada's passage from colonial to dominion status and liberty, and also some anomalies in the present British Commonwealth."—Am Pol Sci R

"Excellent example of painstaking research, careful weighing of evidence, and judicious presentation of conclusions. . . Some of the minor defects noted may perhaps in part be attributable to the author's method of approach." Paul Knaplund

+ — Am Hist R 34:829 Jl '29 320w

Reviewed by G: M. Wrong

Am Pol Sci R 23:752 Ag '29 330w

"Professor Martin's work, covering a wide range of colonial development, represents extensive research and a mellowed maturity of judgment. . . This 'study' is a significant contribution to the story of the evolution of Canadian political institutions." D. McArthur

+ Canadian Hist R 10:153 Je '29 1050w

"Masterly contribution to Canadian political literature." J. A. Stevenson

+ Current Hist 31:825 Ja '30 1200w

"Much of the gratitude which this volume seems certain to earn will be for its graceful authority of composition, the product, as it must always be, of matured thinking and judgment. . . It is perhaps true that occasionally this volume is too compact or allusive for any but the initiate student of Canadian history, but for most of the book the style and unity are so easy and illuminating, and the thesis so convincing, that either the last will bridge the occasional gap or the reader will willingly turn to books of reference."

+ Hist Outlook 20:349 N '29 950w

"A valuable study of the development of Canada from the old Imperialism along the road of responsible government to membership of the British Commonwealth which is composed of equal self-governing nations."

+ Spec 142:289 F 23 '29 600w

"From the manifold notes to the book it is evident that the writer has read very widely and has taken full advantage of the increasing stores of correspondence which are being made available for those who study the history of Canada; and in Mr. Chester Martin's case with immense research is coupled marked originality of thought, with the result that he has produced a work which is in a high degree suggestive and stimulating."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p283 Ap 11 '29 1500w

MARTIN, DAHRIS BUTTERWORTH. Fatma was a goose; Tunis tales. 195p il $2 Doubleday, Doran

29-26790

Fatma was a goose, an Arabian goose who lived in Tunisia and had a great adventure with a camel, a coach, and an antique statue, and then because of her great luck she enjoyed peace for the rest of her days. Fatma's story, with nine other stories of Arabia, make up this book for boys and girls.

Booklist 26:38 O '29

"Miss Martin knows her Tunis from within, and she has collected these little folk stories—such stories as are told to Arab children by Arab mothers—from her Arabian friends in Kairouan. She retells them with simplicity and a true sense of fun; and I can hardly imagine a western child, between (say) the ages of five and ten, who would not be the happier for meeting Fatma, the little goose, as she rides forth on the hump of Sidi, the good old camel, to visit Tunis Town and the glorious Palace of the Bey!" L. W. Dodd

+ Sat R of Lit 6:47 Ag 10 '29 400w

MARTIN, MRS HELEN (REIMENSNYDER). Wings of healing. 301p $2 Dodd

29-2969

Dr Eichler nurses a bitter grudge against Hal Foltz and his wife. His attempt to punish their daughter for the sins of the parents results, however, in a complete breakdown of his scheme before the childlike love and trust of the young girl he has married.

"This season Mrs. Martin trifles dangerously with her fans since her central characters, though resident in the charmed Mennonite country, are rather distantly removed from the soil; they speak in flowery prose and toss a deal of literary erudition about the place—though to be sure, the books are part of the plot."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Mr 17 '29 110w

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 17 '29 360w

"There is no doubt that Helen Martin is a born story teller. Otherwise she could never have made the incredible plot of 'Wings of Healing' so readable as she has done. It is little short of astounding that a popular writer should have seen fit to spend her talents on a plot of this description."

— + N Y Times p37 Mr 17 '29 180w

Pratt p41 summer '29

"Few of her people are human; the plot is essentially unconvincing. And yet if we have nothing better to do, we can read 'Wings of Healing' with but little discomfort."

— + Sat R of Lit 5:863 Ap 6 '29 80w

MARTIN, KINGSLEY. French liberal thought in the eighteenth century; a study of political ideas from Bayle to Condorcet. (Lib. of European political thought) 313p $4.50 Little [16s Benn]

320.9 Political science—History. Philosophy, French. Liberalism [29-21919]

An account of the French Liberal thought of the eighteenth century which "begins with a sketch of the reign of Louis XIV. to show why, as a reaction from despotism, there came a demand for liberty. He traces the development of the philosophers under the inefficient rule of Louis XV. and then discusses their doctrines from Bayle to Condorcet." (Spec)

"Much sound reasoning goes with the presentation of history in this book. Especially informing is its setting forth of the meanings which such words as liberty, equality and fraternity had to those men of the eighteenth century who so amply dowered the nineteenth with the social creed that has come to be called liberalism." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p7 O 26 '29 650w

"Mr. Kingsley Martin has produced a really masterly book. His knowledge of eighteenth-century thought appears to be encyclopædic. His political and philosophical sympathies are apparent, but he contrives to maintain at the same time a balance of impartiality and objectivity without which a writer of this kind of book must soon flounder into futility. Above all, his mind is alive to the present as well as to the past." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 45:434 Je 29 '29 1300w

Reviewed by Christopher Hollis

Sat R 148:160 Ag 10 '29 320w

"The political ideas that helped to bring about the French Revolution have often been studied, but their variety and significance are emphasized afresh in Mr. Kingsley Martin's carefully written volume. . . Books like this remind the reader that politicians seldom have any really new cry: the philosophers of long ago have always anticipated them."

+ Spec 143:289 Ag 31 '29 150w

"Mr. Martin's book is in form an academic treatise, a learned investigation of the movement of political thought in France during the last century of the old regime. But it has qualities, besides its accuracy and reasonableness, which will commend it to other readers than the specialist."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p644 Ag 22 '29 700w

MARTIN, STUART. Only seven were hanged. 262p $2 Harper

29-10298

At a meeting of the Clue Club the waiter, who is an escaped convict, dopes all the members except the judge. Then the waiter plays a game with the judge in which he tries to prove the injustice of capital punishment. The waiter wins that game but is caught by a craftier man when he attempts to make his escape.

"While the setting of this story is wild and improbable, the theme is novel."

Bookm 69:xxvi Je '29 100w

"This carping critic found 'Only Seven Were Hanged' lacking in some of the finer points, such as horse sense, sustained interest and profound brainwork in matter and manner. The little case histories themselves, without the goofy connective tissue, are not bad." Will Cuppy

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 My 12 '29 110w

"Even the poorest detective story enthusiast will find himself puzzled and more than interested to know what really happens."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 22 '29 200w

"The last two chapters are dramatic, but it is to be feared that the average reader's patience will be exhausted before he reaches them."

— + N Y Times p24 My 19 '29 250w

MARTIN, WILLIAM. Statesmen of the war in retrospect, 1918-1928. 329p il $5 Minton [18s Jarrolds]

923.2 Statesmen. European war, 1914-1918—Biography 28-25068

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

"The book is written in a very interesting style and with a thorough understanding of the figures and events of the period. It is not merely another book in the great flood of post-war literature, but a volume which has a distinctive value because of its general fair-mindedness and keenness of interpretation."

+ Am Pol Sci R 23:232 F '29 200w

Booklist 26:29 O '29

"The fact that ten years of peace have not availed to alter Mr. Martin's opinions by one iota suggests that his views are propagandist rather than critical." J: Carter

Bookm 68:579 Ja '29 120w

"The reader who has kept fairly well abreast of what may be called the personality literature of the World War will not find much in the book that is new. What Mr. Martin has to tell, on the other hand, is well written, the clarity and liveliness of French style serve him well, and incidents are abundant. To those readers who have been too busy getting over the war to read much about it, and who now feel able to evaluate Mr. Martin's judgments and prepossessions with a reasonably cold mind, the book may be cordially commended." W: MacDonald

+ — Nation 128:432 Ap 10 '29 520w

Reviewed by Preston Slosson

Pol Sci Q 44:451 S '29 1000w

MARTIN, WILLIAM—Continued

St Louis 27:99 Mr '29

"These sketches are examples of competent and dispassionate journalistic writing, but at this date add little to our understanding of the figures portrayed."

+ — Springf'd Republican p12 Jl 10 '29 550w

World Tomorrow 12:236 My '29 20w

MARTINEZ SIERRA, GREGORIO. Kingdom of God, and other plays; in English versions with an introd. by Helen and Harley Granville-Barker. reissue 297p $2 Dutton

862 29-26482

"In the 'Kingdom of God,' Mr. Sierra traces through a period of sixty years the pilgrimage of a girl who dedicates her life to gods not necessarily ours. The first scene is the entrance into the Cloister. Ten years pass, and the girl refuses earthly love to devote her life to the unfortunates in a maternity home. Forty years more pass; the nun is an old woman, no longer torn by earthly conflicts, who presides over an orphanage. Sierra really tries to get into other people's skin and at the same time to produce an objective design."—Nation and Ath

---

"The play is, perhaps, almost too 'beautiful.' Still you go away feeling that Sierra is worth all the boulevardiers put together, so far does a little sensibility throw its beams in this naughty world. And if the sensibility sometimes descends into sentimentality, well, that is a fault with difficulty avoided by the author, and somewhat exaggerated by the producer." Francis Birrell

— + Nation and Ath 42:184 N 5 '27 330w

Reviewed by Stark Young

New Repub 57:245 Ja 16 '29 1650w

MARTINEZ ZUVIRIA, GUSTAVO A. (HUGO WAST, pseud.). Peach blossom; tr. from the Spanish by Herman and Miriam Hespelt. 300p $2 (7s 6d) Longmans

[29-6854]

A triangular story set in the mountain farmlands of the Argentine already made familiar by this author. Rina, an innocent and childlike heroine, is betrothed to Fabian, of peasant blood like herself, and is betrayed by Don Miguel. She goes to the city and struggles to make a living for herself and her child, but failing, returns to her mountain home. Fabian marries her and accepts the child, but waits for a day of reckoning with the insolent Miguel.

---

Bookm 69:xxiii My '29 170w

"The characters are artfully conceived and the English version reads smoothly and simply, as befits the material."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Mr 17 '29 110w

"Told with clear, humorless simplicity, a little stiff in the translation. The character of a rough, kindly old peasant priest lingers longest in the memory."

Cleveland Open Shelf p77 My '29

"The story is told simply and tenderly, with an old-fashioned, rather naive insistence on rural virtues and urban vices. . . There is one very interesting, well-drawn character, Padre Rochero, the kindly priest."

N Y Times p7 Mr 17 '29 480w

" 'Peach Blossom' is a thematic story dealing with the injustice of the moral relations between rich people and the peasant class. From the standpoint of narrative it is slow-moving and uninteresting, but as an abstract philosophical discussion of the question it is not entirely without merit. It has a slight intellectual appeal but practically none to the emotions. The dialogue is also stilted and forced." Milton Byron

— + Outlook 151:429 Mr 13 '29 110w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 21 '29 160w

Times [London] Lit Sup p316 Ap 18 '29 170w

Wis Lib Bul 25:103 Mr '29

MARTYN, WYNDHAM. Death fear. 326p $2 McBride

29-20438

"John Addison, prominent New York financier, is beset by a nameless fear that he will explain to no one. After an attack on his life the police are thrown off the scent; but Anthony Trent, millionaire sportsman and amateur criminologist, is not fooled. He starts an investigation, in the midst of which Addison disappears. Undismayed, Trent digs deeper and finally locates both the missing man and the would-be murderer."—Bookm

---

Bookm 70:xxxiii O '29 60w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 O 6 '29 120w

"It is a pity that the author has not been able to make the story more convincing. He tells us that Anthony Trent is a wonder, but he does not quite make us believe it."

— N Y Times p32 O 6 '29 180w

MARTYN, WYNDHAM. Murder Island. 305p $2 McBride

28-28362

"A mysterious English millionaire, Mr. Artee, buys an inaccessible island off the coast of Maine, renames it Murder Island, and invites an oddly assorted lot of guests to the house he builds there. He tells his guests ghost stories and some of them are murdered."—Sat R of Lit

---

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 16 '29 300w

N Y Times p30 D 9 '28 250w

"This is a dull, naïve, and very transparent mystery. If you haven't guessed most of it by page 40 the chances are you're not getting enough sleep."

— Sat R of Lit 5:591 Ja 12 '29 80w

Spec 142:755 My 11 '29 60w

Times [London] Lit Sup p365 My 2 '29 180w

MARVIN, FRANCIS SYDNEY. Modern world. 320p $1.35 (3s 6d) Longmans

940.2 Europe—History 29-15352

A succinct account of the history of Europe from 1815 to the first meeting of the League of nations in 1920.

---

"The Modern World is to be commended as a simple, elementary review of European development from 1789 to 1920." W. C. L.

+ Hist Outlook 20:307 O '29 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p462 Je 13 '29 550w

MARVIN, FRANCIS SYDNEY, and CLUTTON-BROCK, A. F., eds. Art and civilization; essays. (Unity ser.) 263p il $4.75 (12s 6d) Oxford

704 Art. Civilization [29-12732]

"This book is the eighth volume in the valuable 'Unity Series.' The present volume, like the others, envisages its subject not as a series of isolated phenomena in different countries at different periods, but as a growing force in the world from prehistoric times, its various national or continental movements arising out of and influencing each other. This has been borne in mind by the contributors."—Nation and Ath

---

Reviewed by C: Moore

Am Hist R 35:149 O '29 280w

Am J Soc 35:525 N '29 70w

Boston Transcript p7 Je 22 '29 380w

"Both editors and contributors are to be congratulated on the successful accomplishment of a task which was not made easier by the immense width of its scope and by the new point of view from which it was approached. They have brought to it a scholarly knowledge, an enthusiasm, a freshness of conception which make the book a very valuable addition to the literature of art and of history."

+ Nation and Ath 45:280 My 25 '29 580w

"The thirteen essays that make up the book differ widely in scale, outlook, and even in relevance. Clearly it is no use attempting to regard the book as a collective statement of a single idea; one must judge the separate contributions on their own merits, which vary."
New Statesman 32:766 Mr 23 '29 630w

"Considered as a whole, the panorama of art as here unfolded is a bit lacking in relief. It likewise seems that the light of genuine creative insight flashes but fitfully across these pages. It is, in fact, only discernible when Mr. G. Elliott Smith elucidates the early struggles of our weird little arboreal progenitors for that more extended visual area and greater measure of muscular control which constitutes artistic activity in its incipiency. And again when Professor Strzygowski causes the Middle Ages to pulsate with that aspiration which was to expand into the full radiance of the modern world." Christian Brinton
— + Sat R of Lit 6:75 Ag 24 '29 750w
Spec 142:sup383 Mr 9 '29 620w
Times [London] Lit Sup p321 Ap 25 '29 3400w
World Tomorrow 12:425 O '29 70w

MARYE, GEORGE THOMAS. Nearing the end in imperial Russia. 479p il $4 Dorrance

947.08 Russia—History. European war, 1914-1918—Russia 29-14657

"Mr. Marye was appointed Ambassador to Russia just before the outbreak of the World War and took up his duties in what was then St. Petersburg, after delays in departure and a roundabout and interrupted journey, at the end of October, 1914. He remained there until his resignation in March, 1916. This book contains his account of what he saw and did and heard—especially heard—during the sixteen months of his service as American Ambassador. It is published just as he jotted down the narrative of seeings, doings and hearings soon after each event and the story is therefore told much in detail."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p4 Jl 17 '29 830w

"One claim to permanent interest that must be accorded to Mr. Marye's book is the view that he gives of Emperor Nicholas in the last months of his power, a much more sympathetic and admirable picture than any one else has painted of him. The impression that he made on the Ambassador at the latter's first audience was most favorable."
+ N Y Times p4 Ag 18 '29 830w

MASEFIELD, JOHN. Hawbucks. 336p $2.50 Macmillan [7s 6d Heinemann]

29-22433

Concerns George Childrey, second son of a country family who is called home from seven years' wandering in foreign fields to take over the family estates after the death of his older brother. George falls in love with the local belle, and when he finds that she prefers his younger brother, tries to break his own neck while on the hunting field. In the end he marries the girl's illegitimate half-sister.

Bookm 70:560 Ja '30 260w

"It is somewhat of a surprise to find that John Masefield has written a distinctly commonplace book in his latest piece of prose fiction. 'The Hawbucks' seems to this reviewer to lack any of the qualities that so frequently give distinction to poets' novels." Herschel Brickell
— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 N 10 '29 900w
Boston Transcript p1 D 28 '29 500w
Nation 130:50 Ja 8 '30 180w

"The admirable thing about Mr. Masefield is that he is not at pains to be anything in particular. His novel, dull though it is, has a sort of grace and carriage that no book by Mr. Hemingway or Mr. Bates will ever possess so long as the chief anxiety of the one is to be inartistic, and of the other to be so desperately artistic." L. L. Irvine
+ — Nation and Ath 46:320 N 30 '29 250w
New Repub 61:177 Ja 1 '30 230w

"It seems to me probable that in this Mr. Masefield has written not only the best novel but also the best book of his whole career. . . I feel inclined to prophesy that when its author's more solemn and ambitious works have sunk to be no more than items in the history of literature like Blair's Grave and Young's Night Thoughts, this will be revived by enthusiasts and loved for its own sake." E. S.
+ New Statesman 34:193 N 16 '29 1100w

"More than anything else does the novel remind one of old tapestries, with horse and hound and stag (except that there are no stags), their motion arrested and their outline worked in color on the two-dimensional background. But the English note, that goes back even to Chaucer, dominates the book, giving to it freshness and originality in an era of oversophistication in fiction. The worth of the book is not in the story, which is negligible, but in its tonic antidote to a surfeit of novels of sex and emotion."
+ — N Y Times p7 N 17 '29 650w

"Masefield has already made more than one readable, even delightful novel out of flimsy material. But in The Hawbucks what he has had to work with has not been sufficiently inspiring, and, for all its sympathetic descriptions of English country life and of fox-hunting and its wonderfully natural dialogue, the novel is pretty dull." F. L. Robbins
— Outlook 153:349 O 30 '29 280w

"It is care-free and irresponsible; its snowdrifts are not fatal; its steeple chase spills result only in a fracture or two; its hearts are too resilient to be broken. . . 'The Hawbucks' is farce, romance, adventure story—but no category quite fits it." L. P. Hartley
Sat R 148:552 N 9 '29 260w

"Besides making very pleasant reading as a narrative, Mr. Masefield has arranged his book to display successive pictures of English country life as it used to be, unadulterated by modern inventions and post-war problems. These pictures seem astonishingly fresh and well done, —perhaps because no one has bothered with such things recently." Theodore Purdy, Jr.
+ Sat R of Lit 6:605 D 28 '29 440w

"Mr. Masefield has written a good brisk story, reeking of the stables and the countryside. His characters are a little over defined, particularly that of the villain." B. E. Todd
+ — Spec 143:641 N 2 '29 200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p868 O 31 '29 500w

MASEFIELD, JOHN. Midsummer night, and other tales in verse. 164p $2 Macmillan [7s 6d Heinemann]

821 28-25079

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

Booklist 25:202 F '29

"Those admirers of Mr. Masefield who still prefer his early poetry to his recent chronicles will discover little here to confirm their affection. At no point does Mr. Masefield enliven the narrative with that potent raciness of idiom which once distinguished his work."
— Bookm 68:xxix F '29 120w

"Masefield really can write spirited ballads. Some of those contained in this book are based on less familiar versions of the old episodes." B. M. K.
+ Cath World 129:377 Je '29 100w
Cleveland Open Shelf p53 Ap '29

" 'The Death of Lancelot,' which is the best poem in the book, is perhaps the only complete poem which is up to Masefield's old standard." T. S. Matthews
— + New Repub 57:329 F 6 '29 450w

MASEFIELD, JOHN—Continued

"These new poems are quite at the level of Mr. Masefield's previous work. A rare beauty runs through the book." H. K.

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 27 '29 620w

Wis Lib Bul 24:343 D '28

"Mr. Masefield has added to the pleasure of all who love the Arthurian faërieland; he has extended its boundaries." V. D. Scudder

+ Yale R n s 18:592 spring '29 720w

MASON, ALFRED BISHOP. Duchess and her daughter. 260p $2.50 Boni

29-6181

"The story, in its first half, tells the history of a beautiful duchess of Valenzuela, and in its second half, brusquely segmented off, the history of her beautiful daughter. Part 1 retails with abandon, and with relish, the various sexual encounters of the duchess. Part 2 goes historical, bringing in John Winthrop, a descendant of Governor Winthrop of Massachusetts and telling of his love for the daughter of Algeria, with honorable marriage foiled only by the Catholic-Protestant persecutions of the day."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

---

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p32 Ap 14 '29 230

Boston Transcript p3 Mr 30 '29 180w

"Unfortunately Mr. Mason's plot is too great for his skill, and he has not been able to write in a manner adequate to the demands of his material." Mildred Adams

— + Nation 128:566 My 8 '29 170w

"Fantastically, yet not unplausibly romantic. . . If the novel lacks the unique quality of 'The Bridge of San Luis Rey,' its human interest is genuine and its tragedy dramatized with skill and sincerity." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 13 '29 100w

"There is no fantasy here, but a series of pictures crisply drawn with enthusiasm and humor, the equivalent of a quick-moving, racy 'costume play.'" Elizabeth Onativia

+ Outlook 151:468 Mr 20 '29 150w

MASON, ARTHUR. Swansea Dan. 249p $2 Cosmopolitan bk. [7s 6d Benn]

29-5950

"From the moment Swansea Dan swaggers into Moran's bar, adventure hovers about his burly shoulders. Dan fears no man, and lets the world know it. As for women, he prefers to take them in his stride. But Peggy, who sings plaintive songs in Moran's bar, has a different scale of values, and Swansea Dan goes to sea without winning her favor. Naturally her image accompanies him through an adventurous voyage. Dan is the central figure in fo'c'sle fights, shipwrecks, South Seas trading, and a perilous return across the Pacific with a reclaimed beachcomber as crew. Contrary to the reader's expectations, Peggy has not waited for him. This finishes Dan."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

---

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 My 12 '29 150w

"The story has a certain inherent strength and vigor. Some of the characters are well drawn. With all its thrills the tale is one that will undoubtedly capture the imagination."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 27 '29 200w

"The reality of life unknown to landsmen salts every page of this simple, dramatic story. The climax of the book is natural and yet unexpectedly dramatic. The story flows as naturally as a river, and the unassuming, objective method of narration lends the succession of adventures in this log of a human life great authenticity." H. C.

+ New Repub 58:262 Ap 17 '29 120w

"Faithfully chronological, the tale is crammed enough with episodes to make easy reading, as is intended, though the author does not take time to strike deep. The reader feels that if he took the pains to write a full book he could breathe life into his people and the settings."

+ — N Y Times p24 Je 9 '29 120w

"None of the beauty of the Pacific Isles is in this book. But the tale is well told and never dull."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p438 My 30 '29 110w

MASON, DANIEL GREGORY. Dilemma of American music, and other essays. 306p $2.50 Macmillan

780.4 Music—Addresses, essays, lectures. Music—History and criticism. Beethoven, Ludwig van. Music—United States 28-28522

The volume as a whole, and the title essay in particular contain a penetrating analysis of the state of musical culture in America. Five of the papers discuss Beethoven.

---

Booklist 25:274 Ap '29

"Throughout the volume the author exhibits the extensive musical scholarship and the sound if somewhat narrowly orthodox taste for which he is distinguished."

Bookm 69:326 My '29 350w

"The manner of Mr. Mason's writing is always vivacious and entertaining; he has a beautiful soundness and sanity, and his direction is always away from the obvious and literal, towards spontaneity and spirit. Whether or not one stands shoulder to shoulder with him in so sweeping a denunciation of the modernists, at least one must acknowledge the book as fascinating reading." C. T. C.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 5 '29 480w

"Dr. Mason is a scholar in music and an artist in style, but he comes near to being a musical fundamentalist. He shows little mercy to the moderns—not even full justice, I think."

+ — Christian Century 46:748 Je 5 '29 80w

"One can sympathize with Mr. Mason's vast discontent. Everything he says about audiences is true. But unfortunately, very little can be done about it; they are the best audiences we have. Everything he says about prima-donna conductors is true. Everything he says about American music is true. He is sometimes inconsistent, chauvinistic, and ultra-conservative, but since he is always stimulating, let us hope that we may soon have occasion to quarrel with him again." Blanche Bloch

+ — Nation 129:227 Ag 28 '29 600w

"Throughout these essays one comes on thoughts and analyses of profound practical value. If the teacher or concert goer can keep from being misled by certain myopic limitations of the author's temperament, he will find much suggestive and stimulating matter." Axton Clark

+ — N Y Times p18 My 19 '29 600w

"It is a collection of interesting and honest papers and will delight serious and argumentative music lovers."

+ Outlook 150:1373 D 19 '28 40w

Pratt p23 summer '29

MASON, FRANCIS CLAIBORNE. This unchanging mask. (Yale ser. of younger poets) 43p $1.25 Yale univ. press [6s 6d Milford]

811 28-29528

Many of the poems in this new volume in the Yale series are portraits in sonnet form.

---

"One of the Yale series of Younger Poets and, to this reviewer, one of the best thus far appearing in the series. Close, intelligent observation of life, particularly of rural scenes and characters and human motives; a meaty mode of expression which packs a great deal in a little space; a philosophic, sympathetic temperament, and a distinctive sense of the lyric—these are its outstanding qualities." C: Divine

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 My 19 '29 180w

"This latest addition to the Yale Series, Francis Claiborne Mason, is in every respect worthy of the privilege bestowed upon him. Not only does he display a technical finish over, something to say and a neat manner of expressing it. His sonnets are particularly good."

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 18 '29 170w

"His real talent for handling words effectively should serve him well when he is less self-conscious."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p166 F 28 '29 80w

MASSON, ELSIE R. Folktales of Brittany; ed. by Amena Pendleton. 191p il $3 Macrae-Smith co.

398 Folklore—Brittany

"Collected and compiled by Madame Elsie Masson of Brittany, these folk tales sing, sigh, or laugh. They come from the jagged coasts or foaming waters, from the melancholy Druid stones, from the happy cottages and farms. They are tales of wonder, magic, and humor." —Sat R of Lit

---

"The book has much in common with [M. Dorey's Three and the Moon], for some of the stories in each one were evidently gathered from the same source material, although the treatment in each case is original enough to make it interesting instead of monotonous. ... The choice of the illustrator was a happy one." O. M. Fuller

+ N Y World p11m N 10 '29 250w

"Madame Masson is French, but she has composed her stories in English. Her best medium, naturally, is her native tongue. The task of Miss Amena Pendleton has been chiefly to clarify Madame Masson's involved style, turning it into graceful, simple English suited to folk tales. Miss Pendleton's residence at different times in France and her translations of French child-classics have fitted her well to edit sympathetically the folk lore of Brittany. And we find here new material for the story teller, as well as romance and legend that will give the young reader intimate glimpses of the Breton folk and land." F. J. Olcott

+ Sat R of Lit 6:401 N 16 '29 230w

MASSON, THOMAS LANSING. Ascensions. 371p [2] $2.50 Century

240 Spiritual life 29-4956

"The fifth of a series of books in which this popular humorist writes seriously and sententiously of the inner life. The first part is whimsically autobiographical; the second part consists of brief and varied comments upon the meaning and the methods of life. Not much more consecutive than the book of Proverbs, and in spots quite as wise."—Christian Century

---

"Such records of spiritual experience are usually interesting. This record certainly is, especially as it possesses the authority of the man that is Mr. Masson."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 20 '29 250w

Christian Century 46:871 Jl 3 '29 70w

Cleveland Open Shelf p120 S '29

St Louis 27:192 Je '29

"Mr Masson would not contend that his essays have value as original contributions to philosophy, but they help to illuminate the problems of religion as these appear to many persons in an age of theological uncertainty and perplexity."

Springf'd Republican p10 D 10 '29 280w

MASTERMAN, WALTER S. Green toad. 304p $2 Dutton [7s 6d Gollancz] 29-9793

The discovery of a man with head severed, sitting in a limousine in a London street leads down a trail blazed with gruesome clues to the house of the evil green toad and its horrible secret. An amateur detective braves the horrors of the house to learn its secret and protect a lovely girl.

---

Bookm 69:xxvi My '29 40w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Ap 21 '29 100w

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 3 '29 250w

N Y Times p16 Je 2 '29 160w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ag 4 '29 150w

MASTERS, EDGAR LEE. Fate of the jury; an epilogue to Domesday book. 173p $2.50 Appleton

811 29-9546

In this epilogue to the trial described in Domesday Book, the seven jurymen tell their stories, thus contributing to the central theme, which is the story of the life and love of the coroner.

---

Booklist 25:386 Jl '29

"Psychologically, and from the point of view of the actual, it is almost wholly admirable: it is simply packed with detail, swarms with real people and real scenes, conquers one's incredulity with the reportorial exactness of a newspaper or a human document. . . Its defects are technical and esthetic. The verse is loose and prosaic. And Mr. Masters still has his old fault of taste when he attempts to be 'poetic.' " Conrad Aiken

+ — Bookm 69:323 My '29 270w

" 'The Fate of the Jury' is not so good as 'Domesday Book,' being neither as dramatic nor as moving, though it is as readable. Cast in blank verse it moves easily with significant casualness through the last thirty years of Merival's life. Its characters are picturesquely vital." F. E. Hill

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Ap 28 '29 1300w

"There are stretches in the narrative of sheer beauty and power, borne on a blank verse rhythm of perfect modulation, in which the mind and emotion of the poet are in rare tempo with the metaphorical elaboration of theme and character; and then something happens, an intellectual excitement overmasters the imagination, figures crowd and tumble upon one another, ideas get out of control, meters slur and halt, and crumble into a prosiness both dull and turgid." W: S. Braithwaite

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Ap 20 '29 1750w

" 'The Fate of the Jury' is interesting reading, an intricate weaving of tale into tale, an account of lesbianism, masochism, and duplicity such as Jeffers himself might, very differently, have used. The blank verse is the best Masters has ever written, and he has denied himself the long passages of personal philosophy which weighted his earlier stories. His touch, which has always been too heavy, is lighter in this poem, and 'The Fate of the Jury' is, therefore, a better narrative than 'Domesday Book.' " E. L. Walton

+ Nation 129:72 Jl 17 '29 680w

Reviewed by Horace Gregory

New Repub 59:322 Ag 7 '29 300w

"The idea prompting the book seems a novel one, another indication of the originality of Mr. Masters; and the working out is attended with some considerable degree of success. Coming as it does coincidently with Edwin Arlington Robinson's 'Cavender's House,' Mr. Masters's 'The Fate of the Jury' is likely to come in for rather idle comparison. Mr. Masters, in the present instance, is more of a preacher, both directly and indirectly, than is Mr. Robinson; and less, far less, of an artist. But in his nervous verse there is that which will appeal more widely than Robinson's calm." P. H.

+ N Y Times p4 Ap 21 '29 930w

"The stories in 'The Fate of the Jury' are tragic, even morbid, just as were those fragments and summaries that make up 'The Spoon River Anthology.' To Masters life in America is usually dark, but he sees something of beauty, and he is manfully loyal to his vision of truth." Granville Hicks

+ — N Y World p7m Je 16 '29 820w

MASTERS, E. L.—Continued

"Masters has a story to tell which is as dramatic, as philosophic, and even fuller than Robinson's. But, poetically, it is feeble and, in the end, vitiating." L: Untermeyer

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:995 My 11 '29 600w

MASTERSON, WILLIAM EDWARD. Jurisdiction in marginal seas, with special reference to smuggling. 423p $5 Macmillan

341.4 Territorial waters. Jurisdiction, Territorial. Smuggling 29-3645

The book is a history of the laws enacted by England and the United States to put a stop to smuggling of contraband or dutiable articles. A later section treats of international aspects of the question—diplomatic correspondence, treaties, international arbitration.

"The first few chapters, summarizing the early history of smuggling laws, are the strongest part of the work. Altogether, the volume has been written in scholarly fashion."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Ap 21 '29 100w

"In every respect this volume contains an 'accurate and comprehensive understanding of the so-called "hovering laws" of today and of their past and present relation to International Law.' The author has made painstaking and voluminous research."

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 4 '29 300w

"Mr. Masterson's book is a timely as well as scholarly addition to the literature on territorial waters. He deserves recognition, not only for making available a great amount of hitherto unpublished documentary evidence relative to the history of smuggling and the early hovering acts, but also for the careful and judicious analysis to which he subjects his material. This volume will certainly be welcomed as supplementing, on the specific problem of smuggling, Professor Jessup's standard treatise on The Law of Territorial Waters." Francis Deák

+ Columbia Law R 29:849 Je '29 560w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 79:8 Je '29 200w

Reviewed by H: S. Fraser
Yale Law J 38:1164 Je '29 950w

MATHEWS, JOHN MABRY. American foreign relations; conduct and policies. (Century political science ser.) 700p $4 Century

327.73 United States—Foreign relations. United States—Constitutional law 28-22564

This book differs from most of the volumes dealing with American foreign affairs in discussing the subject from the viewpoint of political science. Part one is a survey of the principles underlying American foreign policy; part two treats the organization of the government for the conduct of foreign relations, the control exerted by its various branches of the government and the methods of procedure followed. The present work is the outgrowth of a book published in 1922 under the title, "The conduct of American foreign relations."

Reviewed by E: C. Wynne
Am Pol Sci R 23:492 My '29 900w

Reviewed by R. T. Crane
Ann Am Acad 143:375 My '29 110w

"The reviewer regards this as the best single volume on American diplomacy available. It is comprehensive, solid and penetrating. It avoids the error of retailing the history of our foreign relations without adequate attention to the organization and conduct of our diplomacy on one side or the policies which have informed that activity on the other." P. B. Potter

+ — Pol Sci Q 44:464 S '29 680w

MATHEWS, SHAILER. Jesus on social institutions. 158p $1.50 Macmillan

261 Sociology, Christian. Jesus Christ—Teaching 28-24974

A statement, by the dean of the Divinity school, Chicago university, of the social implications of Christianity as laid down in the teaching and example of Jesus.

"The book goes back of the methods and teachings of Jesus to his social psychology. It is a new suggestion and interpretation by a master hand at the subject." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 1 '28 220w

Reviewed by S. G. Cole
Crozer Q 6:129 Ja '29 420w

"The book has a value quite out of proportion to its modest size. On every page we have weighty and far-reading ideas, compressed into few words and yet presented in clear and striking fashion. Dr. Mathews has the great advantage over most theologians and, we may add, most economic and social writers, of coming to his task with a large background of historical knowledge." E. F. Scott

+ J Religion 9:302 Ap '29 730w

"For the correction of a vast amount of misinterpretation of the Gospels it is well worth while that a scholar such as Dean Mathews should bring to bear his expert knowledge of sociology and historical conditions in Palestine in Jesus' time. The present little volume replaces his earlier book, 'The Social Teaching of Jesus,' and marks an advance on the notable works of Peabody, Rauschenbusch, Vedder and Ward." B. W. Bacon

+ New Repub 57:169 D 26 '28 60w

"Dean Mathews makes a significant contribution in pointing out that Jesus cannot be understood without some understanding of the psychology of revolution. Jesus was a revolutionist, an agitator, but one whom no overturning of externals would satisfy. He would re-orient man's inner life. Sincere Christians puzzled about the relationship of their religion to their business life will do well to read this book." E. B. Chaffee

+ Outlook 152:108 My 15 '29 80w

Pratt p9 summer '29

"It is a book small only in size. The author exhibits here again his well-known characteristics of brilliance, insight, and sanity. Every page contains a sentence worth remembering. A thorough acquaintance with the historical background concerned, an appreciation of social environment, and a familiarity with social psychology makes this volume of significance to any who would understand the thought and life and times of Jesus of Nazareth" J. M.

+ Springf'd Republican p10 S 10 '29 600w

Times [London] Lit Sup p367 My 2 '29 150w

MATHIAS, MARGARET E. Art in the elementary school; introd. by Bessie Lee Gambrill. 180p il $2.50 (7s 6d) Scribner

741 Art—Study and teaching. Drawing—Instruction 29-12164

The book outlines a course in art for the elementary school, and is fully illustrated with reproductions of children's work in color and black and white, and with photographs which illustrate the principles laid down in the text.

Boston Transcript p4 Je 29 '29 230w

Cleveland Open Shelf p119 S '29

"Her wide experience in the treatment of art instruction for children has given her an unusual grasp of the question of presenting the difficulties of such problems as perspective, color, design, lettering, and art appreciation."

+ School Arts M 29:ix D '29 140w

"This is an American publication, and the suggestions contained in it are naturally designed to fit into the American educational system. There is, however, a good deal for us to learn from it."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p515 Je 27 '29 220w

MATHIEZ, ALBERT. French revolution; tr. from the French by Catherine Alison Phillips. 509p $5 Knopf [21s Williams & N.]

944.04 France—History—Revolution

28-21810

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

---

"The book is likely to remain for years the standard treatment of the French Revolution."
+ Bookm 68:xiv F '29 150w

"M. Mathiez appears well informed upon his subject; he has handled a considerable mass of detail skilfully, and, on the whole, in an interesting manner. If at times the narrative seems a bit overburdened with French proper names and crowded with rather obscure incidents, we may grant that a volume of this size gives the author opportunity to broaden his subject considerably and to use a considerable amount of monograph material in the body of his text." C. R. Hall
+ Hist Outlook 20:250 My '29 980w

"Professional history strives to satisfy our critical intelligence while scorning to appeal to our esthetic sense. It is science, not art. In the able instance before us, it is certain to win the admiration of college instructors, who will hasten to add M. Mathiez' work to their list of prescribed authorities, but it will not greatly agitate the general reader." Ferdinand Schevill
+ New Repub 57:223 Ja 9 '29 800w

"It is an admirably continuous and well-proportioned piece of work."
+ New Statesman 32:364 D 22 '28 180w

Pratt p32 summer '29

St Louis 27:31 Ja '29

Sat R 148:22 Jl 6 '29 300w

Reviewed by W. C. Abbott
Sat R of Lit 5:679 F 16 '29 800w

"Altogether M. Mathiez' volume is a most valuable contribution to the study of the French revolution."
+ Spec 142:sup387 Mr 9 '29 420w

"M. Mathiez has succeeded in at least two of his objects: for the picture he has drawn is certainly both clear and living. The question of how far M. Mathiez has realized the third of his aims—namely, to be as accurate as possible—is far more disputable. He has approached the study of the Revolution with a strong political bias, which has coloured his whole interpretation of it."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p975 D 13 '28 1200w

MATSON, NORMAN HAGHEJM. Doctor Fogg. 165p $2 Macmillan

29-16770

Doctor Fogg was a queer scientist. He was experimenting with radio in Chicago when he produced a girl from another planet. In so doing he disturbed all the local radios, so he retired to an island off the coast of Maine. There he received messages from the surrounding stars which he proceeded to decipher. But people and publicity made his life so miserable that he decided to keep only the girl.

---

" 'Doctor Fogg' is a rollicking satire with something of H. G. Wells's flair for Utopias. Punctuating the story, as if from behind the scenes, comes a deeply impersonal, jovial laughter."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ag 25 '29 450w

Boston Transcript p3 S 7 '29 180w

"Not since H. G. Wells wrote 'When the Sleeper Wakes' has there been a scientific satire as edged with convincing detail and social accuracy as this astral extravaganza by the author of 'Flecker's Magic.' His book is written with a fine accuracy, and, most rare in 'scientific fiction,' with real literary beauty and a firm sense of character." J: Carter
+ N Y Times p9 Ag 25 '29 1400w

"You will enjoy Dr. Fogg if you like to find witty comment upon our civilization concealed in a diverting story. But if you have no taste for exploring the Einsteinian regions where time and space meet and whirl, you had better leave him alone."
+ Outlook 152:670 Ag 21 '29 220w

"Dull, pretentious, pointless—the story drags on until its less than two hundred pages seem like four or five hundred. Mr. Matson fatuously believes that he is satirical, very amusing, very penetrating. He is nothing of the sort, being simply ambitious far beyond his evident powers."
— Sat R of Lit 6:608 D 28 '29 200w

Springf'd Republican p7e O 27 '29 180w

MATSUSHITA, MASATOSHI. Japan in the League of nations. (Studies in hist., economics and public law) 175p $3 Columbia univ. press [12s P. S. King]

341.1 Japan—Foreign relations. League of nations 29-23373

A statement by a Japanese dealing with Japan's connection with the League of nations. The first chapter discusses Japan's part in establishing the League; this is followed by a detailed discussion of Japanese participation in its activities; the final section takes up Japan's interest in the League; its publicity value and the question of race equality.

---

"Deserves recognition, not simply for its 'publicity value'—the phrase coined by the author to define the fundamental bond which retains Japan in the organized world community—but also because of its frank realism. The last chapter, 'Japan's Interest in the League,' sums up admirably that enlightened egoism which, independently of the Anglo-Saxon ethical approach to world problems, makes the League sure of success to-day."
+ Spec 143:499 O 12 '29 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p727 S 19 '29 170w

MATTHEWS, WILLIAM F. Bookbinding; a manual for those interested in the craft of bookbinding. 252p il $2.75 Dutton [7s 6d Gollancz]

686 Bookinding [29-16251]

A manual on bookbinding for students and amateurs, which contains many diagrams of processes and tools, a glossary of technical terms, and photographs of elaborate tooled bindings.

---

Booklist 26:58 N '29

"As a source of information for style and exactness, this manual is exceptionally well laid out. The art of binding from the early ages down to the present day is discussed and explained with unusual clarity. All the actual details of the several methods are shown. A most practical handbook for the student."
+ Bookm 70:xiv S '29 60w

Boston Transcript p3 S 7 '29 90w

Times [London] Lit Sup p559 Jl 11 '29 130w

MATTHIESSEN, FRANCIS OTTO. Sarah Orne Jewett. 160p il $3 Houghton

B or 92 Jewett, Sarah Orne 29-9532

Written with a quiet and balance suited to its subject this brief biography brings out all that is essential in the life of the author of the "Country of the pointed firs" and in its critical estimate of her work places her next Emily Dickinson—"the two principal women writers America has had."

---

Booklist 25:358 Je '29

"Mr. Matthiessen's discussion of his subject is neither sentimentalized nor overexacting. His tone is distinguished and civilized, as Miss Jewett would have wished it to be. Though his book is hardly more than an essay, it is an essay which defines the essence of American literature in the last quarter of the nineteenth century. Altogether a valuable addition to American literary criticism and one that establishes its author firmly among those critics that deserve to be read." Dorothy Van Doren

MATTHIESSEN, F. O:—Continued
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ap 14 '29 630w

"This life of Miss Jewett offers rare theme and inspiration for the biographer, and Mr. Matthiessen shows excellent judgment in placing her, as she did her stories, always in the heart of her environment." E. F. Edgett
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 6 '29 1400w

"Mr. Matthiessen excellently analyzes and communicates the flavor of her work, and his appreciation sends us back again to Miss Jewett's books themselves—something much to be desired. Only occasionally, in his literary judgments, does Mr. Matthiessen cause disagreement." Theodore Spencer
+ New Repub 59:48 My 22 '29 420w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 20 '29 250w
N Y Times p23 My 12 '29 850w

"Prof. Matthiessen has written an admirably balanced, sympathetic and illuminating account of Miss Jewett's work. He provides not only the necessary facts of her biography, but the indispensable materials for a criticism. He also writes a critique himself which is very discerning." C. H. Grattan
+ N Y World p10m Ap 21 '29 450w

"This short and interesting biography is direct and appreciative. Its author has learned to know Miss Jewett's country as well as her work and he confines himself to giving an objective picture of her life and setting."
+ Outlook 151:626 Ap 17 '29 220w

"An attractively written biography of a New England writer whose work had a fine distinction and who was herself a favorite figure in the social life of Boston during the entire last quarter of the 19th century." Lilian Whiting
+ Springf'd Republican p7e Je 23 '29 1500w
Times [London] Lit Sup p1037 D 5 '29 420w
Wis Lib Bul 25:160 My '29

MAUGHAM, WILLIAM SOMERSET. Sacred flame; a play in three acts. 187p $2 Doubleday, Doran 822 28-29738

A play in three acts set in modern England. Stella, the young wife of an aviator who has been invalided for life in a crash, has fallen in love with his brother and is to bear him a child. The invalid dies of an overdose of sleeping medicine, and his nurse accuses Stella of murder. At this point her mother-in-law steps in to dominate the situation.

Booklist 25:242 Mr '29

Reviewed by F. R. Bellamy
Outlook 150:1275 D 5 '28 580w

Reviewed by Ivor Brown
Sat R 147:210 F 16 '29 1100w

MAURIAC, FRANCOIS. Desert of love; tr. from the French by Samuel Putnam. 265p $2.50 Covici
29-22131

"M. Mauriac gives us a terrifying picture of a French family. In this family, there is a father who is a physician, and a young schoolboy son, each of whom carries around, within himself, his inescapable 'desert.' Nearby is a woman of the déclassée species. Father and son, each without the other's knowledge, fall under her spell. She conceives a passion for the son, but through a misunderstanding, through the failure of each of them to flee his Sahara, it leads to nothing. Some years later, the three protagonists are hurled together once more. But the sands are now blinding; and the father, a weakened old man, goes off to die. The son, long since a hardened debauché, goes off, not to die but to live. At the end there glows the faint but gentle light, somewhere, of something beyond life, something beyond the vast encompassing desert."—Publisher's note

"There is a delicate beauty about this tale which at first hides its sordidness and the various inconsistencies that separate plot from theme. Yet it is a charming book, and it might so easily have been an exceedingly good one had the author thought his way through the superficialities of his philosophy down to the vital and fundamental principles that give reality to life."
+ — Boston Transcript p3 D 31 '29 250w

Reviewed by Harmon Tupper
N Y Evening Post p11m D 28 '29 550w

"It is rather regrettable that his latest novel, translated by Samuel Putnam in a fine, robust version, has such a poor and hectic title. To many it cannot help appearing as something that the late Valentino would honor with his heroics. In point of fact, it is anything but a shoddy desert romance. The 'desert' in this instance is realistic, standing for the states of mind of a father and a son in response to the love aroused in them by the same uncommon woman."
+ N Y Times p6 D 29 '29 750w

MAURIAC, FRANÇOIS. Destinies; tr. by Eric Sutton. 215p $2.50 Covici [7s 6d Secker]
29-8315

"The melancholy destiny of Elizabeth Gornac compels her to love, late in life, a worthless but singularly charming young man fated to early and violent death. French mother though she is, she cannot love her own son, Pierre, whose character is as evident to her as is his physical unattractiveness. The psychological drama worked out by Elizabeth and Pierre, Bob Lagave, and Paule de la Sesque, is swift and subtle. For Pierre, when Bob is dead, there is the missionary life; for Elizabeth there is the business of looking after her land and her vineyards as she grows old; and for Paule a husband and children."—Times [Londom] Lit Sup

"In Destinies Mauriac has chosen a theme that is less clearcut than usual and which has a hero from a strange world. Somehow, in relaxing his customarily severe limits, a novelist who is noted for his perfect symmetry and classic precision appears to fumble and grow vague."
— Bookm 69:310 My '29 450w

Reviewed by Malcolm Cowley
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Je 16 '29 800w

"No words are wasted in this powerful story. Direct and brief, each sentence carries forward the plot and character development. Monsieur Mauriac has a capable hand in all his characterizations." P. L.
+ Boston Transcript p2 My 18 '29 480w

Reviewed by L. L. Irvine
Nation and Ath 45:46 Ap 13 '29 120w

"The tracing of Indian-summer passion in the breast of the unemotional Elisabeth Garnac is the best thing in the book. It is careful and honest, yet deepened by personal feeling. Mauriac is a medieval moralist concerned with the battle between the flesh and the devil. Elisabeth Garnac's last sexual flare-up is, therefore, not viewed behavioristically, as a phenomenon; but morally, almost religiously, as an awful struggle between the hosts of good and evil. One must be a Catholic of Mauriac's very peculiar persuasion to be greatly moved by this point of view; at worst, however, it prevents 'Destinies' from being simply another neat but undistinguished French novel." C. P. Fadiman
+ New Repub 60:26 Ag 21 '29 500w

" 'Destinies' is bitter and enduring literature; rich in its very somberness, with the glow of an unreal sunset hovering over its drab and pitiful horizons." Eugene Lohrke
N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 6 '29 450w

"It is lucid in its presentation of its material; and the craftsmanship dresses out the material with compelling emotional force. Instead of giving the long, often dreary, passages of analysis common to the psychological novel, M. Mauriac has translated his clinical studies into dramatized narrative. He shows human behavior in concrete examples. 'Destinies' has been composed with an economy which is most attractive."
+ N Y Times p8 Je 9 '29 700w

"The story is not as convincing as the emotions which accompany it, and these at times have a spurious air, as though founded on religiosity rather than on religion. It is M. Mauriac's distinction, which he shares with few contemporary novelists, to be able to depict self-sacrificing acts and emotions, renunciation, self-restraint, self-immolation, without making them seem ridiculous or sterile." L. P. Hartley
— + Sat R 147:620 My 4 '29 650w

"The power of the vineyards and of the fragrant pines prevails over the little stir of human passion and anguish. M. Mauriac's characterization is always original; though sometimes he does not grip his personages firmly enough. It is a mournful, compassionate book, with a large nobility of rhythm." R. A. Taylor
Spec 143:662 Ap 27 '29 170w
Times [London] Lit Sup p404 My 16 '29 150w

MAUROIS, ANDRE. Aspects of biography; tr. from the French by Sydney Castle Roberts. 209p $2 Appleton [7s 6d Cambridge univ. press]
920 Biography (as a literary form). Autobiography 29-15349

One of the most pleasing of modern biographers discusses in these chapters—originally given as lectures at Trinity College, Cambridge—modern biography, biography as a work of art, as a science and as a means of expression, autobiography, and biography and the novel.

---

Booklist 26:67 N '29
"Very penetrating and gracefully written essays." Margaret Wallace
+ Bookm 70:216 O '29 260w

Reviewed by H. F. Whicher
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Jl 28 '29 1150w
Nation 129:558 N 13 '29 180w

"An admirable little book, with all the intelligence, lucidity, and elegance which one expects in French criticism. M. Maurois would have written an even better book if he had not attempted to deal with so many aspects of biography." Leonard Woolf
+ Nation and Ath 44:882 Mr 23 '29 980w

"The book has a dramatic unity rare in collections of essays. It is the story of a quest—the quest for psychological truth. And the quest is baffled in the end: the human personality remains a mystery. We never know, scientifically speaking, either ourselves or anybody else. But in the effort, we may find much tonic delight." Albert Guérard
+ New Repub 59:344 Ag 14 '29 1200w
New Statesman 33:409 Jl 6 '29 1500w

"A gracefully written book, even in translation. And coming from the pen of one of the greatest living exponents of biographical writing, it is a book to be given consideration by all who take more than a superficial interest in what they read. It is a broad glimpse of the mind of a leading humanist and literary artist."
+ N Y Times p2 Jl 14 '29 1200w

"Much as we admire Maurois's biographies, we admire even more his 'Aspects of Biography.' It sets up standards of criticism and appreciation which were badly needed by a world of readers and writers. Maurois's deservedly lofty reputation will be enhanced by this fine book." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 152:548 Jl 31 '29 800w

"So keen is the interest today in biography that the past two years have seen some dozen or more books on the writing of biographical literature. Of all these treatises M. Maurois's 'Aspects of Biography' strikes us as the best." E. C. Marriner
+ Portland Evening News p15 S 24 '29 600w
St Louis 27:341 D '29

"It would not be unfair to sum up M. Maurois as finally counselling the biographer that he must be as truthful and interesting as possible. It should be added that in offering this advice he is exceedingly interesting himself. He has a great knowledge of English literature, particularly of contemporary English literature, and a gift of appropriate quotation which might become tiresome if it were not so tactfully exercised. He balances very justly the different and sometimes conflicting, if not finally contradictory, demands which we make on the biographer and he puts us under a great obligation when he confides to us some of the secrets of his own practice." E: Shanks
+ Sat R 147:477 Ap 6 '29 1550w

"On the whole it will be seen that we feel a certain unrest about M. Maurois's work, one which is not justified by appearances. This book, for instance, has everything to recommend it. It is clear, well-informed, witty, and conclusive." R: Church
+ — Spec 142:544 Ap 6 '29 980w

"Modern biography, M. Maurois claims, is a distinctly different art from that of other times; it has three motives: a search for truth, an insistence on the complexity of personality, and the portrayal of a figure who can solace us in our age of doubt. Against this he suggests that the older biographers sought to maintain a legend, to insist on the homogeneity of character of their heroes, and to present a moral and ethical example. It is an interesting contention, and one which, it is needless to say, M. Maurois supports with his usual wit and verve."
+ Spec 142:1015 Je 29 '29 110w

"He has written a delightful book, which, without attempting any formal history of biography, discusses by parallel and comparison various forms of the biographer's craft in relation to his own art and to Lytton Strachey's especially." Wilbur Cross
+ Yale R n s 19:395 winter '30 1050w

MAUROIS, ANDRE. Atmosphere of love; tr. by Joseph Collins. 277p $2.50 Appleton 29-17386

In the first half of this novel, Philippe Marcenat narrates the course of his love affair with Odile; in the latter half, the relationship between Philippe and his second wife, Isabelle—a woman Odile's exact opposite in type—is told from her point of view.

---

Booklist 26:71 N '29
"It is a beautifully told story, as one expects from the pen of so versatile a writer as the author of Ariel, but it lacks a great deal of the naïve charm that pervaded the pages of the latter."
+ — Bookm 70:xxx O '29 100w

" 'Atmosphere of Love' is a sincere, convincing and, in a quiet way, dramatic book. . . Do I call it a masterpiece? No, it is only a perfect book. And what is the difference? Perfection on a small scale is perfection, but it is not greatness." Ernest Dimnet
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 S 8 '29 2050w

"By a clever, ingeniously managed device, the novelist has produced a profoundly interesting commentary upon human character and social customs. The reader is shown both sides of a social and psychological problem and then left largely to draw his own conclusions—if there are any conclusions to be reached in human affairs." E. B. H.
+ Boston Transcript p2 S 4 '29 1250w

MAUROIS, ANDRE—Continued

"The novelty of M. Maurois's novel is due to the fact that in its first part the man reveals himself and his wife through his own eyes; in the second part it is through the eyes of his second wife that we see him. This is by no means an easy task for a novelist to accomplish, but M. Maurois carries it through with great dexterity." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p5 S 14 '29 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p157 D '29

"The book is marked by a clarity and intelligence that are strictly those of the novelist, not those of the biographer we might have anticipated: and they are carried over in Dr. Collins's translation with force and accuracy, though not always with purity of style." L. Kronenberger

+ N Y Times p7 S 1 '29 800w

"No ordinary writer could employ so effectively the simple method that André Maurois uses in telling this story. Technical skill is apparent in the difference of style between the two letters, one supposedly written by a man and the other by a woman; and even the translator's occasional inability to reproduce the subtle charm of the original French fails to disturb the impression that the novelist not only understands his subject but at the same time knows how to write." J. D. Tasker

+ Outlook 152:709 Ag 28 '29 320w

"You must go back to Stendhal to find so painstaking an analysis of the causes and the workings of love and jealousy; but Maurois has digested Stendhal as Einstein digested Newton, and gone beyond him. The scientific training of a biographer seems to be a pretty good training for the work of the novelist." Elmer Davis

Sat R of Lit 6:105 S 7 '29 1100w

MAUROIS, ANDRE. Next chapter; the war against the moon. (To-day and to-morrow ser.) 46p $1 Dutton

Imaginary wars and battles 28-23107

This fanciful "fragment of a universal history published in 1992," describes the occasion of the world's war against the moon by means of a devastating ray, and the prompt and disastrous retaliation of the moonmen.

---

Booklist 25:166 Ja '29

"The situation, on the face of it, is absurd; but so plausibly has he drawn it, so aptly has he met every objection, and so concisely has he dealt with his characters and his facts that this little book should rank among the classics of literary speculation. . . It is written with the brevity of a news report and with a distinct literary flavor." R. M. W.

+ Boston Transcript p8 N 17 '28 680w

MAUROIS, ANDRE. Voyage to the island of the Articoles; tr. from the French by David Garnett (Eng title Island of Articoles). 76p il $1.50 Appleton [5s J. Cape]

29-2447

Anne and the hero embark on a little boat to sail the vast Pacific. After a very pleasant voyage they are shipwrecked on an island inhabited by 600 Articoles, artists who write, paint or compose, and 10,000 Beos, the business people of the island. The Beos do all the work and form the audience for the Articoles. After many years on the island the Articoles are out of inspiration, so they eagerly seize upon Anne and Jean as probable exponents of new material. For a time the experience is rather amusing, but in time the rarified atmosphere proves boring, and the strangers sail away with sighs of relief.

---

Booklist 25:276 Ap '29

"The slender narrative of the story gives opportunity for a number of witty—if not new or especially profound—aphorisms on Art and Love and Life, gracefully translated by David Garnett; and the wood engravings by David Garrick are a joy."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Ja 20 '29 500w

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 30 '29 700w

"Rich in irony but richer still in implications. A nimble and biting sketch of the frailties of the artistic temperament, wherein the germ is isolated and reduced to absurdity, politely and without effort."

+ Dial 86:525 Je '29 80w

Reviewed by T. S. Matthews

New Repub 58:24 F 20 '29 200w

"The chief qualities of the book are its excellent uninterrupted narrative and faint humour."

+ — New Statesman 32:676 Mr 2 '29 150w

Reviewed by Paul Souday

N Y Times p7 Ap 1 '28 600w

"The book is really delightful reading." Herschel Brickell

+ No Am 227:adv Mr '29 100w

"This is a gentle, amusing satire. Its imaginative qualities are such as might be expected from the author of 'Mape' and 'War with the Moon.' Its simple, smooth style is more reminiscent of the translator's own work. . . In the few pages which he has allowed himself, Maurois has no chance to develop characters or situations; but as an unpretentious and adroit satiric sketch, his book can give an hour of pleasure and plenty of chuckles."

+ Outlook 151:108 Ja 16 '29 350w

"It is perhaps not ill-natured to guess that M. Maurois wrote his mild Gulliver's travel in response to a request for a story to fit in a special edition. But alas! the race is not to the pseudo-Swift. The story is a little wanting in the subtleties of imagination, and altogether wanting in savagery."

Sat R 146:440 O 6 '28 220w

"Whatever M. Maurois writes is witty and entertaining, and the 'Voyage to the Island of the Articoles' is no exception; but the theme of his own satire, like the threads of the Articoles, seems a little fragile and facile. . . M. Maurois is amusing at the expense of a state of affairs which not only does not exist, but which does not seem likely to threaten us."

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:814 Mr 23 '29 200w

"The story never flags and is uncommon all through—especially in that the end is even better than the beginning."

+ Spec 141:491 O 13 '28 160w

Reviewed by Arthemise Ottmann

Springf'd Republican p7e F 10 '29 530w

MAVITY, NANCY (BARR) (MRS ARTHUR BENTON MAVITY). Body on the floor. 325p $2 Doubleday, Doran

29-22429

A woman was found dead in the kitchen of her ranch house. Could it have been murder perpetrated by the man with whom she had been living, her husband who was jealous for the honor of his family, or her daughter who hated her? The local police thought it was suicide. Peter Piper of the Herald thought differently and he delved until he located the murderer.

---

Bookm 70:xxx D '29 80w

"On the whole a right pretty mystery recommended to the judicious. With diagrams and a good joke now and then." Will Cuppy

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 N 3 '29 150w

"Nancy Barr Mavity continues to write entertainingly and to incorporate love stories in mystery yarns without permitting the former to get in the way of the latter. There are not too many writers of detective stories who are able to do that."

+ N Y Times p22 N 3 '29 130w

"Exaggerated human interest stuff (as a rule introduced sparingly in the first rate novel of detection), combined with endless irrelevant dialogue, so heavily crowds this mystery tale as to obscure its slender merits almost completely. . . There may originally have been a plot substantial enough to sustain a tale of novelette length, but there is obviously not enough to justify a full-sized book."

— Sat R of Lit 6:490 N 30 '29 140w

MAVITY, NANCY (BARR) (MRS ARTHUR BENTON MAVITY). Tule marsh murder. 318p $2 Doubleday, Doran 29-2736

When the body found in the tule marsh is identified as the missing Sheila O'Kay, Dr Cavanaugh, famed psychologist, is already active in the case. The identity of the murderer is discovered by a reporter who is in love with Dr Cavanaugh's daughter, but his discovery is never made public.

"The narrative is enlivened with a bit of scandal, gruesome blondes, an emerald, amnesia and an exciting trial. Best of all, it baffles." Will Cuppy
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ja 20 '29 110w
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 23 '29 350w

"The dénouement will be a distinct surprise to all but the most astute readers. The story is well told, with flashes of humor to relieve the tragedy."
+ N Y Times p25 Ja 13 '29 170w
+ N Y World p11m F 3 '29 100w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 151:152 Ja 23 '29 60w

MAXWELL, GORDON STANLEY. Road to France; being the notes of two 20th century highwaymen on and off the Watling street from London to Dover. 184p il $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Methuen]
914.2 England—Description and travel
[28-21815]

Descriptive sketch of the cities, towns, hamlets and manors along the historical Watling street from London to Dover. Over this highway, which is one of the oldest in England, have traveled Roman legions, pilgrims to Canterbury, stagecoaches, highwaymen and the modern tourist. Illustrated.

"Gordon Maxwell has made the journey as it should be made, unhurriedly and devoutly, and Donald Maxwell has accompanied him in the same mood, as the many drawings gleaned from his sketch book testify."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 Jl 21 '29 120w

"This is a holiday book, to be read, as the authors suggest, in trains and after lunch. . . It can safely be recommended to all who dislike guide-books and do not want to learn too much."
+ New Statesman 31:650 S 1 '28 180w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell
No Am 228:adv Ag '29 50w
Sat R 145:812 Je 23 '28 200w

"The book is pleasant enough, commonplace, punctuated at times by a dreadful literalness. . . However, every reader will enjoy Mr. Donald Maxwell's black-and-white illustrations, which are, as usual, wholly charming."
+ — Spec 141:219 Ag 18 '28 80w
Times [London] Lit Sup p555 Jl 26 '28 370w

MAXWELL, WILLIAM BABINGTON. Man who pretended (Eng title Himself and Mr. Raikes). 318p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran
29-22132

Oswald Raikes was the eternal idealist; he fixed his eyes on the stars and thought himself an awful rotter if he did not reach them. Loved, honored and respected by everyone with whom he came in contact, he, like every other human being, had his moments of weakness for which he suffered inordinately and long. In his own eyes he was a weakling; in the eyes of the world, a giant.

"Mr. Maxwell started to lead a rocking-horse hero over the predestined pathway of a theme—to show how a man pretended to be what he was not, and how it undid him. But around page seventy-five the rocking-horse came to life, took the bit in his teeth and left the theme forever. The result is an interesting novel."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 N 10 '29 230w
Boston Transcript p3 D 21 '29 300w
N Y Times p6 N 10 '29 700w

"In his light fiction technique, W. B. Maxwell handles a nice problem in psychology with skill and freshness. . . Through an interesting though by no means unusual plot, peppered with melodramatic incidents, Maxwell shows how his hero did in very truth become the man he pretended to be, although he believed himself, to the last, to be a sham."
+ Outlook 153:269 O 16 '29 200w

"The book is full of material, of incidents skilfully chosen to illustrate the dual nature of Mr. Raikes, and yet these instances are so natural, so like the ordinary course of events, one does not feel they are being dragged in to strengthen Mr. Maxwell's case. Mr. Maxwell is a writer of the old school; he invents incidents which must first startle by their strangeness, and then convince by their verisimilitude. He has more knowledge of life than many novelists who present it more plausibly." L. P. Hartley
+ — Sat R 148:276 S 7 '29 500w

"The blurb states this to be 'a very clever novel,' and the blurb, as usual, is wrong. It is a delightful book, but it is also something more, for the meditative reader may see in it aptly illustrated the philosopher's admonition to 'become what you are.' "
+ Sat R of Lit 6:592 D 21 '29 350w
Spec 143:504 O 12 '29 280w
Springf'd Republican p7e D 29 '29 340w

" 'Himself and Mr. Raikes' is an interesting, sincere book, but it cannot be ranked with Mr. Maxwell's best work—'The Guarded Flame' or 'Spinster of this Parish,' for example."
Times [London] Lit Sup p636 Ag 15 '29 450w

MAY, GEOFFREY. Marriage laws and decisions in the United States. 477p $3.50 Russell Sage foundation
347.6 Marriage laws 29-5256

Taking up the several states in alphabetical order, Mr May tabulates the laws relating to marriage in each state in the Union, from securing the license to the hows and whys of divorce procedure.

"It should be a valuable handbook to the sociologist and the public official concerned with the legal regulation of marriage." A. B. W.
+ Am Econ R 19:326 Je '29 70w

"A careful, accurate digest of both state and federal marriage laws." A. J. Todd
+ Am J Soc 35:318 S '29 230w

Reviewed by A. G. Hays
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Je 2 '29 150w

"Of great value to social students." F. F. Kelly
+ N Y Times p7 Ap 21 '29 80w
Pratt p12 autumn '29
St Louis 27:331 D '29

Reviewed by J. P. Guild
Survey 62:370 Je 15 '29 250w

MAY, HERBERT LOUIS, and PETGEN, DOROTHY. Leisure and its use; some international observations. 268p $2 Barnes, A.S. & co.
790 Leisure. Amusements. Play. Playgrounds 28-30623

"At the request of the Playground and Recreation Association of America in the Spring of 1926 Mr. May began to organize his study of the activities engaged in by the citizens of the principal European countries during their leisure hours. With the competent aid of Miss Petgen, a keen student of economics and sociology—to whom, incidentally, a major portion of the work of investigation and interview was assigned—he spent a year and a half in observing, analyzing and comparing the racial, social and economic aspects of leisure in eight countries. In England, France and Germany rather detailed studies were made, while brief notes suffice for Belgium, Denmark, Czechoslovakia, Austria and Italy."—Boston Transcript

MAY, H. L:, and PETGEN, D.—Continued

---

"Their work is of peculiar interest to recreation and physical education leaders."

\+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 F 3 '29 100w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 13 '29 200w

J Home Econ 21:284 Ap '29 40w

"Social workers of all sorts, as well as those members of the laity who are interested in the subject of recreation and its significance, will find this well-packed book very much worth while. For all who are engaged in this new profession either as students or workers it will be especially valuable, since it is international in its scope."

\+ N Y Times p10 F 3 '29 380w

Pratt p11 summer '29

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw

R of Rs 79:12 My '29 180w

Springf'd Republican p12 Jl 12 '29 320w

Wis Lib Bul 25:97 Mr '29

MAYER, EDWIN JUSTUS. Children of darkness; an original tragi-comedy. 232p $2.50 Liveright

812

A play which the author says was "suggested by Henry Fielding's 'The history of the life of the late Mr Jonathan Wild the Great.' " The action takes place in London at the house of the under-sheriff of Newgate Prison in 1725. Mr Snap, the under-sheriff, makes his living by renting apartments to the likely-looking prisoners from Newgate, and in receiving stolen goods. His daughter, a charming-looking but unpleasant person spends her time making love to all the prisoners and playing them off, one against the other.

---

"The play is a strange mixture of recreated 'Comedy of Errors' brilliance, sentimentality and a wholly modern lush sensuality. There is about it, as Henry James said of the novels of D'Annunzio, a faint smell of sewer gas." W. P. Eaton

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Je 30 '29 80w

"The divergence from Fielding's novel is very pronounced, and it is most evident that each variation is a decided improvement over the original. The conversation is more witty, the characters better delineated and the plot more unified. The background is exceptionally well done and the dialogue full of the flavor of the period."

\+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 6 '29 150w

"Mr. Mayer has written a costume play with a neat plot. In so doing he has remembered the elegance of Joseph Addison, but has completely forgotten the vigor of Swift and Fielding. If you enjoy costume plays, no doubt 'Children of Darkness' will be a good bet, but again you will be sure that it will have nothing to do with the gang of hard-boiled cutthroats that circled round Newgate prison in the first quarter of the eighteenth century, nor the ability of Henry Fielding to recreate his experiences as a practicing lawyer and politician, active in a program of social reform." Horace Gregory

— + N Y Evening Post p9m Je 1 '29 650w

"The piece is beautifully written, it has atmosphere, and what is more provides excellent acting parts. His style and his method are his own, therefore the source of his material is of no importance. The deeper trouble with this play lies in the garb of the concept. The idea is clothed in silks and velvets, whereas its proper garment should be rags and tatters. In other words the theme is developed romantically when only realism could be convincing." Jane Dransfield

— + Sat R of Lit 6:75 Ag 24 '29 360w

Springf'd Republican p7e N 24 '29 200w

"In the Eighteenth Century, the play would doubtless have been a smash hit; it is redolent with the atmosphere, humor, and raw life of that lusty era. Although better in situation and characterization and much more subtle and ingenious than The Front Page, it is fortunate or unfortunate, according to the point of view, that The Front Page and the school of small fry imitators that followed close on its heels, have dulled the current appetite for such drama." Vera Kelsey

Theatre Arts Mo 13:631 Ag '29 160w

MAYNE, ETHEL COLBURN. Life and letters of Anne Isabella, Lady Noel Byron; from unpublished papers in the possession of the late Ralph, Earl of Lovelace; with an introd. and epilogue by Mary, Countess of Lovelace. 501p il $5 Scribner

B or 92 Byron, Anne Isabella (Milbanke) Byron, baroness 29-18658

The author of an authoritative life of Byron has made use of some familiar and some new material for the presentation in this volume of a consistent, sympathetic and credible portrait of Lady Byron, so sorely tried, so strangely self-contained.

---

Booklist 26:116 D '29

Reviewed by Jacob Zeitlin

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 O 20 '29 1400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p147 D '29

"One of the most fascinating and important biographies which have appeared for a long time." Leonard Woolf

\+ Nation and Ath 45:478 Jl 6 '29 1100w

"Her book is likely to remain definitive on this vexed subject, and it is certainly one of the notable books of this year. It is a pity that she indulges at times so freely in a somewhat Emil Ludwig style of exclamatory diction; and her method of narration, feminine in its criss-cross progression, is not altogether easy to follow at certain turnings in the story; but one can forgive much for her clear, steady grasp of the main characters, and for the unstressed dramatic quality of such a scene as the last meeting of Lady Byron with poor Augusta, in a hotel sitting-room at Reigate, with the preacher Robertson of Brighton as the witness brought to attend the interview." Hamish Miles

\+ New Statesman 33:682 S 14 '29 1750w

"With admirable tact and courageous frankness Miss Mayne has accomplished a difficult task. She has made wholly explicable the heretofore baffling figure of Annabella Milbanke, Lady Byron. This life is more than a restatement of familiar documents, more than a chronological exposition of the career of Lady Byron; it is an astute and profound analysis of a human soul, the interpretation of a much wronged woman's matrimonial débâcle that could only have been made by another woman." Herbert Gorman

\+ N Y Times p2 Ag 25 '29 2100w

"Miss Mayne has brought all the richness of her knowledge and wit to the writing of this sympathetic account of Lady Byron. The result is an extremely interesting and readable book." Leonore Gray

\+ Portland Evening News p15 S 24 '29 550w

"We will venture to offer Miss Mayne one or two suggestions, implying criticism of her excellent book. Her tone in dealing with the incest is exactly right, but she allows it to be supposed that Byron's interest in the vice was wholly personal and quite exceptional. As a matter of fact, the great Romantics of the period were obsessed by the idea of incest, hovering round it like moths round a candle. Miss Mayne, therefore, goes too far in regarding Byron's recurrence to the subject as peculiar. Then, as it seems to us, she has fastened on Byron's determination to make his bride run back to her parents as the dominant motive of his abominable conduct, to the exclusion of a subconscious motive which we believe to have been stronger and more persistently operative. Anyone who closely considers the work of Byron, juvenile effusions excepted, will see that notoriety was the condition of its existence." T. E. W.

+ — Sat R 148:74 Jl 20 '29 850w

"Miss Mayne has at length given us a detailed, authentic, and, above all, a discriminating account of the relations between Lord Byron and his wife; and she has given us also the first portrait of Lady Byron that is either complete or trustworthy."

+ Spec 142:1017 Je 29 '29 1500w

Reviewed by J. C. Squire

Springf'd Republican p7e Ag 11 '29 1050w (Reprinted from London Observer)

"Of the author's labor, scholarship, insight and fairness there can be no doubt. Her book is an excellent presentation of biographical material, with adequate indications of the values of that material."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 S 30 '29 220w

"At last an investigator of sensitive delicacy, with the whole of the documents before her, shows us the workings of her, Lady Byron's, mind and soul, so far at least as research can expose them, in a book of unbroken interest and unfailing grace."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p505 Je 27 '29 2400w

"It is a well-documented, well-written, judicious piece of work, written by a woman, it passes its judgments mainly on women, and those judgments are at once sympathetic and searching. Lady Byron is placed by it where she belongs in the heaven of the just, though perhaps in a compartment of it not much frequented by men." F: E. Pierce

+ Yale R n s 19:404 winter '30 700w

MAYO, KATHERINE. Slaves of the gods. 278p $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d J. Cape]

915.4 Women in India. India—Social conditions 29-7590

The author of "Mother India" returns to the attack on Hinduism with these stories, based on fact, of the horrors of child marriage, widowhood, and other social evils.

Reviewed by Boshi Sen

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Je 23 '29 730w

"In these stories of present-day Indian life Miss Mayo has taken certain facts and presented them to us as commonplace. Perhaps they are prevalent tragedies. Possibly not." D. F. G.

Boston Transcript p3 My 11 '29 1000w

"Miss Katherine Mayo has again outraged all sense of international courtesy and decency by publishing a second volume, illustrative of her former book 'Mother India,' without any apology for the exaggerations and inaccuracies which have been pointed out in her former volume. It is difficult for those who do not know the tension under which India is passing to realize what infinite harm is being done by such gross breaches of racial good-will and understanding as this book represents. No people have been more unsparing than Indians themselves in laying bare to the world their own shortcomings. But to take advantage of these outspoken utterances in order to document a series of lurid and sensational stories, with every false note jarring—as if this were the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth—is a means of giving to those who innocently read them an entirely false impression, cruelly unjust to India and her long-suffering people." C. F. Andrews

— Nation 128:714 Je 12 '29 980w

"Miss Mayo has performed a very considerable public service in exposing so ruthlessly facts which are quite undeniable, but about which Englishmen and Englishwomen have hesitated to write frankly."

New Statesman 33:86 Ap 27 '29 450w

"Miss Mayo shapes her material to her thesis with transparent purposefulness. Her heroines are all wistfully beautiful, pathetically young and helpless. The Hindu husbands are big, evil, dirty, foul, brutal, old. Her mothers-in-law are heartlessly cruel. Her Muslims are intelligent and sturdy and her British officials are white gods. . . Hatred is shouted across the pages of her book, not only for the Hindu gods, but for all Hindus outside her limited categories of interest." Gertrude Emerson

— N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 30 '29 900w

Reviewed by L. M. Field

N Y Times p6 My 12 '29 700w

"After 'Mother India,' these twelve stories are pretty mild. The facts that they rehearse are dreadful, indeed. But Miss Mayo is not a creative writer of any talent whatsoever, and her horrors in fiction form are not nearly so horrifying as when cast as flat statistics. We do not see what good this little book can do, nor what pleasure, decent or otherwise, it can give."

— Outlook 151:505 Mr 27 '29 120w

Pratt p30 autumn '29

Sat R 147:436 Mr 30 '29 320w

"The warp of beauty and the woof of horror in child marriage, child suicide, wife murder, infanticide, have been painstakingly woven together into a series of tales which are as fascinating as they are terrifying. The stories themselves are most artistically done. As a mere collection of tales they have a charm and an Oriental flavor that suggests now Burton and now Kipling." H: K. Norton

+ Sat R of Lit 5:949 Ap 27 '29 1000w

"The stories are clever as stories and their 'atmosphere' is correct: yet they are a hideous travesty of normal Hindu society. . . The fault of this powerful and unpleasant book is that it leaves a wholly untrue impression of the extent of the evils that all decent people deplore, whatever their creed or colour."

— + Spec 142:544 Ap 6 '29 900w

Times [London] Lit Sup p272 Ap 4 '29 550w

"As in her earlier volume, Miss Mayo misleads the innocent reader. By skillful selection, emphasis, and proportioning she gives a false and defamatory picture of Indian life and the extent of its undeniable social evils, also of the sources, nature, extent, age and efficacy of reform work." R: B. Gregg

— World Tomorrow 12:473 N '29 550w

MAZE, COLEMAN LLOYD, and GLOVER, JOHN GEORGE. How to analyze costs. 389p il $5 Ronald

657 Cost accounting 29-1001

"This book was designed primarily as a text for use in advanced schools of business, the purpose being to present a detailed analysis of manufacturing, selling and administrative costs and organizing a procedure to determine the causes of variations from either previous period figures or from predetermined estimates."—Ann Am Acad

"While there is little strictly new or original in the book, it represents a new form of compilation from sources not usually brought into close association, yet fundamentally related to the broad subject of costs. Some parts of the book, notably the sections on standard costs, have a detailed working value which should not be overlooked. Other sections have their value in providing starting points for many lines of further study. This value would be aided by a more complete bibliography. Considered primarily as a textbook for students, it has earned a place in the educational list." Arthur Andersen

+ — Am Econ R 19:464 S '29 400w

MAZE, C. L., and GLOVER, J: G:—Continued

"The text is well written, refrains from entering into matters of a controversial nature and should prove a very welcome addition to the reference library of those interested in the subject of cost." A. T. Cameron

+ Ann Am Acad 145:210 S '29 180w

Pratt p18 summer '29

MEAD, LUCIA TRUE (AMES) (MRS EDWIN DOAK MEAD). Law or war. 276p $1.75 Doubleday, Doran

341.6 Peace. War. Arbitration, International 28-25846

A re-statement of international reasons for the outlawry of war and the arbitration of disputes thru the League of nations. The text of the League covenant is given in an appendix.

---

Am J Soc 35:161 Jl '29 100w

"Mrs. Mead writes in a popular style, and her readers will enjoy, even if they do not entirely approve, her pointed criticisms of American school textbooks, military training in schools and colleges, and the choice of the 'Star-Spangled Banner' as the national hymn."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 F 17 '29 200w

"Temperately and convincingly written, Mrs. Mead's book on peace possibilities rings true to an ever increasing sentiment in favor of settling international disputes by means other than warfare. . . The book is an instructive treatise and it contains food for much thought and calm discussion."

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 2 '29 250w

"Law or War is a valuable compendium of fact and argument for the peace-lover and the peace-promoter. It ought to be carefully read by all fair-minded men, on whichever side of this great moral issue they enroll themselves." W: R. McNutt

+ Crozer Q 6:122 Ja '29 800w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw

R of Rs 79:24 Mr '29 80w

"From the first page to the last, Law or War is instinct with empirical knowledge which rounds out its scholarship and matured convictions. I know of no book more useful for those who are committed to a further elucidation of the principles as well as to the study of current developments, in the peace movement." Jane Addams

+ World Tomorrow 12:183 Ap '29 550w

MEAD, MARGARET. Coming of age in Samoa; a psychological study of primitive youth for western civilisation; foreword by Franz Boas. 297p il $3 Morrow

919.61 Samoa—Social life and customs. Adolescence. Sex (psychology) 28-20670

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

---

"On some points made by Dr. Mead I must frankly avow skepticism. It is hard to believe that all but the youngest boys and girls should fail to use ordinary kinship terms correctly; or, in an absolute way, that Samoan children do not learn to work through learning to play. These reservations should not be taken to obscure the value of Dr. Mead's achievement. Dealing with problems incomparably subtler than those which usually engage the ethnographer's attention, she has not merely added much in the way of illuminating information but also illustrated a new method of study that is bound to find followers and to yield an even richer harvest." R. H. Lowie

+ — Am Anthropol 31:532 Jl '29 1500w

"For all the intimate association with Samoans the book is somehow disappointing. There are exceedingly interesting pages. . . But Miss Mead is interested, one feels, in problems and cases not in human nature. There is no warmth in her account." Robert Redfield

+ — Am J Soc 34:728 Ja '29 450w

Booklist 25:159 Ja '29

"Excellent ethnological picture of an alien culture." Ruth Benedict

+ J Philos 26:110 F 14 '29 420w

Pratt p28 winter '29

"If this work is written in the first instance for the teacher and the psychologist there is much in it to attract the general reader; the brilliant description of life at the present day forms a satisfactory background to the picture of the young girl's education. Perhaps Miss Mead would have done well to say a little more about her way of collecting her data. She might also with advantage have added an index. But, take it all in all, the book is both interesting and useful."

+ Sat R 147:680 My 18 '29 780w

"The essential importance of the book lies in its application of ethnological technique to the study of primary groups. It is important, also, that the findings have been made so interestingly available to the general reader." M. E. Johnson

+ Sat R of Lit 5:778 Mr 16 '29 960w

"Miss Mead has been scrupulously careful to give us her credentials, the duration and extent of her researches, the methods which she adopted; and every page of the book bears the impress of thoroughness, sensibility and a keen psychological insight. Furthermore, Miss Mead writes with considerable charm and distinction." J. H. Driberg

+ Spec 142:787 My 18 '29 750w

"Dr. Mead has made a contribution which students of society will doubtless appreciate; but I am undecided whether it has been a contribution to science or art. If this is intended to be a work of art, then the 'gay spirit' and Dr. Mead's impressionistic style are in place. If it is science, the book is somewhat of a disappointment. It lacks documental base." Nels Anderson

+ — Survey 61:514 Ja 15 '29 400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p442 Je 6 '29 470w

World Tomorrow 12:186 Ap '29 60w

MEADER, STEPHEN WARREN. Longshanks. 243p il $2 Harcourt

Lincoln, Abraham—Fiction 28-20763

On his way to join his father in New Orleans Tad Hopkins is robbed and thrown into the Ohio River from the steamboat. He swims to a flat boat near the shore and finds "Longshanks" and a companion. The former is a tall, lean, kindly backwoods boy whose other name is Lincoln. The three fall into many an exciting misadventure on their way down-river with the flat boat.

---

Booklist 25:363 Je '29

"Excellent, though light reading. It is neither the traditional 'boy's story' nor a serious contribution to biography."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 13 '28 230w

Cleveland Open Shelf p112 N '28

"A singularly good story of the days of Mississippi River dangers. It is a story filled with plot activity and celerity, and readers of it will enjoy themselves." M. G. Bonner

+ N Y Times p28 D 16 '28 60w

"A tale that all boys will love from the minute they open the book."

+ N Y World p11m Mr 24 '29 80w

MEAKIN, WALTER. New industrial revolution; a study for the general reader of rationalisation and post-war tendencies of capitalism and labour. 284p $3 Brentano's

330.943 Germany—Economic conditions. Germany—Industries. Great Britain—Economic conditions 29-5584

"The main effort of this book is to convince British employers and workers that they must adopt the German plan of industrial co-ordination or 'rationalization of industry,' as it has come to be known, if they are to survive in their struggle with their German and American competitors. To the general reader the volume gives an admirable survey of how the German industrialists have been co-operating since the war in regulating production, eliminating within a given industry the less efficient units, avoiding duplication, employing the latest mechanical devices and co-operating on a common sales policy, to the end that production and distribution costs might be reduced and the market extended."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Bookm 69:xiv Ap '29 220w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 My 12 '29 230w

"These are very valuable and suggestive analyses of the organization of the coal and the iron and steel industries. The removal of workers from old occupations is said to have been soon shown to be advantageous for these workers themselves. The general argument of the work aims at the formation of industrial policy in Great Britain; but it contains valuable indications of principle and even of moral principle in industrial policy." C. D. B.

+ Int J Ethics 39:508 Jl '29 130w

"Whether or not Mr. Meakin's optimistic views of the possibilities of rationalisation are fully accepted, his book is certainly the most stimulating study in the economic problems of industry that has appeared for a long time past. Employers and Trade Unionists especially ought to read it, as by far the clearest account of recent German developments, and as a challenge to traditional methods alike in the conduct of business and in the working of the Trade Union movement."

+ New Statesman 32:17 O 13 '28 1250w

Reviewed by L: Stark
N Y Times p27 Je 9 '29 300w

Outlook 151:506 Mr 27 '29 100w

Reviewed by E: T. Divine
Outlook 152:673 Ag 21 '29 350w

"The book was written to propose a practical solution for the grievous and menacing economic problem of post-war Britain, but it acquires importance to the general student of modern social institutions by reason of its careful analysis and suggestive interpretation of the record of accomplishment in German industry over the last decade."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:1003 My 11 '29 280w

"This is unquestionably one of the very few important books on industrial reconstruction that have been published since the War."

+ Spec 141:548 O 20 '28 1100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p724 O 11 '28 1150w

MEARNS, HUGHES. Creative power. 396p $3.50 Doubleday, Doran

371.3 Education—Experimental methods. English language—Study and teaching. Children as authors 29-21674

In a companion volume to "Creative youth" (Book Review Digest, 1925), the author, formerly of the Lincoln school, and now (1929) professor of creative education at New York university tells how, in his "free" school, he encouraged the creative activity of apparently ordinary children. He includes many illustrations of the poetry and prose that came forth during his experiment in creative education.

Booklist 26:103 D '29

"One wishes that instead of rushing about the country interviewing school teachers and their charges to track down the shy quarry Mr. Mearns had stayed in one place and given us another record of slow and careful exploration into the significance in the child's life of all his channels of expression."

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 D 29 '29 250w

Boston Transcript p3 O 23 '29 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p116 S '29

"It is a book which no school teacher can afford not to know and of which every parent should become aware. To transcribe its thought and content into a book review is not possible. An assembling of many impressions and experiences, an adventure among the hidden impulses of mind and soul, a communion with craftsmanship, 'Creative Youth' requires careful study and reflection. One must live with its pages to catch its spirit, to absorb its suggestion, and to derive from it inspiration and understanding of what education might mean and whither is should tend." Ernest Gruening

+ Portland Evening News p10 O 15 '29 1000w

"My impression, after reading Creative Power, is that Mr. Mearns is one of those rare teachers who in every generation under every system of education has stirred and stimulated and blown into flame every spark of life in the natures of their students. Such teachers afford one of the finest spectacles our race can give. But there's no use reading their accounts of their work in the hope of being able to reproduce it." D. C. Fisher

+ Survey 63:356 D 15 '29 650w

MEARS, ELIOT GRINNELL. Resident Orientals on the American Pacific coast; their legal and economic status; preliminary report prepared for the July, 1927 Conf. of the Inst. of Pacific relations in Honolulu. 526p $3 Inst. of Pacific relations, Am. group, 129 E. 52d st., N.Y.; for sale by Univ. of Chicago press [15s Cambridge univ. press]

325.73 Japanese in California. Immigration law. Orientals in the United States. Aliens. Land tenure—United States [28-969]

"The volume is especially valuable in its discussion of the bearing of treaty rights and constitutional guaranties upon our relations with China and Japan, the operation of the alien land laws in the Pacific Coast states, and the problem of naturalization of Orientals in America. Careful consideration is also given to the struggle of the Orientals to find a place for themselves in American economic life. The book closes with a discussion of segregation and community contacts in which is pointed out the dwindling nature of the Chinatowns and Japtowns characteristic of Pacific Coast cities."—Am J Soc

"The book is a distinct contribution to the literature dealing with Orientals in this country and a store-house of information, most of which is both significant and useful." H. A. Millis

+ Am Econ R 19:512 S '29 600w

"Students of Oriental immigration are deeply indebted to the authors of these volumes for a judicious and entirely objective discussion of this controversial problem, and especially for their emphasis on its legal and administrative aspects, which have hitherto been too much neglected." J. F. Steiner

+ Am J Soc 34:733 Ja '29 170w

Reviewed by Thorsten Sellin
Ann Am Acad 144:154 Jl '29 320w

"Merely as a compendium of information the work is of high value, although the agglomeration of material lessens the interest of the book for a reader who is not a specialist."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 My 5 '29 460w

Reviewed by J: P. Gavit
Survey 62:504 Ag 1 '29 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p2 Ja 3 '29 320w

MEEHAN, MRS JEANNETTE (PORTER). Freckles comes home. 297p $2 Doubleday, Doran

29-17819

"The author tells of Freckles's life after he left his swamp angel to join his newly discovered relations in Ireland, the noble O'Mores. The red-headed, one-armed boy is not happy as a wealthy young idler, but he lacks the energy to fight against his stubborn Uncle Maxwell. And while Freckles wastes away in homesickness for his Angel, the girl in America, waiting for word from him, allows herself to become engaged to some one else. She also saves her father's bank from fire, captures several ban-

MEEHAN, JEANNETTE—Continued
dits and becomes involved in a number of other equally exciting experiences. The two are finally reunited through the efforts of Freckles's beloved boss, James McClean."—Springf'd Republican

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 O 27 '29 460w

"The millions who loved the late Mrs. Gene Stratton-Porter's 'Freckles,' should rejoice that a sequel, wherein the orphaned boy has now grown to stalwart young manhood, has been written by her daughter and in such fashion as should meet with the unanimous approval of the elder lady's admirers."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:299 O 19 '29 200w

"Miss Stratton-Porter writes with her mother's sentimental facility, and, like her mother, ends her book with the happy reformation of all the villains."
Springf'd Republican p7e O 27 '29 150w

"Miss Stratton-Porter has much of the charm and sentiment of her mother when she is writing of the Swamp Angel and of the Limberlost; but she is all at sea when she is writing of life in the country house in Ireland to which Freckles was carried off when it was discovered that the nameless orphan boy was Lord Terence Maxwell O'More."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p849 O 24 '29 200w

MEEKER, ARTHUR, Jr. American beauty. 298p $2.50 Covici
29-3596

"The people [of the story] are expatriate Americans in the glittering social melée of the more sophisticated geography of Europe. Angelica Vane, the beautiful, is rather desperate because at twenty-five she still is not suitably married, which is to say married to a title or a millionaire. Angelica's mother, who alpenstocked herself up from a cigar counter to the fringes of Society is even more desperate. She enlists the services of the brilliantly blasé, money-seeking Lady Millicent Carr. . . The rest of the story deals with the cold-blooded husband hunt and with the unfortunate complication that Angelica, for once in her life, falls honestly in love."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"It is a first book, and it has faults. Occasionally there is a lapse into the smartaleck brightness of the current mood which needs words like 'gaga' to express itself. Sometimes the sharpness of the vision fades and the writing dulls for pages. But on the whole it is excellent." Laura Mount
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 Ap 7 '29 800w

"Hilarious and satirical, but never vulgar, 'American Beauty' belongs to the 'comedy of manners' type of novel. And what bad manners they are! The characters are well drawn, even though they be caricatures. . . The love story while it has a certain charm, is not entirely satisfactory to those who desire a definite and happy ending."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 2 '29 300w

"It is a comfortable novel, without strain or stress reaching for originality—the author has been brave enough to be colloquial. He sets out to engage no more than one's street emotions and succeeds gracefully." H. R.
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 2 '29 230w

"The blurb insists that the book 'satirizes and caricatures with unerring wit' the expatriate society of watering places. Would that it did. For us, 'American Beauty' is a wooden story, woodenly told."
— N Y World p11m Mr 10 '29 100w

MEGROZ, RODOLPHE LOUIS. Dante Gabriel Rossetti, painter poet of heaven in earth. 340p $4.50 Scribner [15s Faber & G.]

B or 92 Rossetti, Dante Gabriel [28-27619]

"The biography is in two parts. In the first, 'mainly biographical,' we are given the freedom of the Rossetti home in London with its talented family, and from its simplicity and culture learn the influences of heredity and environment which made the elder son, Dante Gabriel so perplexing a human enigma. In the second part, 'mainly critical,' Mr. Megroz gives a series of keenly constructive analyses of various phases of the dual arts of which Rossetti was a master—poetry and painting."—Boston Transcript

Reviewed by Jacob Zeitlin
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Mr 31 '29 560w

"A close and skilfully wrought study this, wherein the life and work of the great poet-painter seen through the sensitively clear lens of the author's mind stand out in a new and in many ways greater clarity from the mass of conflicting stories and traditions already gathered about the name of Dante Gabriel Rossetti." F. B.
+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 9 '29 930w

"The splendid analysis of Rossetti's poetry is an admirable insight of critical appreciation." L. L. Riley
+ Churchman 139:17 My 4 '29 230w

Reviewed by Leonard Woolf
Nation and Ath 44:211 N 10 '28 300w

"Mr. Mégroz's study is certainly one of the best, and possibly quite the best, of the books on Rossetti that we have so far had. Mr. Mégroz is a critic of fine intelligence, and all that he has to say of the poetry is carefully considered and a good deal of it is new."
+ New Statesman 32:260 D 1 '28 750w

"Despite its conscientious heaviness it is the best book we know on Rossetti. Nevertheless it is incomplete and it needs Mr. Waugh's far less satisfactory work to supplement it." S: C. Chew
+ — Sat R of Lit 5:978 My 4 '29 730w
Spec 141:746 N 17 '28 180w

"A sympathetic and responsible work, which brings the tragic and baffling figure of Rossetti before the public of today. . . While Mr Megroz's material might have been more perspicuously organized, and perhaps sifted to advantage, he is to be credited with a sincere and capable attempt to understand Rossetti and the impassioned expression of his genius in the two arts of painting and poetry."
+ — Springf'd Republican p7e F 17 '29 1000w

"Mr. Mégroz has much that is interesting or useful to say of Rossetti as a mystical writer, as a romantic, or as a Pre-Raphaelite. In argument and demonstration he does not use a fine weapon and does not cut at all sharply, and sometimes one wishes that his thought was expressed more precisely. But though few remarks of his are, when isolated, particularly illuminating, after a careful reading of his book one is surprised to find how much is said in it."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p982 D 13 '28 420w

MEGROZ, RODOLPHE LOUIS, comp. Letters of women in love. 318p $4 Houghton [7s 6d T. Butterworth]

808.6 Love letters

"Mr. Mégroz divides his book into four sections, 'Fiancees,' 'Wives,' 'Lovers,' and 'Mothers, Daughters, Sisters and Friends,' and on the whole the last section is the best, containing, as it does, some characteristic epistles by Jane Austen, two delightful letters from the Marquise de Lambert to her children, and Lady Mary Montagu's amazingly modern letter to the Countess of Bute on the relations of parent and child. Of the 'fiancees' Elizabeth Barrett and Jane Welsh hold their own in good company; and Jane Welsh, now Carlyle, remains distinguished among the wives. Ninon de L'Enclos as a lover will compare favourably with any of her epistolary rivals."—New Statesman

"Mr. Mégroz offers his selection as (we quote the title-page) 'Disclosing the Female Heart from Girlhood to Old Age.' So silly, in fact meaningless, a claim almost damns the book at the outset, yet it contains material interesting both for its own sake and for its associations. . . We cannot imagine anyone reading the book steadily through, for very few of the shorter single letters reveal much personality, but as a bedside book perhaps, to dip and come again, it may have its attractions."

— + Nation and Ath 45:372 Je 15 '29 120w

"It would be unfair of course to blame Mr. Mégroz for lack of gaiety, for he has ransacked biography for his collection, and the only conclusion one can come to is that to most women, be they frail or circumspect, love and wit are irreconcilable on paper. . . Taken individually, no doubt, not a letter in this collection of a hundred but has some biographical or historical value; nevertheless reading them collectively is a dreary business. Patient Griseldas predominate."

— + New Statesman 33:382 Je 29 '29 330w

"In general—and rather surprisingly so—this collection demonstrates, not the richness of love's literature, but its poverty. This may be due in part to the faults of the edition. Whether or not it is, it has all the earmarks of a hasty and careless piece of work. The biographical sketches which introduce the letters are sprinkled with factual errors. The letters themselves are not always edited with a very perfect regard for the continuity of the matter contained in them." Margaret Wallace

— N Y Evening Post p6m Ag 17 '29 400w

Spec 142:973 Je 22 '29 90w

"A collection of cold-storage love letters is sufficiently dull as a rule, but this book escapes dullness because the writers so frequently escape from the subject of love. . . The longest and most miscellaneous section discovers Marjory Fleming and Jane Austen keeping company with Queen Victoria, Augusta Leigh, Maria Edgeworth and Christina Rossetti. There is a great deal that is lively and amusing in this half of the book, and many letters that it is a pleasure to read over again however well we may know them."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p557 Jl 11 '29 950w

MEIGS, CORNELIA LYNDE. Crooked apple tree. 300p il $2 Little

29-20798

How Anthony, aged twelve, and his sister Jane, aged ten, came to realize their ambition and lived in a house of their own planning along with the faithful Nora, while the crooked apple tree blossomed on the slope near their home.

---

Booklist 26:125 D '29

Reviewed by M. G. Bonner

N Y Times p34 O 6 '29 180w

"The splendid quality of the work of Cornelia Meigs has set her a little apart from the many writers of children's stories. She has made a niche for herself that no one else can quite fill. Other people write stories; Miss Meigs writes literature. . . Miss Meigs has the gift of making history live, and her genuine love of America and our hardy ancestors is part and parcel of whatever she writes. O. M. Fuller

+ N Y World p11m D 15 '29 220w

St Louis 27:316 N '29

"A charming story . . . which will be a delight for both boys and girls. The book is full of thrills and surprises such as children love, all interestingly told. There are many fascinating illustrations in black and white by Helen Mason Grose."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:462 N 23 '29 220w

MELLETT, JOHN CALVIN (JONATHAN BROOKS, pseud.). Chains of lightning. 313p $2 Bobbs

29-5698

The life and character of Jason Wheeler, the great electric power magnate, is told by several persons, who together give a composite picture of the man. His wife, the girl his son loves, his enemy the Senator, and a local politician are the narrators of the story.

---

"The story purports to be told, in turn, by five of the characters themselves, but the author has so completely failed to differentiate the literary styles that we are not fooled for a minute. The book should have a 100 per cent circulation among electric-power magnates."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p32 Ap 14 '29 100w

"Young Mr. Brooks, who is really one of the Mellett family, well known in all affairs in the middle West, is again telling of what he knows. It took courage to attempt a novel on Public Utilities, but the result has justified him. For it really does not matter what he writes about. He always tells a good story." I. W. Lawrence

+ Boston Transcript p5 Ap 20 '29 1550w

"Mr. Brooks has attempted a difficult task in this novel: to show the genial and humane side of an alleged plutocrat, a 'power baron,' a millionaire of millionaires—and at the same time to justify the man's outlook upon life and his sponsorship of a power trust. In spite of a gallant endeavor, what the author has really succeeded in doing is to demonstrate anew the truism that one may prove anything at all by means of fiction."

— N Y Times p14 Ap 14 '29 380w

"The story is taken up by each of the characters in turn, and interestingly told. Mr. Brooks writes competent fiction, even if his fiction is only an adornment to his argument. The public utilities people should be grateful for this defence of their cause."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:983 My 4 '29 250w

MELLON, MELVIN GUY. Chemical publications, their nature and use. (Int. chemical ser.) 253p il $2.50 McGraw

016.54 Chemistry—Bibliography. Chemistry—Study and teaching 28-25168

A handbook for college courses on chemical literature, original and secondary sources, with a chapter on library problems for class use.

---

Booklist 25:237 Mr '29

Reviewed by J. F. Smith

+ Chem & Met Eng 36:99 F '29 340w

"If it appears on first glance that this book is an unnecessary undertaking after the publication of Crane and Patterson's 'Literature of Chemistry,' the reader will soon find by examination of the contents that the new publication is fully justified. . . The book-making features and typography speak well for the publishers." J. F. Smith

+ Ind & Eng Chem 21:94 Ja '29 250w

Nature 123:636 Ap 27 '29 430w

N Y New Tech Bks 14:4 Ja '29

Pratt p12 spring '29

MELVILLE, HERMAN. Pierre; or, The ambiguities; with a preface by H. M. Tomlinson, and an introd. by John Brooks Moore. 505p $2.50 Dutton

29-12403

One of Melville's 'lost novels' published in the middle of the last century and never popular. The tale is probably symbolic, as were so many of Melville's novels. Pierre Glendinning seeking to help two girls, whom circumstance and snobbery had reduced to misery, brought sorrow and death to them and to himself.

---

"To write an apology for 'Pierre' is to forgive all, and to praise its virtues is to imagine them. Adherence to a cult fortifies the powers of imagination and forgiveness; but those whose eyes have not been blinded by the white light of the Melvillian revelation are condemned to see 'Pierre' merely as an absurd tale, absurdly told. The actions of the characters are insanely motivated, the sentiments of the book are maudlin, the 'transcendental philosophy' is hysterical, and the style of it all is nothing better than a pompous, strutting horror." B. R. Redman

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 O 20 '29 800w

MELVILLE, HERMAN—Continued
Reviewed by Raymond Weaver
N Y Evening Post p6m Je 15 '29 1450w

"This is an exemplary reprint of a book that is both a masterpiece and a failure. Some of Melville's best writing, and some of his worst lie here side by side. Only the student of Melville will not be frightened away by the incoherence, the discursiveness and the confusing metaphysics of 'Pierre.' After he unravels the twisted threads of its meaning he will be suitably rewarded—he will begin to understand the protean genius of Herman Melville." E. M. Benson
+ — Outlook 152:311 Je 19 '29 200w

"One is disposed to question whether the authors of the preface and the introduction have not given too high a rating to the book which they have helped to rescue from oblivion. It may, in a sense, be a severe criticism of the hypocrisies of mid-nineteenth century America, but it is probably more within the facts to regard it as the record of the inner struggles of a slightly 'damaged soul,' if one may apply Gamaliel Bradford's category to Herman Melville." C. D. Gray
Portland Evening News p5 Ag 20 '29 450w

"For the sake of all that is valid in 'Pierre,' one trusts that no new reader of Melville will approach this novel until he has read 'Moby-Dick' and 'White-Jacket' or 'Typee.' For 'Pierre' is a volcanic fragment of Melville's personality, an uncontrolled eruption, splendid and spectacular at one moment, but obscure and sulphurous and ashen at another. It is without doubt his most ambiguous achievement —so good that it cannot be neglected, and so verbose, high-flown, hectic, weakly theatrical, that one is at a loss to pick out a romantic work, from Byron onward, that can rival it in loud ineptitude." L: Mumford
+ — Sat R of Lit 5:1141 Je 29 '29 1500w

MELVILLE, LEWIS, pseud. See Benjamin, L: S.

MEMORIAL to George, by himself; ed. by the author of Miss Tiverton goes out. 282p il $2.50 Bobbs

Squirrels. 29-23771

" 'Memorial to George' is the diary of a pet squirrel of that name, interspersed with comments by the author on the rearing of squirrels and explanations of the actions described in a vague way by the squirrel's limited mind. The interjections are by far the best part, despite the fact that they remove the book from the category of a novel into that of an intimate essay. . . [It] is not written for children, obviously."—N Y Evening Post

---

"To read 'Memorial to George' is perforce to ride violently up and down on a literary see-saw. For the book is in alternate chapters by 'Miss Tiverton' and George. And 'Miss Tiverton,' in these glowing essays on the how and why of buying and keeping red squirrels and sundry other fascinating details related to this strange human pastime, has all the charm of a Vernon Lee writing of remembered places. Whereas George, with 'Miss Tiverton's' pen thrust in his paw, is neither essayist, novelist nor good red squirrel." F. H. Britten
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 D 15 '29 1450w
Boston Transcript p3 N 30 '29 300w
Cleveland Open Shelf p152 D '29

" 'Memorial to George' makes the mistake of being realistic and whimsical at the same time. This book is an astounding departure for the delicate, acid malice of the author of 'November Night.' It can hardly be reviewed as her other books have been. As a good treatise, slightly sentimentalized, on the habits and care of tame squirrels it should make a nice Christmas gift for sweet old ladies to give their grandchildren." Marjorie Johnson
— + N Y Evening Post p9m N 30 '29 420w

"Lovers of animal stories will find in 'Memorial to George' not only good, clean fun among the squirrels but a great deal of information on squirrel raising. Those who do not like animal stories will be less inclined to get out of patience with this one since in it the animals are given few human emotions, but are left rather to work out their own existence in as natural a way as captivity allows."
+ N Y Times p9 D 8 '29 600w

MERCER, CECIL WILLIAM (DORNFORD YATES, pseud.). Summer fruit. 410p $2.50 Minton

29-7960

When Anthony and Valerie first met he was a footman, pro tem, and she was a lady of leisure and wealth. Valerie got him, quietly, a better job. Their romance was progressing smoothly when affairs took a sudden turn and what with Anthony losing his memory and the melodramatic consequences thereof, the lovers put thru an exciting period before happiness came back to them.

---

"This tale with amnesia as its theme is unreal, but it has humor as well as tragedy."
+ — Bookm 70:xxiii S '29 70w
Boston Transcript p2 Ap 10 '28 550w
Cleveland Open Shelf p64 Ap '29

"If there is an overabundance of plot for one novel, it sounds logical enough in the unwinding. And the persons living through the pages are real enough to be, if not next door neighbors, at least friends in England."
N Y Times p24 Je 9 '29 430w

"A good love-story. It is more ambitious than the author's previous books but enlivened by equally amusing and likable characters."
+ Outlook 151:556 Ap 3 '29 20w
Sat R of Lit 5:1165 Jl 6 '29 350w
Wis Lib Bul 25:161 My '29

MEREZHKOVSKII, DMITRII SERGIEEVICH. Napoleon, the man; tr. by Catherine Zvegintzov. 267p $3 Dutton

B or 92 Napoléon I, emperor of the French
28-27790

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

---

"Extravagantly sentimental, wholly rhetorical book." R. E. Larsson
— Bookm 68:703 F '29 570w

"The story is readable enough; it is not easy, in less than 400 pages, to spoil the grand romance of Napoleon's career: we could name, however, some score of recent writers who have achieved the impossible. As history, it does not count. The frequent references at the bottom of the page are a very transparent bluff: they allude, in the vaguest way, to a few of the most obvious authorities. The tone is that of the most orthodox legend: the miraculous powers of the hero are accepted without question. If this were all, in spite of the author's name, the book might safely be ignored altogether. But Merezhkovsky's mysticism brings in a note which, however crazy has poetic power." Albert Guerard
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ja 5 '30 400w
Boston Transcript p2 D 18 '29 600w

"The dark and inscrutable elements in Napoleon's character, the portents attending his career, and his dual rôles of dreamer and man of action are skilfully assembled. It is difficult to convey the atmosphere, intense and vague, of a book in which gods and men, Atlantis and Eastern mythology, are so intermingled." Barrington Gates
Nation and Ath 44:754 Mr 2 '29 280w

"Mr. Merezhkovsky is a dervish of the first water, and his prolonged rhapsody must be, in the strict sense of the word, one of the most senseless books that has been published for a long time."
— New Statesman 32:604 F 16 '29 200w

"Mr. Merezhkovsky speaks slightingly of Napoleon's forty thousand biographers, yet this is his second book about that great man and what it adds to our understanding of its subject is very little. . . The author appears continually confused by his own distinctions; at one moment he writes of Napoleon as a Demiurgos, a Prometheus, a Dionysos, at the next he is explaining his motives as 'human all too human' and from these unresolved estimates there transpires an impression of the man that is both tawdry and unsatisfying."

— New Statesman 34:supxxvi D 7 '29 220w

"Merezhkowsky endows Napoleon with a strange mystical consciousness; a knowledge that he was not as other men. But as the exposition proceeds, the mystery deepens instead of clearing, until, despite the tremendous sincerity of the author, a sense of bored bewilderment is at length aroused. Perhaps Merezhkowsky is most disconcerting in shifting from sober truth to hyperbole, and in treating fact and metaphor with the same apparent seriousness." Howard Devree

— N Y Times p4 F 3 '29 500w

"Merezhkovsky is welcome to his interpretations, and even to his mythical conjectures about Napoleon's thoughts and reflections. But when he takes the facts and builds a slipshod book on them he deserves to be called to account. . . Writing evidently with the open book of another author before him, he transcribes hurriedly, jots a half-truth upon the page and passes on. . . This is the fourth instance of Napoleon-faking that I know of personally. Of what value is Merezhkovsky's interlarding of mystic interpretations stuck between the lines of a French historian's laborious research?" Harry Hansen

— N Y World p13 O 24 '29 850w

"The Russian mystic is at his best in this character study, for the simple reason that in Napoleon he has a subject qualified as no other ever was to sustain his own literary genius. . . It is a book to cause historians to despair, so utterly unsound it is in its method and so amazingly just in many of its conclusions." Leo Gershoy

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:535 D 22 '28 480w

"This psychological study of Napoleon contains many brilliant passages, but as a whole it will impress the ordinary reader as a contradictory, ecstatic, and at times incoherent piece of work."

— + Spec 142:131 Ja 26 '29 500w

"Even a most careful study reveals nothing but a mass of incoherent, rhapsodic and mystic utterances which possess little grounding in fact and belong, it is to be suspected, to the realm of fiction, mythology and mysticism."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p221 Mr 21 '29 540w

"The descriptive historian who adds colour and background to the drab facts of history is to be welcomed, despite his shortcomings. When however one assumes that an historical figure has attained a superhuman eminence, surely it is proper to revere it by some way other than that of writing a book which is no better than the bulk of the forty thousand before it, and much worse than many of them. The explanation of the facts of Napoleon's life by out-of-the-way, weird and improbable interpretations is meaningless and useless, for it adds nothing to the knowledge of the general reader, who is bewildered, and irritates the scholar and the critic."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p1074 D 19 '29 850w

MERREL, CONCORDIA. Miracle merchant. 337p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.] 28-29070

Romance comes to Mats, the homely little elevator girl at Alpha House, when Kelt Harlan, beauty specialist, moves into no. 10. Kelt preaches a doctrine of "think-beauty" that appeals to his fashionable clientèle, but he has no more ardent supporter than plain little Mats. In her case the doctrine works a real miracle—and Kelt is the last one to see it.

---

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ja 20 '29 100w

"It is a charming little tale, replete with amusing pictures of a certain phase of mercantile life in London. The author knows how to tell a story, although she fails in her object toward the end of 'The Miracle Merchant.'"

+ — Boston Transcript p3 F 9 '29 270w

"'The Miracle Merchant' is excellent light fiction, heightened in value by uncommonly individual characters, all of which goes to make a most readable tale."

+ N Y Times p8 Ja 27 '29 250w

Times [London] Lit Sup p470 Je 21 '28 150w

MERRIAM, CHARLES EDWARD. Chicago; a more intimate view of urban politics. 305p $3.50 Macmillan

977.31 Chicago—Politics and government. Chicago—Social conditions 29-12608

"Mr. Merriam, a resident of Chicago for some twenty-eight years, professor of political science at the University of Chicago, for six years an alderman, and for many years both a participant and observer in many political scenes, has written an account of the growth of the city from the fire of 1871 to 1929."—Chicago Daily Tribune

---

Reviewed by L. S. Cottrell, Jr.

Am J Soc 35:512 N '29 220w

Booklist 26:13 O '29

"Here is an unusual account of the manner in which a city government actually works, as contrasted with the theory of its operation. The author takes us behind the municipal scenes. He explains the background of his city, how it has come to be what it is. All city dwellers should, because all city politicians will, read this book."

+ Bookm 69:xii Ag '29 180w

"Chicago owes him much, as one cannot fail to realize in reading these absorbingly interesting pages. He has been close to the center of things, but not so close as to lose for a moment the perspective and the underlying significance of the pageant he watched and participated in during the last generation." H. L. McBain

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Je 9 '29 1350w

"What he has to tell is related not only with clarity, broad perspective, tolerance, and understanding, but with a delightful sense of humor that enables the author to poke fun at himself, as well as at some of the more spectacular of the city fathers." E. W.

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p8 Je 15 '29 350w

"The political biography of a city, done with the technical skill of an expert in political science and the intimate knowledge of a participant. The author speaks of crooks and corrupt politicians in a pleasantly modulated voice but with as much fulness of detail in regard to names and places as though they were all dead—which many of them are, politically."

+ Christian Century 46:1188 S 25 '29 150w

"Professor Merriam is finely tolerant, dispassionate and clear of understanding." W. J. A.

+ Christian Science Monitor p8 Jl 24 '29 700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p152 D '29

Reviewed by P. H. Douglas

Nation 129:630 N 27 '29 900w

"The title localizes his book somewhat, but a large part of this material is of national interest. One's understanding of the United States is appreciably deepened by reading Mr. Merriam's book." J. A. Fairbank

+ New Repub 59:321 Ag 7 '29 550w

"The book is unsensational and written with the detachment of the true observer. Professor Merriam makes no attempt to offer solutions for the various problems confronting Chicago. He merely states his observations. The result is a very fine book; perhaps the best book that has been written on Chicago." W. R. Burnett

MERRIAM, C: E:—Continued
+ N Y Evening Post p7m Je 29 '29 480w

Reviewed by C: W. Thompson
N Y Times p1 Je 9 '29 800w

"Chicago itself, as well as the rest of the country, should be thankful for Professor Merriam's unsensational but searching study."
+ R of Rs 80:18 Jl '29 250w
St Louis 27:281 O '29

Reviewed by R. J. Davis
Sat R of Lit 5:1191 Jl 20 '29 500w
Spec 143:253 Ag 24 '29 1200w

"Charles Edward Merriam's 'Chicago' is a summary of observations rather than a special study. For that reason it may be, technically considered, less valuable as a contribution to political science than various books which have preceded it. But it is meant for the public rather than for specialists, and its great virtue is that it epitomizes and interprets a general situation in a manner to enlighten and entertain the reader."
+ — Springf'd Republican p10 Jl 26 '29 500w

"Barring the lack of an index, Professor Merriam's study will inspire and guide others to seek findings of their own, while those recorded by him are available for effective use by citizens in any urban community. With the vividness of a moving picture and the abrupt changes of the radio we see and hear the marvellously contrasting actors as they cross the stage realistically reproduced in these pages." Graham Taylor
+ — Survey 62:499 Ag 1 '29 620w
Times [London] Lit Sup p671 Ag 29 '29 70w
Wis Lib Bul 25:321 O '29
World Tomorrow 13:42 Ja '30 120w

MERRIFIELD, FRED. Rediscovery of Jesus. 270p $1.75 Holt

232 Jesus Christ 29-12224

An interpretation of Jesus dealing particularly with His personality rather than with His life and teaching. An appendix contains an outline of synoptic passages reflecting: The historical background of Jesus' life; Jesus' own religious convictions; and Editorial appreciations and corrections of later years. Intended for college students.

---

"This is a frank, free, thoroughly rational attempt to present to modern readers the historic Jesus who exists, however dimly seen, behind the mists of legend, tradition and dogma which have hidden him so long. Tearing ruthlessly aside all later accretions, even of the Gospel record, the author would show us the Jesus rediscovered in our time by the higher critics who have penetrated to the original sources of information."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p31 S 15 '29 350w

"A certain undue exuberance—the author was for many years a baseball coach, in fact was the man who introduced baseball into Japan—is evident, yet the unpleasant odor of muscular Christianity which is characteristic of many attempts to present the Nazarene to athletically inclined young America—especially in the Midwest—is not to be detected in this book. The author is familiar with the results of Biblical study, and utilizes them without parade throughout his book." M. S. Enslin
+ Crozer Q 6:495 O '29 320w

"As one reads the book, the picture of Jesus opposing the literalists and bigots melts into that of a baseball game with an able pitcher striking out the batters in succession, while Coach Merrifield expresses his hearty approval from the dugout. But this is not to intimate that the book is either irreverently intimate or claptrap. The evident enthusiasm of the author simply cannot be restrained. He is acquainted and thoroughly sympathetic with modern investigation of Jesus and seeks to set them to cheers."
+ J Religion 9:657 O '29 300w

"Dr. Merrifield has given us a book that will do much to help people see just how entrancing the life of Jesus is . . . The book is a thoughtful, scholarly, and devout effort which will appeal to laity and clergy with equal force."
+ World Tomorrow 13:42 Ja '30 150w

MERRILL, WILLIAM STETSON. Code for classifiers; principles governing the consistent placing of books in a system of classification. 128p $1.60 A.L.A.

025.4 Classification—Books 28-28998

An attempt to furnish classifiers and students of classification with a guide to the "principles governing the consistent placing of books in a system of classification." A book can stand in only one place. It is essential that all similar books should be classed in the same place and that all persons concerned with their classification should treat them similarly. The topics are arranged in the order of the Decimal classification, but the code may be applied to any system of classification.

---

"A useful book for everyone concerned with classifying."
+ Booklist 25:147 Ja '29

"Useful to the classifier and to instructors in library schools."
+ Pratt p6 winter '29

MERSEY, CLIVE BIGHAM, 2nd viscount. Kings of England, 1066-1901. 522p il $6 Dutton [21s J. Murray]

923.1 Great Britain—Kings and rulers

Short accounts of the kings and queens of England, from William the Conqueror to Queen Victoria, giving sufficient incident to form an estimate of their characters and careers.

---

Boston Transcript p7 N 27 '29 850w

"Over so enormous a field no one would claim to write authoritatively, and on the whole the accounts are rather conventional, but contemporary authorities are frequently used, and the pronouncements on character are nearly always interesting, though, perhaps, always too favourable."
+ Sat R 148:455 O 19 '29 650w

"The first merit in the compiler is an eye for vivid and significant detail. That Lord Mersey has. He reconstructs in brief and vivid sentences the appearance, the dress, the amusements, the tastes in food and in friends of the rulers. Wide and judicious reading give him plenty of material for the illuminating anecdote and vivid touch of nature."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1042 D 12 '29 470w

MERWIN, SAMUEL. Lady can do. 233p $2 Houghton

29-22430

The Cuppys of Long Island are very rich, but not very admirable people, as Elsie Penn, their newly engaged secretary, soon discovers. Mr Cuppy had presented Mrs Cuppy with a beautiful Chinese headdress; that night Mr Cuppy is murdered in a rather gruesome fashion. A number of Chinese servants seem to be involved; Mr John Dane, a nice young artist, finds himself even more severely entangled. But Elsie, who has fallen in love with Mr Dane, helps solve the mystery.

---

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 N 10 '29 180w

"Mr. Merwin, who is a very competent storyteller, when he wants to be, has thrown about as thin a screen of smoke as is compatible with even the most hard-boiled conscience. You can fairly see Mr. Merwin following the rule of thumb, 'conventional characters, unconventional environment, and vice versa.' "
— Boston Transcript p3 N 16 '29 200w

MERZ, CHARLES. And then came Ford. 321p il $3 Doubleday, Doran

B or 92 Ford, Henry. Ford motor company, Detroit 29-8977

The American industrial and social stage was set . . . and then came Ford. Without attempting an analysis of Henry Ford's mind Mr Merz outlines his phenomenal career, the development of the Ford and the influence of the man and the car on the industrial and social life of the times.

---

Booklist 25:358 Je '29

"Mr. Merz's book is assembled with the skill of a social mechanic and a ready writer, from histories, from manifold records and wrought into a useful and exciting book. Like the new Ford it has unity and drive."

+ Bookm 69:333 My '29 400w

"Just as no new facts about Mr. Ford's life or personality are disclosed (Mr. Merz gives no evidence of ever having met the subject of his book) neither does he contribute anything to the known facts of our national development, nor analyze and interpret the play of cause and effect in the world of industry or men. But he does paint a vivid picture. He sharpens the consciousness of to-day by setting it in heightened contrast with the past." Evans Clark

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Mr 31 '29 1200w

"Mr. Merz has done a lively piece of writing and has put into pictures some of the crucial changes in our civilization." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p1 Ap 27 '29 550w

"He has not added anything to the public's knowledge of Mr. Ford or American history; but he has given a vivid panoramic sketch of the incredible fantasy that is America and the true-story fairy tale that is Mr. Ford's."

+ — Nation 128:433 Ap 10 '29 160w

"As an article it would have been breezy, dramatic, and somewhat informative; but thinned out to cover three hundred and twenty-one pages, the demand it makes on the reader's time is too heavy for the rewards it offers." L. S. Morris

— + New Repub 58:339 My 8 '29 450w

"It was exceedingly pertinent of Mr. Charles Merz, in his studies of contemporary American culture, to have devoted himself to the modern Titan, Henry Ford. He writes as from a certain distance, which already lends perspective; his book is not so much an intimately documented biography as the dramatized account of a demiurge and his impact upon an age, a century. Unwaveringly, Mr. Merz sees Henry Ford in relation to the whole social development around him and makes him symbol of it." Matthew Josephson

N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 23 '29 1350w

"Mr. Merz does not give us the soul of Henry Ford. We do not learn what makes this strange man's wheels go round, how his carburetor is adjusted, of what metal his brains are made. Mr. Ford remains X but X equals the new America. Even Mr. Merz's book would have been written in a different tempo and key had it not been for the automobile. It moves rapidly and smoothly over good roads and takes us over a vast expanse of country with a minimum of fatigue. What more could be asked of any car—or any book?" R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p1 Mr 24 '29 1450w

"This is a swiftly moving and dramatic summary of the epic career of Henry Ford. It is not only a biography of the man made famous by his Model T, but it also serves as an illuminating account of the effect of modern industrial civilization upon American social development."

+ Outlook 151:514 Mr 27 '29 150w

St Louis 27:168 My '29

"It is a story full of color and contrast. The color and drama tend at times to run away with Mr. Merz's pen. The style might well be more sober, and so at times might be the conclusions. There is not evident in it the patient delving into corporation history, into labor and financial records, and into the subtler social results of the automobile, which might have made it a highly valuable book. Yet in its present form it is a glittering and fascinating story, and it does something to fill a distinct gap. We need more treatments of our large-scale industries written from this point of view, though composed in a more scholarly and less journalistic spirit."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:51 Ag 17 '29 500w

"This is a less incisive and suggestive book than Mr Merz's 'American Band Wagon,' but it is an entertaining and intelligent essay in light journalism. . . If Mr Merz has not fully grasped his opportunities for social analysis, he delivers a sprightly monolog on the America that we know and on Mr Ford's part in its transformation."

+ — Springf'd Republican p12 Ap 12 '29 420w

METFESSEL, MILTON FRANKLIN. Phonophotography in folk music; with an introd. by Carl E. Seashore. (Univ. of N.C. social study ser.) 181p $3 Univ. of N.C. press [13s 6d Oxford]

781.24 Negro songs. Musical notation. Music-recorders 28-24375

American negro songs are studied thru the process of sound-photography, and notations on pitch and time recorded. With illustrations of the graphs or pattern notations of specific songs, and a discussion of the types of songs and their graphic analysis. Authors are of the Graduate school and the Department of psychology of the State University of Iowa.

---

"This work by Seashore and his students is an excellent contribution to objective psychology, as well as to methods of recording certain bits of vanishing cultures, or behavior traits, which should by all means be preserved." J. P.

+ Am J Psychol 41:659 O '29 800w

St Louis 27:20 Ja '29

Times [London] Lit Sup p235 Mr 21 '29 600w

METZGER, SOL. Putting analyzed; a book on a perplexing phase of golf covering half the game. 102p il $1.50 Doubleday, Doran

796.3 Golf 29-11423

An authority on golf tells, scientifically, how to find the most direct line on the green from the ball to the bottom of the cup. The golfer is thereby taught how to achieve one-putt holes.

---

Booklist 26:21 O '29

Cleveland Open Shelf p91 Je '29

MEYENDORFF, ALEKSANDR FELIKSOVICH, baron. Background of the Russian revolution. (Brown univ., the Colver lectures, 1928) 193p $2.50 Holt

947.084 Russia—History—Revolution, 1917 29-20133

In three lectures delivered at Brown university on the Colver foundation, Baron Meyendorff, a former member of the Russian state duma, offers an interpretation of the background and significance of the Russian revolution which differs radically from the view commonly accepted.

---

Booklist 26:64 N '29

"It has neither the thrust of a political pamphlet nor the solidity of a piece of historical analysis. There are promiscuous quotations from every possible and impossible source, from Will Durant to Calvin Coolidge, offered to a class at Brown University as the Colver Lectures."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 S 15 '29 200w

"The intellectual relics of Czarist days should restrain themselves from the writing of books. Their pens betray them. The dispassionate reader is forced to marvel that seemingly educated men could be so ignorant of their own country, or indeed of the things of this world. The only thing their pages clarify is the reason why they have become émigrés." Harold Kellock

MEYENDORFF, A. F.—Continued

— Nation 129:498 O 30 '29 700w

N Y Times p9 S 8 '29 420w

MEYER, HAROLD DIEDRICH, and EDDLEMAN, SAMUEL MCKEE. Financing extra curricular activities. (Extra curricular lib.) 132p $1 Barnes, A.S. & co.

371.8 Student activities. School finance
29-9850

"A practical and suggestive discussion of the methods by which any school can finance its own extra-curricular activities. The authors contend that it is genuine educational experience for the students to discover ways and means of meeting these expenses."—Cleveland Open Shelf

Cleveland Open Shelf p119 S '29

"The value of the book lies in its analysis of methods of raising and handling money and in its suggestive schemes of accounting. The authors do not present anything especially new. The size and the style of the handbook make it convenient for the busy reader; the bibliography at the end furnishes a list of reading material for those who wish to make further study of methods of obtaining and accounting for school money. The book is a valuable addition to the literature already in the field of extra-curriculum activities." T: M. Deam

+ School R 37:710 N '29 250w

MEYNELL, FRANCIS. Typography of newspaper advertisements; with a display of English, American, French, Dutch and German type-faces; a table for calculating the number of words of any type which can be fitted into a given space; and a gallery of contemporary advertisements. 240p il $12.50 Stokes [£2 2s Benn]

659 Advertising. Type and type-founding. Printing—Specimens
29-29589

"The greater part of the book consists of an exhibition of types and the reproduction of English and American advertisements illustrating methods of display. No fewer than fifty-four type-faces are given. There is also an extraordinarily useful section containing tables of the measurements of the various types. Mr. Meynell's preliminary discourse occupies only fifty pages."—Nation and Ath

"This adorable book will be of the greatest use to advertisers and printers. Mr. Meynell is both an expert and an artist in all matters connected with typography and design in printing. Here he puts his knowledge and taste at the service of advertisers in newspapers."

+ Nation and Ath 46:150 O 26 '29 120w

"Here is an epitome of current advertising practice in presentation and a concrete proof of the pains and brains and taste that have gone to the making of the remarkable progress of these past few years."

+ Spec 143:532 O 19 '29 220w

MEYNELL, LAURENCE W. Shadow and the stone. 308p $2 Appleton

29-17550

A quite young Englishman, Charles Felstead, is suddenly thrust into the midst of a great adventure when he is mistaken for a mysterious Sir Henry. He finds himself mixed up with the police, African revolts, a green stone of great value, and a beautiful, enigmatic girl. After much excitement it all clears up and Charles is left with the beautiful girl.

Bookm 70:xxxiii O '29 50w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p26 S 15 '29 80w

"This is a most improbable sounding tale, but a very absorbing one, for all that."

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 5 '29 260w

"About half-way through the book the story ceases to be a mystery and becomes a thriller pure and simple. It has several perfectly satisfactory villains and some detectives whose fighting abilities are more in evidence than are their deductive powers."

+ — N Y Times p38 O 20 '29 150w

"Conventional mystery stuff, strong in action and ordinary in plot. The story seethes with violence, but suffers from a lack of ingenuity in the working out of the conclusion."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:322 O 26 '29 120w

MEYNELL, VIOLA (MRS JOHN DALLYN). Alice Meynell; a memoir. 354p il $5 Scribner

B or 92 Meynell, Alice Christiana (Thompson) (Mrs Wilfrid Meynell)
29-18656

Viola Meynell's biography of her mother conveys admirably the quality of her personality and of the fastidious art which charmed Victorian readers and lives in anthology pieces for readers of today. The many letters included are evidence of the warmth of her literary friendships with Coventry Patmore, Francis Thompson, George Meredith and other writers of her day.

Booklist 26:67 N '29

"To the impressions already formed by her lovely and highly individual verse and by her lucid, but laden, prose, is added a striking group of vivid and personal glimpses. By means of letters, anecdotes, and revealing recollections, Viola Meynell has given us a new and vital picture of the contradictory and appealing person who was her mother. As for the impression they give us of Alice Meynell herself, something is left to be wished. There are many fascinating suggestions which her daughter, out of a most excusable reticence, fails to elaborate as a less intimate biographer might have done."

+ Bookm 70:209 O '29 550w

"The word distinction, most often used to describe Alice Meynell's literary quality, could easily be applied to the memoir by her daughter, Viola Meynell. It is a biography worthy of its subject. Though written with feeling, it avoids the ecstasies of over-appreciation and shows a respect for the defenses of personal dignity which Mrs. Meynell so much valued." H. F. Whicher

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 S 15 '29 1500w

"No one who loves bright and fair ideals, gay laughter, and the happiness which comes from lovely living, can fail to feel that such a book adds to the sum of human joys." I. W. Lawrence

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 21 '29 1700w

"The distinctive contribution of the book is in quotation from diaries and letters, hitherto, except from the Meredith letters, mostly withheld." A. K. T.

+ Cath World 130:243 N '29 750w

Cleveland Open Shelf p154 D '29

Reviewed by L. H. Smith

Nation 129:630 N 27 '29 800w

Reviewed by Leonard Woolf

Nation and Ath 45:798 S 21 '29 900w

"This memoir of Alice Meynell is a beautiful book because it reveals, intimately and generously, a beautiful life—one that was thoroughly and nobly English in its quality." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 60:178 O 2 '29 1450w

"So far as it goes, it seems a beautiful and convincing picture: no claim is made for the subject that those in sympathy with her and her point of view could deny. It reproduces much of what was lovable in her character, and the present writer never once glimpsed anything that was not lovable." C. O'R.

+ New Statesman 33:744 S 28 '29 450w

"As a piece of literary history, the memoir deserves a place alongside of the autobiographies of W. B. Yeats, for Miss Meynell has presented her mother with admirable tact and sympathetic detachment." Horace Gregory

+ N Y Evening Post p6m S 21 '29 720w

"Viola Meynell has written an extraordinarily interesting account of her mother's career, but it does not go deep enough into the springs of Alice Meynell's nature. We see Alice Meynell as her daughter saw her and we feel the excusable prejudice and understand that this is a book of delicate reticences and quiet suppressions." Herbert Gorman

+ — N Y Times p4 S 8 '29 2550w

St Louis 27:314 N '29

Reviewed by T. E. Welby

Sat R 148:324 S 21 '29 400w

"She has done it well, with a wealth of detail which will be invaluable to any student of Alice Meynell's prose and verse, but without displaying much natural aptitude for criticism. And while the picture she paints of her mother is vivid and delicately accurate, there are some matters about which I should like to know a little more. A discrete reserve, of course, is at present desirable, and nobody could know better than one of the family just what to put in and what to leave out. But it is to be hoped that in the next generation an intelligence notably acute, courageous, and tactful will retell the story of this exceedingly interesting career." Theodore Maynard

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:151 S 21 '29 1500w

"Miss Meynell has done something quite out of the common. Close relationship has sealed neither her eyes, her lips, nor her heart. She has spoken the truth in love, probably the only way in which full biographical truth can be spoken. It is a remarkable achievement."

+ Spec 143:338 S 14 '29 1000w

"Superior persons who declare that no literary good ever came out of journalism will have to deal with the facts reiterated in 'Alice Meynell' —facts always known, but sometimes forgotten, and here presented with added emphasis and wealth of detail. From a lifetime of amazingly indefatigable industry came a rare and delicate art, as precious and as pure as the most exacting esthete could ask. From almost a half century of journalism came poetry and prose, distilled and aristocratic, exact and elegant, scornful of 'the savage journalese' by which less fastidious souls may have brought her profession into literary disrepute."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e S 8 '29 2050w

"The book is very satisfying. It is what a literary biography should be, a well-edited anthology, and the Alice Meynell who wrote her own life in so much familiar prose and verse appears deliciously phantom-wise between quotations and in corners. Apart from the dutiful and humorous narrative, which proceeds from a mental companion rather than from an abashed daughter, the reader has only to open it at random to find new passages from the giants of old."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p698 S 12 '29 1900w

"Amid the snares and pitfalls of filial biography, Mrs. Meynell's daughter threads her way, Thetis-footed; a notable achievement. The life unfolds with a singular effect of frankness and fulness, yet never overpasses the invisible line of good taste; the line that all these Meynells toe by instinct. Tribute is here—how dreadful if it were not!—but never the too much praise." Florence Converse

+ Yale R n s 19:412 winter '30 850w

MIES, PAUL. Beethoven's sketches; an analysis of his style based on a study of his sketch-books; tr. by Doris L. Mackinnon. 198p $3.75 (8s 6d) Oxford

781 Beethoven, Ludwig van [29-17403]

This analysis of Beethoven's style is based on a study of the sketch-books containing the outlines and notes on which he later built his finished works. These preliminary sketches of his music in manuscript form, which were originally opened up in four volumes by Gustav Nottebohm, have been correlated in a small volume analyzing the style-determinants which affect melodic line and form, unity of structure, development of material, etc.

Boston Transcript p2 D 11 '29 300w

"To those interested in the minute details of Beethoven's methods of working the whole book, with its extremely numerous music-type examples (both of the sketches and of the final versions) will be of the greatest value and service. Miss Mackinnon's translation reads on the whole very well. Some of the technical terms are occasionally Germanized English rather than our normal musical speech, but the meaning is practically always quite clear."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p639 Ag 15 '29 320w

"The Sketch Books in which Beethoven evolved and refined his musical material cover the entire period of his creative work and are undoubtedly music pedagogy's most priceless inheritance . . . Students have long been familiar from the Nottebohm excerpts of the Sketch Books with such inspiring data as the evolution of the themes of the 'Eroica' symphony, but this is the first instance, in the writer's knowledge, where certain general principles and methods are derived and assembled from them." Douglas Moore

+ Yale R n s 19:400 winter '30 700w

MILLAR, RONALD, and FREE, EDWARD ELWAY. Sunrays and health. 125p $1.50 McBride

615.83 Ultra-violet rays. Sunshine 29-14746

"Part of this book is devoted to a simple explanation of the composition and properties of sunlight and the part that the ultra-violet element plays, especially in relation to the human body. The geographical distribution of ultra violet is taken up. We find that a place in the sun in New York City is not of much value from November to April so far as getting one's share of ultra violet is concerned. A useful list of window glass substitutes is quoted with figures indicating the percentage of solar ultra violets these substitutes may be expected to transmit. The ultra violet lamp, however, seems to be the climax toward which the book works."—Am J Pub Health

"For the intelligent reader accustomed to taking all his reading with a grain of salt this little book will prove both informative and entertaining." M. E. Champion

+ — Am J Pub Health 19:1277 N '29 370w

Boston Transcript p2 S 7 '29 450w

Nature 124:873 D 7 '29 160w

Reviewed by W. B. Shaw

R of Rs 80:16 Ag '29 150w

St Louis 27:283 O '29

MILLAY, MRS CORA (BUZZELLE). Little Otis. 103p il $2 Norton

811 28-22729

"Little Otis is a small boy, perhaps 6 or 7 years old, and the verses that comprise this book (they are by the mother of Edna St. Vincent Millay) describe his investigations into life and tell how he felt about what he discovered and what he thought about the grown-ups around him and their doings."—N Y Times

"As delightful a book of child verses as can be imagined. It is as felicitous and charming as either Milne or Stevenson, and every whit as appropriately designed to catch and hold the attention of children's minds."

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 7 '28 180w

"Little Otis was created with a sense of humor and facility at delightful rhymes. He is not given to the whimsical sentimentality of most rhyme children; and his meditations upon grown-ups will, we think, be enjoyed by grown-ups. . . Little Otis should be popular, although he will never be a serious rival to the incomparable Christopher Robin."

+ Ind 121:330 O 6 '28 200w

N Y Times p32 S 23 '28 90w

"A rollicking book of verse for juvenile readers which will be enjoyed immensely by their parents."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e D 23 '28 160w

MILLAY, EDNA ST VINCENT. Buck in the snow, & other poems. 69p $2 (5s) Harper

811 28-22595

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

---

"The Millay of 'A Few Figs from Thistles,' 'Renascence,' and 'Second April' is met once more in these pages—but it is a Millay, more subdued, less rebellious. Wisdom comes with age, even for poets. Seven sonnets ring down the curtain on a remarkable performance. Two especially are memorable, 'To Jesus on His Birthday,' and 'On Hearing a Symphony of Beethoven,' the latter being a magnificent eulogy on music." C. J. Q.

\+ Cath World 129:500 Jl '29 350w

" 'The Buck in the Snow,' at its best, shows no retrogression—and no advance. The sonnets are almost all as magnificent as iron trumpets blown amid silver fog. The rest of the book is, largely, silver fog—where, in vague forms that do not fit her genius, and with the vague indirectness that has become the fad of the instant, she wanders from her sure bright singing speed." E. M. Root

\+ — Christian Century 46:19 Ja 3 '29 450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p53 Ap '29

"One wishes The Buck in the Snow to be less clever, to be less voulu, to be less written because one has been advertised as a poet and therefore some poetry has been expected of one."

— Dial 86:164 F '29 100w

\+ Nation and Ath 44:529 Ja 12 '29 60w

"Miss Millay's poetry has two admirable qualities—emotional substance and great quickness of language. Unfortunately in this volume there is often a lack of intellectual force, and Miss Millay's surprising gift for spare rhetoric masters her, so that at the end of some of the poems we are left with the singing twang of the bowstring in our ears, and an uneasy conviction that no arrow has been shot."

New Statesman 52:795 Mr 30 '29 350w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 33:636 D '28

Pratt p25 winter '29

"Miss St. Vincent Millay perhaps achieves a little too easily. She has delicacy of diction and an instinct which allows her to wander safely on the frontier of sentimentality, but the delicacy is indulged and the wandering is a concession to weakness." T. E. Welby

— \+ Sat R 146:851 D 22 '28 200w

"The disappointment of the book lies in the number of poems which fail of their effect, which leave the reader where he was before, which are indeed not poetry but verse. But there is a minority of poems in the book in which Miss Millay's weaknesses are overcome, poems which we feel to be necessary, which are individual and complete."

— \+ Times [London] Lit Sup p27 Ja 10 '29 600w

Wis Lib Bul 24:343 D '28

MILLAY, KATHLEEN (MRS HOWARD IRVING YOUNG). Against the wall. 442p $2.50 Macaulay

29-18337

Rebecca Brewster lived in a small town in Maine. Her mother, a widow, was the whining variety; her brother Teddy, was a cad; lovely little Doris, her sister, could think only of her own prettiness. But Rebecca was different; she wanted to go to college and she did not want to marry nice Sandy and be a small town wife. So off she went to Matthew, a famous college for women, and found it very different from what she had imagined. There were petting parties, crushes, faculty prejudices, snobbishness of every variety to face, and hampering rules and regulations on every hand. Becky fought gallantly for tolerance and lost; finally she had to leave or go mad. After more than two years of college she was on her way to New York and freedom.

---

"Miss Millay has a worthy purpose, at bottom, but throughout her story she scatters inaccuracies, impossibilities and her exaggerations are grotesque. She hangs her grievance on the poor, struggling faculty rather than on the scatter-brained students who comprise the college. 'Against the Wall' starts on a false premise and raises a false hell. Miss Millay's hysteria defeats its own purpose. In a fight against things collegiate, she is sophomoric."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 S 15 '29 360w

" 'Against the Wall' is not a really pleasant book to read. It is shocking, in that it is such a real picture. Its very rebelliousness may make enemies, but it should find a way to break down the wall of inhibitions and prohibitions that is an embarrassment to womanhood's enlargement." J. S. B.

Boston Transcript p2 S 11 '29 520w

Cleveland Open Shelf p143 N '29

"This is a bad novel—tasteless, flamboyant and dull. There are, however, two reasons why it cannot be consigned without comment to a well-merited limbo: it is being ballyhooed as a true and scathing indictment of the women's colleges, and it was written by a poet of some distinction who ought to have known better." E. H. W.

— New Repub 60:331 N 6 '29 180w

"A remarkably skillful blending of propaganda and narrative. She has written a most bitter and thorough indictment of women's colleges, and at the same time an absorbing record of a sensitive girl's adolescence. From either standpoint the novel has a compelling interest. It is a book primarily for college women, but the human background of the story and the rich, varied prose in which it is written should assure it a far larger audience. . . Miss Millay's prose is racy and exciting and her subjective portrait of Rebecca is a characterization to be remembered."

\+ N Y Times p14 Ag 25 '29 530w

"The times are out of joint in the women's colleges. But Kathleen Millay was not born to set them right."

— Outlook 152:710 Ag 28 '29 250w

MILLAY, KATHLEEN (MRS HOWARD IRVING YOUNG). Hermit thrush. 129p $2 Liveright

811 29-7624

Miss Millay's second collection contains lyrics in many moods, chiefly of love, laughter, and songs of nature, including also a group of poems on Sacco and Vanzetti.

---

Reviewed by C: Divine

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 My 19 '29 60w

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 3 '29 170w

Reviewed by J. D. Tasker

Nation 129:96 Jl 24 '29 50w

"In Kathleen Millay's poetry is found the penetration, the accurately and simply couched impressions which characterize Emily Dickinson's work. Miss Millay has the real qualities of a poet—intelligence, sincerity, variety, vigor, perception, compassion and intensity—and withal the literary accouterments for their expression." Elling Aannestad

\+ New Repub 59:133 Je 19 '29 320w

Reviewed by Horace Gregory

N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 30 '29 40w

"She has something of the same gift of swift verse, of evanescent beauty, light and shade caught at the moment of one passing into the other, and she has rather more than Edna's liking for objectification."

\+ N Y Times p2 Ap 28 '29 200w

"With all her virtues . . . the triviality of some of her poems makes them merely pretty when they should be beautiful. The Sacco-Vanzetti case brought forth from Miss Millay six poems and they seem to me the best things in the book. Here her song has attained new dimensions." Granville Hicks

\+ — N Y World p10m Ap 28 '29 100w

"Much of Miss Millay's verse has the epigrammatic quality of her famous sister's. There is bitterness, beauty, facility, and delicacy in these poems, and they show a considerable lyric gift."
+ Outlook 151:556 Ap 3 '29 30w
Pratt p27 autumn '29

"The critic may be permitted a feeling of irritation that work so good is not better."
+ — Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 21 '29 450w

MILLER, ALICE (DUER) (MRS HENRY WISE MILLER.). The prince serves his purpose. 293p $2 Dodd
29-8721

Three long short love stories. The first concerns a young American girl, her guardian whom she loved and the prince who loved her; the second, an heiress and an archeologist on a Central American expedition; and the third, the renewed romance of the movie star, Miss La Marne, and her ex-husband, Paul.

Bookm 69:xxiv Jl '29 280w
Reviewed by Garreta Busey
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 Mr 5 '29 600w
Boston Transcript p2 My 25 '29 250w

"Her characterization is shrewd and pleasantly satirical, and her situations have just enough comedy in them to assure the reader that all will end well."
+ N Y Times p28 S 22 '29 200w

"The manner of these stories is far fresher than the matter. Mrs. Miller has an indefinable but undeniable air of breeding and cleverness that can lend the most conventional story a faint flavor of sophistication."
+ — Sat R of Lit 5:1099 Je 8 '29 160w
Wis Lib Bul 25:162 My '29

MILLER, DAVID HUNTER. Peace pact of Paris; a study of the Briand-Kellogg treaty. 287p $3 Putnam
341.2 Peace. Arbitration, International. Pact of Paris 28-29622

Mr Miller, who has written a two-volume history of the drafting of the covenant (Book Review Digest, 1928) here makes a similar study, authoritative and exact, of the Briand-Kellogg treaty signed at Paris in August, 1928 by fifteen nations.

Reviewed by N. D. Baker
Am Hist R 34:843 Jl '29 600w
Booklist 25:194 F '29
Reviewed by W: MacDonald
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 Ja 6 '29 1100w
Boston Transcript p5 D 15 '28 700w

"The book is a scholarly explanation of this important document and belongs in the library of every up-to-date lawyer or layman." Francis Deák
+ Columbia Law R 29:687 My '29 420w
Reviewed by W: MacDonald
Nation 128:136 Ja 30 '29 250w

"This is a useful book of reference. Mr. Miller's explanation of the negotiations is clear, and his comments on them are fair and sensible. His view of the consequences of this treaty errs on the side of optimism."
+ Nation and Ath 45:54 Ap 13 '29 70w
Reviewed by J: B. Whitton
N Y Times p1 Ja 20 '29 980w

"He has taken the documents published by the United States Government in 'the General Pact for the Renunciation of War,' and with a few additions and rearrangements has let them account for nearly half of his book. The rest consists however, of an extremely valuable running criticism of the notes exchanged which should make the drafting officials in three world capitals alternately glow and squirm. The author is an expert in this line, and his comments are sharp and to the point."
+ Outlook 151:352 F 27 '29 230w
Pratt p8 summer '29
Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 79:22 Mr '29 120w
Times [London] Lit Sup p406 My 16 '29 230w

MILLER, FRANCIS TREVELYAN. Lindbergh. anniversary ed 320p il $2.50 Putnam
B or 92 Lindbergh, Charles Augustus
29-14518

A pictorial account of the life of Charles Lindbergh from babyhood to the present.

Cleveland Open Shelf p134 N '29

"Especially complete is this record of his good-will tour to South America. Each picture is accompanied by brief explanatory notes and Mr. Miller has written for each of the sections into which he has classified the pictures an introduction that breathes a most ardent spirit of hero worship."
N Y Times p14 O 6 '29 230w
St Louis 27:290 O '29

"This book would make an excellent present for boy or girl, and besides its romantic interest will serve as a painless teacher of geography."
+ Spec 143:642 N 2 '29 100w

"Any one who desires to have Lindbergh's narrative presented by means of pictures will find it here."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e Jl 14 '29 70w

MILLER, HUGH GORDON. Isthmian highway; a review of the problems of the Caribbean; foreword by Miguel Cruchaga, and introd. by James M. Beck. 327p il $4.50 Macmillan
386.2 Panama canal. Monroe doctrine. Panama—Foreign relations—United States. United States—Foreign relations—Panama
29-10420

Mr Miller's book is an orderly and clear-cut statement of the history of the Panama Canal Zone, and a discussion of the international problems rising out of the operation and protection of the Isthmian highway, and of the application of the Monroe doctrine to those problems.

Am Hist R 34:888 Jl '29 100w
Booklist 26:13 O '29

"Mr. Miller might have been more successful if before publishing his book, he had read Mr. Denny's account of our policy in Nicaragua and if he had been familiar with our policy in Cuba, Hayti, and Santo Domingo." R. L. Buell
— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ag 4 '29 540w

"Tells the full story of our relations to the countries of the Caribbean and presents a broad view of our international responsibilities in that connection. To his mind, it is no narrow national interest but one which must be considered as involving the rights and interests of the world at large. His equipment for the task includes a fine combination of information and insight."
+ Christian Century 46:992 Ag 7 '29 200w
Reviewed by Anita Brenner
N Y Evening Post p4s Je 8 '29 550w
Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 79:10 Je '29 120w
St Louis 27:306 N '29

"The book is of importance at the present moment, written as it is in the spirit of judicial impartiality by a distinguished American lawyer who has held responsible posts in the Government. Though primarily intended for the instruction of the American people, it should be carefully—even if somewhat critically—studied by all those on this side of the Atlantic who can understand the vital significance of the issues with which it deals."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p691 S 12 '29 2400w

MILLER, MARY BRITTON. Menagerie. 124p il $1.75 Macmillan

811 28-23150

Verses for children about animals in and out of the zoo, and of the out-of-doors, and nonsense jingles.

"This year's poetry books seem to me a rather poor lot, with three exceptions. Of these exceptions, 'Menagerie' is far and away the best. Here is freshness, spontaneity and a genuine ability to write musical, simple verse of the sort every child should know and enjoy. The illustrations by Anne Sewell are particularly successful in catching the spirit and peculiar charm of the text." Rachel Field

+ N Y Evening Post p10m N 10 '28 220w

Reviewed by M. L. Becker

Outlook 150:1334 D 2 '28 30w

"The beautiful work in black and white plays quite as large a part in the charm of this volume as Miss Miller's verses. The verses are somewhat loosely wrought, often they seem to us to have been written directly for the pictures but on the other hand, they frequently, from a truly childlike point of view, give the distinct character of the different animals." W: R. Benét

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:415 N 24 '28 200w

MILLER, NATHAN. Child in primitive society. (Lib. of educ. psychology) 307p $3 Brentano's [12s 6d K. Paul]

392 Children. Society, Primitive 29-4068

"A technical study of the subject as revealed in many records of observers among primitive peoples; of significance in connection with our understanding of the influence of social customs and standards on the development and education of the child."—J Home Econ

"Like much of the work done by the comparative method, in the library and not in the field, it suffers from being rather fragmentary, detached from its setting, and from a certain inhumanity." M. P. Redfield

— + Am J Soc 35:338 S '29 230w

J Home Econ 21:130 F '29 40w

"Though the author makes a sincere attempt to interpret his material from the point of view of primitive man rather than from that of civilized man, it cannot be said that he actually succeeds. Nevertheless, the book is surely worth a reading by parents, teachers, and social workers, for whom it was written." Augusta Alpert

+ — New Repub 59:240 Jl 17 '29 180w

Sat R 147:17 Ja 5 '29 950w

"Dr. Miller's treatment of his subject may be inadequate in its orientation and may have little to recommend it in the way of style, but he deserves full credit for having brought together a body of evidence which throws considerable light on the love of children as the central interest of man."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p129 F 21 '29 1150w

MILLER, WALTER. Daedalus and Thespis; the contributions of the ancient dramatic poets to our knowledge of the arts and crafts of Greece; v 1, Architecture and topography. 329p il $6.50 Macmillan

709.38 Art, Greek. Greece—Antiquities. Greek poetry. Greek drama. Greek literature—Selections, extracts, etc. (29-4893)

"Daedalus was the first artist and craftsman, and Thespis the first dramatist of Greece, and in Dean Miller's volume they represent as producer and recorder the architecture and topography of ancient Greece. The Greek drama contains many references to politics and history that have been guide-posts to scholars in the study of Greek life; it is also full of references to the arts and crafts, architecture, topography, sculpture, painting, pottery and engraving. This is a systematic attempt to organize this information."—Boston Transcript

Boston Transcript p4 My 25 '29 530w

"Professor Miller's work is much more comprehensive than any of its partial predecessors. He has apparently collected every passage that has any bearing on his subject, and he has persuaded his publisher to submit to the expense of printing this enormous amount of Greek side by side with original line-for-line versions of every quotation. That is not all. If a temple is but mentioned in a fragment of a Greek tragedian Professor Mills gives us all that Pausanias said of it and all that the student needs to know. On the more important temples at Delphi, Olympia, and Athens he presents veritable monographs. The value of the book to teachers and students remote from large libraries is enhanced by some forty-eight fine plates of Greek buildings and scenery." Paul Shorey

+ Class Philol 24:307 Jl '29 500w

MILLER, WARREN HASTINGS. Under the admiral's stars. 251p $1.75 Appleton

29-11747

Further adventures of Ensign Wally Radnor, U.S.N. and his pals Stanguey and Dummy, on the U.S.S. Montana.

"It is an interesting tale, well told by one who knows his background well and full of the atmosphere of sea adventuring which will be abundantly satisfying to the boy in his teens."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 3 '29 180w

"Only one thing is lacking to make this book literature, an inner veracity; but that is everything. And so all this observation, this invention, these pains, become not literature but a passing entertainment. As entertainment, however, the book is unimpeachable."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:428 N 16 '29 200w

MILLIGAN, LAMBDIN P., defendant. Milligan case; ed. by Samuel Klaus. 476p $5 Knopf

344 Habeas corpus. Martial law. United States—Constitutional law 29-10186

This first volume in a series recording important American trials, contains the legal history of a treason case during the Civil war. Milligan, with several fellow members of a secret society harrying the government during war-time, was arrested and tried for treason before a military court. Milligan won the right to be tried before a civil court, thus upholding a principle of American law which had been threatened. For the specialist rather than the general reader.

"Samuel Klaus's edition of the Milligan case is a model of its kind and promises well for the forthcoming volumes of the American Trials series. . . The introduction is characterized by brilliance, penetration and clarity and gives us the ablest discussion of the internal dissension and opposition in the North during the Civil War that is to be found in so brief a compass in our historical literature." H: S. Commager

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ag 18 '29 1200w

Reviewed by Leonard Woolf

Nation and Ath 45:709 Ag 31 '29 160w

"The great importance of Ex Parte Milligan is in the fact that it settled, so far as the decision of a court can settle, the permanency of the authority of the Constitution. . . Historians and libertarians alike will be grateful that the entire record is at last made available—and in such readable form. The layman who picks up 'The Milligan Case' will probably be surprised at the discovery that materials which he might reasonably expect to be too difficult for any but specialists are here put together in such a way as to make them not only understandable but actually attractive." Forrest Bailey

+ New Repub 58:337 My 8 '29 900w

New Statesman 33:630 Ag 31 '29 200w

Sat R 148:222 Ag 24 '29 300w

"The book, as a whole, is tough reading. . . Our lawyers seem to have the kind of learning which carries with it a great many facts. But they have not attained, as writers, the learning which leads to simplicity. They fail to see that a trial may be interesting for itself alone, even if it does not establish some thundering maxim of the law." Edmund Pearson

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:948 Ap 27 '29 800w

MILLIN, MRS SARAH GERTRUDE. Coming of the Lord. 284p $2.50 Liveright [7s 6d Constable]

28-22141

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

For biographical sketch of the author see N Y World p10m O 20 '29

Booklist 25:166 Ja '29

"The writing is professional and tidy, the plots neatly interwoven, and the crisis timed so that when the last wheel clicks, the whole machinery comes to rest on a proper note of restrained pathos. The book has, in fact, everything except life."

— Bookm 68:xxiv Ja '29 80w

"On reading this book one is quite prepared to accept it as an intelligent, competent, and not uninteresting picture of small-town life in the wastes of the South African veldt. But when the blurb contains a quotation from a New York critic who tells us seriously that Mrs. Millin's work possesses qualities not only equal but superior to those in either 'The Way of All Flesh' or 'Of Human Bondage,' then the essential banality of the book, the uninspired handling of the characters, particularly in the weak and unconvincing love theme, and the thoroughly undistinguished prose, all flame into painful prominence."

— + Nation 128:139 Ja 30 '29 130w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 33:612 D '28

Pratt p37 winter '29

Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 13 '29 340w

"The Coming of the Lord is a great novel. Mrs. Millin has created no puppets to dance about at the will of their creator. One feels that she knows and understands the bitterness, the greed, the pathetic ambition of every person in the story." Walter White

+ Survey 61:312 D 1 '28 600w

MILLIN, MRS SARAH GERTRUDE. The fiddler. 256p $2.50 Liveright

29-16597

A young Englishwoman on holiday with her husband in Lourenço Marques, falls in love with the violinist of the hotel orchestra. Swept by an impulse new and strange this gentle virginal soul urges the violinist—a man of heart and conscience, but weak of will—to take her away. They leave together for Johannesburg, and tragedy goes with them.

Booklist 26:71 N '29

"So bare and succinct is the style of the book that there is but little analysis. . . This sparsity of language hurts the book, for it gives the reader a sense of undue hurry—much like a motion picture that is being run too fast. . . It reads too much like the full scenario of a novel that needs filling in. But what there is of The Fiddler is absorbing enough for the hasty reading it suggests to the reader." Herbert Gorman

— + Bookm 70:203 O '29 380w

" 'The Fiddler' is not at all dependent upon background for its appeal; its simple and somewhat hackneyed story is universal. It is no small tribute to Mrs. Millin's skill as an artist that she has been able to take so old and familiar a story, and without dressing it up, or resorting to any tricks whatever, make it so interesting that it is difficult to lay aside." Herschel Brickell

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ag 4 '29 900w

"It is the work of an accomplished story-teller, who is also able to look deeply into the values of life." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 14 '29 580w

Cleveland Open Shelf p125 S '29

Nation 129:782 D 25 '29 100w

"South Africa counts for little in Mrs. Millin's new novel. She has reduced her story to strictest essentials, and the veldt becomes a naked stage for a tragedy of passion. The regional interest of her earlier books, their use of topography and racial conflicts, is absent. But in carving away all extraneous detail she has lost both realism and dramatic substance. . . Mrs. Millin follows a clean straight line, but she is no master of intensive narration. Her novel is too devoid of sound motivation to win credibility for the lovers and their impulse toward freedom. The impact of genuine feeling never strikes the characters. The necessity of escape remains largely hypothetical. The outcome is without significance." M. D. Zabel

— New Repub 61:24 N 27 '29 200w

New Statesman 33:603 Ag 24 '29 200w

"The story Mrs. Millin has to tell in 'The Fiddler' is not exactly new in any sense. But the treatment of the problem in altering affections, adultery, unpremeditated murder and flight is such that the antique triangular arrangement is forgotten. . . Miss Millin writes nice, short sentences. There is fervor in them, but it is fervor held in vigilant restraint. This artistic watchfulness of Miss Millin's saves her again and again from sentimentality. Her one lack, as we have said elsewhere, is a lack of talent for poetry, a lack of profusion in imagination, of that elusive element of personality." J: Chamberlain

+ — N Y Times p7 Ag 4 '29 700w

Reviewed by F. L. Robbins

Outlook 152:590 Ag 7 '29 200w

" 'The Fiddler' is a beautiful little book and succeeds perfectly in doing what it means to."

+ Sat R 148:249 Ag 31 '29 750w

"This book is not so full as were its predecessors of apt analogies to illuminate shrewd psychology, it is occasionally a little mannered in its writing, and irony and pity are rather too pendulum-like in it for the highest art. Yet almost every critical reader of it, will, if he has not already done so, look up Mrs. Millin's earlier novels. On the whole, he will find them slightly better." Bartlet Brebner

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:73 Ag 24 '29 580w

"Mrs. Millin is as merciless and cold as a lawyer in analysis, and she gives her characters, with all their weaknesses, an almost morbid clarity of mind by which they are almost too well aware of their own mental and emotional processes." V. S. Pritchett

+ Spec 143:198 Ag 10 '29 220w

+ Springf'd Republican p7e S 22 '29 450w

"A story which, though slight, is a work of art."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p606 Ag 1 '29 420w

MILLIS, WALTER. Sand castle. 304p $2.50 Houghton

29-4535

A solitary little girl grows up into a poised and self-contained young woman with an individualistic outlook on life. The story, which is largely a character study, tells how love put her philosophy to the test. Her lover is a whole-souled, sensitive young man, unhappily married. The story is set in Greenwich village and Cape Cod.

Reviewed by Garreta Busey

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 Mr 3 '29 520w

"In creating Anne Martin, Mr. Millis has given the world no character of vital import."

Boston Transcript p6 Mr 23 '29 350w

"The book is diffuse. More action and less speculation might have improved it." C. A. C.

— + New Repub 58:236 Ap 10 '29 200w

"The plot is negligible, but the characters are positively delightful, and the theme is well worth considering." Milton Byron

+ — Outlook 151:268 F 13 '29 180w

MILLIS, WALTER—Continued

"Mr. Millis's limitations as a novelist are so apparent that one must stress out of justice the clarity with which he has illumined certain very definite currents in modern thinking. We are left to question the wisdom of attempting a novel with only a bundle of slight experiences, and an impartial array of theories as materials."

— Sat R of Lit 5:934 Ap 20 '29 320w

MILLWARD, EDWARD J. Copper Bottle. 247p $2 Dutton [3s 6d Methuen]

29-20968

The circumstances of a murder which occurred at The Copper Bottle, are narrated around an inn fireplace by a passing motorcyclist, who is something of a poet and who knows a great deal about the mystery surrounding the affair. The tale that he tells, however, is not quite complete, and it takes Fork, the detective, to bring it to a satisfactory conclusion.

"The author knows the art of writing a well-constructed mystery tale."

+ Bookm 70:xxxii O '29 40w

"Mr. Millward has cleverly arranged everything for the ultimate surprise, including his method of narration—most of the tale is told by a motorcyclist who has sought refuge in an inn during a blizzard, and well told, too, if you don't mind the second-hand feeling that comes of the extended tale within a tale." Will Cuppy

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p26 S 15 '29 130w

"Very cleverly is the mystery surrounding the murder at the Copper Bottle unravelled, the interest is tense and the suspense sustained throughout."

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 2 '29 350w

"The very manner of telling the story is calculated to deceive. Even that would be pardonable if only the narrative were a little more straightforward and less confused. Samuel Fort, the detective, takes infinite delight in talking all around a subject without coming to the point. There is a very good reason why he should do so, but that does not make the book any the less irritating to the reader who is eager to get on with the story."

N Y Times p38 S 22 '29 180w

"A capably written, finely ingenious story, in our opinion, it is distinguished entry in the field of recent fiction."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:380 N 9 '29 200w

Springf'd Republican p7e D 22 '29 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p405 My 16 '29 170w

MILN, MRS LOUISE (JORDAN). By Soochow waters. 317p $2 Stokes

29-17393

A cultured English girl goes to China, meets there an equally cultured Chinese gentleman, a widower, and falls in love with him. They are to be married, despite the opposition of the girl's friends and relatives, and his, when the sight of his Chinese children brings the girl to a realization of the impossibility of the situation.

Booklist 26:71 N '29

"The dialogue and descriptions are by far the best features of Mrs. Miln's style. One sometimes wishes that she might spare us so many repetitions of words and phrases to stress her points. Signposts are unnecessary to the extent that the author uses them."

+ — Boston Transcript p2 O 2 '29 220w

N Y Times p26 O 20 '29 280w

"Mrs. Miln adds another prettily innocuous romance of China to a group which has already won for her a large and loyal public. She writes in a graceful if commonplace manner, her books are replete with wholesome sentiment, and her background colorful enough even though she contributes nothing new or important in her Chinese interpretations."

+ — Outlook 152:708 Ag 28 '29 230w

"After the nightmare Chinese puppets that so often grimace in fiction, the characters of this story seem human, sane and dignified. The setting, too, is well painted."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p768 O 3 '29 200w

MILNE, ALAN ALEXANDER. By way of introduction. 202p $2.50 Dutton [6s Methuen]

824 29-25957

A collection of the author's book reviews, book introductions, and miscellaneous essays, in which serious critical essays vie for first place with gay bits like "Good King Wenceslas."

Reviewed by V. P. Ross

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 D 15 '29 580w

Nation and Ath 46:sup378 D 7 '29 120w

"Introductions, detached from the works they originally introduced, seem rather like Hamlet without the ghost; and reprinted reviews, however important their subjects may have been at the time of appearance, have always a warmed-up flavour."

New Statesman 34:170 N 9 '29 170w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p9m D 7 '29 120w

N Y Times p2 D 29 '29 350w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p10m D 22 '29 350w

"Mr. Milne pays the poll-tax on wit. That tax is simply the refusal of a serious hearing. . . It is good to have him grumble; he does it with such point and just enough passion. In this new volume he introduces many persons and many things, artists and authors and even the Truth about Christopher Robin; but we like him best when he is introducing a spiritualist's head on a charger and complaining that, when he does this kind of thing, everyone will think it to be a nice little bit of fun."

+ Sat R 148:550 N 9 '29 430w

"Like so many English writers and so few American writers, Mr Milne has the touch of the light essay. He also has the knack of doing sketches in the style of Punch—easy, graceful and unobtrusive phrases, a certain pattering fluency, an idea and the particularly English brand of understated humor. . . As for what is gathered in 'By Way of Introduction,' one would say that it hardly measured up to the pages or the relatively modest price."

— + Springf'd Republican p10 N 30 '29 350w

Times [London] Lit Sup p963 N 21 '29 530w

MILNE, ALAN ALEXANDER. Christopher Robin story book. 171p il $2 Dutton [5s Methuen]

A collection of verses and stories chosen by the author from When we were very young, Now we are six, Winnie-the-Pooh and The house at Pooh Corner.

"There is a delightful introduction, 'The Author to His Readers,' in Mr. Milne's happiest vein. In a few words he tells his young public precious things about rhythm and poetry, which will make them discerning critics later on."

+ Cath World 130:376 D '29 130w

Cleveland Open Shelf p133 N '29

Reviewed by Ernestine Evans

N Y Times p37 O 27 '29 70w

Times [London] Lit Sup p963 N 21 '29 100w

MILNE, ALAN ALEXANDER. Toad of Toad hall; a play from Kenneth Grahame's book. 168p $1.25 Scribner [5s Methuen]

822 Grahame, Kenneth 29-10493

"A free conversion of Kenneth Grahame's Wind in the Willows into the form of a comedy with a strong infusion of Mr. Milne's own humor."—Yale R n s

Booklist 25:363 Je '29

"It is not Grahame's story. The shimmer and the loveliness are gone. But it is a jolly absurdity, none the less, which might come out excellently on the stage—and might not." W. P. Eaton

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 My 19 '29 230w

Boston Transcript p10 My 4 '29 430w

"'Toad of Toad Hall' should be in every family where there are children." Percy Hutchison

+ N Y Times p8 Jl 28 '29 120w

Outlook 151:589 Ap 10 '29 250w

Sat R 147:747 Je 1 '29 120w

"Though the play would doubtless make for real entertainment, it can never equal the deft satire of the original." Vera Kelsey

— + Theatre Arts Mo 13:631 Ag '29 170w

"Whether those whose admiration for 'The Wind in the Willows' is as ardent as Mr. Milne's own will be completely satisfied by his adaptation, we do not know; probably they will lament the loss of some fragment that they love; there is no satisfying fanatics. But, though they may grumble a little as a proof of loyalty to Kenneth Grahame, they will afterwards be moved by gratitude to Mr. Milne, who has told the story of Mr. Toad with an admirable discretion."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p379 My 9 '29 100w

Wis Lib Bul 25:163 My '29

MIMS, EDWIN. Adventurous America; a study of contemporary life and thought. 304p $2.50 Scribner

917.3 United States—Intellectual life. American literature. United States—Civilization

Roused by the taunt of a friend from a state of "mild Victorianism" the author set out on an adventure in quest of the modern spirit in American life and thought. He analyzes what he considers the good things in our contemporary culture—in literature, in business and in society—and the forces that are striving against materialism.

"His conclusions are justified. We only regret that many minor inaccuracies in names, some errors in judgments, some contradictions extraordinary have crept in." W. G. Piersel

+ — Christian Century 46:1505 D 4 '29 500w

"Edwin Mims, in Adventurous America takes up the cudgels for hope. Although his publishers insist that he does not content himself with superficial optimism, readers inclined to captiousness will find in some of his chapters little, except the skill with which he expresses them, to distinguish his opinions from the facile good-cheer of boosters and professional pollyannas." F. L. Robbins

— + Outlook 153:385 N 6 '29 380w

MINCHIN, HUMPHREY COTTON, ed. Legion; the book of the British legion, by Britain's foremost writers in prose and verse. 290p il $3 Doubleday, Doran [12s Cassell]

Short stories—Collections [29-30214]

A collection of short stories, essays and poems from the hitherto unpublished work of contemporary British authors, such as A. E. Coppard, John Drinkwater, Walter de la Mare, V. Sackville West, Edgar Wallace, etc. The contributions were donated, the proceeds of the sale of the book going to the British Legion.

Boston Transcript p8 N 27 '29 1000w

Nation 129:782 D 25 '29 30w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 153:599 D 11 '29 50w

Spec 143:465 O 5 '29 100w

"Though miscellanies in these days are not uncommon, seldom can so many popular and distinguished names have been associated as contributors under one cover. Variety, not unity, is the note of the whole; so that, while no one taste will appreciate all, there is something to satisfy very taste, from Sir Arthur Cope to Mr. Max Beerbohm, from Mr. Kipling to Miss Sitwell, from Mr. Galsworthy to 'Sapper.'"

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p762 O 3 '29 1000w

MINNEY, RUBEIGH JAMES. Shiva; or, The future of India. (To-day and to-morrow ser.) 96p $1 Dutton [2s 6d K. Paul]

915.4 India [29-15076]

A short discussion of present conditions in India, and their causes, and a brief prophecy as to India's future. The author believes that "the India of a hundred years hence that I foresee will be a self-governing India, not within the British Empire."

"He opens with a quite amazing sentence: 'Within the next hundred years India can be the greatest and most prosperous country in the world,' and thereafter never writes a single sentence in support of so preposterous a suggestion—never, in fact, again refers to it. On the contrary, he writes a very sane and well-balanced account of India as it is to-day, showing the utter futility of any political reform which is unaccompanied by internal social reforms that cannot be effected by any governmental action. His general view is not very different from that of Miss Katherine Mayo. It is expressed with less violence and perhaps with more real knowledge; but it is essentially the same."

New Statesman 32:544 F 2 '29 250w

"Pending an entirely new approach to it, what the public here needs from those who know and care for India is candid and sympathetic exposition of the characteristics of her peoples and of the condition of the country. Mr. Minney's violences are useless." T. E. Welby

Sat R 147:214 F 16 '29 550w

"It is a matter of regret that an excellent series dignified by names such as Haldane, Russell, Maurois, and Jeans should include such second-rate stuff as this. Mr. Minney knows parts of India, but his conception of the whole is little short of ludicrous and is libellous to both Indians and British."

— Spec 142:239 F 16 '29 150w

"The high standard of the To-day and To-morrow series in thought and expression occasionally leads to over-emphasis, as in the present case."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p166 F 28 '29 230w

MINNIGERODE, MEADE. Jefferson, friend of France, 1793. 447p $5 Putnam

973.4 Genet, Edmond Charles Edouard. Jefferson, Thomas. United States—History—Constitutional period, 1789-1809 28-23646

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

Booklist 25:157 Ja '29

"A highly interesting volume, done in Mr. Minnigerode's best manner and dealing with a period which his knowledge enables him to recreate in all its colorful vitality." Arthur Strawn

+ N Y World p11m N 25 '28 500w

"Pseudo-history, meretriciously tricked out in catchpenny frills and written in a sort of bastard Carlylese."

— Spec 142:481 Mr 23 '29 220w

"Mr. Minnigerode tells his story in a manner very vivid and very American, and his book is eminently readable, in spite of the occasionally singular abruptness of his style. He is clearly intimate with the history of the French Revolution, and the historical setting of the book leaves nothing to be desired."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p196 Mr 14 '29 900w

"Every schoolboy knows of the 'Genêt Affair,' but neither schoolboy nor teacher has ever known much about Genêt himself. Mr. Minnigerode supplies this lack. Fortunate in having had access to a large collection of hitherto unused Genêt papers, he has presented a highly attractive picture of the unfortunate French minister." R. V. Harlow

MINNIGERODE, MEADE—Continued
+ Yale R n s 18:594 spring '29 500w

MINOR, HENRY AUGUSTINE. Story of the Democratic party. 501p $4.50 (20s) Macmillan
329.3 Democratic party 28-21433

Denying any intention to censure the rank and file of either party or claim that one is better than the other, the author writes an impartial history of the Democratic party, its achievements and failures, its merits and faults, the measures it has advocated or opposed. Mr Minor shows the strength of its basic principles and its ability to come back after defeat.

---

"As history it is a conventional presentation of the facts, events, and personalities involved in the evolution of the Democratic party. The party is treated as a thing apart, there being little or no recognition of the basic economic, social, and cultural factors responsible for its emergence, evolution, and character. . . The author unwittingly selects his facts, and views men and events from the angle of the reverent believer." W. O. Brown
Am J Soc 34:947 Mr '29 200w

"Though not always objective, much of the book is as unexceptionable as the World Almanac. For an interpretation, we may consult Beard; to locate a fact, we will turn to Minor." C. A. B.
Am Pol Sci R 23:220 F '29 100w

"The general reader will find in this volume a compact handbook of important political data for the period covered—a handbook made readily usable by a suggestive table of contents and an unusually complete and helpful index." Edith Dobie
Christian Century 46:868 Jl 3 '29 500w

"The book will be found valuable in its presentation of those factors playing most prominent parts in the governmental and partisan politics of the nation's history. That it is always fair and unprejudiced is too much to say." R. E. E. Harkness
+ — Crozer Q 6:112 Ja '29 250w

"His book is quite the best thing of the kind this reviewer has ever seen; it illuminates much more history than that of the Democratic Party. But considered only as a history of that party it is far and away better than any other, in spite of the modest way it is put forth. It is a history, a real history. That does not mean that it is ponderous or dull, for Mr. Minor has a taking way with him, and often wears an ill-concealed smile as he travels on his historical path, a journey as obviously agreeable to him as to the reader." C: W. Thompson
+ N Y Times p34 D 2 '28 1100w
Pratt p9 winter '29

"The author has carefully studied his material and expressed his own judgments. The author's freshness of view is at times in his favor, and if the interpretation were always on the level of the best pages, and the phrasing smoother, the work would have considerable value as a popular survey."
— + Springf'd Republican p10 N 3 '28 250w

"The foreigner who is puzzled to understand what principles separate the Democrats from the Republicans to-day will not gain much enlightenment from this volume. Nor can it honestly be commended as interesting reading. More than half the book is taken up with party conflicts previous to the Civil War, and not even Mr. Minor's brisk style can redeem the record of them from dreariness. It is not until we reach the period of Grover Cleveland—three-fourths of the way on—that one escapes from the feeling that the book might effectively be prescribed as a remedy for insomnia."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p599 Ag 1 '29 1000w

MIOMANDRE, FRANCIS DE. Orientale (L'aventure de Therese Beauchamps); tr. by Ralph Roeder. 198p il $2.50 Brentano's 29-1961

"The sophisticated tale of a French housewife who, ten years married and unutterably weary of her hum-drum, colorless, workaday life falls in love with a wealthy and aristocratic Chinese who is visiting Paris."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

---

"Mme. Beauchamps is Mme. Bovary, and if M. de Miomandre is not Flaubert (which indeed, he is not) he nevertheless writes in a distinctive and highly agreeable style. The drab Paris suburb milieu is sufficiently well conveyed to depress the average reader, and the more cheery aspects of the story are presented with that mixture of delicacy and vigor that is generally regarded as peculiarly French."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p34 Ap 14 '29 400w

" 'Orientale' is a very diverting tale, written with complete understanding of two divergent national temperaments."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 1 '29 200w

"Nothing in this neatly arranged little band-box-tragedy-of-the-heart is improbable; it is all quite 'true to life;' and signifies absolutely nothing." T. S. Matthews
New Repub 58:23 F 20 '29 320w

"The clarity, preciseness and supreme suggestion of the story are reminiscent of Chinese art. 'Orientale' is an excellent introduction to pellucid talent, for it shows de Miomandre completely in command of those virtues that make him distinguished among French writers."
+ N Y Times p17 My 12 '29 420w

"Told with great speed and clarity. . . Not an important book, but delightfully handled." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 151:232 F 6 '29 70w

"The relationships are subtly drawn. There is a skilful irony in the presentation of the Chinese lodger. The atmospheres are caught, and the passions recorded, with a remarkable quietness and economy."
+ Sat R of Lit 5:784 Mr 16 '29 140w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 21 '29 100w

MIOMANDRE, FRANCIS DE. Written on water [Ecrit sur de l'eau]; tr. by William A. Drake. 302p il $2.50 Brentano's
29-17529

"The hero is a very young man who wishes to live a sumptuous and sensuous life. The boy falls in love with a beautiful woman whom he sees in a perfume shop; goes to his first ball and meets her again; she promises to be his; when he has finally managed to arrange a satisfactory rendezvous he finds her in the arms of an older and uglier man. But the author is too clever to end the story there: a final bouleversement completes the young man's sentimental education."—New Repub

---

Boston Transcript p5 S 7 '29 420w

"While Francis de Miomandre has something of a reputation in France, his work is on the whole negligible except when he writes on foreign literatures which he knows intimately. As an essayist he can be informed and delightful, as a critic informed but not original, but as a novelist he is falsely ingenuous and writes in a kind of dreary falsetto. . . The style of 'Written on Water' is forced and dull."
— Nation 129:449 O 16 '29 150w

"The story is saved from slightness by the unlikely but appealing figures of the mercurial father and his decrepit, philosophic old friend. The tone is politely resigned, touchingly ironic, charmingly sensible—in a word, French."
+ New Repub 60:183 O 2 '29 160w

"There is in his first novel a refinement of sentiment, a tincture of irony, which has charm in the delicacy of the combination."
+ N Y Times p16 N 3 '29 600w

"This novel is slight, but exquisite. . . . The very triviality, if you like, of the subject matter is one of the book's charms. Life is presented with ease and utter naturalness."
+ N Y World p11m O 6 '29 260w

"It reads like Balzac with the backbone removed and a dilution of Paul Bourget added. 'Written On Water' is a proper title for M. de Miomandre's novel, which passes without leaving a ripple."
— Sat R of Lit 6:380 N 9 '29 200w

MIRZA, YOUEL BENJAMIN. Myself when [2] young; a boy in Persia. 260p il $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

915.5 Children in Persia. Persia—Social life and customs 29-20598

Youel Mirza describes, in a series of word-picture episodes, his childhood and boyhood in a little Persian village. He also describes village characters, chief among them his aged grandfather, and tells how the Persians celebrate Christmas and New Year, etc. At the age of fifteen Youel came to New York to live, and he gives his early impressions of America.

Booklist 26:125 D '29

"Mr. Mirza has done something more than to write an informing and readable book about everyday life in Persia. 'Myself When Young' is an authentic piece of boyhood, as well as a record of daily life in Persia." A. C. Moore
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 O 20 '29 750w

Cleveland Open Shelf p131 N '29

Reviewed by Ruth Seinfel
N Y Evening Post p14m N 16 '29 30w

"The older boy or girl who is interested in reading of a boyhood spent in another land as a background for a life in this country will find that this autobiographical book is replete with descriptive merit. There is a slight regret on the part of the reader when this young Persian leaves his native country for this land. But the differences in customs and conventions are of interest." M. G. Bonner
+ N Y Times p12 D 15 '29 100w
St Louis 27:316 N '29

MISKELLA, WILLIAM JAMES. Practical automotive lacquering. (Practical finishing ser.) 194p il $3.50 Finishing research laboratories, inc., 1164 W. 22d st., Chicago

629.2 Automobiles—Painting. Lacquer and lacquering 28-19165

"A handbook on finishing automobiles, motor trucks, busses and airplanes, with special attention to shop-cleaning, spraying, masking, water-proof and dry sandpaper, striping and transfers, as well as car washing, greasing and oiling." (Subtitle) Contains 136 illustrations in the text and 6 color plates.

Booklist 25:109 D '28
N Y New Tech Bks 14:10 Ja '29
Pratt p19 winter '29
St Louis 26:382 D '28

MISKELLA, WILLIAM JAMES. Practical color simplified; a handbook on lacquering, enameling, coloring and painting. (Practical finishing ser.) 113p il $3.50 Finishing research laboratories, inc., 1164 W. 22d st., Chicago

535.6 Color. Colors—Analysis. Advertising 28-19781

"A handbook on the use of color, mainly for commercial purposes, giving special attention to the production of satisfying effects by the application of the generally-accepted theory of color harmony."—J Home Econ

Booklist 25:109 D '28

"Including many ingenious charts and other devices to show the interrelation of hue, brightness, and strength. Includes chapters on colored lighting, the photography, language, designation, pigments, and testing of color and gives not a little incidental information regarding practical points in lacquering and painting."
J Home Econ 21:56 Ja '29 80w
N Y New Tech Bks 14:6 Ja '29
Pratt p12 winter '29
St Louis 26:379 D '28

MITCHELL, BROADUS. William Gregg, factory master of the old South. (Univ. of N.C. Social study ser.) 331p $3 Univ. of N.C. press [13s 6d Oxford]

B or 92 Gregg, William. Cotton manufacture. South—Industries 28-22365

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

"Though thin and too hastily written, the book embodies material which contributes to the specialist in Southern history and ultimately to American history." Kathleen Bruce
+ — Am Hist R 34:399 Ja '29 350w

Reviewed by Herbert Solow
Nation 128:744 Je 19 '29 450w

"His book is a scholarly work for scholars with sixty-six pages devoted to notes and references. It is an important contribution to American history." Elliott Springs
+ N Y World p11m D 2 '28 500w

MITCHELL, EDWIN VALENTINE. Morocco [2] bound: adrift among books. 232p il $2.50 Farrar & Rinehart

655.5 Booksellers and bookselling 29-22646

The bookshop which Edwin Valentine Mitchell opened nearly ten years ago in an old house in Lewis Street, Hartford, has become famous. In "Morocco bound," he chats about the conversion of the house into a bookshop, the human procession that has passed through it, the Christmas rush, book thieves, and other topics of the book world.

"A book that will undoubtedly stampede hordes of enthusiasts into book-selling."
+ Bookm 70:xii Ja '30 120w

"Mr. Mitchell does not hesitate to 'talk shop.' His account of the mechanics of keeping up with the holiday trade is strictly professional. The tales he tells of book thieves and customers who neglect to pay their bills, though indiscreet, are always timely. And he is most pungent upon publishers; he says things that cannot be said too well nor too often." Paul Allen
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 D 22 '29 500w

"Anecdote, genial and informative to the point where, within the compass of a review, it is likely to crowd out reference to the book's other aspects and qualities, is the backbone of Edwin Valentine Mitchell's 'Morocco Bound.' His easy style and his mellow attitude toward the world in general and the lot of a bookseller in particular, suggest the Christopher Morley picture of the life as one of ease in which the shopkeeper sits around smoking a pipe. But the picture moves Mr. Mitchell to the comment: 'I should like to have Morley pop in so that I could wring his blooming neck.' " A. B. Maurice
+ N Y Evening Post p13m N 23 '29 850w

"A sheaf of genial, entertaining and informing essays on miscellaneous phases of the book industry—on collecting, on publishing, on retail selling, on buying rarities abroad, on authors living and dead, &c. Attractively illustrated, rich in anecdotal reminiscence."
+ N Y World p10m D 22 '29 80w

Reviewed by F. L. Robbins
Outlook 153:386 N 6 '29 150w

"With wholesome bite as to book-lover sentimentality, with a captivating flair for the droll, and a fetching urbanity, he tells his story as a publisher, editor, and dealer, in one of the most colorful discourses on the book world that I have come upon since I became a book-clerk sometime following upon the close of the Civil War." R. C. Holliday
+ Sat R of Lit 6:504 D 7 '29 100w

MITCHELL, GLADYS. Speedy death. 305p $2 Dial press [7s 6d Gollancz]

Mr Mountjoy, Arctic explorer and house-party guest, is found murdered in a bathtub—and discovered to be a woman. Mrs Bradley, a strange lady whose hobby is psychoanalysis, adroitly sets a trap to catch the murderer, and succeeds in disclosing Eleanor Bing, who had been engaged to marry Mountjoy. When Eleanor, demented, goes from bad to worse in her homocidal mania, Mrs Bradley takes justice into her own hands and terminates the story.

Spec 143:27 Jl 6 '29 100w

"The author makes hay with all the preconceived notions of how a person accused of murder ought to feel and behave, and, generally, puts so much good stuff into Mrs. Bradley's makeup that it is to be hoped that this is not to be that remarkable woman's only appearance in a mystery story."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p561 Jl 11 '29 300w

MITCHELL, HAROLD HANSON, and HAMILTON, TOM SHERMAN. Biochemistry of the amino acids. (Am. chemical soc. Monograph ser.) 619p il $9.50 Chemical catalog co.

547.8 Amino acids 29-8141

"A scholarly, technical treatment of the subject by two members of the staff of the college of Agriculture at the University of Illinois, the senior author well known to home economists specializing in nutrition."—J Home Econ

"The book itself is a review of such an ever expanding subject that it could serve for an extended seminar course. It is replete with references and contains an adequate index. For those interested in current developments in the field of proteins it should find a ready reception." P. N. Leech

+ Ind & Eng Chem 21:612 Je '29 300w

J Home Econ 21:520 Jl '29 40w

N Y New Tech Bks 14:19 Ap '29

MITCHELL, J. LESLIE. Hanno; or, The future of exploration. (To-day and to-morrow ser.) 94p $1 Dutton [2s 6d K. Paul]

910.9 Discoveries (in geography) 29-140

In the future of exploration lies the future of mankind. Before the era of Christianity, Hanno, "king of the Karchedonians," daringly sailed down the Moroccan coast and far southward, till the terror of the unknown drove him back. Because much of the earth's surface, the depths below the surface, and beneath the sea still remain unexplored, and because men are only beginning to think of the possibility of communication with and voyage to such planets as Mars and Venus, the author of this essay believes that there is a great future for some intrepid Hanno.

" 'Hanno' is one of the best essays of the series. It is brilliantly written and breathes the unquenchable spirit of adventure." H. M. Parshley

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Jl 14 '29 160w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 12 '29 150w

Spec 141:20 Jl 7 '28 80w

"Mr. Mitchell's essay is a contribution to the stimulating To-day and To-morrow series. It is short, and would be better for further curtailment. The first half is excellent, and is packed with eminently practical suggestions for the further exploration of the earth's surface, revealing vast unknown fields to those who lament that there is nothing more to conquer."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p570 Ag 2 '28 250w

MITCHELL, ROY. Creative theatre. 256p il $4 Day

792 Theater 29-22834

A philosophical essay on theater aesthetics. The author is chiefly interested in the ideal theater of the future. A large part of the book is devoted to the law of motion in relation to modern dramatic art. Illustrated with seventeen wood-blocks by Jocelyn Taylor.

"The book is extremely stimulating, but the author lacks the faculty to give concrete expression to abstract ideas. One hopes that he does it more successfully on the stage itself." W: P. Eaton

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p26 D 8 '29 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p153 D '29

Reviewed by Harold Clurman

New Repub 61:203 Ja 8 '30 1050w

"It is evident in every line of Roy Mitchell's book, 'Creative Theatre,' that he knows his subject thoroughly . . . Although his book is mercifully free from the high-falutin vaporings that are usually found in works on the drama, Mr. Mitchell is less concise when he begins to talk of better things." Rosalind Ivan

+ — N Y Times p4 D 22 '29 700w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 154:38 Ja 1 '30 50w

"Roy Mitchell has spun out a very highbrow and dull yarn of theatre theory, all tangled with pretentious knots that obscure the design of its esthetic embroidery."

— Sat R of Lit 6:458 N 23 '29 370w

"Roy Mitchell's Creative Theatre is, in material, in intention, in form, exactly the opposite of Mr. Cheney's The Theatre. It is not a record at all. It is a highly argumentative, stimulating, clarifying analysis of the whole theatre idea. It is a profound study in theatre esthetics, made gay and exciting by the magic of good writing and clear thinking." E. J. R. Isaacs

+ Theatre Arts Mo 13:943 D '29 470w

MITCHISON, MRS NAOMI MARGARET (HALDANE). Barbarian stories. 290p $2.50 Harcourt

29-26897

Mrs Mitchison's stories, fifteen in number, "deal with strange transitional times, with the barbarisms of growing or decaying civilizations," and range in time from the early bronze age to A.D. 1935.

Booklist 26:71 N '29

"The 'Barbarian Stories' are simply told and unassuming. . . When one has read this book and laid it aside the word that comes first to the mind is 'intelligent.' For what binds the whole together is not only its sweep of history but its ideas, which are conveyed, except for a few sentences, in pure narrative." Garreta Busey

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 Ag 25 '29 950w

"A notable feature of these stories is their consistency. One would think that the writer were merely retelling tales from ancient sources, they are so full of the atmosphere of the time and events. The reader will be impressed at the wide information of the author, in her delineation of types of the races, and the perfect harmony of scene and incident."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 5 '29 250w

+ — Nation 129:364 O 2 '29 170w

"The rather school-girl sentimentality which disfigured some of Mrs. Mitchison's later books is not apparent in 'Barbarian Stories,' and I strongly recommend them." Raymond Mortimer

+ Nation and Ath 45:341 Je 8 '29 120w

"I am by no means sure that her historical impressions are everywhere correct. But Miss Mitchison's imagination is lively and her stories are without the usual faults of historical reconstructions. They owe a good deal to Mr. Belloc's Eyewitness; but that is no fault." E. S.

+ — New Statesman 33:307 Je 15 '29 300w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p7s Ja 4 '30 100w

"The 'Barbarian Stories' have a tang, a pungent vitality, that stories in the modern manner lack. Mrs. Mitchison has an individual viewpoint. She uses distant times and pleasures to give us a perspective on ourselves. But more than that, she is an excellent story-teller who perfectly coordinates historical background, characterization and style. She is a writer who is very much worth reading, and this entertaining selection of stories is a good volume to begin with."

+ N Y Times p28 S 8 '29 600w

Outlook 152:708 Ag 28 '29 120w

"She shows her usual power of making the past live; her historical sense and her imagination unite to form a brilliant flame, so that her work has the effect not of inventing the past but of uncovering it. She compels belief in the authenticity of her vision. The stories themselves, however, are not as interesting as they sometimes are, and the colloqualism of the dialogue is exaggerated." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 147:776 Je 8 '29 100w

"Most of them are good and none is particularly noteworthy. They display Mrs. Mitchison's by now familiar characteristics—her really immense if sometimes spotty erudition, her comprehension (in so far as a modern is competent to judge) of the content of primitive religion; her sense of natural beauty and her intensity of feeling—above all her capacity for suffering vicarious though it be. They reinforce the impression made by her other works, of an unusually sensitive and intelligent personality, apparently more important than her writings, and probably capable of better work than she has ever yet done." Elmer Davis

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:129 S 14 '29 550w

"The book as a whole yields less beauty than Black Sparta; but it is quick with the wounding and stricken gestures, the arrogances and humiliations of changing times." R. A. Taylor

+ — Spec 142:907 Je 8 '29 300w

"The stories are a ramble through history, with a look over its latest edge, on which we are led by a guide with a fine power of divination, a poetic flame and a delicate gift for description."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p452 Je 6 '29 600w

MITCHISON, MRS NAOMI MARGARET (HALDANE). Nix-nought-nothing. 195p il $2 Harcourt [5s Cape]

822 Children's plays. Fairy plays [29-950]

Four fairy plays for children based on the fairy tales to be found in the collections of Joseph Jacobs. Contents: Nix-nought-nothing; Hobyah! hobyah! My ain sel'; Elfen hill.

"They are pretty plays to give in a real or imagined outdoor setting, and Winifred Bromhall's drawings for them are charming." H. S. Wright

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 D 8 '29 100w

Reviewed by R. E. Roberts

New Statesman 32:supxxii D 1 '28 120w

"The plays are charming. Light as thistledown they trip from prose to verse, burdened with no propaganda but fantasy and fun. . . Children who instinctively have a taste for good literature will love these plays, not only to act, but to read, or to listen to when read aloud." Jane Dransfield

+ Sat R of Lit 6:574 D 14 '29 280w

"There is a magic in a good child's play that neither skill nor talent can replace. Once again that magic comes in Nix-Nought-Nothing, one of four plays in a volume by Naomi Mitchison, a blending not only in its verse but in its prose of that slight silken poetry of song and story which nothing can define. One good children's play in a book is a high average."

+ — Theatre Arts Mo 14:90 Ja '30 180w

MLYNARSKI, FELIKS JOHN. Gold and central banks. 157p $2 Macmillan

332.1 Gold. Banks and banking. Currency question. Foreign exchange 29-4441

The author, a Polish economist and banker, discusses the question of American reserves, the gold exchange standard, freedom of gold movements and the cooperation of central banks.

Booklist 26:13 O '29

Reviewed by E: H. Collins

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Ap 28 '29 780w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw

R of Rs 79:14 My '29 180w

MOBERLY, HENRY JOHN, and CAMERON, WILLIAM BLEASDELL. When fur was king. 237p il $2.75 Dutton [10s 6d Dent]

B or 92 Fur trade. Northwest, Canadian [29-17418]

This autobiography of a pioneer fur trader whose range was the mountain wilderness of northwest Canada records many an interesting encounter with the Indians and wild animals of the Canadian forests.

"The volume includes information on the customs of the fur trade, and is a valuable document on the problems of the period which witnessed the disappearance of the monopoly and the coming in of competition. The dates and facts cannot be trusted at all points." H. A. I.

+ — Am Econ R 19:269 Je '29 100w

"Apart from the errors noted, the volume is of very great value in its descriptions of the fur trade in the latter days of the Hudson's Bay Company's monopoly and the early period of competition. It will take its place along with Isaac Cowie, The Company of Adventurers, and N. M. W. J. Mackenzie, Men of the Hudson's Bay Company. Historians will be grateful for the material made available on the customs of the trade. The sketches are interesting but the map is unsatisfactory." H. A. Innis

+ — Canadian Hist R 10:65 Mr '29 450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p150 D '29

J Home Econ 21:936 D '29 60w

"Interspersed with stories of this trade and of primitive travel between stations, mostly by canoe, Mr. Moberly gives us some good hunting yarns."

+ New Statesman 32:706 Mr 9 '29 150w

Reviewed by E. L. Sabin

Sat R of Lit 6:112 S 7 '29 350w

"Mr. Moberly and Mr. Cameron give what will, perhaps, prove to be the last account to be given from the memory of an actual participant of the life of the fur-traders in the middle of the last century."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p199 Mr 14 '29 200w

MODERN book production; with fourteen commentaries. 186p il $12 Boni [30s Studio]

655.53 Book ornamentation. Type and type-founding. Printing—Specimens. Bookbinding —Facsimiles. Illustration of books 29-3632

"This well-produced book has chapters on book production in no fewer than fifteen different countries, written by national experts, and the differences in national styles of typography, &c., may be studied in the reproductions of pages, jackets, bindings, &c., which follow."—Nation and Ath

Reviewed by Paul Johnston

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 F 10 '29 440w

"The reproductions are very good, but it is a pity that the names of the different founts used are not given."

+ — Nation and Ath 44:sup394 D 8 '28 100w

"The Studio volume on modern book-printing and binding is not up to the standard we have learnt to expect from this house's productions. There are many reproductions of pages from fine books of all countries; but in no instance, so far as we have observed, is the size of the original book given, nor any note on how much the reproduction has been reduced. Sometimes the reduction made is so drastic that the illustration gives little idea of the effect made by the original; sometimes the beauty of the book is sadly travestied. The volume is a very inadequate account of modern book-production as a whole."

MODERN book production—Continued
— New Statesman 32:200 N 17 '28 140w

"The most severe indictment against the book is the lack of any coordination between the text and the illustrations. Will Ransom contributes an intelligent and sincere commentary on book production in America, and quite properly devotes the major proportion of his space to our two outstanding book-makers. But no example of the printing of either one is shown in the book and, with one exception, no printings by any of the men mentioned by Mr. Ransom are shown." Elmer Adler
— + N Y Times p2 Ap 21 '29 400w
Spec 141:554 O 20 '28 580w

"When allowance is made for the deliberate preference for modernity as contrasted with good work on old-fashioned lines, the examples chosen may be accepted as fairly representative, and (save in the case of the United States) as in reasonable proportion to the quality and quantity of the modern work produced. That the share of the United States should be less than a twentieth and that no example should be given of the work of Mr. Bruce Rogers is a real blot on the book."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p845 N 15 '28 530w

MOEHLMAN, CONRAD HENRY. Catholic-Protestant mind; some aspects of religious liberty in the United States. 211p $2.50 Harper
282 Roman Catholic church—History. Roman Catholic church in the United States. Church and state. United States—Church history
29-19463

A brief historical outline of the Roman Catholic church, containing some new information on the Pope's temporal sovereignty as affected by the recent concordat signed by the Pope and Mussolini. The book was written for the purpose of helping Americans to a better understanding of the Catholic church, and contains the latest data on the strength of the church in the United States.

---

Christian Century 46:1513 D 4 '29 230w

"This is a valuable sketch of the Church in its relations to temporal governments. It deserves a wide reading." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 153:271 O 16 '29 80w

"It is often the best-meant books which irritate the most. Dr. Moehlman has intended to write a book which would bring Catholics and Protestants to a better mutual understanding. Its effect will probably be to vex the Catholics and to encourage the Protestants even further to misunderstand the Catholics. This missing of the mark seems chiefly to be due to Dr. Moehlman's apparent lack of such historical perspective as might enable him to see Catholicism in focus." B. I. Bell
— Sat R of Lit 6:313 O 26 '29 550w

MOFFATT, JAMES. General epistles, James, Peter, and Judas. (Moffatt New Testament commentary) 246p $3.50 Doubleday, Doran [8s 6d Hodder & S.]
227.9 Bible. New Testament—Commentaries
29-26157

A commentary on the epistles of James, Peter, and Judas, which is based on, and in explanation of Dr Moffatt's widely used translation of the New Testament.

---

Booklist 25:231 Mr '29
Christian Century 46:458 Ap 4 '29 100w

"Dr. Moffatt's comments on the passages are illuminating and suggestive and shot through with literary allusions. They are excellent commentaries for the plain man." E. C. Chorley
+ Churchman 139:16 Ap 20 '29 100w

"It is seldom that a collection of theological essays contains so much rich mixed feeding as this." Evelyn Underhill
+ Spec 140:876 Je 9 '28 170w

"The exposition of these Epistles is admirably done. It is based on wide acquaintance with the exegetical literature. Literary parallels are often quoted. . . The author does not forget that he is commenting on sacred books and writing for readers who need to have the devotional and practical value of these Scriptures brought home to them."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p656 S 20 '28 480w

MOLEY, RAYMOND. Politics and criminal prosecution. 241p $2.50 Minton
343 Justice, Administration of. Criminal law. Corruption (in politics)
29-6689

This is the documented story of the way in which politics interferes with criminal justice in the United States, and particularly of the close and frequently reprehensible connection between politics and the office of the state's attorney for the prosecution. The author, professor of public law at Columbia university, urges the non-political appointment of the prosecuting attorney.

---

Reviewed by J. L. Gillin
Am J Soc 35:319 S '29 1000w
Booklist 26:13 O '29
Bookm 69:vi Je '29 150w

"Into all the ramifications of prosecutor's political motives and conduct Professor Moley goes with thorough and accurate documentation that are the results of many years' investigation."
+ Boston Transcript p3 My 11 '29 220w

"While the title of Professor Moley's book is 'overwritten,' the volume is a welcome addition to our scanty and unsatisfactory literature upon the administration of criminal law." E. R. Buckner
+ — Nation 128:535 My 1 '29 800w

"Vivaciously and entertainingly offered. This book gives us a dramatic picture of the mastery of the instrumentalities of justice by the powers of the political system which holds us in thrall." G. W. Kirchwey
+ New Repub 59:43 My 22 '29 580w

"Although Professor Moley, in his foreword, disclaims any intention of offering 'another of the familiar indictments of American criminal justice,' his book is, in effect, as devastating an arraignment of justice, so called, as one could expect to read. His impartiality, his understatement, his lack of dogmatism, his unwillingness to take sides, merely intensify the shortcomings of the system he describes." H. L. Matthews
+ N Y Times p14 Mr 17 '29 1100w
Reviewed by W. B. Shaw
R of Rs 79:12 My '29 100w

"This book contains interesting and carefully annotated discussions of the position of the prosecutor, the sheriff, the coroner, the grand jury and the trial jury in the prosecution of crime and the effect of politics on them. It closes with a brief description of the ways in which England and Canada have improved on our methods of prosecution and a chapter of 'Reflections Upon Reform.'"
Sat R of Lit 5:1030 My 18 '29 380w

"Politics and Criminal Prosecution needs reading. It will revolutionize the layman's beliefs as to what a criminal prosecution is and means." K. N. Llewellyn
+ Survey 62:533 Ag 15 '29 650w

MOLNAR, FERENC. Plays: with a foreword by David Belasco. 823p $6 Vanguard press 894
29-16490

Twenty plays of the Hungarian playwright, including Liliom, The guardsman, Fashions for men, and The swan, all of which have been produced here, as well as seven one-act plays which have not been seen on the American stage.

Booklist 26:111 D '29

"Molnar's popularity is due partly to sentimentality, partly to a faculty for seeing something dramatic in every situation, even the most ordinary. This ability is a source of weakness as well as of strength, for the subjects treated are sometimes so trivial as to be of no more than temporary interest. On the other hand it enables him to write such a masterpiece as Liliom, where the tragedy is fashioned out of seemingly impossible material."

+ Bookm 70:462 D '29 330w

"By virtue of his best work Molnar has a secure place in the modern playhouse, but it will be never said to assume that his name on a play guarantees its importance. He can be as cheap as charming." W. P. Eaton

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ag 11 '29 850w

MONROE, ANNE SHANNON. Hearth of happiness. 307p $2 Doubleday, Doran

814 29-9142

Short essays upon familiar, everyday subjects, optimistic in tone and popular in appeal.

"In no part of the world save ours, one suspects, is there so numerous a class of writers whose talent and whose purpose consist chiefly in being a comfort to people in print. Anne Shannon Monroe is one of them. This service—which is social rather than literary—has a well developed technique, a blend of the anecdotal, the inspirational and the obvious. In a little sermon on 'How Old, Really, Is a Woman?' or a little homily on 'The Gift of Giving,' one is fed on cheerful predigested ideas. In an essay on 'The Way of Understanding' gnarled apple trees and young robins are pegs to hang parables on. The adjectives 'homey' and 'heartsome' are favorites of Mrs. Monroe's—and they are characteristic."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Jl 14 '29 130w

Cleveland Open Shelf p137 N '29

"The ethics and psychology of Miss Monroe may not be profound, but they run pretty evenly with the plain human facts, and their implications are not quite all on the surface."

Sat R of Lit 5:1057 My 25 '29 100w

MONROE, ANNE SHANNON. World I saw. 331p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

B or 92 28-29529

Anne Shannon Monroe, whose Singing in the rain elicited many letters of appreciation, has written here the warmly personal story of her life—pioneering days of childhood, first efforts as a journalist and gradual success. She has woven thru the story the personal contacts and friendships which meant most of all to her.

Booklist 25:358 Je '29

"Anne Shannon Moore here sets down, in modest and entertaining fashion, the story of her own struggle with the muse. It makes an interesting story, as all sincerely written autobiographies are bound to be."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Ja 27 '29 130w

"Her record is set down in a simple, unaffected style which carries charm and distinction."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 16 '29 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p41 Mr '29

N Y Times p20 Je 9 '29 430w

"We have found her cheerful, unpretentious reminiscences agreeable and entertaining, but that portion of her book which dwells upon the author's life of several years ago in Chicago and her associations with the Press Club of that city, seemed to us decidedly the most interesting."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:524 D 15 '28 180w

MONTAGUE, CHARLES EDWARD. Action, and other stories. 289p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Chatto & W.]

29-8988

In "Action," the first and perhaps the best in this posthumous collection of short stories, Mr Montague writes of a man who, warned of the end, prefers to meet death "all out," rather than wait for its slow advance, and who in this test of the limit of his powers finds a new conception of life. Contents: Action; A cock and bull story; Sleep, gentle sleep; Judith; In the ways of his heart; A pretty little property; The great sculling race; Wodjabet; A fatalist; Man afraid; Ted's leave; The wisdom of Mrs Trebanna; Didn't take care of himself.

Booklist 25:322 My '29

"There are no more than two or three of the baker's dozen of stories in the present volume that are up to the best of Montague's other short stories. [But] if these are not the best of Montague's short stories, they are at least good stories." Herschel Brickell

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Mr 3 '29 930w

"For the most part, Mr. Montague's themes are quite simple, but he has elaborated them with a deep psychological insight and unweaves the destiny of his characters and their actions in a style so rich and flexible that the reader is carried at a high tension through the story." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 30 '29 350w

" 'It is not piercing wits that we want, to live well, but plain courage,' says the late C. E. Montague in one of the stories which make up this posthumous collection. The sentence is typical of the man and of his work: it symbolizes his characters, so straight and fine; his prose, so honest and clear; and his limitations—no less clear." C. P. Fadiman

+ Nation 128:sup480 Ap 17 '29 200w

"Mr. Montague always approaches serious matters by some cleverly concealed backdoor. This is the ultimate affectation, preciosity aping heartiness, tweeds that smell of the lamp. Mr. Montague's writing is always artful, never, I think, art." Raymond Mortimer

— Nation and Ath 44:182 N 3 '28 170w

"Action is a book of disappointing stories. They are largely in dialect and full of a mawkish taciturnity and rugged, rather knowing, sentimentality, like the inferior work of Kipling, and without his plots. There are gleams, of course, but the tinsel out-gleams them." Cyril Connolly

— New Statesman 32:192 N 17 '28 50w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p10m F 23 '29 180w

"It is a good book. But it is only middling grade Montague."

+ — N Y Times p8 F 24 '29 600w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell

No Am 227:adv Ap '29 120w

Pratt p41 summer '29

"His essayist's style, too jewelled for the humdrum uses of the novel, adds greatly to the effect of his stories. 'Action' is a gay, bright, courageous book." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 146:584 N 3 '28 220w

Reviewed by Elmer Davis

Sat R of Lit 5:725 Mr 2 '29 1100w

"Once more we delight in the dart and reach of a style as supple and clean as a sword, capable of many a lovely flourish too, like all fine blades. Once more we assent to an estimate of life and humanity that, with no easy optimism, declares the one a high adventure and the other a lovable affair on the whole, still flaming out into fantastic chivalries at times." R. A. Taylor

+ Spec 141:602 O 27 '28 400w

"Whatever the subject there is no tale in this collection that was not worth reprinting. Indeed, it is improbable that C. E. Montague ever wrote a story that was unworthy of him.

MONTAGUE, C: E:—Continued
He had a keen and a peculiarly interesting mind, a great sense of the value of words, and a pungent wit."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p778 O 25 '28 450w

MONTAIGNE, MICHEL EYQUEM DE. Diary of Montaigne's journey to Italy in 1580 and 1581; tr. with introd. and notes by E. J. Trechmann. 297p $3.50 Harcourt [15s Hogarth press]

914 Italy—Description and travel. Germany—Description and travel. Switzerland—Description and travel [29-17934]

Montaigne's journey to Italy was made in 1580 and 1581. The full informative diary in which he kept the record of his travels was not discovered until 180 years after his death. For this, the third English translation of the diary, the translator has written an introduction and notes.

---

"It is a book of twofold appeal. On the one hand, it is a faithful and intelligent record of the manners, the observances and the customs of the places through which Montaigne passed; on the other hand, it adds some intimate strokes to the portrait of one of the most fascinating personalities in literature." Jacob Zeitlin
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 S 8 '29 1000w

"It may be doubted whether anyone since Florio has succeeded in 'fixing' that volatile Gallic essence [of Montaigne's style] in an Anglo-Saxon medium, and it is certain that neither his skill nor Mr. Trechmann's could have infused into this 'Diary' a quality absent from the first text. Yet, if we thrust aside our regret that we may catch so little of the quintessential mind of Montaigne in a book bearing his name, we shall find a great deal of amusement in following the peregrinations of his body, more especially in Rome." D. M. Stuart
+ — Nation and Ath 45:48 Ap 13 '29 500w

"Mr. Trechmann's translation is virile and accurate and all the better for owing something —a phrase here and there, apparently—to Hazlitt. In format this edition is easily the best of the three now available in English."
+ New Statesman 32:796 Mr 30 '29 700w

"Those who have read Mr. Trechmann's version of the Essays will be sure sight unseen, of his ability to translate the Diary; and they will not be mistaken. As style this version has its shortcomings, but only because the style of the original has its shortcomings; but in accuracy it is admirable, and its notes and comments on the text reveal a generous and discreetly used erudition. We have, at last, a rendering of the Diary in English that may be called definitive."
+ N Y Times p8 O 20 '29 1050w

"Montaigne's account of his journey is of very great interest and Mr. Trechmann calls his picture of Rome, under Pope Gregory XIII, the best we know. The same may be said of this edition of the Diary."
+ Sat R 147:436 Mr 30 '29 580w

"It is all very straightforward, soberly related and, to speak plainly, dull. Nearly half the journal, moreover, is not the voice of Montaigne himself, but is written by his valet and homme d'affaires with a mixture of triviality and deference that wears a strange air by the side of the naïve, spontaneous Montaigne of the essays. And of the rest much is simply a jeu d'esprit on the part of the author."
— Spec 142:513 Mr 30 '29 450w

"Wherever he went we see in this journal the same busy mind, industriously acquiring information, anxious to learn things at first hand, even though it were the mere gossip of a squabble. His appreciation of fine scenery, especially mountain scenery, is delightful. Always tolerant, always curious, always good company, the veritable Montaigne of the essays appears here, picking up ideas, stories and experiences, which he afterwards used to garnish an essay or point an argument. In useful occasional notes Mr. Trechmann points out where such use has been made of them."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p199 Mr 14 '29 1050w

MONTAIGNE, MICHEL EYQUEM DE. Essayes; tr. into English by John Florio and with an introd. by Desmond McCarthy. 3v il $10 Dutton [22s 6d Dent]

844 29-26175

A new and handsome three volume edition of the essays in the earliest English translation by John Florio.

---

Booklist 25:256 Mr '29

"The feature of this new edition, which in general is very nicely printed, is decidedly in its illustrations of persons and places referred to in the essays."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Mr 17 '29 40w

"Florio's version remains the best, being nearest in spirit and phrase to its French original. The present volumes are neither tastelessly ornate nor skimped in the making. The many and excellent plates of contemporary worthies help to realize the character of that endless and endlessly charming monologist who could combine an almost perfect frankness with an equally perfect policy." Vincent McHugh
+ N Y Evening Post p8m F 2 '29 550w

"As handsome an edition as we have yet seen."
+ Spec 142:513 Mr 30 '29 580w

MONTGELAS, MAXIMILIAN MARIA KARL DESIDERIUS, graf von. British foreign policy under Sir Edward Grey; tr. by William C. Dreher; ed. with a foreword by Harry Elmer Barnes. 142p $2.25 Knopf

942.08 Grey, Edward Grey, 1st viscount. Great Britain—Foreign relations. European war, 1914-1918—Causes. Europe—Politics 28-16779

"Count Montgelas is one of the leading students in Germany upon the question of war guilt, and in this little book he again attacks the problem in the light of Lord Grey's 'Twenty-five Years' and the 'British Documents on the Origin of the War.' Count Montgelas argues that instead of working an Anglo-German rapprochement Grey from the beginning lacked a sympathetic attitude toward Germany, and also held exaggerated ideas of Germany's strength. Perhaps the most interesting part of the book is that which shows the great influence brought to bear upon Grey in the last two weeks by the permanent officials in the British foreign office, Crowe and Nicolson."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

---

Booklist 25:114 D '28

Reviewed by J: Carter
Bookm 68:579 Ja '29 60w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 D 16 '28 250w

"The distinguished author of this little book has a broad and factual knowledge on the question of the war guilt and an independent and honest judgment that should commend his writings to the American public." E. N. Anderson
+ Nation 127:274 S 19 '28 780w

MONTGOMERY, JAMES STUART. Virtue of this jest. 325p $2.50 Greenberg

29-16670

"Against the background of mid-eighteenth century London, and making a skilful use of the abundant literature of roguery and low life which the period offers, he sets a hero who schemes now for sixpences and now for a kingdom, and leads you unsuspecting from the mood of 'Peregrine Pickle' and 'The Life and Death of Jonathan Wilde the Great' to that of 'Wha's for Bonnie Charlie' and a generous longing to strike one blow for the king over the water."—Sat R of Lit

---

"It is about as unsatisfactory a substitute for the genuine thing in picaresque novels as a glass of near-beer would be for the sort of ale that was drunk from leathern jacks in the days when Nicky was supposed to have flourished in London."
— Bookm 70:201 O '29 550w

"Aside from its successful limning of an eighteenth century rogue—a singularly innocent one, we guess—'The Virtue of This Jest' is notable for its riot, if not pandemonium, of local color. Mr. Montgomery's industry in this respect comes perilously near defeating itself, as in his veritable catalogues of period stuff." Will Cuppy
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ag 4 '29 700w

"It is a delightful book, comparatively rare in these days of hard-bitten, realistic novels glorifying grime, and the mésaventures of adolescents seeking Beauty in a great city. Mr. Montgomery's prose is admirably fitted to his subject—and what more can one say? The Book League has set its seal on this history-flavored romance: it was a wise choice. Perhaps Mr. Montgomery has made no lasting, valuable contribution to American letters, but he has sped a few hours very happily on their way." M. G.
+ New Repub 60:251 O 16 '29 220w

"Here is a light, picturesque romance, eminently pleasant for summer reading, that compares favorably with any that ever came from the pen of one of those more famous masters of the type, George Barr McCutcheon, Robert Chambers, Rafael Sabatini, to mention a few outstanding authors in a field that is never in danger of lying neglected." Kenneth Fearing
+ N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 27 '29 550w

"The book is full of the thieves' lingo of the time, a time whose spirit is caught and reproduced so skillfully that the reader feels as if he had himself drunk ale in Mother Budge's tavern, listened to the cries of the street vendors, seen the candles wink at Drury Lane Theatre, visited the garret in Salisbury Court where Nick and Mab carried on their helter-skelter, devil-may-care house-keeping, and watched Blueskin on his way to the gallows, 'tasting the intoxicating madness' of the immortality secured to him, as he believed, by Nick's verses."
+ N Y Times p6 Ag 4 '29 750w
Outlook 152:548 Jl 31 '29 230w

"The transition from the grotesque to high romance and thence to tragedy is skilfully managed; the end is surprising; the whole is as deftly written and amusing a literary entertainment as you are likely to meet among this year's books." Garrett Mattingly
+ Sat R of Lit 6:205 O 5 '29 580w
Springf'd Republican p7e N 3 '29 550w

MONTGOMERY, LUCY MAUD (MRS EVAN MACDONALD). Magic for Marigold. 328p $2 Stokes [7s 6d Hodder & S.]
29-20431

Marigold, aged six, was a Lesley of Prince Edward Island, which was as near royalty as one could be there. She lived in the midst of the large and delightful Lesley clan, but her world also included a world of magic where lived her playmate Sylvia whom no one but Marigold ever saw. And besides there were many "really truly" playmates and cats galore, so Marigold was a very happy little girl.

---

"Once in a great while someone writes a book which is about children, but so charming that older people like it just as well. Provided that children love it, too, this is a real accomplishment, and, like the roc's egg, a rarity. Such a one is L. M. Montgomery's newest story, by far the most delightful thing she has done since 'Rainbow Valley.'"
+ Boston Transcript p2 O 2 '29 280w
Times [London] Lit Sup p484 O 24 '29 280w

MONTGOMERY, ROBERT HARGROVE. Coöperative pattern in cotton. 335p $2.50 Macmillan
338.1 Cotton trade—United States. Agriculture, Cooperative 29-5912

An analysis of the post-war agricultural cooperative marketing movement in the South, with a detailed study of the largest cotton cooperative, the Texas farm bureau cotton association. The theme of the book is the need for a new scheme of arrangements for controlling the cotton industry.

---

"This historical survey is, in the main, exceptionally well done. The language is vivid, the facts are full, the analysis is keen. One regrets that there is not more reference to concrete accomplishment; but seven years is a short time for a coöperative to show definitive results. . . Two chapters in Professor Montgomery's book—the first and the last—set it somewhat apart from the general run of studies on coöperation. It becomes a revolutionary, thought-provoking critique of existing social institutions." R. S. Vaile
+ Am Econ R 19:440 S '29 1500w
Reviewed by E. T. Thompson
Am J Soc 35:514 N '29 230w
Reviewed by E. F. Baker
Survey 63:104 O '29 450w

MONTGOMERY, ROSELLE MERCIER (MRS JOHN SEYMOUR MONTGOMERY). Many devices. 150p $2 (5s) Appleton 811 29-2444

A warm humanity infuses these poems of love and friendship and familiar places, to which are added some songs in Negro dialect, and a group of translations from Horace.

---

Reviewed by C: Divine
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Mr 17 '29 50w

"The publication of this second volume of Mrs. Montgomery's verse confirms the high promise of her initial publication, 'Ulysses Returns and Other Poems.' In addition to uncommonly neat craftsmanship, her poems possess buoyant lyric charm combined with direct human appeal. She writes with delicacy, finesse, and at the same time deep intuitive feeling."
+ Boston Transcript p10 My 4 '29 160w

"We have not said that Mrs. Montgomery is among the indubitable poets. But we do feel that in the homespun of her verses, even if the threads are loosely woven, there is an absence of shoddy."
+ — N Y Times p2 Ap 28 '29 250w

"Mrs. Montgomery is very talented and engagingly human, but we could wish that she did not so often rehandle classical mythology or life and death in the manner of one woman confiding to another across the tea-cups. In the poems contained in Part II., which present impressions of places not only seen but truly experienced in America and Europe, she is far less pertly feminine."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p210 Mr 14 '29 160w
Wis Lib Bul 25:125 Ap '29

MOON, GRACE (PURDIE) (MRS CARL MOON). Magic trail. 234p il $2 Doubleday, Doran 29-18411

"Two little Pueblo children follow a magic trail which leads them to surprising adventures. Written by one who knows and understands the Indians and their traditions. Illustrated by Carl Moon."—Cleveland Open Shelf

---

Booklist 26:75 N '29
Cleveland Open Shelf p133 N '29

"Grace Moon is a delightful storyteller for young people and could easily be an outstanding writer of stories about Indian children should she make her young characters conform more nearly to Indian ways and habits.

MOON, GRACE—Continued
She shows a tendency to pattern their actions after those of white children. . . Nevertheless, 'The Magic Trail' is a most entertaining and wholesome story for children between the ages of eight and twelve—much better, in fact, than her very recent book, 'The Runaway Papoose.'" A. B. Applegate
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:112 S 7 '29 270w

MOON, LORNA. Dark star. 343p $2.50 Bobbs 29-7075

Nancy may be the child of young Fassefern, Lord of Rossorty, and she may be the child of his groom. No one in the little Scottish community knows certainly, so Nancy chooses to believe she is a Fassefern. Thruout her young life she lives up to the ideal of the good blood in her veins, an ideal Divot Meg, the prostitute, helps to foster. And when, in the end, the gift of her love is thrust back upon her, Nancy dies as a Fassefern would.

Reviewed by G. T. Hellman
Bookm 70:99 S '29 500w

"Miss Moon's book has an all-of-a-pieceness like a poem. Its emotional quality is never lost, and its rhythm is remarkably sustained. What this means, translated, is that 'Dark Star' is an excellent first novel, with many elements in it that should give it popularity, which it richly deserves. It is not a hodge-podge of half-digested psychology, social criticism, adolescent gropings for 'meanings' and modernized naturalism; it is a first-rate story." Herschel Brickell
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Mr 31 '29 720w

Reviewed by I. W. Lawrence
Boston Transcript p3 Ap 13 '29 1450w

Reviewed by E. L. Walton
Nation 128:537 My 1 '29 130w

"There are passages that remind one of the love passages in Richard Feverel. Miss Moon is literate in the authentic language of emotion. Her book is a genuine romance; indeed, by the common standards of this neo-Georgian era it must be adjudged almost shockingly—which is to say refreshingly—romantic. There is none of that self-conscious cleverness of which we are so tired, none of the ugly dreariness and dirt of the Joyce tradition. Miss Moon uses always the simple word, the mono-syllable when it is possible; yet her simplicity holds no air of ignorance. One feels that probably she has read Freud and Proust and the rest of them, but if so has happily forgotten them, preferring her Emily Brontë. She takes advantage of all the literary freedom of this twentieth century, this loose aftermath of war, but she uses it for nineteenth-century purposes."
+ New Statesman 33:378 Je 29 '29 600w

"Miss Moon has written a distinguished and absorbing book. There is a subtle music in its prose and a penetrating comprehension of human weakness and human desire which will make the story of Nancy Pringle linger long with the reader." Gerry Prosnitz
+ N Y Times p3 Ap 7 '29 450w

" 'Dark Star' should have been a better book, considering its setting and characters; at that, however, it is a great deal more unusual and absorbing than a lot of the books that fall from the printing presses at this season of the year."
+ — N Y World p11m Mr 31 '29 160w

"This book is the essence of life in all its injustices; a beautiful love story, a gripping theme, superb characterizations and the deft handling requisite for such a subject." Milton Byron
+ Outlook 151:507 Mr 27 '29 200w

"The book is singularly unequal, with its extremes of good and bad, and to estimate Miss Moon's future as a novelist would be a difficult task." L. P. Hartley
+ — Sat R 148:194 Ag 17 '29 400w

Reviewed by Gladys Graham
Sat R of Lit 5:996 My 11 '29 500w

"The book is chiefly remarkable for its spirited malice and sardonic humour, out of which Miss Moon has cut a romantic collection of grotesques who are quite convincing when they do not drop into the melodramatic or the sententious." V. S. Pritchett
+ Spec 143:166 Ag 3 '29 220w
Times [London] Lit Sup p560 Jl 11 '29 280w
Wis Lib Bul 25:162 My '29

MOORE, ANNIE CARROLL. Three owls; second book. 440p il $3 Coward-McCann

028.5 Children's literature

A second compilation from the critical articles on children's books which Miss Moore contributes weekly to Books of the New York Herald Tribune. The first book appeared in 1925.

Booklist 25:229 Mr '29

"A volume planned and written by a woman who has never lost her delight in books. The index is eloquent of what children look for in their books. As an adult you will note with appreciation inclusion of such topics as Growing Up with Good Art, When Children Become Authors and other concerns of the thoughtful parents. Mention should not be omitted of Miss Moore's own essays on children and their reading." Helen Ferris
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 My 26 '29 380w

Boston Transcript p5 Ja 26 '29 200w

"This is a significant evaluation of progressive thought in the increasingly important field of children's literature. It is a sound appraisal of the best of the old and the new material. . . As an authoritative and inspiring reference book in the field of literature for children, it bespeaks admiration and deserves permanent recognition." E. H. Naumburg
+ Sat R of Lit 5:667 F 9 '29 480w

MOORE, CHARLES. Life and times of Charles Follen McKim. 356p il $6 Houghton

B or 92 McKim, Charles Follen 29-25448

An authoritative biography of a great architect whose life was bound up with the general artistic development of America. In partnership with two other prominent architects, William R. Mead and Stanford White, McKim's work included the design of the Boston public library, Symphony hall, the Harvard Union and other Harvard structures and the Pennsylvania railroad station in New York.

Reviewed by T. C. Richards
Boston Transcript p8 Ja 4 '30 1850w

"An entertaining and authoritive biography, as well as an account of a period which is now definitely past." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 153:548 D 4 '29 60w

"One of those substantial, workmanlike biographies which are always to be welcomed when they deal with a character or career of high intrinsic interest and assemble first-hand material permitting a close approach between the reader and the subject."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e N 24 '29 1200w

MOORE, CHARLES. Washington, past and present. 340p il $5 Century

917.53 Washington, D.C.—Description. Washington, D.C.—History 29-23221

The national capital viewed from every angle: the origin of the city; its historic houses; important public buildings; the homes of the great of the past; the building of the Capitol and the Washington monument; the story of the White House and the Lincoln Memorial; and a discussion of the city's statues.

"From 1891, as newspaper correspondent, political secretary, Clerk of the Senate Committee on the District of Columbia, chairman of the National Committee of Fine Arts, a member of the American Academy and of the American Institute of Architects, Mr. Moore has not only followed carefully the structural and artistic evolution of Washington, but he himself has had a part in its unfolding. His statements, his suggestions, his predictions are authoritative. And Mr. Suydam visualizes the author's descriptions after that rarely enchanting fashion readers of 'Manhattan' will not have forgotten." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p10 N 30 '29 730w

"His volume is one of interpretation rather than of descriptive and historical detail, of picturesque portrayal diversified by historical reference and comment rather than a guide-book-like array of facts. It is the kind of book that can be read with almost as much enjoyment elsewhere as on the scene, although the visitor to Washington, or the resident there, will find that it can much enhance his appreciation and understanding of the city."

+ N Y Times p38 D 1 '29 400w

"Mr. Moore's book lacks the rich texture of Mr. Wilstach's work, but it is none the less a capable and informative volume. The author's attention is held by buildings, from them he works into history. . . This book makes plain that the changes now taking place in Washington's official buildings will make a rewriting of all guidebooks and descriptive works necessary every few years." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p10m N 10 '29 270w

Springf'd Republican p6e D 15 '29 980w

MOORE, FREDERICK. America's naval challenge. 166p $1.50 Macmillan

359 United States—Navy. Great Britain—Navy. Disarmament 29-8776

This study of the great naval powers of the world—Great Britain, America, and Japan—and their problems of war and peace, leads Mr Moore to the conclusion that present world navies are an excessive burden to the nations supporting them and constitute in themselves a real menace to peace.

"The author's style and methods are those of the journalist rather than of the historian. His selection of facts offers small ground for criticism, but he could have inspired more confidence in his work by citing his authorities. His conclusions are generally sound, but occasionally it is difficult to accept his speculations. There is no bibliography, and the index is not adequate." W: C. Binkley

+ — Am Hist R 34:894 Jl '29 330w

Am Pol Sci R 23:790 Ag '29 80w

Booklist 26:13 O '29

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ap 21 '29 80w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 12 '29 300w

"The only criticism that can be directed against this book is that it should have been longer and more detailed. It is really little more than a pamphlet; the historical matter in the first seven chapters, and the analysis of American credit and foreign trade in the last chapter, are discussed with really tantalizing brevity."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1006 N 28 '29 250w

World Tomorrow 12:425 O '29 60w

MOORE, MERRILL. Noise that time makes; with a foreword by John Crowe Ransom. 113p $2 Harcourt

811 29-21801

These poems take the form of loosely-constructed sonnets, modernistic both in structure and subject matter. Mr Moore was a member of The Fugitive group of southern poets. This is his first volume.

"Any one familiar with the Fugitives—that group of Tennessee poets who fled from nothing so clearly as from the tediousness of the expected—remembers the name of Merrill Moore. Now this young poet comes forward with a volume of verse that has all the fresh, provocative, exciting character of his earlier work, and that has, in addition, the distinction of being recommended by no less a poet than John Crowe Ransom. . . Mr. Moore's most valuable gift seems to be his ability to write poetry that trespasses on the field of prose." Babette Deutsch

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 N 17 '29 1000w

Boston Transcript p2 D 31 '29 1150w

"He has an interesting personality, a speculative mind and a grasp upon the sonnet form. But his work needs concentration; the very thing that you feel he is about to say slips through his nimble lines and vanishes." Horace Gregory

+ — N Y Evening Post p12m N 23 '29 320w

"There is in his verse much that is original and intelligently arresting. . . But he has been satisfied with a carelessness in form and diction which could often have been corrected. Yet it is possible that we are taking too seriously critical an attitude toward Dr. Moore's verse, and that he intended it to be only a debonair and fleeting utterance. In that case, then, it is highly to be recommended for its good cheer and for its homely interest in such things as garden hose, and puppies on the lawn, and fire engines."

+ — N Y Times p35 N 24 '29 430w

"There is material for fine poems in this volume but for the most part it remains only material." Granville Hicks

— + N Y World p10m N 24 '29 150w

"Merrill Moore's sonnets are, in some ways, the most spontaneous ever written in America, and their 'naturalness' is reflected in their structure. The rhythms are based on the rise and fall of the breath rather than on the beat of the metronome. . . Whatever maturity may hold for Moore, his gift at this moment is rich. He is endowed with an unusual range, a lavish fancy, an intelligence sombre and yet buoyant; his is a sensitivity which has evolved an alert and independent style." L: Untermeyer

+ Sat R of Lit 6:364 N 9 '29 1400w

MOORHEAD, ELIZABETH. See Vermorcken, E.

MORAND, PAUL. Black magic; tr. from the French by Hamish Miles. 218p il $3 Viking press

29-10406

The settings of these eight stories of Negro life are various—the United States, Africa and the West Indies—but the theme is unvarying—the atavism of the Negro and the primitive savagery to which he reverts whenever his surface culture is scratched.

Booklist 25:395 Jl '29

"The range of this book, geographical as well as psychological, is amazing. Eight tales emerge, distilled, brilliant, profound, fantastic, and often beautiful, for Paul Morand, now citizen of the world, diplomat, traveller, and many other things besides, began his career as a poet, and remains always above all other things a great artist." W. B. Seabrook

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Ap 21 '29 850w

"Despite its meretricious character, born of mere cleverness with little intellect or intelligent observation back of it, there are in 'Black Magic' numerous pages of brilliant descriptive writing. The stories are amusing and interesting. The drawings by Aaron Douglas are superb additions to the book." Walter White

+ — Nation 128:770 Je 26 '29 500w

"That Morand knows nothing about the American Negro is evidenced by his cheap desire to show his cosmopolitan familiarity with all phases of modern Negro life. His attitude is that of the sophisticated tourist, looking for a new shiver, and only too willing to swallow the most incredible nonsense, provided that he can get material for a 'story' out of it." C. P. Fadiman

— New Repub 60:26 Ag 21 '29 250w

MORAND, PAUL—Continued

"Paul Morand takes the black races, whether they live in the United States, in Haiti, in Africa, for what they are worth as material for esthetic effects, as the decorative stuff of a smooth, high-geared prose that is modern in its surface aspects and not particularly searching. Where he succeeds as an entertainer and a decorater, he fails as a writer of fiction—whose most profound duty is to create character."

+ — N Y Times p5 Ap 28 '29 700w

Reviewed by L. F. Hewlings
Outlook 152:107 My 15 '29 430w

Reviewed by Uffington Valentine
Sat R of Lit 5:1130 Je 22 '29 850w

"How much there is of poetic license, such as has appeared in many recent volumes dealing with Africa, the black man and magic, in Morand's portraiture, this reviewer is unable to say. One thing seems clear, and that is that several persons to whom he has submitted the book find it fascinating reading, and undoubtedly the book presents vivid pictures." H. W. Odum

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:2 Jl 27 '29 400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p901 N 7 '29 50w

MORAY, ALASTAIR. Diary of a rum-runner. 272p il $4 Houghton [10s 6d P. Allan]

351.76 Liquor traffic. Prohibition—United States [29-28365]

" 'The Diary of a Rum Runner' is the day-by-day account of the supercargo of a rum-smuggling schooner, bound from Scotland with a load of booze for Rum Row, and staying there until the entire cargo is disposed of."—N Y Evening Post

---

" 'The Diary of a Rum Runner' is not the ephemeral production its title would lead one to think. It is not in the least sensational, despite the bootleggers, hijackers, storms at sea, etc.; it is tough-fibered; an interesting account of an interesting man; and as a picture (slightly ironical) of New York's Rum Row it is unrivaled." W. R. Burnett

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Jl 28 '29 850w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 25 '29 280w

"He writes with rather self-conscious cheerfulness, but just fails to pack his thrills closely enough to please a jaded public."

— Nation and Ath 45:sup136 Ap 27 '29 70w

"Mr. Alastair Moray is not to be blamed if this diary of his life as a rum-runner on the American coast is singularly deficient in all those elements which go to make up a real 'adventure book.' He tells us just what happened to him and nothing else, and it is the obvious honesty of his account which is its greatest virtue."

+ — New Statesman 33:20 Ap 13 '29 600w

"A plain, factual account, which people with weak hearts need not fear to read." Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p7m Jl 3 '29 90w

"Mr. Moray, in his plain and simple Scotch way, makes one content to read about rum-runners but not anxious to be one. . . He has written a good yarn, and one which has value as a first-hand bit of history."

+ N Y Times p6 Ag 18 '29 1000w

"It is a very entertaining document, which not only gives a vivid and truthful picture of an Atlantic voyage on a small sailing-ship but quite unconsciously draws a most engaging portrait of the author's personality."

+ Sat R 147:540 Ap 20 '29 980w

Sat R of Lit 6:223 O 5 '29 150w

"Exciting and well written as this book undoubtedly is, we should be sorry to think of it as a record of success rather than mutiny and muddle. As it is, we have no hesitation in recommending it to readers who have a stomach for strong adventure. Mr. Alastair Moray must go on writing, for he has a real feeling for a situation and an eye for narrative effect."

+ Spec 142:484 Mr 23 '29 580w

Times [London] Lit Sup p270 Ap 4 '29 680w

MORDAUNT, ELINOR, pseud. See Wiehe, E. M.

MORE, PAUL ELMER. Demon of the absolute. (New Shelburne essays) 200p $2.50 Princeton univ. press [10s 6d Oxford]

814 Literature—Addresses, essays, lectures. Literature—Philosophy 28-24755

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

---

"Mr. More's view of the present state of our letters leaves one with mixed feelings, which I can best describe in his own phrase as 'distrust, not incompatible with a kind of admiration.' Much the same thing may be said of the long and pungent essay on 'The Demon of the Absolute' which gives its name to the volume." G: F. Whicher

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ja 6 '29 1100w

"The absurdities in the postulates of Signor Croce, Senor Ortega, Professor Whitehead and the poseurs who publish their literary excrescence in transition are clearly and directly disclosed. It is a great disappointment to turn from these few pages to his weak and willing judgments of contemporary American writers." Johan Smertenko

+ — Nation 128:sup489 Ap 17 '29 450w

"The title essay has rapier brilliance and rapidity. It seems to me the best summary critique of our age that has so far appeared in print. . . The book is a real eminence in American literature. It is beautiful in wit, strength, and vision." G. R. Elliott

+ Sat R of Lit 5:618 Ja 26 '29 1000w

"The essay which gives the title to the book is much the longest and the most interesting. The reader should be warned that the character of this book is miscellaneous, though the several items are excellent."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p136 F 21 '29 1080w

MORESBY, LOUIS, pseud. See Beck, L.

MORGAN, CHARLES. Portrait in a mirror. 284p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Macmillan]

29-5699

At an early age Nigel Frew gives promise of genius. The young painter meets at a house party—it is England in the 1870's—his first love. A vivid, enigmatic personality, Claire is already engaged, but is instantly attracted to Nigel. The story traces the influence of their exquisite, young love on the development of the adolescent artist. The book was originally published under the title "First love."

---

Booklist 25:286 Ap '29

"Dissecting a book as delicate and humanly true as First Love is as pleasant and profitable as dissecting a flower. The book is a study of the interrelation of art and experience, with the former feeding and thriving on the latter, as must be the case when the artist is a genius."

Bookm 69:xxii My '29 200w

"The artfulness of Mr. Morgan's style is his undoing. The book is lovingly, delicately, even voluptuously, written, and myopically polished. The writer's own disciplined craftsmanship intoxicates him till the style drips with a sensitive enjoyment of the process of laying words on words—for words' sake." Florence Haxton

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 F 24 '29 760w

"The story is told in a leisurely style, and is written in fine, firm prose that never bursts into fireworks nor falls from grace; and the subsidiary characters are presented luminously and unmaliciously."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 23 '29 420w

"Mr. Morgan's style is without sentimentality or crudeness. He has taste and discretion. The simplicity and at times noticeable care of his style are without preciosity. It is an achievement to have given a profoundly established dignity to a state of youthful feeling which is so frequently either rendered priggishly or made absurd." V. S. P.

+ Christian Science Monitor p16 Mr 27 '29 820w

Reviewed by L. D. Irvine

— Nation and Ath 44:692 F 16 '29 200w

"Not since 'The Sheik' has there been a suspense of delayed consummation so attenuated as this young Spartan's 'coming of age.' . . Into this delicately sentimental novel of youthful love, written as if remembered from the vantage of age, is thrust a deal of wisdom about painters and paint. Except in its argument of the author's esthetic, the book is lushly written—beautifully, often—but with such loving artfulness that it resembles the glacé rather than the natural fruit." F. H.

+ New Repub 58:105 Mr 13 '29 140w

"The book is uneven. On the one hand, are general distinction of style; a quiet sense of humor, keen characterization, in which the author takes little, incisive cuts at his people, laying open their essences. On the other, there is an occasional fulsomeness of expression, and the impetus to make things carry on is lacking." Leonard Ehrlich

+ — N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 23 '29 400w

"Every character in the book is seen through Nigel's understanding, which condemns no one, but is discriminating none the less. If he seem overwise for a lad of 21, it should be understood that the story is told in the old age of the artist and it is told delicately and nicely."

+ N Y Times p6 F 17 '29 520w

"Mr. Morgan has chosen, as the instrument which vibrates to the grand passion, a sensitive artist, and has thus intensified and elaborated the experience with nuances unknown to humanity at large. . . The old-fashioned background of the book is faint and delicate. The style is graceful and full of repose. There is something very lasting and eternal about this portrait of a love."

+ N Y World p11m Mr 17 '29 350w

"The book as a whole stands or falls by its lyrical, mystical interpretation of the passion of love. In this Mr. Morgan succeeds admirably—better than most writers who have attempted it. He has language at his command to express fine distinctions; his analysis always leads him towards his subject. . . The book's weakness is imaginative, not intellectual." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 147:150 F 2 '29 500w

"Mr. Morgan has a gift for writing beautifully, and a nice sense of the value of words that is all too rare, but his story suffers by being inconclusive."

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:837 Mr 30 '29 260w

"Portrait in a Mirror is a great book and a beautiful one. In it Mr. Morgan has raised an altar to first-love, and his craftsmanship is exquisite."

+ Spec 142:170 F 2 '29 300w

Spec 142:1015 Je 29 '29 50w

"Charles Morgan's novel 'First Love' is out of the ordinary run of modern novels. It has much more romance than is common in days when realism of the starkest kind remains the ideal of the novelist. And it is written with a much greater care for style than one generally finds."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 17 '29 500w

"Those who rejoice in distinction when they find that rare quality, who recognize intensity of inspiration, who enjoy the masterly unfolding of character and delineation of feature, and who can still savour the classic tradition in English prose, will find, as we did, that they have recently read few novels so arresting."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p77 Ja 31 '29 900w

MORGAN, JOHN JACOB BROOKE. Psychology of abnormal people; with educational applications. (Longmans' educ. ser.) 627p il $3.75 (16s 6d) Longmans

132 Psychology, Pathological 28-9674

In well-arranged textbook form the author, associate professor of psychology at Northwestern university, treats the various mental disorders and abnormalities illustrating with many case studies. Special attention is paid to the value of educational mental hygiene in the treatment of unbalanced personalities.

Booklist 25:104 D '28

"A well-arranged text and a simple style enable Professor Morgan to cover a very extensive field. The sections devoted to mental abnormalities are interesting and thorough, but their proper understanding demands a knowledge of common psychology which is not obtainable in this volume."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p360 My 10 '28 80w

MORGENTHAU, HENRY, and STROTHER, FRENCH. I was sent to Athens. 327p il $4 Doubleday, Doran

949.5 Greece, Modern—History. Reconstruction (European war)—Greece 29-24027

As chairman of the League of nations commission for the reconstruction of Greece, Mr Morgenthau was sent to Athens, and this book is his story of the rebuilding of that nation. He speaks of many modern heroic Greek figures, and he tells how the Greeks cared for the Smyrna refugees, after the victory of the Turks in 1922. The tragic drama of these refugees against the background of the war is the main note of the book.

"Mr. Morgenthau has told his story admirably. He has contributed a new chapter to the history of post war achievements not only in his book but also in the service he has rendered to a small and suffering nation." G. R. B. R.

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 27 '29 770w

Cleveland Open Shelf p148 D '29

"This book has a double value far beyond its title. It is a graphic account of one of the most tragic episodes in the aftermath of the World War. It is also a beautiful illustration of the most significant movement of modern times, the effort to humanize international politics. . . Evidently, even if America is held out of the League of Nations, she cannot help lending some of her best men to its most Christian work." H: van Dyke

+ N Y Times p1 N 10 '29 1650w

MORISON, SAMUEL ELIOT. Hour of American history; from Columbus to Coolidge. (One hour ser.) 156p $1 Lippincott

973 United States—History 29-10035

A rapid survey, necessarily greatly compressed yet comprehensive and highly readable, covering the course of American history from the earliest discoverers to the latest presidential election.

"It is not to be literally accepted that the volume can be read in an hour, but it is very compact and permits a broad survey of American history within the range of an evening's easy reading. Despite this brevity, it is distinctly a critical essay, and not a mere compendium of facts." R. S.

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 18 '29 400w

"It must be said for Professor Morison that, given the limitations that have been imposed, he has discharged his task extremely well as far as selection of data is concerned. The pace is as breathless as that of a three-weeks' personally conducted tour of the capitals and showspots of Europe, but what is exhibited is important, the chronological proportions are good, and some sound criticism and useful interpretation are mixed with the narrative. It is to be regretted that Professor Morison, who can, and in this instance often does, write exceptionally well, should allow himself at times to descend to slapdash and stud his pages with inelegancies which are out of place even in popular writing." W: MacDonald

MORISON, S: E.—Continued
+ — Nation 129:73 Jl 17 '29 240w

"He has managed to outline the entire American story in such a way as to bring out its important material developments, and also to put proper emphasis upon those social and spiritual factors that have meant so much in the birth and shaping of the American nation. One may disagree with him here and there when his own individuality has influenced somewhat his point of view, but if his succinct and racily told story is taken as a whole it is a remarkable piece of history in miniature."
+ N Y Times p21 My 26 '29 300w

"An outline, remarkably full considering its brevity, for the running reader."
+ Outlook 151:514 Mr 27 '29 30w

MORLEY, CHRISTOPHER DARLINGTON. Off the deep end. 358p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran 814 28-29530

Essays, sketches, literary notes, and three one-act plays make up this collection of characteristic Morley flavor, the first of its kind to appear since the "Romany stain."

"A discriminating use of words and a happiness of expression produce in Mr. Morley's writing the often maligned quality of charm. He is the J. B. Priestley of American essayists. His work is that of an interesting mind sensitive to impression, but apparently immune to profundity." G. T. Hellman
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Ja 6 '29 520w
Cleveland Open Shelf p29 F '29

"Mr. Morley is full of enthusiasm, humour, and good sense."
+ New Statesman 32:742 Mr 16 '29 120w

"It is all easy to read and equally easy to forget. The reader saunters, so to speak, through Mr. Morley's engaging purlieus, admiring the gusto of the greenery, the sparkling quality of the streamlet of wit and the whimsicality of the curious growths. If anything, his flaws as a writer are not so discernible in this newest tome."
+ — N Y Times p12 D 2 '28 380w
St Louis 27:58 F '29

Reviewed by W: Bolitho
+ Sat R of Lit 5:749 Mr 9 '29 1100w

"A friendly, charming book, offering choice of many refreshing themes, especially to a jaded mood."
+ Spec 142:426 Mr 16 '29 200w

"Whether he writes of French criminals or of American commuters absorbed in pink evening papers full of love, Mr. Christopher Morley has a pretty touch and an engagingly confidential and interested air."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup F 21 '29 450w

MORLEY, FRANK VIGOR. East south east. 347p $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d Longmans]
29-18168

The adventures of a boy from Baltimore who ran away in 1806, went to England, went whaling, and finally treasure hunting upon an island somewhere south of New Zealand.

Booklist 26:120 D '29

" 'East South East' is so packed with meaty adventure and exciting descriptions that discussion of the characters is in order. As for the style, it is entirely suitable for the subject. Without being fussily archaic the author has created the atmosphere of 1806. Moreover, the story is not hackneyed. The characters are freshly imagined and satisfyingly authentic." W: McFee
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 S 15 '29 850w
Nation 129:603 N 20 '29 130w

"The description of whaling in the South Seas is done with evident knowledge and with extraordinary gusto, and is the making of as sound and stirring a book of adventure as has been published in recent years. The neglect of proportion is to be regretted to this extent, that it has probably stood between Mr. Morley and the writing of a minor classic, but it will be surprising if, even as it is, East South East disappears with the season of its production." E. S.
+ — New Statesman 33:243 Je 1 '29 210w
N Y Evening Post p12m N 16 '29 100w
N Y Times p7 S 1 '29 650w
Outlook 153:193 O 2 '29 50w

"Mr. Morley has the picaresque novelist's hardness of heart; he can invent a good character and leave him behind without a pang. The actual pursuit of the treasure, which occupies the second part of the book, is less satisfactory: the incidents seem arbitrary and the treasure itself never takes hold of the imagination as it should, in spite of the map at the beginning." L. P. Hartley
+ — Sat R 147:684 My 18 '29 180w

"While 'East South East' leaves its model still safe and unsurpassed, it makes a very interesting assault on that classic's preëminence, and one closes the book with a feeling of marked pleasure such as can come from only personality-stamped work." T. M. Longstreth
+ Sat R of Lit 6:270 O 12 '29 700w
Springf'd Republican p7e S 29 '29 270w

"What distinguishes Mr. Morley's yarn from the run of yarns of adventure is that he seems to have entered into the skin of each one of them, and to have acted each part, so as to know how he would have thought, felt and acted in each typical predicament. Out of this knowledge he provides the convincing detail in act and speech which makes a story go. . . Of all the parts that Mr. Morley is to be conceived as having acted in imagination it is that of the whaler in which he is most successful. He compels the reader to share the whaler's feelings."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p360 My 2 '29 500w

MORLEY OF BLACKBURN, JOHN MORLEY, 1st viscount. Memorandum on resignation, August, 1914. 39p $2 (3s 6d) Macmillan
B or 92 28-25266

The little volume contains a statement, prepared for publication by Lord Morley before his death, of his disagreement with the policy of the Cabinet and of the causes which led to his resignation from the Cabinet shortly before the outbreak of the European war.

"Among the various 'revelations' of the inner working of the minds of men and of cabinets in the critical days immediately preceding and accompanying the outbreak of hostilities in 1914, none is more revealing than the reasons Lord Morley gave to the world—and to himself—in this memorandum." W. C. A.
Am Pol Sci R 23:508 My '29 230w

"Since the armistice there have been countless memoirs and memoranda to substantiate Morley's interpretation of Grey's policies. This memorandum, therefore, adds no important data. It is useful only to vindicate the judgment of Morley on the diplomacy of the war. But it fails to vindicate the timidity which impelled him to shrink from following the path of conscience at the end of a long life of courageous crusading." A. L. Sachar
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 Ap 28 '29 720w
Boston Transcript p4 Ja 5 '29 480w

MORRIS, GWLADYS EVAN. Tales from Bernard Shaw; told in the jungle. 215p il $3 Stokes [7s 6d Harrap]
Shaw, George Bernard 29-21010

Ten tales based upon ten of Bernard Shaw's plays, written in the manner of Kipling's Jungle tales, in which animals replace people. Illustrated in color by Phyllis A. Trery.

Nation and Ath 45:836 S 28 '29 150w

"These ten tales, based upon as many of Mr. Shaw's plays and written in a manner somewhat reminiscent of, if more mature than, Mr. Kipling's Just So stories, are avowedly intended to aid people to understand what the plays are about. In each case an animal community replaces—but the disguise is thin—the human of the original, and the plot is stripped to its essential theme. It may, however, be doubted whether those who have not the wit to see for themselves what Mr. Shaw himself is talking about will have either the intelligence or interest to make the transposition from tale to play. The manner is not without charm, if a little tiresome when taken in bulk."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p850 O 24 '29 150w

MORRIS, HARRISON SMITH. Martial notes of the old war and the new; dedicated to the G.A.R. passing by on the march to immortality. 93p $1.50 (6s) Lippincott

811 29-10538

Poems of sentiment, romance and heroism with war themes: Gettysburg, The deserter, At the camp fire, Hymn for Decoration day, etc.; concluding with a section of verse on miscellaneous subjects.

"There is a strange lack of either strength or beauty in the poems contained in this volume. The verse is not halting; it is even, in some measure, adequate; yet it lacks inspiration. There is feeling which is not quite passion; affection which somehow carries no tenderness."

— Boston Transcript p2 Ag 7 '29 200w

"We can find little to encourage us in Mr. Morris's 'Martial Notes,' which are a collection of poor War verse and a few academic exercises. The one was tolerated in a crisis along with many other things which we relegated to obscurity when the blinding passion had passed: the others should never have taken the leap from the safe hiding places of ephemeral encouragement."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p718 S 19 '29 480w

MORRIS, LLOYD R. Procession of lovers. 288p $3.50 Harcourt

29-5700

Lloyd Morris retells the stories of some famous lovers, embroidering the facts of history with the imagination of the novelist. Sappho, Mary Magdelene, the Empress Theodora, Abelard and Heloise, la Grande Mademoiselle, Kit Marlowe and Michael Angelo form this procession of lovers.

Reviewed by Margaret Wallace
Bookm 70:101 S '29 170w

"Each is a moving and extraordinarily vivid experience, recounted with rare distinction. . . Guided by his own insight and sense of propriety, Mr. Morris has, when 'facts' have failed him, assumed the omnipotence that is essential to all creation. We have it on classical authority that poetry is truer than history." Raymond Weaver

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 F 24 '29 760w

Reviewed by H: Ladd
Nation 128:512 Ap 24 '29 450w

Reviewed by Clarence Britten
N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 16 '29 720w

"For those unfamiliar with the originals of the several episodes the grace and suavity of the present telling will prove winning. But the present writer prefers such fragments of Sappho as remain, the story of Mary Magdelene as found in the Gospels, the tale of Abelard and his Heloise as revealed in their letters. The present book seems to him much like a collection of stories for children which are not children's stories."

— N Y Times p4 Mr 3 '29 850w

"Mr. Morris is neither facetious nor humorous. He takes his subject seriously, and he has written new humanized versions of the old loves that most of us met in abridged editions of the classrooms."

N Y World p11m Ap 28 '29 280w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell
No Am 227:adv Ap '29 130w

"Mr. Morris is sensitive. His prose is smooth, often lovely, and he has a gift for the re-creation of atmosphere. And most of the stories are entirely readable. But he belongs to a group of writers whose basic thesis is becoming worn and somewhat tiresome; and we hope to see him turn back to critical biography."

+ — Outlook 151:391 Mr 6 '29 140w

Pratt p41 summer '29

"All the stories will charm the reader to absorbed interest. Mr. Morris's previous book, 'The Rebellious Puritan,' though not flawless as interpretation, was commended for its brilliant analysis and revealing touches. The new book offers greater freedom and equal chance for subtlety."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 28 '29 420w

Wis Lib Bul 25:193 Je '29

MORRITT, HENRY EDWARD. Fishing ways and wiles; introd. by Lord Howard de Walden. 141p il pa $2.25 Houghton [6s Methuen]

799.1 Fishing 29-20264

" 'Fishing Ways and Wiles' is a pleasant little book illustrated with a dozen or so attractive sketches in water-colours. Major Morritt confines himself to the catching of trout and salmon. He is far from being a dry-fly purist, holding that the main object of the angler is to outwit the fish, provided always that he makes the fish come to him and that he lures it with its normal diet, whether that diet be fly, nymph, worm or smaller fish."—Sat R

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 D 15 '29 80w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 31 '29 250w

"It must not be supposed that Major Morritt is only a teller of stories; on the contrary, he is a thoroughly practical all-round fly-fisher."

+ New Statesman 33:20 Ap 13 '29 250w

"Major Morritt is an experimentalist, who is not afraid to challenge the mandarins, and, although the expert will find nothing new in his theories, the novice will discover more than one wrinkle which may stand him later in good stead. The book has an amusing preface by Lord Howard de Walden."

+ Sat R 147:326 Mr 9 '29 180w

"The only serious fault of this book is that there is not enough of it. Excess of modesty has led the author almost to shirk his promise to write a book on fishing, and to compound in part for reproductions of some attractive water-colour sketches. Many readers will regret the paucity of the environing pages; for long experience and the habit of experiment and reflection, combined with sound sense, have made many of the author's methods, and his reasons for them, unusually interesting."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p177 Mr 7 '29 770w

MORROW, MRS HONORE (MCCUE) WILLSIE. Splendor of God. 382p $2.50 Morrow

Judson, Adoniram—Fiction 29-16395

"Adoniram Judson, companioned by his good and beautiful young wife, Ann, landed in the 'sad, silly town' of Rangoon in 1813. . . Based on a variety of scattered accounts of his career, 'Splendor of God' is the domestic, spiritual and missionary biography of the next twenty years of Judson's extraordinary life."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Booklist 26:33 O '29

Bookm 70:xiv S '29 80w

" 'Splendor of God' is a long novel, informing, occasionally tedious—the minute care in presenting the Burmese scene begs for accompanying National Geographic plates—a careful, ex-

MORROW, HONORE—Continued
haustive account of a dauntless man's wrestlings with strange customs, political hostility, sorrow and his own soul, for the greater glory of God. But though it has some few exalted moments it lacks the sustained fire and inspiration ever to get it surely off the ground and into flight." Florence Haxton
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Jl 28 '29 550w

Reviewed by D. L. Mann
Boston Transcript p2 Jl 27 '29 1750w

"It is the apparent actuality of the background and the care that has been put into the establishing of the many insignificant people of the story that give it its hold upon the reader."
+ Christian Science Monitor p8 S 21 '29 480w

Cleveland Open Shelf p127 S '29

"It is, unquestionably, one of the best books Mrs. Morrow has written. . . In spite of the unavoidably proselytizing and professionally 'Christian' atmosphere of 'Splendor of God,' it is never mawkish, its pietism does not weary or offend. It is good reading throughout, with much shrewd psychological analysis." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p6m Ag 3 '29 250w

"The author has done two things well. She has written an absorbing novel of the religious zeal of two very human, attractive and intelligent young people who were willing to sacrifice their lives and personal comfort and happiness to convert the Burmese to Christianity, and she has restored to the word 'missionary' its lost prestige."
+ N Y Times p16 Ag 4 '29 400w

" 'The Splendor of God' must be read for information only, because it cannot give pleasure. That is not because it is ill written: while without literary significance, it is also without literary faults of any conspicuous sort and the characterizations are warm and living. But the story is too painful to give pleasure."
Outlook 152:512 Jl 24 '29 280w

Pratt p37 autumn '29

"Mrs Morrow's novel has considerable vitality, and the reader perhaps feels greater curiosity because he cannot distinguish the dividing line between biography and fiction."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ag 4 '29 600w

MORSE, ELIZABETH. Siamese cat. 62p il $1.75 Dutton

David was a little American boy who lived in Siam. One day he chanced to save the life of the queen of the fairies and as a reward was granted a magic helmet which enabled him to understand the animal language. Wearing the helmet and accompanied by a Siamese cat David went in search of buried treasure, and quite an experience it proved to be.

"In some books the 'magic' quality seems an inherent part of the animal element, in some it seems just a little forced. It does in 'The Siamese Cat.' You do have to be so careful with fairies." Rose Fyleman
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 N 10 '29 80w

Reviewed by O. M. Fuller
N Y World p11m N 24 '29 70w

" 'The Siamese Cat,' though simple and exciting, uses the colorful and fantastic background of Siam too little to excuse either the mediocrity of the story or the use of common slang." Catherine Woodbridge
— Sat R of Lit 6:429 N 16 '29 50w
Springf'd Republican p7e D 15 '29 80w

MORSE, JOHN TORREY. Thomas Sergeant Perry; a memoir. 181p il $3.50 Houghton

B or 92 Perry, Thomas Sergeant 29-9529

An intimate friend of many years writes this biography of and tribute to Thomas Sergeant Perry, "a cultured Bostonian of many literary associations." The latter portion of the book contains delightful letters from Perry to Mr Morse.

"The biography by the editor of the American Statesmen Series is a labor of love and devotion. It is permeated with something of the beauty and serenity of Perry's own life, and has a charm that is conspicuously lacking from many 'modern' biographies." H: S. Commager
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 My 5 '29 600w

"The biographer has done his work con amore, but with fairness and honesty. The career is sketched plainly, but the character and personality are revealed in a vivid and inspiring fashion. The letters are so well selected that they tell their own story." T. C. R.
+ Boston Transcript p2 My 22 '29 500w

"In the ten rather brief chapters of the book, the author does something more than write an interesting memoir of his friend; he represents Perry, the man, quite vividly, and in the representation we can read hints of exceptional powers which somehow seem never to have come to adequate fruition. Particularly in Perry's letters—and a number of most charming letters are included—we can detect the signature of an alert, subtle and whimsical personality who might have made the world his debtor by rare essays." S. A. Coblentz
+ N Y Times p10 Je 16 '29 850w

"From the few letters which Mr. Morse publishes it seems possible that some future collection of Thomas Sergeant Perry's letters will yet place him in the history of American literature. They have the wit, the charm, the perfect ease of the great letter writers. And yet he was very little known, this brilliant American."
+ Sat R of Lit 5:1099 Je 8 '29 280w

MORSE, RICHARD, pseud. See Eastman, F.

MORTON, LEAH, pseud. See Stern, E. G.

MOSES, MONTROSE JONAS, ed. British plays from the restoration to 1820; with introds. and bibliographies. 2v 921p il $12.50 Little

822.08 English drama—Collections 29-5744

A collection of plays covering a century and a half of development in the British theater from 1671 to 1820. Contents: v 1, The rehearsal, by George Villiers; The Spanish fryar, by John Dryden; The man of mode; or, Sir Fopling Flutter, by George Etherege; The plain-dealer, by William Wycherley; The way of the world, by William Congreve; The provok'd wife, by John Vanbrugh; Venice preserv'd; or, A plot discover'd, by Thomas Otway; The careless husband, by Colley Cibber; The conscious lovers, by Richard Steele; v 2, Jane Shore, by Nicholas Rowe; The beaux' stratagem, by George Farquhar; The beggar's opera, by John Gay; Douglas, by John Home; She stoops to conquer, by Oliver Goldsmith; The fashionable lover, by Richard Cumberland; The clandestine marriage, by George Colman, sr., and David Garrick; The school for scandal, by R: B. Sheridan; The Cenci, by P. B. Shelley.

Booklist 25:277 Ap '29

"A fine feature of the collection is the inclusion of many rare and illuminating illustrations, and another is the music for 'The Beggars' Opera.' " W. P. Eaton
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Mr 24 '29 230w

"Notable collection of British drama." Herschel Brickell
+ No Am 227:adv Ap '29 30w

"All told, Mr. Moses affords a generous selection of plays. As editor, Mr. Moses gives in his introductions to the various plays and in his bibliographies ample historical and critical background for the general reader and much that definitely serves even the specialist." G: H. Nettleton
+ Sat R of Lit 5:1090 Je 8 '29 560w

Wis Lib Bul 25:99 Mr '29

MOSHER, WILLIAM EUGENE, and others, eds. Electrical utilities; the crisis in public control; under the auspices of School of citizenship and public affairs, Syracuse university. 335p $4 Harper

380.16 Public utilities. Electric utilities. Public service commissions. Government ownership 29-16476

With the enormous increase in the use of electricity for industrial, agricultural and domestic purposes the problem of the adequate regulation of public utilities which manufacture and sell light and power is growing more and more acute. This work, prepared under the auspices of the School of citizenship and public affairs of Syracuse university, describes the shortcomings of the control exercised by the public service commissions and the Federal power commission, and considers various alternative methods of control.

---

Booklist 26:55 N '29

"On the whole the volume contains an outspoken defense of consumers' interests, and a vigorous criticism both of unscrupulous private finance and of timid, haphazard and niggardly state policy." J. A. Flexner

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 O 6 '29 550w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 31 '29 560w

"Dr. Mosher and his associates have written an arresting book, of great value to the student of power control. Syracuse University may well be proud that such a book comes out of its School of Citizenship and Public Affairs." H: R. Mussey

+ Nation 129:307 S 18 '29 1200w

"This is a weighty book on a timely and important subject. . . Mr. Mosher and his coworkers are to be congratulated upon the thoroughness of their performance and the judicial temper, as well as the force and incisiveness, of their criticisms. In view particularly of the Boulder Dam project in the Southwest, and the gigantic mergers and holding-company undertakings which are just now attracting public attention in the East, the book merits wide and thoughtful reading." W: MacDonald

+ N Y Times p1 S 22 '29 1600w

"A more useful and entertaining book on Electrical Utilities would be difficult to imagine. . . It is a veritable handbook of factual material usually hard to find." M. L. Cooke

+ Survey 63:228 N 15 '29 380w

Reviewed by H. Y. Williams
World Tomorrow 12:521 D '29 750w

MOSS, FRED AUGUST. Your mind in action; applications of psychology. 477p il $4 Houghton

150 Psychology, Applied. Psychology, Physiological 29-1037

General chapters on the mind and how it works, how intelligence is come by and how it may be measured, are followed by chapters showing the application of psychology in medicine, the detection of crime, advertising, the selection of personnel, and in other problems of industry and business.

---

Booklist 25:268 Ap '29

"A well organized, well written book on human behavior."

+ Bookm 69:viii Ag '29 150w

Boston Transcript p5 Mr 9 '29 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p136 N '29

St Louis 27:279 O '29

"Among the best of the many books of popular psychology may be placed 'Your Mind in Action.' This work has the advantage of being written by a psychologist who is also trained in psychiatry. When he is dealing with psychological or biological analysis he is a sane and informing commentator. And the writing is always lucid and workmanlike."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 5 '29 210w

"It is one of the best inclusive books on the practical fruits of psychological research during the last two decades, given in text-book form, but nevertheless interesting as well as helpful for the general reader. This is the book I am going to recommend from now on when asked, 'What should I read in psychology books?'" D. A. Laird

+ Survey 62:146 Ap 15 '29 240w

Wis Lib Bul 25:123 Ap '29

MOTHERWELL, HIRAM. Imperial dollar. 310p [2] $3.50 Brentano's

330.973 United States—Economic conditions. European war, 1914-1918—Economic aspects. United States—Foreign relations 29-21189

"There is nothing startlingly novel in the author's conception that the United States since the War has become an empire by the might of the dollar. But he has brought together a formidable mass of information on how this empire was created, what it is doing and what it is likely to do in the future. In treating of this empire of the dollar, Mr. Motherwell insists on his own definition of 'empire.' To him it does not at all mean political sovereignty. It is often most effective, he finds, when it is unseen and unfelt. So he defines it simply as 'exclusive influence exercised by one nation over another politically distinct nation or community.' . . Mr. Motherwell believes that the basis of this new empire of ours is the machine, which, by sending its products out beyond the boundaries of the United States, has created a surplus of wealth which must also be put to work in foreign lands."—New Repub

---

"The chief interest of his book is less in its comment than in its record of what has happened, especially since the war. In an appendix are some extremely interesting tables relating to the income, wealth, debts, etc., of various nations. A touch of superficiality is evident here and there." R. J. Davis

+ — Nation 129:755 D 18 '29 500w

"This new and contradictory America of ours—grasping and generous, self-assertive and timid—is the subject here of a book, broadly thought out and thoroughly interesting. The machine, of which so many have been telling us recently, is the starting point of this study. But, whereas other writers for the most part have been concerned with what the machine is doing to America, Mr. Motherwell deals with the effect which America, by virtue of the machine, is having on the rest of the world." H. N. Denny

+ New Repub 61:75 D 11 '29 700w

Reviewed by W: MacDonald
N Y Times p32 D 8 '29 1250w

MOTON, ROBERT RUSSA. What the Negro thinks. 267p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

326 Negroes. United States—Race question 29-9727

Dr Moton, principal of Tuskegee institute, treats the Negro problem from a new viewpoint: what the Negro himself thinks of racial discrimination and of the experiences to which he is subjected because of his color.

---

Booklist 25:345 Je '29

"If only for the chapters on 'Knowing the White Man' and 'The Negro's Reaction', the revelation of What the Negro Thinks will appeal to many readers."

+ Bookm 69:446 Je '29 420w

"A book that should, and undoubtedly will, be widely read. If it serves no other purpose it will introduce a disturbing confusion for those optimistic ones whose stock phrases have dwelt upon the Negro's contentment and happiness under the existing conditions of his life in America." C: S. Johnson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 My 19 '29 1450w

"A sane and dispassionate study of racial problems." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 27 '29 480w

MOTON, R. R.—*Continued

"Few are so well qualified as Dr. Moton for such an interpretation. This revelation of Negro thought is given in the simple faith that white folks are open to reason, that they want to know the facts, that they ultimately believe in democracy and fair play, and are responsive to ideals that in some way may be described as Christian. Whether this is hopeless credulity, remains to be seen. However that may be, his faith stands as a noble gesture." F. C. Foster

+ Christian Century 46:584 My 1 '29 1000w

Cleveland Open Shelf p87 Je '29

"Whoever reads this work in addition to Scott Nearing's 'Black America' and 'The American Negro,' edited by Donald Young, will have as complete a picture of the American race problem as can be crowded into 900 pages." I. I. Spengler

New Repub 59:51 My 29 '29 450w

"The book is optimistic and shows unusual perspective and poise. Its publication and reception mark an epoch for both races." H. W. Odum

+ Sat R of Lit 6:1 Jl 27 '29 1100w

Spec 143:772 N 23 '29 270w

Reviewed by Alain Locke

Survey 62:198 My 1 '29 300w

"Its freedom from bitterness would abundantly qualify its author for membership of the society entitled the Fellowship of Reconciliation. His aim is to promote more civilized and friendly relations between the white and coloured races in America; and he has not written a line that would mar the effect of the book as a much-needed eirenicon."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p938 N 21 '29 1000w

MOTT, MRS BESSIE QUIRT. American woman and her bank; with an introd. by G. Prather Knapp. 252p il $2 Doubleday, Doran

332.1 Banks and banking 29-7386

"A book for the housewife, estate manager and business woman and for women inexperienced in business who are faced with responsibilities that require banking procedure. There are chapters on types of banks, types of accounts, checks, credit, loans, trusteeships, and banking as a career for women. The work is nontechnical and written by a woman of wide business experience and banking background."—Cleveland Open Shelf

---

Booklist 25:309 My '29

"The book is good. Its pages run the whole gamut of personal finance, discussing checking accounts, letters of credit, collateral, commercial paper, trusts, wills and kindred topics, concisely, clearly and always with a little gentle humor just below the surface. The book is decidedly readable and might hope of a wide audience if it were entitled 'The Bank Nobody Knows.'"

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 S 15 '29 380w

Cleveland Open Shelf p84 Je '29

"Mrs. Mott has notable ability in putting into clear and simple language matters that to the untrained in finance seem difficult and complicated. Any woman who must handle money, whether in small or large amounts, will find her exposition of how to use banks, trust companies and other instruments of the financial world helpful and dependable."

+ N Y Times p23 Mr 3 '29 230w

St Louis 27:194 Je '29

MOTT, THOMAS BENTLEY. Myron T. Herrick, friend of France; an autobiographical biography. 399p il $5 Doubleday, Doran

B or 92 Herrick, Myron Timothy 29-29222

From conversations with Mr Herrick and from his letters Colonel Mott, who was military attaché at the American embassy in Paris, has recorded the life of the genial ambassador, so loved and honored by the French people. The years covered by his ambassadorships were from 1912 to 1914 and, again, from 1921 to 1929.

---

Reviewed by H. C. Lodge

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 D 8 '29 850w

Reviewed by T. C. Richards

Boston Transcript p4 D 14 '29 1800w

"A volume which is alike a monument to the man whose life it recounts and a credit to the man who wrote it." T. R. Ybarra

+ N Y Times p3 D 22 '29 2050w

"Col. Mott was closely associated with the Ambassador during his two terms in office. He has made a very fine book out of his material, one revealing what excellent service was rendered by Herrick both for the United States and France." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p10m D 8 '29 1200w

"This chatty, rather ill-organized, consistently interesting book gives a vivid picture of a genial ambassador, whom most readers will be predisposed to admire and even love. If it reveals any considerable fault in Herrick we have not discovered it. For a critical appraisal of his career one must go elsewhere, but enough is given here to enable one to estimate the causes of his immense popular success." Dumas Malone

+ Sat R of Lit 6:555 D 14 '29 1050w

MOTTER, THOMAS HUBBARD VAIL. School drama in England. 325p il $3.50 Longmans

792 College and school drama. English drama—History and criticism. Theater—England [29-8760]

The author has made a study of the history of school plays in some of the famous public schools of England—Winchester, Eton, Westminster, Charterhouse, Harrow, Rugby, and others.

---

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 Je 9 '29 230w

"Mr. Motter has worked industriously at his survey of school theatricals from Dunstable in the twelfth century to Bradfield and others in the twentieth. . . . In a book of this kind there is a natural interest and excitement everywhere."

+ Sat R 147:441 Mr 30 '29 180w

"The book is admirably constructed and bears the marks of much scholarship and labour; in fact, there is perhaps a surfeit of notes for the ordinary reader. To many of us the appendices appear still more interesting. They contain lists of the plays produced by many schools from the earliest recorded instances up to the present day."

+ Spec 142:548 Ap 6 '29 730w

Times [London] Lit Sup p333 Ap 25 '29 1500w

MOTTRAM, RALPH HALE. Armistice, and other memories (Eng title Ten years ago). 254p $2 Dial press [5s Chatto & W.] 29-4762

A group of war sketches and stories forming a pendant to The Spanish Farm trilogy. Contents: Never again!; Somewhere in France; 11th November 1918; One day in every year; The common secretary; Virginia; The Flemish border; The old man's chair; The horse marines; The devil's own; The darkest day; Young Hamilton Tighe; The Chink; Farewell, my comrades; Y-grecque, emme, cé, a; Why ever?

---

Booklist 25:286 Ap '29

"A book of slight sketches, containing two or three really good pieces. Of the slightest of the sketches in the new volume it may be said that they are well enough written, but they read more like notes than finished work." Herschel Brickell

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Ja 27 '29 850w

"Not having read 'The Spanish Farm Trilogy,' I cannot decide whether 'Ten Years Ago,' described as a 'pendant,' is in keeping with the chain. I can only say that moralistic generalizations and Flanders Poppy sentiment so blur whatever sharp memories of the war Mr. Mottram may have had (and may have recorded in the trilogy) that this book might as well have been written by someone who had never been in the B.E.F. at all. Mr. Mottram's command of literary technique is all against him." Robert Graves

— Nation and Ath 44:420 D 15 '28 320w

"Because Mr. Mottram can give reasons and express feelings with clarity and distinction, these stories and sketches and essays about the war stand out in the flood of their kind currently appearing." C. G. Poore

+ N Y Times p9 Mr 3 '29 780w

"Some have a thread of story, some are character sketches brief but vivid, some are just pictures, pictures that have remained in the memory of a wise and pitiful man. Their finest characteristic is their validity. They have the strength and the nobility of truth. 'Armistice' is a distinguished contribution to the literature of the war."

+ Outlook 151:150 Ja 23 '29 200w

Pratt p41 summer '29

"The ironies of the Flemish border, immovable types like Virginia and the Chinks, dreadful unforgettable images like 'The Old Man's Chair,' and 'The Devil's Own,' the unutterable flatness of Armistice Day on the battlefield—these Mr. Mottram records. It is the truth about the War, though not the whole truth. Mr. Mottram's admirers will be very glad of this 'pendant' to the Spanish Farm." R. A. Taylor

+ Spec 141:711 N 10 '28 120w

"These sketches scarcely show him at his best; for he is a leisurely writer not well suited by their confined space, with a style which, though sound and easy, has no brilliance and, indeed, no particular comeliness. Yet, if only two or three in the collection are really notable, the series has cumulative strength and conviction. One feels always that he is a faithful and sincere witness, who believes that 'the machine nearly overtook civilization, and used it up,' and has had laid upon him the task of continuing to tell that story."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p847 N 15 '28 420w

Reviewed by Coley Taylor

World Tomorrow 12:377 S '29 100w

MOTTRAM, RALPH HALE. The boroughmonger. 325p $2.50 Little [7s 6d Chatto & W.]

29-9003

The adventures of a young parliamentary candidate in the days of agitation over the reform bill in England. The unscrupulous Lord Carstone of Carstone Place is supporting the bill and supplying the campaign funds. His innocent young kinsman Theodore, whom he uses as catspaw, is injected into all the riotous doings of a corrupt election. Theodore is defeated by ten votes, but he has in the meantime found consolation in Marina, the niece of his tutor, and for them the story ends happily.

---

Booklist 25:360 Je '29

"Subtly, and in his own quiet way, Mottram here and there succeeds in capturing the crux of an act or the cause of an attitude in a sentence edged to carry with it the flash of a philosophical turn. His method is discreetly reminiscent of his masters, Fielding and Smollett, Trollope as well. The book has substance and flavor." Halle Schaffner

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 My 12 '29 500w

"A tale which depicts most faithfully the political didoes of the early eighteen hundreds." H. F. McDade

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 13 '29 1100w

"Told in an affected style which derives from Meredith. The characters carry their period trappings as self-consciously as amateur actors their Clarkson ruffs and wigs. An unnecessary book, but quite innocuous." Raymond Mortimer

— Nation and Ath 45:114 Ap 27 '29 50w

"Those who want fiction in which the politics of the Reform period are described had better go to the late Stanley Weyman, who wrote a very good book with this as a theme. Those who want a painstaking reconstruction of the general life of the time, occasionally lit up with imagination, could not do better than go to Mr. Mottram, who is, however, not so good here as he can be when he works with his own experiences for material." E. S.

— + New Statesman 33:119 My 4 '29 180w

"A numbing reticence has prevented the author of this little tale of an election in Norwich, England, in the reform bill days, from making this an intelligible novel. Mr. Mottram is an accomplished and a dignified writer. His 'Spanish Farm Trilogy' ranks with the best of the novels about the World War. His essential seriousness prevents one from concluding that he meant 'The Borough Monger' to be only a pleasantly trivial tale of unregenerate English politics."

— N Y Times p16 Ap 14 '29 580w

"The writing in enjoyable, virile and scholarly, and, if sometimes cumbersome, always shows a respect for the value and quality of words—no common virtue nowadays. But all the same 'The Boroughmonger' is not as good as Mr. Mottram's war books. The delicate balance is not kept, and, though the background is vivid, the characters are lifeless." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 147:870 Je 29 '29 350w

"Mr. Mottram can present a person, a plan, or a period with quite unusual vividness. He is equally successful in painting his scenes, and by the end of his clear unimpassioned book one feels that one has seen something of England herself, settling down after Waterloo for her hundred years of unapproachable composure." Basil Davenport

+ Sat R of Lit 5:1047 My 25 '29 280w

"If Mr. Mottram had not given us The Spanish Farm and The English Miss we should be very well satisfied with The Boroughmonger, which, though it bears no evidence of the strange excitement that impelled its predecessors, is still a pleasant and interesting story. Mr. Mottram writes well. He has, in his rather Dickensian style, given an admirable picture of life in a Midland town, but his book has an historical rather than a human interest. We hope that his next book will be a modern one." B. E. Todd

— + Spec 142:633 Ap 20 '29 150w

"Mr Mottram has never been particularly successful in his plots. They are apt to be loose and formless. The importance of Mr Mottram's books lies in his power to evoke a mood and an atmosphere. He is able to recreate events in such a manner that we live through them vividly in imagination." H. K.

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Je 26 '29 580w

"Here the scene is the play, the deft, unexaggerated revival of a corner of East Anglia as it stood in the last days of the oligarchy before the fall of the guillotine in 1832. And with what a charm Mr. Mottram clothes it! Mr. Mottram savours the values of which he writes."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p334 Ap 25 '29 450w

MOTTRAM, RALPH HALE. History of financial speculation. 317p il $4 Little [15s Chatto & W.]

332.6 Speculation—History 29-23874

Going back to its beginnings in prehistoric times Mr Mottram follows the history of speculation, with all its implications, to today. Particularly interesting chapters deal with John Law and his schemes, the 'golden age' of speculation in the mid-nineteenth century, 'Utopia limited' of the early twentieth century, and the consequences of the World war.

---

MOTTRAM, R. H.—*Continued

"For those who want a readable and orderly narrative, closely packed with well-chosen facts, the book should prove eminently acceptable."

+ Nation 129:73 Jl 17 '29 250w

Nation and Ath 46:353 D 7 '29 800w

"Mr. Mottram is undoubtedly a capable novelist; and he has, we believe, practical experience of banking and finance. He has written, nevertheless, a bad book—not only in its failure to convey a clear and intelligible vision of its subject, but also in its literary quality. For Mr. Mottram's style does not fit plain narrative, or at any rate he has not here succeeded in making it fit; and in his attempts to be picturesque or dramatic, he is apt to use words rather to cloud than to make clear his meaning."

— New Statesman 34:374 D 21 '29 280w

Reviewed by F. J. Williams

N Y Evening Post p12m N 23 '29 240w

"This book of financial history reveals so marked an ability to deal interestingly with a subject that few would think of as having possibilities of that sort that he seems to have found in it a distinctive channel of authorship. The book includes so much besides the mere story of the beginnings and development of financial speculation that under Mr. Mottram's hand its pages become a fascinating panorama of one phase of the progress of civilization."

+ N Y Times p13 N 24 '29 550w

"The book is not at all a technical treatise, but an entertaining treatment of a subject that enlists popular interest everywhere. Its exposition of the course of speculation in the past is well worth reading and considering at the present time." W: B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 80:26 D '29 100w

"Mr. Mottram is at his best in the home land of England, in the picturesque eighteenth and immediate twentieth centuries. He tells the story clearly, gracefully, interestingly, and with shrewd and enlightening interpretative comment. But when he undertakes exposition and explanation the effect is not so happy. He seems to lose interest, and losing interest, he loses clarity. This is a regrettable lapse from an unusually excellent average. Also the author does not always state his economic causes and effects with as satisfying a completeness as could be wished, and, without being a historian, one is able to suspect occasional gaps in his history." M. M. Strain

— + Sat R of Lit 6:604 D 28 '29 700w

"Mr. R. H. Mottram is in the fine, if select, tradition of English 'banker-authors.' He has now, for the first time, turned his pen away from the field of fiction and has applied it to his other speciality, that of finance, and he could not have conceived of a better subject than A History of Financial Speculation. . . . The book is so delightful that it seems ungracious to criticize, but we would ask Mr. Mottram when he is dealing with a subject such as this, which needs exposition, to write more simply. His style is often amusing and epigrammatic, but we feel that it unduly slows up the reader by a certain turgidness."

+ — Spec 143:638 N 2 '29 920w

MOULT, THOMAS, comp. Best poems of 1928. 111p $2.50 Harcourt [6s J. Cape]

821.08 English poetry—Collections. American poetry—Collections (A27-176)

"Similar to the collections published for the six preceding years, this annual volume seeks to present in an attractive form the most significant poetry printed in the press of Britain and America from July, 1927, to June, 1928." —Publisher's note

Booklist 25:203 F '29

"There will be readers of the 1928 vintage of poems labeled 'Best' in Mr. Moult's seventh annual selection who will wonder why these best are no better and who will recall that they have tasted finer Conrad Aiken and choicer John Hall Wheelock. With Shaemas O'Sheel the quality improves, and in Stephen Vincent Benet's 'American Names' the draught grows natively rich." C: Divine

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 F 10 '29 330w

"A capital document."

+ Nation and Ath 44:469 D 29 '28 100w

"We seek poets for their several personalities; we wish to know the author without looking at the signature; but these 'Best Poems' do not reveal any fresh certainty of that sort."

— Nation and Ath 46:292 N 23 '29 280w

"This annual anthology has now become something of a national institution, to be wholeheartedly praised, were it not that it never includes quite all the best poems, and it sometimes includes two or three of the worst." H. E. Palmer

+ — New Statesman 34:155 N 9 '29 1450w

Pratt p24 spring '29

Reviewed by Shaemas O'Sheel

Sat R of Lit 5:263 Ja 26 '29 1250w

"In this little book there is plenty of strong, healthy, imaginative work, and no one interested in the development of English lyric poetry but should be grateful for its rescue."

+ Spec 142:25 Ja 5 '29 100w

Wis Lib Bul 25:27 Ja '29

MOULT, THOMAS, comp. Best poems of 1929. 128p $2.50 Harcourt [6s J. Cape]

821.08 American poetry—Collections. English poetry—Collections (A27-176)

Mr Moult's annual selection from poems appearing in British and American periodicals. "Portrait" by Elinor Wylie is one of the features of the volume.

Boston Transcript p2 D 11 '29 270w

"Find fault with it as one may, this is a really good anthology, and looks like the best collection Thomas Moult has yet made." H. E. Palmer

+ New Statesman 34:156 N 9 '29 680w

"The book is especially noteworthy for the large proportion of competent verse by little known poets. Though Mr. Moult's powers of appreciation are by no means limited to one type of verse he seems to avoid the concentrated and rather difficult lyricism now much in vogue. His book shows how much sound and interesting verse is being written in the traditional vein." Granville Hicks

+ N Y World p10m N 24 '29 120w

"The value of the collection lies in its inclusiveness of styles and themes, and the wide range of sources from which it is chosen. On the whole, the volume gives the impression of poetry girding itself for flight rather than for flight actually undertaken. The volume is printed in admirable taste and contains numerous decorative drawings by John Austen."

+ Springf'd Republican p6e D 15 '29 220w

MOULTON, HAROLD GLENN; MORGAN, CHARLES STILLMAN; and LEE, ADAH L. St. Lawrence navigation and power project. (Inst. of economics. Publication) 675p $4 Brookings

386 St. Lawrence river. Waterways 29-16479

"Shall the great Mississippi Valley have access to the Atlantic by a commercial water route that will compete with the railroads? And should such a route be wholly inside our own boundaries, an 'All American route,' or should we join with Canada to develop a ship-way to the ocean via the St. Lawrence River? This is a thoroughly documented examination of the St. Lawrence project."—N Y Times

Booklist 26:103 D '29

"In recent years so many governmental reports and studies on one or more phases of the St. Lawrence problem have been published on both sides of the international boundary line that an impartial guide through the maze of documents was needed. This book serves such a useful purpose. It is, however, more than a fair review of the work of others. It presents the results of a careful, independent study of the fundamental economics of the proposed St. Lawrence waterway." R. J. Le Boeuf

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 N 3 '29 400w

"The work turns out to be the strongest argument by far that yet has appeared against the project, but it is so well documented and cites so many first-rate authorities that it will take a deal of answering." F. L. B.
+ Boston Transcript p2 S 11 '29 1300w

"The wide and careful survey which the authors have made and the fair and dispassionate spirit they display ought to give to their volume a very considerable importance in the argument over the feasibility of the St. Lawrence project."
+ N Y Times p3 O 6 '29 400w

MOWAT, ROBERT BALMAIN. History of European diplomacy, 1451-1789. 311p $6 Longmans [16s E. Arnold]

940.2 Europe—Politics 29-8126

Two earlier histories of European diplomacy cover the years 1815 to 1928 The present work goes back still farther to the rise of the diplomatic profession in the middle of the fifteenth century, and closes with the end of the ancient regime in 1789.

---

"Much less solidly constructed than Emile Bourgeois's familiar Manuel Historique, less well informed than the Below-Meinecke Handbücher by Fueter, Platzhoff, and Immich, Mowat's volume nevertheless constitutes a fair and useful outline of the diplomacy of the period, although one marred by serious errors and omissions. It can scarcely be called an original study." W. L. Dorn
— + Am Hist R 35:334 Ja '30 480w

Booklist 25:346 Je '29

"Mr. Mowat has performed a service to scholarship in writing this book; but he has also performed a service to statesmanship when he recalls to us that the mere absence of fighting does not mean a reign of peace." R. L. Buell
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Je 16 '29 390w

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 23 '29 300w

"The present volume will prove extremely useful. It is comprehensive, compact, brief and readable, and there is no other book in English of quite the same scope and length written with so much learning."
+ Sat R 147:183 F 9 '29 650w

Spec 142:213 F 9 '29 170w

"The size of Professor Mowat's book and the long period he has set himself preclude the possibility of dealing adequately with [some] topics, and, perhaps inevitably, the book speedily becomes a summary textbook of European history on strictly conventional lines, except that the military side is omitted. Even as a textbook it is frequently misleading."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p38 Ja 17 '29 650w

MOWAT, ROBERT BALMAIN. Life of Lord Pauncefote, first ambassador to the United States. 306p $5 Houghton [16s Constable]

B or 92 Pauncefote, Julian, 1st baron.
Great Britain—Foreign relations [29-8805]

Lord Pauncefote was not merely the first British ambassador to the United States; he was the first representative of any foreign government to serve in America with ambassadorial rank. More than half the book is given to the thirteen years he served in Washington, during the administrations of Harrison, Cleveland, McKinley and Roosevelt. A warm friend of America, his diplomatic work here was marked by an impressive number of treaties, chief among them being the Hay-Pauncefote treaty.

---

Reviewed by C. R. Fish
Am Hist R 35:355 Ja '30 550w

Booklist 25:358 Je '29

Reviewed by W: MacDonald
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Jl 21 '29 700w

Reviewed by S. L. Cook
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 9 '29 950w

New Statesman 32:674 Mr 2 '29 500w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell
No Am 227:adv My '29 40w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 79:16 Ap '29 130w

"It is interestingly written but there appears to be little attempt to maintain a severely critical attitude towards governmental policies."
Sat R 147:509 Ap 13 '29 870w

"A biography of Lord Pauncefote has long been needed, and here it is, competently written by Professor R. B. Mowat, Professor of History in the University of Bristol."
+ Spec 142:164 F 2 '29 550w

"Mowat's 'Life of Lord Pauncefote' is less a life than a summary of an administrative and diplomatic record. As such it is careful and readable and has narrative interest, but there is little that has not been hitherto revealed to students of Anglo-American relations. The personal revelation is inadequate even in a political narrative, for aspects of his character which affected his service are not considered."
+ — Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 10 '29 1150w

"In Mr. Mowat's book the central figure is very often but a shadowy presence, and for long spells vanishes altogether. Much space is given to very clear expositions of the important international questions with which Pauncefote was concerned, but as to the nature and extent of the influence exercised by him on the solution of these questions next to nothing is revealed. Yet if Mr. Mowat has thought well to fill the gap with what is history rather than biography, with little more than a suggestion of the importance of Pauncefote's activities behind the scenes, this has its significance and interest."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p87 F 7 '29 1500w

MOWERY, WILLIAM BYRON. Girl from God's Mercie. 331p $2 Doubleday, Doran

29-22803

A triangle story of love and adventure and treachery in the Northwest from which Frances, the girl from God's Mercie, emerges safe and happy.

---

"A rapid and not unconventional yarn with a goodly supply of Indians, half-breeds, huskies and muskegs." Will Cuppy
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 N 24 '29 100w

"The background of pine forests, of the Barren lands, of rivers winding through the Indian reserves, is excellently done. Half breed and Red Men stand forth as real personalities, and the three whose strivings form the theme of the romance seem to have absorbed the dignity and purity of their surroundings."
+ Boston Transcript p6 D 4 '29 300w

MOWERY, WILLIAM BYRON. Silver Hawk. 328p $2 Doubleday, Doran

29-9100

The Silver Hawk is Jim Doran's plane. In it he flies with Aurore McNain to the lake in the Canadian woods where she says her father awaits rescue. There is no one at the lake; her story is a fabrication. But Jim and his plane are dedicated to the service of Aurore whose secret, in time, he learns.

---

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 My 5 '29 110w

"The story is interestingly told, and presents something of the genuine atmosphere of the Canadian Rockies; and the reader will be willing to overlook occasional stagey and melo-

MOWERY, W: B.—Continued
dramatic devices amid the swift and adventurous movement of the tale."—
+ N Y Times p16 Je 16 '29 150w

MOWRER, ERNEST RUSSELL, and MOWRER, HARRIET (ROSENTHAL). Domestic discord; its analysis and treatment. (Univ. of Chicago sociological ser.) 277p $3 Univ. of Chicago press

392.3 Family. Social problems 29-3760

Dr Mowrer, who wrote Family disorganization (Book Review Digest, 1927) has prepared at the instance of the Wiebolt foundation this further study of the causes and cure of domestic discord as discovered by the method known as casework.

Booklist 25:268 Ap '29

"The extraordinary dryness of this book causes the reader to experience an almost physical thirst. . . At page 65 begins a refreshing series of excerpts from case-workers' reports on unhappy families, a vast number of which Dr. Mowrer classified and analyzed before writing his book. These excerpts are naturally full of a poignant human interest, and Dr. Mowrer's comments on them reveal a dry form of rather humane humor. . . In fact, amid the gnarled and knotted unreadability of this book appear one or two rosy fruits of human understanding." Sarah Cleghorn
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 Mr 17 '29 400w

Christian Century 46:589 My 1 '29 30w
Reviewed by C. M. Perry

Int J Ethics 39:503 Jl '29 380w
Reviewed by F. J. Bruno

Survey 62:455 Jl 15 '29 300w

MOYER, JAMES AMBROSE, and FITTZ, RAYMOND U. Refrigeration, including household automatic refrigerating machines. 431p il $4 McGraw

621.56 Refrigeration and refrigerating machinery 28-27670

"Comprehensive work explaining principles and describing practice of both commercial and domestic machines, with chapters on cold storage, air conditioning and cooling. Has data and complete calculations for a commercial test of a 15-ton compression plant. In the appendix are practical problems for solution, also tables and charts."—N Y New Tech Bks

Booklist 25:198 F '29
N Y New Tech Bks 14:13 Ja '29
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:15 F '29
Pratt p15 spring '29
St Louis 27:50 F '29

MOYLAN, J. F. Scotland Yard and the metropolitan police. 331p $2.50 (7s 6d) Putnam

352.2 Scotland Yard. London—Police

"Mr. Moylan has written a comprehensive survey of our present-day system at Scotland Yard of efficiency and security. In his first chapter he traces the origin and slow development of police protection from the early days. . . After sketching in the 'background' of our present system, Mr. Moylan gives a clear and exceedingly interesting survey of the organization, administration, and manifold duties of the police."—Nation and Ath

Am Pol Sci R 23:1059 N '29 200w
Boston Transcript p2 Je 26 '29 120w
Nation and Ath 45:440 Je 29 '29 560w
New Statesman 33:350 Je 22 '29 140w

"While it is not likely that this detailed account of the history, organization and methods of the London police system will appeal to American readers other than those interested in our own police problems and methods, for all of them it should be an informing and fruitful volume."
+ N Y Times p11 Jl 7 '29 400w

"He writes with a full and intimate knowledge of the administration of Scotland Yard, but without any parti pris, and his admirably written and concise manual is the best possible commentary on such a report as Lord Byng has just issued."
+ Sat R 147:867 Ja 29 '29 620w

"One of the Whitehall Series, and as such designed rather to instruct than to amuse. This it does very successfully, and, moreover, the book appears at an opportune moment."
+ Spec 143:138 Jl 27 '29 120w

MUDGE, ISADORE GILBERT. Guide to reference books. 5th ed 370p $4 A.L.A.

016 Reference books—Bibliography 29-13603

The fifth edition of Miss Mudge's indispensable guide has been brought up to date, and considerably expanded, with the addition of new sections and lists.

Booklist 26:85 N '29

"The work is invaluable as a text book for all who must use reference material, whether training class students, library attendants or research workers of any sort. Indeed, any of the general public might glance through it, if only for the delightful bits of advice about buying dictionaries and encyclopedias."
+ Boston Transcript p3 O 23 '29 900w

MUIR, MRS DAPHINE. Virtuous woman. 249p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Chatto & W.]

A South African farming town is the setting of this novel of Boer life. Sanni, married at seventeen to Sarel le Roux, bears her husband nine children and manages the large household of a Boer farmer, with piety and virtue the guiding stars of her long, eventful life.

"From the beginning the numerous individuals and scenes seem rather vague. I never have the sense of living in these lives. As they continue to trail through the pages they become shadowy. This is a type of novel which, I think, has great possibilities; but any novelist who essays it must remember that his only reason for invading the field of the historian, the sociologist and the biographer is to breathe life into it." A. B. Parsons
— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 S 22 '29 650w

"It is less a novel than an honest unvarnished human document pieced together with care from old letters or personal recollections. Sanni is truly virtuous, if by that one means long suffering with an infinite capacity for enduring sorrow and discouragement. She is a heroine far removed from the conventional adventurous woman of present day fiction."
+ Boston Transcript p2 S 11 '29 400w

"This is a story of people close to the soil, and the undramatic family events are told in excellent narrative. The characters, though slight, are distinct—particularly the woman, whose thoughts are occasionally hinted in a story otherwise detached and remote."
+ New Statesman 33:248 Je 1 '29 90w

"People who like to read about bovine frontier women leading grim, gray lives in grim, gray surroundings, bearing multitudes of children and fearing the Lord—provided he be Dutch Reformed—will enjoy this simply told—'stark' is, perhaps, the right word—tale of the Boers in the Karoo. . . If you desire to take a chance, the book is written simply, clearly and without fripperies of any sort. It is a brief and an integral piece of literary artistry."
— + N Y Times p7 S 29 '29 600w

"The book is a very quiet but very telling picture of Boer life from before the second South African War up to the present time, written with a firm selective sense and a command of material that are very satisfying. . . Sanni is a living person to us long before the end comes; no doubt she has lived, and this is her beautiful portrait of an obscure life that is an epitome of life itself."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p258 Mr 28 '29 540w

MUIR, EDWIN. John Knox: portrait of a Calvinist. 316p il $3.50 Viking press [12s 6d Cape]

B or 92 Knox, John [29-17887]

Instead of a history of the life of John Knox written in the modern manner Mr Muir has produced the biography of a religious mind. He studies John Knox as disciple, exponent and victim of Calvinism, and recounts his uncompromising struggle to impose his narrow religion upon others. This portrait of a Calvinist is closely associated with its background—the period of the Reformation in England.

Booklist 26:67 N '29

"Edwin Muir has written a book that is as different from the ordinary biography of the modern Maurois-Ludwig-Strachey school as it is possible to imagine. What Mr. Muir has attempted is something altogether more rare and difficult. He has attempted to show us the value and significance of one of the most important intellectual notions of the world as illustrated in the life-story of one of its most important upholders." J: G. Fletcher

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Ag 25 '29 1500w

"John Knox needed to be subjected to a modern intelligence test, and the present author has done it keenly and cleverly, yet without arrogance."

+ Churchman p16 D 28 '29 80w

"Mr. Muir's portrait is etched. The lines are bitten deep; the blacks and whites burn in their vividness, but even so there are nuances that almost bring color to the portrait. It is entirely apparent that Mr. Muir desired to write an honest book: it is also clear that, unlike many other biographers who may have or who may charitably be credited with having a similar purpose, he has succeeded." D. A. Roberts

+ Nation 129:445 O 16 '29 900w

"If Mr. Muir's account of what Knox did is not entirely convincing, his analysis of why he did it is remarkable for a deadly precision and subtlety." Barrington Gates

+ — Nation and Ath 45:598 Ag 3 '29 900w

New Statesman 33:442 Jl 13 '29 900w

"The marvelous thing about it all is that Scotland, after absorbing John Knox, was yet able to produce humane, tolerant and humorous critics of mankind, among whom Mr. Muir may without hesitation be numbered." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p3 S 1 '29 1500w

"Practically no authentic information is available on the first half of John Knox's life. Out of the documentary evidence remaining from the second half, Edwin Muir has constructed a convincing portrait of a religious fanatic whose vehemence and consistency of purpose made him one of the heroic figures of the Reformation."

+ Outlook 153:27 S 4 '29 250w

"Mr. Muir's portrait of the reformer is the work of a man of letters, not of a professional historian, and in some ways this is a gain. . . He can claim to have eschewed theological bias, and his portrait, if it exhibits an element of greatness in the subject, is as unflattering as verisimilitude requires. . . Mr. Muir has written an interesting essay which shows some real acuteness and penetration on a good example of the narrow-minded believer in an aristocracy of the elect."

+ Sat R 148:77 Jl 20 '29 420w

"Mr. Edwin Muir's John Knox is a curious performance, half satire and half a grudging eulogy. . . He does Knox no harm, but he might have written a better book."

Spec 143:259 Ag 24 '29 100w

"The outlines of the portrait are rather true than novel, and Mr. Muir's psychological interpretation will not commend itself to all readers of Knox's letters and pamphlets, on which it is for the most part based. . . Mr Muir's study of Knox is well written and well-informed. If he has himself been occasionally infected by the contagion of Knox's love of vehement language, his subject could be the last to complain."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p486 Je 20 '29 700w

MUIR, EDWIN. Structure of the novel. (Hogarth lectures on literature) 151p $1.25 Harcourt [3s 6d Hogarth press]

808.3 Fiction. English fiction 29-3271

A distinguished literary critic analyzes the structure of novels of different types—the novel of action and character, the dramatic novel, the chronicle, and the period novel—referring to famous examples of each type in English literature.

Booklist 25:277 Ap '29

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 F 3 '29 780w

"Mr. Muir gives the clearest, because most unimpassioned, analysis of the comparative failure of the contemporary realistic school that I have yet encountered; his monograph would be worth reading for this alone." C. P. Fadiman

+ Nation 128:566 My 8 '29 320w

"Mr. Muir's attempt to discover and define what may be postulated of the novel in general is the most serious we know of, and in power of generalization it strikes much deeper than any contemporary work. . . Mr. Muir sometimes falters when he allows his seriousness to get the better of him. If he would cultivate his sense of irony, he would see that his pages on 'universality' are pretentious and vague, his mind has momentarily lost its elasticity."

+ — Nation and Ath 44:470 D 29 '28 800w

"Mr. Muir has made an interesting and valuable addition to the literature about the novel. . . His particular merit is that he refuses to elevate his favourite kind of novel into an archetype to which all novels should conform, and also refuses to be influenced by fashion. If his argument is metaphysical rather than aesthetic, it is also admirably clear."

+ New Statesman 32:336 D 15 '28 220w

"His whole argument, neat and consistent and almost comprehensive as it is, seems too simple, rigid and symmetrical to be any more than suggestive. The novel is more complex than that: a less dogmatic vision would be content to say that Mr. Muir has described some kinds of structure in novels rather than 'discovered' their laws." Edgar Johnson

+ — N Y Evening Post p9m Ja 26 '29 950w

Reviewed by J: Chamberlain

N Y Times p2 Jl 21 '29 600w

Pratt p28 summer '29

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:783 Mr 16 '29 300w

"Mr. Edwin Muir is to be congratulated on having written an excellent aid to the appreciation of fiction."

+ Spec 142:434 Mr 16 '29 150w

"We are quite ready to agree that no amount of labour is unjustified which unearths a grain of truth, but we are hardly convinced that Mr. Muir's winnings are proportionate to the laboriousness of his process. . . As so often in discussions of this kind, the instances, the comparisons and the critical remarks are more interesting than the main argument."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p959 D 6 '28 1050w

MUKERJI, DHAN GOPAL. Chief of the herd. 168p il $2.50 Dutton 29-26791

"Recounts in vivid fashion the adventures of Sirdar, the leader of a herd of elephants, together with distinctive conceptions of his mate Rhada, whom Sirdar liberated from captivity and possessed after a bitter struggle with Kumar, a rival bull; of Ajit, the wise and venerable one, and of Bahadur, the son of Sirdar." (Books

MUKERJI, D. G.—*Continued
[N Y Herald Tribune] ) Written for boys and girls.

Booklist 26:38 O '29

"For boys and girls who enjoy animal stories there could be no better choice." Helen Ferris
+ Bookm 70:308 N '29 110w

" 'The Chief of the Herd' is written in the beautiful language and unusual style that is the author's own." D. C. Lunt
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 S 1 '29 900w

"Mr. Mukerji has done a splendid piece of work in 'The Chief of the Herd.' . . . The chapters dealing with the flood that overtook the elephants and of their actions at that time are singularly stirring, and to balance these there are quiet, delicate passages, pellucid and poetical." M. G. Bonner
+ N Y Times p34 O 6 '29 200w

Reviewed by C: J. Finger
N Y World p11m O 27 '29 200w

Spec 143:731 N 16 '29 80w

Springf'd Republican p7e D 1 '29 60w

"The tale is told in the third person; but it cannot quite escape the difficulties of every attempt to get inside the thoughts of the brute creation. The descriptions appear at times as a confusion of two planes, as when Sirdar is made to say, when asked to interfere between a python and its prey, 'It is the business of the jungle gods, and not of pachyderms, to teach snakes vegetarianism.' But for readers of the age which takes such snags in its stride the tale will be of constant and at times breathless interest."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p969 N 21 '29 380w

MUKERJI, DHAN GOPAL. Hindu fables; for little children. 113p il $2.50 Dutton

398 Fables, Hindu. Animals—Legends and stories 29-10057

Ten fables, selected from those which were told the author in his childhood, about the animals of the jungle. There are stories of monkeys, elephants, cows, rabbits, pigeons and crocodiles. Each story brings out some point of humor or of wisdom of the East.

Booklist 25:400 Jl '29

Cleveland Open Shelf p133 N '29

"These tales are immeasurably superior to the average run of stories for children; and there is much in them of piquancy and sheer loveliness which even older folk will find to their taste. The drawings of Kurt Wiese, done in black and white, are both interpretative and decorative and help to make this a distinctive book of its kind." L. E.
+ N Y Evening Post p5s Je 8 '29 230w

Reviewed by M. G. Bonner
N Y Times p5 Jl 28 '29 50w

"The first [book] this distinguished author has made for very little children. The animals in it are remembered from tales told him by his nurse in India, and have something of the same delicate individuality one finds in the friends and playmates of Brer Rabbit; there are good Indian rabbits here, too. I think St. Francis of Assisi would have liked Mr. Mukerji's animals. Kurt Wiese makes good pictures of them." M. L. Becker
+ Outlook 152:392 Jl 3 '29 80w

Springf'd Republican p7e D 1 '29 80w

MULFORD, CLARENCE EDWARD. Me an' Shorty. 285p $2 Doubleday, Doran

29-9882

Nueces and Shorty they were called and no one knew their real names, until they signed them to Jim Watson's will. Jim Watson had been hanged and he left two decidedly crooked brothers who undertook all kinds of experiments to find out all about those two witnesses. So "Me an' Shorty" gave them a run for their money, and never really had to use their real names.

Booklist 25:396 Jl '29

"All in all, this is an admirable Mulford, which is to say a worthy Western, with quarts of lingo and red-blooded psychology offered with a smile." Will Cuppy
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Ap 21 '29 100w

"It is a good Mulford tale, made after the pattern which he has successfully used for so many years."
+ N Y Times p22 My 12 '29 220w

"Mr. Mulford's latest is an innocent, ingenuous story. It is a second cousin of 'The Virginian' and blood kin to many of the Western stories since published. . . The book will do for a couple of hours on the train, but that is about all it will mean to the judicious reader."
Sat R of Lit 5:1117 Je 15 '29 130w

Times [London] Lit Sup p669 Ag 29 '29 200w

MULFORD, CLARENCE EDWARD. Mesquite Jenkins. 306p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

28-21592

Hopalong Cassidy, of whom the author has been writing for years, has grown too old for his former vigorous life. But Mesquite Jenkins, the boy whom Hopalong rescued, is old enough to be on his own. Filled with Hopalong's own brave and loyal ways of life Mesquite rides forth to adventure.

"Chalk up more success for Clarence Mulford. He knows his mavericks." Will Cuppy
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 S 2 '28 100w

Boston Transcript p5 Ag 25 '28 250w

"In this new novel Mesquite acquits himself in a way that ought to make Hopalong Cassidy very proud of him. The reader will find his exploits almost as exciting and absorbing as anything Hopalong ever did, although the story lacks the rollicking humor that helped to give Mr. Mulford's early stories their instant and wide success."
+ N Y Times p15 D 30 '28 320w

MULLER-FREIENFELS, RICHARD. Mysteries of the soul; tr. by Bernard Miall. 348p $5 Knopf [12s 6d Allen & U.]

128 Soul. National characteristics, American. Civilization [29-18761]

The first part of this book is a philosophical discussion of the soul, the last a chapter on the psychology of religion. Between these two parts is an analysis of the Americanized soul which the author believes is determining the expression of the twentieth century the world over.

"The section on the Americanized soul is not by any means new in substance, but it is sharp and stimulating. . . All round it is an earnest work, and, though its ultimate principles are beset with difficulty, it has a pungent mind behind it." W: L. Sullivan
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Jl 28 '29 530w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 29 '29 540w

"For convenience and because of the straightforward intelligence of its author, I take as a point of departure, the description of the American type of mind and character presented by Mueller Freienfels. His treatment is the fairer because he understands by 'American' a type of mind that is developing, from like causes, all over the world. As far as any actual American is true to the type that is proclaimed to be the American, he should be thrilled by the picture that is drawn of him. For we are told that the type is a genuine mutation in the history of culture; that it is new, the product of the last century, and that it is stamped with success." J: Dewey
+ New Repub 60:117 S 18 '29 3000w

Reviewed by Clarence Britton
N Y Evening Post p7m Jl 27 '29 420w

"It is readable, interesting and serious, with that fullness of body which we are accustomed to think of as peculiarly German."
+ N Y Times p26 O 13 '29 700w

"The title of this excellent, and excellently translated, book is surely unfortunate. It suggests a cheap occultism; in fact there is nothing cheap and nothing occult in the contents. Herr Freienfels is at once an original and sanely realistic thinker who is obviously not afraid to acknowledge his debt to great predecessors. Goethe and Nietzsche have been absorbed by him; by their aid he has realized his own expression. Less apocalyptic than Keyserling, less encyclopædic than Spengler, less metaphysical than Scheler, he manifests a new and significant development of European thought with an easy grace which is persuasive."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p548 Jl 11 '29 1600w

MULLINS, HELENE. Convent girl. 297p $2.50 Harper

29-16858

Christina, a sensitive and imaginative little girl, is placed with her sister Katie in a convent. From a grown-up point of view, she tells of her varied experiences and friendships among the pupils and the Sisters.

---

"Without being actually condemnatory of conventual systems of education, the book makes a disconcerting impression, and the reason is not difficult to discover. The grave outlook of a child is devoid of any sense of irony or satire; and the child's conclusions, drawn from its clear-seeing frankness, are often liable to be more disconcerting than the bitterest polemic. The ability to reproduce such clearness of vision is a rare accomplishment in itself, and when the story is presented, as this one is, in calm, well balanced prose, free of all flamboyant sentimentality and flashy brittleness, the author may rest assured that she has created a firm foundation for future work." Edmund Kennedy
+ — Bookm 70:319 N '29 300w

"Pieced together, these fragments of personalities and the little incidents that make up their life form a clever picture of the convent boarding school, a world of women severed from all contact with struggling reality and of children groping to harmonize this atmosphere with the glimmerings of their future." V. P. Ross
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 S 8 '29 700w

"Her style is not fully emancipated from the influence of the sixteenth century Spanish writing which nuns read to their classes, but her gifts as an artist are unmistakable and her insight into character is distinctly shrewd." E. B. Barrett
+ Nation 129:498 O 30 '29 420w

" 'Convent Girl' achieves both its best and its worst qualities from being so largely autobiographical. The defect of the novel—so natural in autobiography—is the lingering, over long and over lovingly, upon incidents in which the reader does not feel as much interest as the writer. . . Yet this defect is merely an overemphasis of the very quality which gives the novel its merit—its evident fidelity to the truth. So clearly does this fidelity ring through the careful sentences that it pervades the whole with the sweet, solemn tone of a convent bell."
+ — N Y Times p8 Ag 25 '29 600w

"I don't know where one could look for a more convincing piece of reporting. . . There is no axe to grind, no propaganda, no apparent selection of incident—only the events which she would be likely to recall, and the same inconsequential details which we all so often unexplainably retain." B. K. Scherman
+ Sat R of Lit 6:209 O 5 '29 850w

MULLINS, HELENE. Earthbound, & other poems. 92p $2 Harper

811 29-3638

Miss Mullins is a frequent contributor to the magazines. Many of the poems gathered here may be remembered from their previous publication.

---

"She never lets one down, she can be counted on to bring her poem to a safe and skillful conclusion with a sufficiently clear fidelity to key. She has intelligence, too, and offers always enough of pure idea to keep her verse from becoming too merely and emotionally meditative. She is, in fact, a very charming poet and might, with a little more severity and a little more careful guard against facility, give us some first-rate work." Conrad Aiken
+ — Bookm 69:215 Ap '29 100w

"Miss Mullins tries her hand at a number of familiar themes: the bitterness of unrequited love, the bittersweet of lost love, the uncloying sweets of love requited; the bitterness of death, the bittersweet of renunciation, the cloying sweets of certain acceptances. . . And every lyric of them all is earthbound. A few are musical, a few are smart, many are wistful, but all fall short of piercing, quickening intensity."
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Mr 31 '29 180w

"More than ordinary depth and insight, as well as quite extraordinary technical finish, are conspicuous in these poems. Miss Mullins not only acquits herself creditably at handling a variety of difficult verse forms, but she displays a freshness of perception and a keenly individual manner of expression that make her poems uncommonly delightful."
+ Boston Transcript p2 My 1 '29 130w

"She is essentially and refreshingly 'well-bred' in her choice not only of the subjects of her poems but in her faculty—rare in this day—of stopping short of the bizarre and the fantastic, rejecting the anamorphoses which in many youthful writers passes for originality of treatment."
+ Cath World 129:762 S '29 250w

"Miss Mullins is something rather rare in poetry these days, being both intelligent and tuneful. She has gained a wide following over the country by being at the same time simple, musical, and interesting. Her only defect is diffuseness."
+ Nation 128:722 Je 12 '29 80w

" 'Earthbound' is full of strange and extraordinarily confused echoes of nearly all the more popular poets from Swinburne and E. A. Robinson to Edna St. Vincent Millay and Samuel Hoffenstein. Amid all the echoes of greatness, the greatness itself is so narrowly missed that it is often hard to say where Miss Mullins has failed. Somehow, though, the perfect fusion of form and matter which one demands of poetry is absent. Miss Mullins's meters refuse to obey her moods." Margaret Wallace
— + N Y Evening Post p9m F 2 '29 450w

"Helene Mullins is unquestionably a singer. Even her smallest poem flows with music, although in form, as well as content she is inclined to the conventional. There is no active passion in this book; the coals smoulder without burning, and a Gaelic wistfulness sweeps the strings of the harp. The author, despite a great love of beauty, has not yet crystallized her own peculiar gift." Laura Benet
+ — N Y World p11m Mr 3 '29 200w

"This collection of verse succeeds in making original and individual interpretations of centuries-old emotions." J. D. Tasker
+ Outlook 151:317 F 20 '29 200w

"Miss Mullins is, obviously, one of the most facile of contemporary poets; there is evidently nothing she cannot do. From a free lyric to the tightest of fixed forms she ranges with point and precision; she is at home, self-contained and self-expressing, in the rondeau, the ballade, the chant royal. More interesting than her dexterity is the range and surety of her

MULLINS, HELENE—Continued
themes. . . Here is distinctly one to watch." L: Untermeyer
+ Sat R of Lit 5:1068 Je 1 '29 650w

MUMFORD, LEWIS. Herman Melville. 377p $3.50 Harcourt
B or 92 Melville, Herman 29-7422

"This is a study of Herman Melville's life and thought. In interpreting Melville's life I have relied primarily on his own writings, including his letters, some of which are still unpublished, and his notebooks. There are occasional blank spaces in Melville's history, but the record is singularly complete in that part of Melville which most matters: his ideas, his feelings, his urges, his vision of life. . . Certain portions of this book have appeared, with slight changes and abbreviations, in The New Republic, The American Mercury, and The Saturday Review of Literature."—Preface

---

Booklist 25:319 My '29

"This is a book which it is almost impossible to judge. It is a good book. It is the work of a scholarly and generous mind. . . And yet, and in spite of all these things, it is dull. One has the impression that Mr. Mumford sketched out an enormous graph before he started, like a child's blank outline map, and then, whether he would or no, went on to fill it. Those sections which interested him he has filled in brilliantly. Those which did not interest him he has filled in nevertheless." A. McLeish

Bookm 69:183 Ap '29 2300w
Reviewed by T: Beer

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Mr 10 '29 2400w

"Mr. Mumford has written a book that is the best biography of Melville yet produced, and he has also given us a book that has few peers in American criticism."
+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 16 '29 1900w

"It is as biographer rather than as critic that Mr. Mumford is to be almost unreservedly commended. Especially successful is his painting-in of the background of Melville's life: the antebellum society of New York; the growth of industrialism and shoddiness; the changes wrought by the Civil War. All this is admirably done; and he has done well also in filling in many of the gaps in our knowledge of Melville's later years." S. C. C.
+ Christian Science Monitor p16 Mr 27 '29 800w

Cleveland Open Shelf p154 D '29

"As a critical biography, Mr Mumford's study is admirable in rhythm and balance and proportion; as an appraisal of the disheartening era in which Melville laboured, it attains brilliance by sheer keenness of perception. The style is fittingly described in words which Mr Mumford applied to that of Melville himself; it is 'accurate, pliant, subtle, bold; but it is never hectic nor forced.'"
+ Dial 86:529 Je '29 120w

"The most conspicuous virtues of Mr. Mumford's book are a fluent ease and a perpetual ripple of intelligent comment. Its greatest defect is a certain lack of power. Its remarks are always in good taste and it is always gentle. But it has nowhere the storminess of its subject. . . No one interested in American literature will want to miss this book." J. W. Krutch
+ — Nation 128:561 My 8 '29 850w

"Mr. Mumford, full of perceptions, not only sticks to the facts, but throws light on them; and what better service can a biographer do to hero and reader alike?" W: Plomer
+ Nation and Ath 45:570 Jl 27 '29 1000w

"The rediscovery, or more properly speaking, the discovery, of Herman Melville, outstanding among America's neglected geniuses, reaches its peak in Mr. Mumford's long, full, and rich combination of biography and critical analysis, which is its distinguished author's finest and most considerable work to date." Herschel Brickell
+ New Repub 58:205 Ap 3 '29 1500w

"It is 'the vision of life,' and not the daily drama of a nominal citizen, that is the purpose and justification of Mr. Mumford's book. This vision, this attitude in the face of life which Mr. Mumford reveals in Melville, hangs above a biographical narrative and psychological interpretation. The narrative is vivid, cogent, and consistent; and from this narrative and the accompanying psychological interpretations the image of a living man emerges. . . Mr. Mumford's is a 'true' and brilliant and eloquent biography." Raymond Weaver
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 9 '29 1550w

"Of all the various attempts to elucidate Herman Melville's life and works, Lewis Mumford's is clearly the best. Not only is it a comprehensive life but it is also a clear, profound interpretation of what Melville thought and a rational explanation of the pass to which his thinking brought him in the world in which he had the fortune to live." C. H. Grattan
+ N Y World p10m Mr 10 '29 1500w

"Mr. Mumford has written a splendid biography of a neglected genius, full and rich. There is mental stimulation in almost every page of the book. Its high spot is Mr. Mumford's stirring interpretation of the symbolism of 'Moby-Dick,' which is one of the finest pieces of writing in contemporary American literature." Herschel Brickell
+ No Am 227:adv My '29 250w
Reviewed by Matthew Josephson

Outlook 151:467 Mr 20 '29 400w
Reviewed by N. H. Dole

Portland Evening News p9 My 14 '29 720w

Pratt p37 summer '29
+ Sat R 148:161 Ag 10 '29 650w

"A wise and discerning book which deserves and will doubtless have a wide and enthusiastic reading." F. J. Mather, Jr.
+ Sat R of Lit 5:945 Ap 27 '29 2450w

Spec 143:138 Jl 27 '29 200w

"Lewis Mumford's 'Herman Melville' is so unquestionably the best recent critical biography of an American writer that it forces us to reconsider many of our standards. Because it is written on so high a level, because it achieves a finer integration, a more substantial affirmation of life, a more varied and better sustained response to the experiences America has to offer than other critical works of similar type, it will almost inevitably alter the tone of American thought."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 31 '29 1050w

"Perhaps very little that Melville wrote could be dismissed as completely commonplace, but this careful, able, and thorough study of Mr. Mumford's reinforces our conviction that he was essentially a man of one book."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p621 Ag 8 '29 1850w

Wis Lib Bul 25:127 Ap '29

"In episode after episode of Melville's life, in book after book of his writing, Mr. Mumford brings into play his own powers of psychological dissection, leaving in nearly every instance verdicts which will both supplant and outlast conventional conceptions. . . In the chapter on 'Moby Dick' Mr. Mumford is at his best. He summarizes clearly the complex book; he defines the characters anew not only of Ahab but of Starbuck and Stubb; and he surveys the various allegorical interpretations of the novel." S. T. Williams
+ Yale R n s 19:191 autumn '29 1000w

MUNDY, TALBOT. Queen Cleopatra. 426p $2.50 Bobbs

Cleopatra, queen of Egypt—Fiction 29-4296

The life story of Cleopatra from the early struggles for the throne to the end of her love affair with Julius Caesar, told in fiction form.

---

Booklist 25:323 My '29

"If Mr. Mundy never quite achieves the mood to re-create the very time and body of the period, he provides an abundance of entertainment and not a little impressive drama as he unrolls his narrative."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 My 12 '29 150w

"We simply do not get into the atmosphere of Cleopatra and her story in this novel. Like Louis Untermeyer's novel about Moses, the whole process seems a bit too modern."
— Boston Transcript p5 Mr 16 '29 400w

"The story is vividly told in a well constructed novel." W. E. Garrison
+ Christian Century 46:746 Je 5 '29 140w

"The romance is a welcome supplement to Arthur Weigall's fascinating biography of the queen."
+ Cleveland Open Shelf p76 My '29

Reviewed by Lillian Rogers
N Y Evening Post p11m F 16 '29 430w

"Outside of an Erskine volume, no set of people ever talked more and got less done than Mr. Mundy's characters. We found 'Queen Cleopatra' a waste of speech and pretty much a waste of time." F: F. Van de Water
— N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 2 '29 120w

"The book is full of color, and of splendid pageantry. . . It is a rich and stirring novel, carefully and lovingly wrought."
+ N Y Times p7 F 17 '29 650w

"He has given us a good story, marred by over-straining to impress the reader with the brilliance of Alexandria more than by his vindication of Cleopatra's reputation." D: Loth
+ — N Y World p10m F 17 '29 400w

"His character studies are interesting, and his historical setting exceptionally rich. The story is exciting."
+ Outlook 151:430 Mr 13 '29 40w

"A fascinating romance. The critical historian will doubtless find that the author has taken notable liberties with the conventional version of history, but his painstaking creation seems well designed to impress the lay reader as a convincingly plausible reproduction and interpretation of the Cleopatran era."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e My 26 '29 400w

"The story keeps on a fairly high level, though never very brilliant."
Times [London] Lit Sup p317 Ap 18 '29 260w

MUNRO, HECTOR HUGH (SAKI, pseud.). Square egg, and other sketches with three plays; with a biography by his sister and an introd. by J. C. Squire. (Works of Saki) 276p il $1.75 Viking press

B or 92

Half of this little volume is occupied by a delightful biography of Saki, chiefly memories of their happy times together, written by his sister Ethel M. Munro. Scattered thru these biographical pages are amusing drawings from the youthful Saki's sketchbook. The remainder of the volume contains short sketches and plays and one full length play, The watched pot.

"'The Square Egg' is so obviously bottom-of-the-trunk stuff that its publication becomes justified only because we have with it a biography of the author." Harry Salpeter
N Y World p7m Je 16 '29 140w

"'The Square Egg' is one of a number of mildly amusing sketches which might as well have been left in situ. The long biographical memoir by Munro's sister is chiefly of domestic interest. Nearly half this volume is taken up by a play called 'The Watched Pot,' which apparently was never produced. Why? It is slight in plot and incident, but no more so than plays that were being produced twenty years ago, when it was written, and are being produced now; and 'The Watched Pot' is the most coruscant exhibition of epigram that was ever written for the English stage. Neither Wilde nor Shaw ever packed so many good lines into three acts; and they are lines that not only go off, but that have durability." Elmer Davis
+ — Sat R of Lit 5:854 Ap 6 '29 220w
Wis Lib Bul 25:325 O '29

MUNRO, THOMAS. Scientific method in æsthetics. (Outline of æsthetics) 101p pa $1 Norton

701 Æsthetics. Psychology 28-29346

"His aim is not so much to achieve universal judgments of value as a more precise and concrete æsthetic vocabulary and a higher degree of artistic awareness. At present people agree on the meaning of words like 'red,' 'wavy,' 'loud'; and words like 'graceful,' 'flamboyant,' and 'sombre' may also become not terms of praise or blame but descriptive symbols of more clearly realized distinctions."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Reviewed by Edgar Johnson
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 D 16 '28 450w

"That man who would disagree with Mr Munro is a dolt. One can understand everything about his book but its title. It should be called How to Like Art, except that all other writers, on approaching the subject from this dingier angle, teach us merely how to despise the author. Mr Munro has studied the soundest works on aesthetic theory, and has regiven his acquisitions in generalizations made wholesome and trustworthy by his own sincere critical perceptions of various art-forms. His book should serve as a guide for the hesitant, and as a set of useful schematizations for the initiate."
+ Dial 86:348 Ap '29 70w

Reviewed by Lionel Trilling
N Y Evening Post p8m N 24 '28 320w

"A handbook of considerable scientific value and originality. The author attacks the problem of getting something more than vague 'adventures of the soul among masterpieces' out of the complex experience of beauty in the arts; and he does it with a mature grasp of the exigencies of the case." Axton Clark
+ N Y Times p2 D 16 '28 350w

Reviewed by Bruno Lasker
Survey 62:499 Ag 1 '29 40w

"Books on aesthetics are seldom written for artists, but this one which aims at a reform in the study of this fashionable subject may be, indirectly, of considerable importance to them." O. H. Peets
Yale R n s 19:193 autumn '29 700w

MUNSON, GORHAM BERT. Style and form in American prose. 313p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

810.4 American literature—History and criticism. Style, Literary 29-18655

Prose surveyed and interpreted by an analytic study of excerpts from the work of the best American prose-writers, such as William James, Ralph Waldo Emerson, Herman Melville, Mark Twain, Eugene O'Neill and Gertrude Stein. Edgar Allan Poe and T. S. Eliot, two of America's best literary critics, are studied from the point of view of style and method.

Booklist 26:111 D '29

"The purpose and achievement of the book remain doubtful, since the reader, for all Mr. Munson's ardor and general busyness, may not share the author's confidence that progress is being made. It is not clear what sort of person can profit from these extension lectures, for the technical analysis of rhythm is rudimentary and not turned to much account, and the critical commentary is an odd mixture of subtlety and platitude. One is often stimulated by Mr. Munson's incidental criticisms, one is aware that his heart is in the right place, but his head is too easily turned by winds of doctrine."
— + Bookm 70:323 N '29 700w

"He has written a sober discussion of style and form in American prose, he has supported his theories by examples, most of which are excellently chosen, but at the same time he has done something further—he has written a methodology for the very large class of readers who are still unable to take advantage of their reading. His book is a general treatise on reading critically." Malcolm Cowley

MUNSON, G. B.—Continued

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 S 1 '29 1000w

"Though Mr. Munson has prepared some impressive machinery, he manages to accomplish singularly little. On the technical side he says not much more than is to be found in any good textbook on freshman composition; in his general approach to literary problems he is muddled and unconvincing. That he makes some acute observations cannot be denied, but he has given us no new insight into the major problems of form, and he has not even tried to do what his title promises, namely, to discuss the aspects of his problem that are peculiar to American literature." Granville Hicks

— Nation 129:358 O 2 '29 550w

"An analysis of American prose style is, or in the long run should be, an analysis of American civilization, and one of the reasons for the weakness of Mr. Munson's book is that while he seems to be aware of this fact, he does not carry it to its proper conclusion. He is merely descriptive; his critical principles, many of them borrowed from A. R. Orage, are not applied with sufficient concentration, nor are they deeply enough ingrained in Mr. Munson's thought to give the necessary impression of finality." Theodore Spencer

— New Repub 60:381 N 20 '29 850w

"The trouble with 'Style and Form in American Prose' is mainly that when it is neither a textbook nor an anthology it tends to spill over into the fields of philosophy and sociology. It makes some valuable distinctions, but it is a question, as we have intimated, whether the book as a whole will have much value beyond its classroom value." J: Chamberlain

— + N Y Times p13 D 22 '29 900w

"Mr. Munson's method is of preliminary discussion followed by example. It has the advantage of the example convenient to the precept, but it has this disadvantage for his purposes, that it seduces the attention into other paths from those into which he wishes to lead. The correctness of his characterizations,—the journalistic familiarity of James, the melting suavity of Santayana—are evident enough, but James on Religion and Santayana on James are so interesting that we forget to watch for the technique of those qualities. . . Mr. Munson is a critic of insight and fresh feeling, and his direct reactions are better than his machinery."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:250 O 12 '29 550w

MUNTHE, AXEL MARTIN FREDERIK. Story of San Michele. 530p $6 Dutton [16s Murray]

B or 92 [29-18891]

The writer of this autobiography is a physician who was for some time a fashionable nerve specialist in Paris and has now retired to his island home on the island of Capri, built by himself on the site of the villa of Tiberius. He recalls incidents of his practice, experiences with sick and poor, and with fashionable ladies who thronged his waitingroom, memories of the cholera epidemic at Naples, the earthquake at Messina and of people he met on his travels.

---

"Here is one of the most fascinating books of the year, wise in its appraisal of men and affairs, over-flowing with humor, and edged with irony sharper than a surgeon's knife." Lisle Bell

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 N 10 '29 400w

"Mr. Munthe gives us one of the frankest and most absorbing autobiographies of recent years. This volume, with its admirably flexible style, is uncommonly rich in objective interest. It is packed with good stories, with vivid scenes of travel in many lands, and with memorable portraits of strangely varied characters. It is equally engrossing as a revelation of temperament. Dr. Munthe is both realist and mystic, scientist and poet, caustic philosopher and kindly essayist. Above all, he is the apostle of pity."

+ Nation and Ath 45:630 Ag 10 '29 480w

"The whole book is interwoven with the author's own spiritual aspirations, of which San Michele—which is his house on Capri—is made the symbol. A book which has considerable distinction is marred by wordiness and by an annoying, mystical element which, while it binds the whole together in a romantic web, culminates in the bathos of an Apocalyptical vision with Moses, Lucifer, St. Francis and the Grand Inquisitor talking a great deal of nonsense which Dr. Munthé himself would have been very amused by, if it had been poured out to him by one of his own Parisian patients."

— + New Statesman 33:384 Je 29 '29 250w

"Written in a nervous, imaginative style that is vigorous and impressive."

+ N Y Times p20 O 13 '29 180w

Reviewed by C: J. Finger

N Y World p11m O 27 '29 480w

"The book is more than a memoir or an autobiography, in fact the neat rounding off of some of the episodes smacks suspiciously of fiction. But the result is excellent and makes most entertaining reading, in spite of a rather tiresome thread of fantasy running through the narrative. There is no lack of variety. Dr. Munthe writes about Lapp folklore with the same assurance as he does of the epidemic of cholera in Naples. Dr. Munthe is a passionate lover of animals and birds, and through his efforts a bird sanctuary has been established on Capri where hitherto thousands of migratory birds had been netted and slaughtered."

+ Spec 142:864 Je 1 '29 180w

"The legendary tone runs through these vigorous but disconnected pages, which are fragments of rugged, but certainly not a broken, life. Some readers may find the amount of space devoted to stories—but what stories—of medical life in Paris and Rome excessive. Yet, apart from one or two rather appalling incidents, these stories of human beings, human sufferings, and human foibles are both interesting in themselves and reveal the exceptional spirit of their narrator."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p355 My 2 '29 850w

MURAT, MARIE (DE ROHAN-CHABOT) princesse (PRINCESSE LUCIEN MURAT). Private life of Catherine the Great of Russia; tr. by Garnett Saffery. (Love lives of the great) 212p $2.50 Carrier

B or 92 Catharine II, empress of Russia

29-619

A life of Catherine the Great which follows the same course and is treated in much the same erotic detail as Clement Wood's "Henry the Rake."

---

"The chronicle, which concerns Catherine's sex life only, is full of amazing incidents in that style of the splendidly grotesque, of which Shaw's Great Catherine is an expurgated example."

Bookm 69:vii Ap '29 110w

"Here is the Semiramis of the North seen by a wise and whimsical eye—a subjective sketch, most entertaining and committing no violence upon history."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 F 24 '29 100w

"The Princess's narrative dashes up and down producing in the reader much the same sensations as are caused by a scenic railway."

Times [London] Lit Sup p636 Ag 15 '29 260w

MURCHISON, CARL ALLANMORE. Social psychology; the psychology of political domination. (Int. univ. ser. in psychology) 210p $3.50 Clark univ. press [16s Oxford]

301 Social psychology. Political science

29-7379

"Professor Murchison's book is a brief and vigorous essay devoted to the general theme that political domination is a universal fact. Some groups are stronger than other groups, and some individuals are stronger, more intelligent, and more influential than other individuals. Professor Murchison is certain that the stronger always rule the weaker."—Am J Soc

---

"The book is innocent of footnote or index, does not take long to read, probably did not take long to write, and would undoubtedly have been improved by more industry and circumspection." Ellsworth Faris

+ — Am J Soc 35:307 S '29 600w

"Prof. Murchison is worried by the barrenness of much of so-called social psychology and has attempted to make it more concrete. His treatment, however, is too slight to be of substantial value."

— Nature 124:476 S 28 '29 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p708 S 12 '29 450w

MURPHY, CHARLES J. V. Struggle; the life and exploits of Commander Richard E. Byrd. 368p il $2.50 Stokes

B or 92 Byrd, Richard Evelyn 28-30183

With a good deal of dash Mr Murphy rehearses the achievements of Commander Byrd from apprentice days in the navy to his interest in exploration and its culmination in the sailing of the City of New York to the Antarctic, on Bryd's latest and greatest expedition.

---

Booklist 25:211 F '29

"To one who has read 'Skyward' the new volume is distressingly full of repetitions and distressingly empty of any new material of importance. Essentially 'Struggle' is three-quarters Byrd's own already printed story, and the additions which Mr. Murphy has made gracefully supplement this earlier and very pleasing narrative. Mr. Murphy has contributed a number of new anecdotes suggesting the ability, judgment, courage, humor, skill and foresight of his hero. Also he has discussed these qualities." F. E. Hill

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 D 23 '28 560w

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 9 '29 650w

Cleveland Open Shelf p42 Mr '29

"Mr. Murphy evidently has made his biography accurate by consultation with sources, with the people that would afford authentic information, and he has endeavored also to make it an all-round true picture of the man, mentally, spiritually and physically. He brings out with considerable skill the many-sidedness of Byrd's endowment and he gives to his narrative life and color and vitality with a thousand little anecdotes."

+ N Y Times p10 F 3 '29 400w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell

No Am 227:adv Ap '29 20w

Pratt p32 spring '29

St Louis 27:61 F '29

Wis Lib Bul 25:74 F '29

MURPHY, GARDNER. Historical introduction to modern psychology; with a supplement by Heinrich Klüver. (Int. lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 470p $6 Harcourt [21s K. Paul]

150 Psychology 28-31211

An historical survey of the development of psychology from the pre-experimental period of the seventeenth, eighteenth, and early nineteenth centuries, thru the work of the early experimenters, and closing with an examination of the theories advanced by modern psychologists.

---

Booklist 25:306 My '29

Boston Transcript p7 F 23 '29 130w

Cleveland Open Shelf p136 N '29

Sat R 147:771 Je 8 '29 580w

"Dr. Murphy has read widely and accurately, but his erudition is no burden to him. His summaries of the theories or experiments of even comparatively unimportant psychologists are always lively and acute; he sees each new development in its due perspective, and succeeds in inspiring the reader with the interest that he has evidently felt himself; and when he presents a full-length portrait of an outstanding figure such as Wundt or William James he contrives to give in a few words a singularly clear impression of a living mind at work upon a real problem."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p394 My 16 '29 950w

MURRAY, DAVID LESLIE. Bride adorned. 300p $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d Constable]

29-7207

An English girl visiting Rome in 1865 is drawn into sympathy with the followers of Garibaldi who would free Italy from the rule of the church. Her opinions clash with those of Count Camillo of the papal guard, but this does not prevent their falling in love. She is stoutly Protestant, he is a confirmed Catholic. Their love story, in the romantic yet turbulent setting of the times, hinges on this difference in their faiths.

---

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Ap 28 '29 300w

" 'The Bride Adorned' is an intelligent piece of work, marred perhaps by a touch of sentimentality, but obviously written by someone with a knowledge of his period and an appreciation of historically effective values." V. Sackville-West

+ Nation and Ath 44:620 F 2 '29 90w

"Mr. Murray's first novel is a good one. Vigorous thinking and kindly tolerance give it humaneness and distinguish it from the bigoted religio-historical novel, while gorgeous pageantry keeps the mise en scène of papal Rome."

+ N Y Times p9 Je 2 '29 330w

Outlook 151:554 Ap 3 '29 30w

"There is an underlying fervour of religious passion which must command admiration where it cannot inspire sympathy. But, although Mr. Murray has endowed Rome with a personality, he has not been equally successful with the persons of the story. They are figures animated by will and energy rather than by personality. But, this weakness apart, 'The Bride Adorned' is a distinguished and memorable piece of work." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 147:151 F 2 '29 280w

"Mr. Murray has given a vigorous interpretation of a particular epoch, and at the same time made real the aspects of the city which have endured."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:1057 My 25 '29 150w

"Mr. Murray has made the incessant warfare between Church and State, between Catholicism and Protestantism, between liberty and bondage, a living fact. At the end of this very beautifully-written story of love and hate, he says, through the lips of his heroine when her lover is wounded: 'It all seemed so futile. He there, dying for a loyalty—and she had fought him for another loyalty; outside the house and in the city, men had died and were dying at that minute for those queer half-understood loyalties of theirs.' "

+ Spec 142:397 Mr 9 '29 130w

Times [London] Lit Sup p78 Ja 31 '29 550w

Wis Lib Bul 25:324 O '29

MURRAY, GILBERT. Ordeal of this generation. 276p $3 Harper [4s 6d Allen & U.]

341.2 War. Peace. League of nations. Nineteenth century 29-14720

Professor Murray's message in the Halley Stewart lectures for 1928 is a plea for peace set forth with warmth and logic, and beyond that, contains a discussion of the League of Nations, a philosophy of life, and a critique of the nineteenth century.

---

MURRAY, GILBERT—Continued

Booklist 26:55 N '29

"It is impossible to comment adequately on The Order of This Generation. It is certainly one of the best books on the issue of war or peace which have yet appeared either in England or America. It would be tragic if it were to be read only by those already committed to every pacifistic reform." F. R. Dulles

+ Bookm 70:109 S '29 700w

Reviewed by J. W. Krutch

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Jl 28 '29 1200w

"This sane exhortation to the thoughtful minority of the world, this appeal for tolerant wisdom and for a right-minded public opinion that will make war an unnecessary resort, must inevitably be effective. Such a readable, reasonable and authoritative book could not do less." W. H. C.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 10 '29 750w

"There is a great hope abroad in the world at the present time—the hope of the abolition of war among civilized nations. In this interesting book Professor Gilbert Murray brings his incomparable knowledge and rare gifts of thought and style to describing the grounds for this hope, the instruments that exist for its realization, and the spirit that must direct their use, if they are to be rendered fully effective. As lucid as it is profound, it is probably the most helpful book for the general reader that has been published on this subject."

+ Nation and Ath 44:888 Mr 23 '29 480w

"In whatever Professor Murray writes one feels in his point of view, as well as in his precision of thought and charm of style, the influence of a culture which we rightly call classic. In his discussion of the political state of civilization today, he speaks as a contemporary of Plato might speak to the men of Athens, in a new Areopagitica. Moreover, Professor Murray speaks not only with authority drawn from the past, but from experience of the present. In the effort of the last decade to make impossible another political catastrophe, in which civilization itself may well perish, he has played a notable part, and both as actor and observer has studied at close range the elements and issues involved. He must be heard." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 60:104 S 11 '29 1700w

New Statesman 33:supvii My 4 '29 140w

"Professor Murray's volume is a masterly survey of the problem of peace and an appeal to the intellect and the innate nobility of a generation now undergoing its ordeal." P. T: Moon

+ N Y Evening Post p6m Ag 17 '29 900w

"The best thinking on the subject of international peace that is being done today is British, and Professor Murray's book is an excellent example of it." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p8 Ag 4 '29 1080w

"His book is eloquent, persuasive and exceedingly wise." J: Carter

+ Outlook 153:30 S 4 '29 950w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw

R of Rs 80:10 S '29 150w

Spec 142:sup375 Mr 9 '29 520w

"The reader will be dull indeed who does not appreciate the beautiful coherence of the argument. But he will note at the same time that Professor Murray sometimes sinks below his own lofty standard. There is an occasional touch of impatience, almost of querulousness, and, what is more surprising, a tinge of partisanship, a hint of wonder that anything good should come out of Conservatism. The blemishes are slight; the pity is that they should be distinguishable."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p216 Mr 21 '29 950w

"His book is no lament over present conditions; it is rather a forceful, eloquent, and high-minded argument which cannot fail to make for peace. One must wish for this volume many readers." E: B. Reed

+ Yale R n s 19:398 winter '30 750w

MURRAY, ROSALIND (MRS ARNOLD JOSEPH TOYNBEE). Hard liberty. 361p $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d Chatto & W.]

29-18332

Jim Robson has inventive genius, but he is held back by the practical necessity of supporting first his mother, then his wife and children. At the outbreak of the war he works in a munitions plant but, conscience-stricken at the thought of inventing instruments to take life, he resigns. His career gone, he succeeds in winning "hard liberty" only thru death.

"Other young men have felt that they could be great and famous if circumstances would just let them find time to live their own lives. It is just because Jim isn't so much different, because his family is like other families and his fumbling emotions like those of others, that 'Hard Liberty' stirs below the surface. Miss Murray's intimate narration of his timidities, his aborted hopes, his superiority thoughts and inferiority actions, has a convincing familiarity."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 S 22 '29 500w

Boston Transcript p3 O 30 '29 270w

"An honest, sensitive piece of writing, free of the tricks that reduce the average novel to the level of smooth mediocrity." M. D. Zabel

+ New Repub 61:24 N 27 '29 180w

"The style of Hard Liberty is graceful, with here and there a touch of poetry. Its chief fault is that the story moves too slowly in the third quarter and too quickly at the end."

+ — New Statesman 33:314 Je 15 '29 180w

"Miss Murray has told the story of Jim Robson in a simple and lucid fashion—without decoration of overemphasis. One feels, in fact, that it has been a little oversimplified—that no two such elementary persons as Jim and Anne ever existed. But what the book sacrifices in subtlety and realism it gains in force and clarity."

+ N Y Times p6 O 6 '29 600w

"The most joyless novel of the year, 'Hard Liberty,' is also one of the most distinguished; it shows quick perception of character, its taste is so faultless as to be a positive merit, it has a unity of mood characteristic of a poem rather than of a novel. But Miss Murray's arraignment of life is enfeebled by its partiality: she can always portray characters in depression and sometimes in resignation; but happy, never." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 147:838 Je 22 '29 720w

" 'Hard Liberty' continually wanders over the line into excellence and then irresolutely back again into mediocrity."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:592 D 21 '29 280w

"All the characters are carefully documented; the narrative is tense and the key is true; the rather deliberate simplicity of style is thoroughly effective. Hard Liberty is like a picture in which one admires the brushwork and the 'tactile values' while regretting the insignificance of the subject." R. A. Taylor

+ Spec 142:1025 Je 29 '29 360w

" 'Hard Liberty' is not cheerful reading, but is saved from morbidity by several qualities. Perhaps chief of these are a certain literary beauty and the restraint with which the theme is handled. One feels the simple and final inevitability of character in combination with pressing circumstances. There are no words wasted in sentimentalising the situation, in reflecting or moralising. An apparently calm, critical detachment and reserve in the writer give the story an outline that is classical in its forceful simplicity." C. M. K.

+ Springf'd Republican p18 D 13 '29 550w

Times [London] Lit Sup p452 Je 6 '29 420w

MURRAY, SINCLAIR, pseud. See Sullivan, A.

MURRY, JOHN MIDDLETON. God. 344p $3 Harper

231 God. Faith. Free thought 29-25592

In his autobiographical introduction, Mr Murry attempts to explain the nature of a moment of mystical experience which came to him after his feeling of intense loneliness following the death of Katherine Mansfield. As a part of his conception of God, Mr Murry sees the individual human life as belonging to the universe. He describes the life of Jesus as being on a metabiological level, stating that the same kind of metabiological coherence is manifest in the life of Keats, and traces of the same development are to be found in all the great mystics. The keynote of his doctrine concerning the nature of God is: "God does not exist: but we shall never be able to do without Him unless we know in ourselves the reason why He was created."

"Unusual, stimulating book." W. H. Doggett
+ Churchman p15 D 28 '29 450w

"This is the most complete, clear, and careful, as well as the most important, book Mr. Murry has yet written."
+ Nation and Ath 46:148 O 26 '29 550w

"This new book of his is far worse than The Life of Jesus. There is no sign in it that he has taken the trouble to read any recent books of philosophical theology—he seems ignorant of Tennant and Thornton as well as of von Hügel and even Miss Underhill. . . No sensible man can be in the least interested in what Mr. Middleton Murry thinks of God, unless he has some reason for believing that Mr. Murry cares intensely what God thinks of him. Or, to put it in non-religious language, no student will bother to read the philosophy of a man who is not the servant of truth so much as one who will choose those aspects of truth that serve his purpose. . . What is peculiar to Mr. Murry's God is the autobiographical prologue, which some readers will find strangely poignant and others will resent as an unnecessary introduction of personal experience too private to be used as a symbol. It is at least the best-written part of the book, and to all admirers of Katherine Mansfield will have a precious if painful value."
— New Statesman 34:90 O 26 '29 550w

"The most important thing about Mr. Murry's volume is not its argument but its testimony. Its argument at many points fails. Its testimony to the endless search of man's soul for God is very impressive." H. E. Fosdick
+ — N Y Evening Post p8m N 30 '29 700w

"It is by turns painfully revealing, tortured, muddled, brilliant, paradoxical, original, trite, silly and wise. It is, altogether, an absorbing picture of an acutely sensitive and intelligent mind wrestling with the problem of devising a scientific equivalent for, or rather an improvement on, the Christian religion." Paul Sifton
N Y World p11m Ja 5 '30 1500w

"The positive contribution which Mr. Murry makes is firmly based: there are few people who show his faculty for humanizing the concepts of religion and philosophy, and this, by itself, implies that his thought has been penetrated with authentic experience. Where he struggles to keep his experience unique, to insist on his isolation, he loses all perspective. . . In the end we feel that Mr. Murry's fault is not so much his illumination as the insecurity of his illumination: his own inability to reconcile it with the world around him." Alan Porter
— + Spec 143:sup537 O 19 '29 1000w

"Neither the quality nor the temper of Mr. Murry's work can be gauged from isolated extracts, and its earnestness, clarity and spirituality will command the admiration of many of those who dissent most emphatically from its conclusions."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p810 O 17 '29 2000w

MURRY, JOHN MIDDLETON. Things to come; essays. 318p $2.50 Macmillan [7s 6d J. Cape] 824 28-24841

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ja 20 '29 150w
Boston Transcript p4 D 19 '28 550w
J Religion 9:333 Ap '29 30w
Pratt p26 winter '29

"Mr Murry hardly undertakes to formulate a new theology. Some of his book is mere argumentative filling. But, as has been intimated, there is enough in it that is good to win indulgence for its inferior passages."
+ — Springf'd Republican p8 D 4 '28 500w
World Tomorrow 12:139 Mr '29 20w

MUSCHAMP, EDWARD A. Audacious Audubon; the story of a great pioneer, artist, naturalist & man. 312p il $3.50 Brentano's
B or 92 Audubon, John James 29-19610

The biography of Audubon, the American naturalist, has great value, also, for its pictures of the early American background. "Old New York, old Philadelphia, old New Orleans figure in these pages. We see the last-named city in particular in the throes of one of the most picturesque phases of its always colorful and dramatic history; its harbor front heaving with life. . . We behold not only old America, but also old England and old Scotland, the Edinburgh of Sir Walter Scott's day lionizing the American woodsman." (N Y Evening Post)

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 N 10 '29 280w

"This is one of the most interesting and enthralling biographies of the year." T: C. Richards
+ Boston Transcript p2 O 5 '29 1600w

"Mr. Muschamp has captured much of his subject's charm and appeal, and—what is equally important—he has succeeded in passing it on to his readers through a medium which is neither pedantically learned nor insipidly 'popular.' This is a book which should furnish both profit and pleasure—a combination too seldom met with in the realm of biography."
+ Christian Science Monitor p10 N 9 '29 300w

"The picture of Audubon is presented simply, directly, without the artificiality of conventional biography in the modern manner. It is an extraordinary picture; the story of an extraordinary life." A. R. Maurice
+ N Y Evening Post p7m S 21 '29 780w

"It is true that Mr. Muschamp loves to moralize. It is also true that there is no evidence that he has immersed himself very deeply in the manners and customs of Audubon's period. He has simply gotten up the subject by the use of such material as lay readily at hand and set it forth in what is on the whole an interesting fashion. But it would be hard to write a poor biography of Audubon, and that Mr. Muschamp has not done."
+ N Y Times p4 D 8 '29 1150w

"This romantic stuff has been handled so ineptly by Mr. Muschamp that a sense of waste is our chief emotion. He has added nothing to his predecessors, and relies too much on overlong quotations. His prose is pedestrian, full of platitudes, cliches and unhappy colloquialisms. It is a pity that this fabulous woodsman could not have been introduced to an oblivious generation by a Beebe or a Hudson of his own kin." Kenneth Gould
— N Y World p11m N 17 '29 350w

"Mr. Muschamp has selected a romantic angle of narration, has had interesting facts at his command, and he admires and largely understands his hero. But his literary talent has not been sufficient to overcome the handicap which careless editors, and an unformed popular taste have placed upon good writing. Colorless phrases, hackneyed figures and rough sentences mar Mr. Muschamp's book." F. L. Robbins
— Outlook 153:151 S 25 '29 430w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 80:26 O '29 170w

MUSSET, ALFRED DE. Fantasio; a comedy in two acts; tr. by Maurice Baring. ltd ed 57p il $10 Harper [30s Pleiad press]

842

A comedy in which a gentleman fond of imbibing too much liquor attempts to masquerade as the king's fool, saves the Princess from an unwanted marriage and plunges Bavaria into war. All with very little inconvenience to himself.

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Je 30 '29 90w

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 6 '29 330w

"Mr. Maurice Baring's translation of Musset's Fantasio is an entirely successful venture. May it inspire in some one a desire to act it."
+ New Statesman 33:242 Je 1 '29 1500w

"The illustrations are the most successful part of the book. The artist has caught exactly the fantastic and artificial melancholy of Musset's little play; and his work delicately criticizes as well as illustrates."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p577 Jl 18 '29 150w

MUSSOLINI, BENITO. My autobiography; with a foreword by Richard Washburn Child. 318p il $3.50 Scribner [30s Hutchinson]

B or 92 28-25560

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

Booklist 25:163 Ja '29

"A book of which historians will have to take account, for many details of fact not contained in biographies of the Duce are here added, revised or denied. . . Mussolini's description of the march on Rome is superior to any recorded at the time or since. Whatever one's disposition toward Mussolini, one cannot remain indifferent to his record. Beginning to read it with rather ardent anti-Fascist leanings, at its end I find those leanings a trifle less acute. For all his egocentricity, his bombast, Mussolini's native sincerity is obvious." R. E. Larsson
+ Bookm 68:703 F '29 360w

Christian Century 45:1429 N 22 '28 130w

Cleveland Open Shelf p61 Ap '29

Dial 86:347 Ap '29 110w

Pratt p33 winter '29

St Louis 27:61 F '29

"The story of Fascism is told as if this phenomenon were one of the functions of Mussolini's personality. Nothing is documented. This, obviously, is a grave defect in a book that might have enjoyed unusual historical prestige." E. C. Lindeman
— + Survey 61:747 Mr 1 '29 700w

Wis Lib Bul 24:345 D '28

World Tomorrow 12:139 Mr '29 20w

MYALL, WILLIAM. Scenic West; a travelogue. 231p il $3 Stratford

917.8 West—Description and travel 29-12134

A chatty account of the author's trip thru the western United States. Contents: Grand canyon of Arizona, south rim; Los Angeles and vicinity; The Yosemite valley; The big trees; San Francisco and vicinity; The Yellowstone national park; The Royal gorge; The Ogden and Zion canyons; The Grand canyon, north rim; Bryce canyon and Cedar breaks; Salt Lake City; Pike's Peak and vicinity.

"The book is somewhat rambling but amusingly unpretentious."
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Jl 28 '29 150w

"The chapter on Bryce Canyon is the highlight of a travel-story which must rouse in potential tourists the determination to 'see America'—whether 'first' or not!"
+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 17 '29 330w

St Louis 27:289 O '29

MYERS, ALONZO FRANKLIN, and BIRD, OSSIAN CLINTON. Health and physical education for elementary schools. 342p il $1.50 Doubleday, Doran

371.7 Physical education and training. School hygiene 28-30454

The book presents a modern program of health and physical education for elementary schools. Detailed material for health instruction in the different grades is given and activities suitable to each grade are described.

Reviewed by A. B. Towse
Am J Pub Health 19:465 Ap '29 160w

"The book is a very useful grouping of excellent material on health service, health education, and physical education, such as has been made in no other book which the reviewer has seen." D. R. Reed, M.D.
+ El School J 30:71 S '29 370w

MYERS, CHARLES SAMUEL, ed. Industrial psychology. (Home univ. lib. of modern knowledge) 252p $1.25 Holt [2s 6d T. Butterworth]

331.015 Psychology, Applied. Efficiency, Industrial. Fatigue 29-18465

Most of the chapters in this little book have been written by members of the staff of the British national institute of industrial psychology and are the fruit of first-hand experience with employees and management in factories, mills, mines and offices.

Reviewed by C. L. Stone
Am Econ R 18:308 Je '28 280w

Booklist 26:100 D '29

Reviewed by J. A. Flexner
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 D 15 '29 380w

Nation and Ath 45:210 My 11 '29 480w

"The Home University Library has done well to publish this volume. Its dozen chapters deal in a manner understanded of the people with a number of different, but of course related, aspects of the subject. They are all written by experts, with one exception members of the staff of the National Institute of Industrial Psychology. The exception is Dr. James Drever, who contributes an admirable essay on 'The Human Factor in Industrial Relations.' And the editor himself, the Director of the Institute, stimulates the reader's interest with an introduction whose only fault is its brevity."
+ New Statesman 32:774 Mr 23 '29 120w

"Dr. Myers assures us that this is by far the most up-to-date and, at the same time, readable account of the subject, modestly telling us that his own book, Mind and Work, which was published in 1921, is already out of date, and that his larger volume, Industrial Psychology in Great Britain, is, on the whole, too technical for the general reader."
+ Spec 142:546 Ap 6 '29 1020w

"As a wide survey of a great field not yet half explored it is full of interest and suggestive thought."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p303 Ap 18 '29 1150w

N

NAGLER, ARTHUR WILFORD. Church in history. 439p $3 Abingdon press

270 Church history 29-7304

"Dr. Nagler is Professor of Church History in Garrett Biblical Institute, Evanston, Ill., which leads us to expect a high standard of work. His history is a student's handbook rather than a scholar's thesaurus, and has the qualities of terse and lucid statement which should characterize such a work. Perhaps its best claim to originality lies in its division of the subject into two parts: (1) an outline of the story from the beginnings of Christianity down to the present day; (2) a series of studies of different aspects of Christianity as seen in its historical development."—Sat R of Lit

"It would be more valuable if it were not so filled with the author's dogmatisms."

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Jl 14 '29 150w

Boston Transcript p1 My 4 '29 560w

"The book suffers, perhaps, from the effort to adapt it to the needs both of the student and of the reader. In reconciling the incompatibilities of this double objective, the reader gets the worst of it. But preachers who want to review church history will find the work useful. Professor Nagler's scholarship is sound and his statements are dependable."

+ — Christian Century 46:554 Ap 24 '29 170w

"A thoughtful, suggestive, broad-minded, sympathetic but critical, up-to-date history of the church, emphasizing tendencies, rather than details." W. H. Doggett

+ Churchman 139:17 My 11 '29 230w

Sat R of Lit 5:1030 My 18 '29 110w

NAMIER, LEWIS BERNSTEIN. Structure of politics at the accession of George III. 2v 616p $10.50 Macmillan

942.07 Great Britain—Politics and government. Great Britain—History—1760-1789 [29-11185]

"Mr. Namier has undertaken a mighty work to which, in fact, these two volumes are little more than an introduction. He is making 'a study of the British "political nation" during the American Revolution,' and his method is to concentrate 'on that marvellous microcosmos, the British House of Commons.' His first chapter examines the classes of men who entered Parliament and the motives which led them to do so, his second analyzes the electoral structure of England. Then there are two essays dealing with political corruption at the time of George III.'s accession, one specifically with the Election of 1761, and the other with the use of Secret Service money for political purposes by the Duke of Newcastle. Finally, in his second volume, he examines in great detail the local history of some typical and peculiar constituencies and the careers of certain well-connected gentlemen, highly characteristic of the eighteenth century, whom he calls 'Parliamentary beggars.' "—Nation and Ath

"Mr. Namier's book is an invaluable contribution to the study of British politics not only for its own period but for half a century before and after its dates." T. C. P.

+ Am Hist R 34:824 Jl '29 1000w

"The peculiar value of the book is its display of specific facts, and its astonishingly vivid series of pictures. The work exhibits all the learning and intelligence characteristic of the Oxford don who honestly and wholeheartedly devotes himself to the study of politics. The only regret of the student of contemporary governments must be that such English elections as those of 1918 and 1924 have not been studied in the same way." E. P. Chase

+ Am Pol Sci R 23:772 Ag '29 500w

"So much are Mr. Namier's volumes a source-work, that for the general reader it is about as attractive as the study of anatomy would be to the non-medical mind. For the historical specialist, however, it seems to us of vital importance." W. S. B.

Boston Transcript p5 Ap 20 '29 700w

Reviewed by G: W. Brown

Canadian Hist R 10:263 S '29 400w

"Though it is perfectly true that Mr. Namier's work is strictly limited in scope, is mainly concerned with very small details, and narrates at length electioneering contests between forgotten men and for trivial issues, it possesses a permanent value on account of its very limitations. No previous writer has ever made so thorough and gallant an attempt to discover the actual workings of the political system of the eighteenth century; and if the task was to be achieved at all, it was necessary to limit the inquiry. The result is a very notable contribution to the study of eighteenth-century politics." D. A. Winstanley

+ Eng Hist R 44:657 O '29 2100w

"Mr. Namier's book involves an important revision of our estimate of eighteenth-century politics. . . And the remarkable thing is that, despite analyses of the minutest detail of borough politics, Mr. Namier contrives to make his two volumes eminently readable." G: E. G. Catlin

+ Nation 129:277 S 11 '29 1100w

"Mr. Namier's work is not of the kind which will suit the voracious appetite and weak digestion of so many readers, but the historically and politically minded, who are not frightened by facts and footnotes indicating that these facts are derived from unpublished MSS., will find it fascinating. Mr. Namier has a rare merit among historians. His learning is immense, and he has highly developed that strange respect for a fact, merely because it is undoubtedly a fact." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 44:555 Ja 19 '29 1100w

"For fifteen years or so Mr. Namier has led, among the Newcastle Papers and others like them, in country house libraries and muniment-rooms, among forgotten local records and forgotten biographies, a kind of amphibious existence, coming to the surface from time to time, as a whale does, to fill his lungs, but only to vanish again. Here at last is a book to prove—very much alive as he can show himself in the upper air—how extensive and peculiar is his acquaintance with the submarine areas of 18th century life and politics." K. N. B.

+ New Statesman 32:501 Ja 26 '29 1400w

"The work is at once acclaimed by competent critics as compelling us to revise many conclusions which previous historians were believed to have established beyond possibility of contradiction. The dexterous use he has made of his material is a model for historical writers." H. W. Horwill

+ N Y Times p6 F 24 '29 450w

"All students of eighteenth-century politics in England will read Mr. Namier's volumes, for they will be henceforth invaluable and indispensable. It will be a little time before the results of these lengthy investigations are exactly assessed, but their importance is immediately and overwhelmingly obvious."

+ Sat R 147:215 F 16 '29 580w

Spec 142:90 Ja 19 '29 1000w

Spec 142:1015 Je 29 '29 70w

"Mr. Namier's work is the most elaborate and exhaustive attempt yet made to deal with the whole system of elections to the House of Commons and with the methods employed to secure the votes of the members so elected. Mr. Namier is well qualified for such an undertaking. His knowledge of almost every source, both printed and manuscript, in any way bearing on the highways, and even more on the by-paths, of eighteenth-century politics is so wide as to be almost uncanny. It is a subject of satisfaction that Mr. Namier has now produced a book which gives full scope to his particular and remarkable gifts."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p69 Ja 31 '29 4300w

NAOUM, PHOKION P. Nitroglycerine and nitroglycerine explosives; auth. English tr. with notes and add. by E. M. Symmes. (World wide chemical tr. ser.) 469p il $7 Williams & Wilkins [31s 6d Bailliere]

662.2 Nitroglycerin 28-18626

"Issued as a special volume as the author's part in a delayed plan of a group of experts to produce a large comprehensive handbook on the entire technique of explosives, this volume on nitroglycerine appeals mainly to the explosives chemist rather than to the practical powder user. The first part of the book deals with the chemistry and manufacture of nitroglycerine; physical, chemical and physiological properties are taken up in detail. Part II deals with the homologous and related nitric esters, their chemical properties and explosive effects. Part III is the most practical section of the book, being a comprehensive study of the chemistry, manufacture, use and results of nitroglycerine explosives."—Eng N

NAOUM, P. P.—Continued

Eng N 101:929 D 20 '28 220w

"This work is the most authoritative and up to date on its subject extant." C: E. Munroe
+ Ind & Eng Chem 21:92 Ja '29 380w

"The translator of Dr. Naoum's well-known work has rendered useful service in making it available to a wider circle of readers, containing as it does a fuller collection of information on its subject than any other work in the English language." R. C. G.
+ Nature 123:8 Ja 5 '29 880w
N Y New Tech Bks 13:48 O '28

NAPOLEON I, emperor of the French. Memoirs; comp. from his own writings by F. M. Kircheisen; tr. from the German by Frederick Collins. 288p il $5 Duffield [21s Hutchinson]
B or 92 [29-13748]

A well-known Napoleonic scholar has compiled from Napoleon's own writings—letters, memoirs, reports, records, etc., a complete narrative of his life, from youth to St Helena.

Reviewed by Albert Guerard
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ap 21 '29 230w

"To what extent the book can be called an autobiography is open to question; it is none the less an absorbing revelation of an extraordinary personality, as well as a vivid presentment of those moods and attitudes with which Napoleon 'carried on' from the days of his boyhood in Corsica up to that defeat at Waterloo which culminated in his exile to St. Helena." E. N.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 20 '29 900w

Reviewed by Barrington Gates
Nation and Ath 44:754 Mr 2 '29 300w

"If ever a book required footnotes indicative of sources, it is this: and footnotes are entirely absent, presumably in deference to some anti-academic complex. The translation is tolerable, but traces of German might have been more completely eliminated, since the ultimate originals are French."
New Statesman 32:605 F 16 '29 520w

"The compiler has skillfully arranged the treasure concealed in letters, memoirs, reports, campaign descriptions, etc., to present a self-narrated biography that is intimate with a genuine first-personal intimacy, though, naturally, Napoleon does not see himself as others see him." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 6 '29 120w

"A popular 'Life' arranged under headings, easy to read, not exhaustive, but whose truth, so far as it goes, is incontrovertible. Apart from the Emperor's notes of campaigns, which will not appeal to a very large public, we get a very great amount of entertaining gossip, a great many reflections upon life in general, and his own mentality in particular."
+ Spec 142:132 Ja 26 '29 200w

"This volume is quite instructive, and its documentary value alone makes the book worth while."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p221 Mr 21 '29 120w

NASH, E. GEE. The Hansa, its history and romance. 279p $5 Dodd [18s Lane]
943.5 Hanseatic league [30-1269]

The author tells the story of the rise, supremacy and decline of the confederation of northern European cities for the protection of merchants, known as the Hanse towns. The Hanseatic League in the thirteenth century dominated the economic situation, and at the height of its power exercised a strong political influence, even dictating terms to kings and emperors.

"This is a valuable, but a somewhat disappointing book. It embodies, obviously, the fruits of extensive research, and some of its chapters, such as that on life in the Bergen Kontor, contain new material of much interest. Yet the total addition to our knowledge of this great mercantile confederacy is less than we had hoped, especially on the purely commercial side."
— + Nation and Ath 46:326 N 30 '29 200w

"If Miss Gee Nash herself collected the illustrations of this nicely bound and printed book, she deserves our gratitude. They consist mainly of photographs of the buildings once occupied by the Hansa, and of exhibits in the Hanseatic Museum at Bergen, and are interesting and excellently reproduced. But it is a pity that the text which is written round them was not entrusted to someone who could handle historical material. . . No one who knew anything about the Hansa would bother to read the book—anyone who went to it without previous knowledge would learn singularly little of value."
— + New Statesman 33:790 O 5 '29 200w

"Will be interesting for the general reader with a liking for history and very valuable as background reading for history classes in high schools and colleges."
+ N Y Times p38 D 1 '29 380w
Spec 143:731 N 16 '29 180w

"A sober and painstaking book which must have involved much study among foreign records, but the story might have gained a little in the telling. She marshals her facts clearly and often concisely, but her language at times, and some of her explanatory remarks, seem to suggest that she is writing for young people."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p759 O 3 '29 850w

NASON, LEONARD HASTINGS. Incomplete mariner. 315p $2 Doubleday, Doran
29-22804

The title story of the volume concerns the adventures of a college boy who, en route to South America in a naval officer's uniform, finds himself in command of a ship full of German spies. The other two sea stories in the book are "Hunger" and "Narrow waters."

"Those readers who have followed Mr. Nason's riotous doughboy stunts will be keenly interested in learning that he has gone to sea, and is as funny there as on land."
+ Bookm 70:xxviii D '29 170w

"Until Mr. Nason elects to return to his proper stamping grounds on terra firma his admirers must be content with these three novelettes of the sea in some of its more conventional phases. The author, of course, is not to blame if one reviewer prefers his yarns of the A. E. F." Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 N 24 '29 150w

" 'The Incomplete Mariner' is the first and longest of three sea-tales in Leonard Nason's latest book. The war is in the background, a muttering overtone in the general scheme of things. But there is mystery and movement and action aplenty to take the place of the stirring land scenes to which readers have become accustomed in this author's stories of the A. E. F. Nor can there be any doubt that the author of 'Chevrons' and 'Sergeant Eadie,' 'The Top Kick' and 'The Man in the White Slicker' knows his sea almost as well as he knows the Argonne." J. W. M.
+ Boston Transcript p7 N 13 '29 650w

"They are rattling good yarns, all three of them."
+ N Y Times p33 N 24 '29 230w

"Mr. Nason knows how to spin a yarn, and his stories have the ring of authenticity." R. L. Roe
+ Sat R of Lit 6:403 N 16 '29 110w

NASON, LEONARD HASTINGS. Man in the white slicker. 290p $2 Doubleday, Doran 29-10954

Suddenly out of the woods an officer in a white slicker comes striding up to a machine gun crew and orders them to turn their guns on their own troops. The doughboys respond by knocking him out, and in the next few busy moments forget him. The man in the white slicker disappears. But he leaves a trail of trouble and mystery behind him.

Bookm 69:xxvi Jl '29 70w

"Another readable chronicle of the A. E. F. crowded with sympathetic characters, pathos and incidental fun." Will Cuppy
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ag 11 '29 100w

Boston Transcript p7 Je 22 '29 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p126 S '29

"The book should appeal to average citizens who were average soldiers in the war. To others it will seem technical and undistinguished—except, perhaps, on those pages devoted to one Droghan's piercing observations on men and war delivered in an excellent Dooleyan brogue."
— + N Y Times p16 Jl 7 '29 230w

"A racy and exciting battle piece." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 152:190 My 29 '29 70w

NATHAN, GEORGE JEAN. Monks are monks; a diagnostic scherzo. 300p $2.50 Knopf 29-18126

"Presents Miss Lorinda Hope, a gallant young woman who sets out to find a lover—more particularly a literary lover, but in that discreet phrase of the lady-like Beatrice Lillie, 'what with this and what with that' she fails in her dishonorable intention. She achieves friendship with some half dozen eminent men of letters; she learns little of love but a great deal about literature from these monkish gentlemen, who eventually talk the poor girl into a nunnery."—Outlook

"Mr. Nathan has common-sense and courage and he has them in superlative degree—and common-sense and courage are just what the American theatre both needs and lacks. Mr. Nathan is never an echo, and despite his cap and bells and custard-pies, his ideas are not projected for mere effect. The effect, the affectation if you will, lies solely in his manner. The matter, gist of what he has to say, is as sincerely and as soundly thought out as the work of any living critic of the theatre,—it is modern, keen, authentic dramatic evaluation." Grenville Vernon
+ Bookm 70:447 D '29 450w

Reviewed by J. W. Krutch
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 S 1 '29 960w

Reviewed by L. L. Irvine
Nation and Ath 46:321 N 30 '29 180w

"In Mr. Nathan we have on the one hand a serious student of life and esthetics, a brilliant mind quick to see the absurdity of certain ideas solemnly accepted by his critical colleagues, a man of profound intellectual integrity, and a courageous critic with a sound sense of values; and on the other hand we have the Broadway epicure prattling of rare wines and cordials, the comic writer relying for laughs upon references to the 'sitspot,' and the competent old-style wit reeling off yards and yards of epigrams in the vein of the Yellow Nineties. And the one is constantly being obscured and defeated by the other." Burton Rascoe
— + New Repub 60:211 O 9 '29 2000w

New Statesman 34:395 D 28 '29 150w

"As usual the book is full of brilliant and unusual generalities on the theatre of the past year. Mr. Nathan has merely gone to the trouble, with Lorinda, of giving his customers an extra fillip to his latest volume. For while the usual amount of information is here—though the book sadly lacks an index—it is full of gusto, humor and critical comment for all its extra burlesque turn." Edwin Clark
+ — N Y Times p2 S 29 '29 1200w

"In matters of pure criticism Mr. Nathan invariably shows taste, intuition, vigor, a wit that flashes and delights, the instinct of genius for the apt phrase that devastates or illuminates, and a genuinely aristocratic mind as well as an imposing fund of information. But in the discussion of public affairs he becomes childish, peevish and, like a child, frequently monotonous and tiresome, in a fussy fuming about politics, of which he knows little." Mary Shirley
+ — Outlook 153:69 S 11 '29 420w

St Louis 27:338 D '29

Reviewed by L. W. Dodd
Sat R of Lit 6:310 O 26 '29 300w

NATHAN, MANFRED. Empire government; an outline of the system prevailing in the British commonwealth of nations. 256p $3 Harvard univ. press
342.42 Great Britain—Politics and government

"Mr. Nathan is a distinguished South African lawyer who is already known as an authority on the South African constitution and on constitutional law, and his latest work enhances his reputation. In the first part of the volume, he examines with selective care the nature of the British Empire, the constitutional position of the Dominions of India, the crown colonies, the protectorates, and the mandated territories. In the second part, he surveys certain aspects of the division and exercises of the powers of government under such headings as the Crown, parliament, executive government, the subject."—Canadian Hist R

Reviewed by G. M. Wrong
Am Pol Sci R 23:1014 N '29 350w

"There is, throughout, evidence of wide reading and scholarship. The style is clear, and the manner of approach is judicial and balanced. We know of no other book which we can more strongly recommend for the class of readers for whom it is intended." W. P. M. Kennedy
Canadian Hist R 9:336 D '28 650w

New Statesman 31:598 Ag 18 '28 80w

"Mr. Nathan's book has a general as well as special value. Students of the subject of government, as well as of British political history, will find it a very satisfactory exposition, whether they wish to use it as a manual or as a work of reference. For the general reader who has a special interest in the theme, or who desires accurate information upon it or any of its phases, it will be valuable because of the clarity and interest of its treatment."
+ N Y Times p38 O 6 '29 420w

"In general, one cannot safely rely upon his statements. Nevertheless, some of his comments are suggestive and helpful." R. L. Schuyler
— + Pol Sci Q 44:312 Je '29 120w

"Mr. Nathan has wide knowledge of the judicial practices of different parts of the Empire, and this with his historical summaries make the volume one of the best short guides to the present condition of the Empire that has yet appeared."
+ Sat R 146:657 N 17 '28 350w

Spec 141:109 Jl 21 '28 380w

Times [London] Lit Sup p571 Ag 2 '28 350w

NATHAN, ROBERT. Cedar box; with a foreword by Louis Untermeyer. ltd ed 48p $1.50 Bobbs 811 29-8531

"There is no belligerence or blatancy in this volume. There is, on the other hand, a little sadness, a little shrugging whimsicality, and much of wisdom."—Foreword

"Mr. Nathan is wise, sophisticated and whimsical. He has one-sovereign grace: he has cultivated simplicity."
+ Bookm 70:xvi O '29 100w

NATHAN, ROBERT—Continued

"The most distinguished portion of the volume consists of a group of nine sonnets. . . Whatever may be the eventual fate of such sonnets, they are of the kind that linger and demand evaluation, while for the present they are good to read as being both movement and sparkle in the stream of our new poetry." F. E. Hill

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 My 26 '29 500w

"There is economy here and intuition and sensitiveness of introspection." E. L. Walton

+ Nation 129:150 Ag 7 '29 120w

"The verse of Robert Nathan, of which this is a second collection, will come as no surprise to those who already know and appreciate his exquisite prose. The point of view that informs both is the same, for Mr. Nathan is all of a piece, and that piece is of enchanted weave. He is the gentlest of cynics, the most playful of pessimists."

+ N Y Times p18 Je 2 '29 300w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

N Y World p10m Ap 28 '29 120w

"More powerful and more original sonnets have certainly been written by poets of this generation, but I have seen none more simply beautiful. Writing a sonnet, Nathan is at his best; his pen becomes an enchanter's wand." B. R. Redman

+ Sat R of Lit 5:1064 Je 1 '29 600w

NATHAN, ROBERT. There is another heaven. 191p $2 Bobbs

29-20011

" 'There Is Another Heaven' is about a good many matters, most of all about the fact that a Calvinistic and democratic heaven would be of necessity a pretty dull place. It is also about the plight of a converted Jew who changed his name from Levy to Lewis, turning Christian because he wished some one to love him. What goes on in Heaven during the brief time covered by Mr. Nathan's story is much more his business and the reader's than the reviewer's, and so is the outcome of Mr. Lewis's efforts to adjust himself to a Protestant Heaven."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

---

Booklist 26:120 D '29

Bookm 70:321 N '29 200w

"Mr. Nathan is a poet, and the discipline arising from this fact shows in his prose style, but the prose is not tinctured with pseudopoetic verbiage. It is prose richly full of emotional echoes and admirably suited to the evocation of moods or the creation of atmospheres. About every phase of his work there is evidence of the most painstaking care; his brief novels are from the hand of a stonecutter and jewel polisher. Their finish alone is enough to set them apart in an age when finish is but little esteemed." Herschel Brickell

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 S 29 '29 1300w

"In it we still admire the charm with which he imbues his prose; the combination of subtlety and simplicity which makes his style at once so clear and yet so expressive of deep mutations; yet it is not for these, primarily, that 'There Is Another Heaven' gives us such keen enjoyment. That enjoyment comes from the mood of the story, a mood which, with delicious irony, gives color and substance to the most prevalent craving in human experience." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 30 '29 550w

"It is a whimsical, gay, sad, pathetic, amusing little book, written with a sense of humor and of a very nice feeling for the creative beauty of words. And it's just long enough to read [if you start early enough] in a quiet, restful evening." Fanny Butcher

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p6 D 28 '29 250w

Cleveland Open Shelf p156 D '29

Reviewed by Laura Benét

Nation 129:634 N 27 '29 400w

"You will find the same quality of continual surprise that is to be found in the writing of Lewis Carroll, the quality of the mirror, of the world just as it is but completely reversed. Do not cudgel your brains for the moral underlying this little book. Read it for its delightful pictures of our neighbors, for its truth, its light touch and its good humor." C. A. Chapman

+ New Repub 60:330 N 6 '29 180w

"Mr. Nathan's art is a purged art. There is nothing sprawling about his work; the inessential is resolutely excluded, and the remainder is put into delicate and perfected sentences. The barbs of the satire are like jiggers; they get beneath your skin before you are aware of them and commence their work from the inside."

+ N Y Times p6 O 6 '29 700w

Outlook 153:311 O 23 '29 120w

"The story is irreverent yet not irreligious, imaginative yet not whimsical, ironic yet not cruel. It is strong and delicate and deeply stirring." Johan Smertenko

+ Outlook 153:398 N 6 '29 180w

"Robert Nathan stands alone among the American writers of his day. This is his eighth novel. In many ways it is his best one. . . With 'There is Another Heaven' one of our most individual and scrupulous artists comes to his full stature. It is time that we gave him not only the praise, but the reading which is his due." S. V. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 6:179 S 28 '29 900w

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE BOARD. Mergers and the law. (Studies in public policy toward business) 153p $3 The board

338.8 Trusts, Industrial—Law. Sherman anti-trust law, 1890 29-6426

"A brief introductory chapter, explaining the development of the status of mergers at common law in England and America, is followed by three chapters on the court interpretation of the Sherman Act as applied to mergers. The emphasis here is upon the concrete working of 'the rule of reason.' An attempt is made to formulate 'several propositions concerning the most moot points of interpretation of the anti-trust laws as applied to corporate consolidations.' "—Am Pol Sci R

---

Reviewed by Malcolm Sharp

Am Econ R 19:471 S '29 770w

Reviewed by Olin Ingraham

Am Econ R 19:701 D '29 1500w

Am Pol Sci R 23:793 Ag '29 120w

Reviewed by B: S. Kirsh

Columbia Law R 29:1175 D '29 950w

NATIONAL INDUSTRIAL CONFERENCE BOARD. Work of the International labor organization. 197p $2.50 The board

331.91 International labor organization. Labor laws and legislation, International 28-21540

The report contains a summary of the history of the International labor organization and labor conventions. It concludes that the United States should not affiliate with the International labor organization, but should cooperate in its activities.

---

Reviewed by Quincy Wright

Am J Soc 35:152 Jl '29 200w

"The survey here given of the work of this important international agency is unusually comprehensive in its scope and penetrating in its analysis, and to the textual discussion is added an appendix containing twenty-eight tables showing graphically the exact status of the several draft conventions adopted by the International Labor Conferences and of the domestic legislation applying the terms of these conventions." C. A. Berdahl

+ Am Pol Sci R 23:217 F '29 380w

Reviewed by R. L. Buell

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 My 5 '29 180w

NAUMBURG, MARGARET. Child and the world; dialogues in modern education. 328p $3.50 Harcourt

370.1 Education—Experimental methods. Psychology, Educational. Education of children 28-24923

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

---

Reviewed by A. J. Todd
Am J Soc 34:1199 My '29 100w
Booklist 25:234 Mr '29

"On the whole the book is a painstaking and sincere piece of work. One feels, however, that it would have been more timely and therefore more stimulating had it been published ten years ago. Now, when many of the schools of thought it represents are waning and not waxing, it seems a little old-fashioned, although the particular school from which this material is drawn does not appear to suffer from the same defect. But in spite of an oversupply of theory, the book should make friends for the new ideas in education." Elisabeth Irwin

+ — Bookm 68:705 F '29 320w
Cleveland Open Shelf p24 F '29

"Miss Naumburg's book has great value in adumbrating a philosophy in the light of which educational problems may be considered. My only regret is that she did not gain space for a more thorough discussion by sacrificing a form which led to much unnecessary repetition. The book may be recommended to those who wish to gain a bird's-eye view of progressive educational philosophy." W: B. Curry

+ — Nation 128:510 Ap 24 '29 640w

Reviewed by Augusta Alpert
New Repub 57:279 Ja 23 '29 470w

Reviewed by F. F. Kelly
N Y Times p6 F 10 '29 520w

"I found myself more than repaid for an arduous reading of Miss Naumburg's book. The problems she raises are those which every school and every family should face. And I rejoice that she has given the world her answer to them both in book form and in a school." L. P. Mitchell

+ Sat R of Lit 6:242 O 12 '29 1300w

"It is brilliant talk, well documented and freely based on the most recent and widely acclaimed books in the field of psychology and philosophy. There can be no question either that its central thesis is profoundly true. So true indeed that it requires no weighty argument whatever—merely exposition in understandable and human terms." Agnes de Lima

+ — Survey 62:614 S 15 '29 380w
Wis Lib Bul 25:70 F '29

NAYLOR, EDWARD WOODALL. Poets and music. 180p il $2 Dutton [6d Dent]

780 Music and literature. English poetry [29-11101]

Based upon the theory that most men of letters have been notoriously ignorant of or indifferent to music, Mr. Naylor's treatise attempts to discover to what extent music has been treated by certain English poets in their works. Shakespeare, Milton, and Browning are credited with quite a bit of musical knowledge, tho many poets and novelists are found to have made blunders with regard to musical terms.

---

"The Poets and Music smacks of the doctor's thesis. It has the virtue of scholarly exactitude and the vice of being concerned with matters of minor interest. This is a book for specialists and those interested in odd bits of knowledge." H. R. Hays

+ — Bookm 70:221 O '29 110w

"It is scarcely too much to say that all students of literature should read Dr. Naylor's book. A vast amount of instruction is packed into these few unpretentious pages."

+ New Statesman 32:363 D 22 '28 320w

NAZAROFF, ALEXANDER I. Tolstoy, the inconstant genius. 332p il $5 Stokes

B or 92 Tolstoi, Leo Nikolaievich, count

This impartial tho sympathetic biography of Tolstoy reveals the great Russian writer as an "inconstant genius." Either Tolstoy is sure that he is a writer and proves it by creating two such masterpieces as "War and peace" and "Anna Karenina" or he convinces himself that his mission in life is to follow the footsteps of Christ, and that all his creative works are insignificant. Either he blesses his wife and children for the happiness they give him or he blames them for his inability to lead a truly Christian life. At the age of eighty-two, he decides "to carry out his life-long Christian dream" and immediately runs out into the black night, only to die, eleven days after, at the station master's house at Astapovo. The book has a bibliography.

---

"Mr. Nazaroff has written a vigorous and dramatic narrative, well proportioned and free of any marked bias, except in his obvious preference for the artist in Tolstoy, rather than for the prophet and reformer. He has enriched the familiar story with the new details; he has related Tolstoy's novels to his experience, but has given each work the appreciative criticism that maintains our sense of it as an independent artistic whole; and he has incorporated some of the most valuable of the recent interpretations of Tolstoy's life-long struggle with the warring forces in his own nature." Dorothy Brewster

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 D 15 '29 900w

"In this life of Count Tolstoy, Mr. Nazaroff ranges himself with the most notable of the many that are at the present time making biography a new art. From the first chapter to the last he is impartial, keen in his analysis of motives, vivid, concise, yet fully balanced in style. He never loses his grip on the reader by the introduction of irrelevant details, he makes the man live, and what higher praise could one give?" N. H. D.

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 24 '29 1250w

"It is to Mr. Nazaroff's credit that he has set forth this inconstant and sometimes perplexing personality in such a way that the reader comprehends and finds reasonable the astonishing story. The biographer is straightforward; he employs the words of Tolstoy himself many times; his mental and spiritual analyses are unstrained and based on acceptable documentation. It is only in prose and biographical construction that he leaves something to be desired. . . But these technical defects may well be passed over after a cursory notation for the sake of the undeniable meat that is in the book." Herbert Gorman

+ — N Y Times p5 D 15 '29 1600w

"A maturely thought out and sympathetic picture of the man—rather than of the writer or the philosopher—presented with dignity, imaginative understanding and considerable charm of style." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 153:589 D 11 '29 70w

NAZHIVIN, IVAN FEDOROVICH. Rasputin; tr. by C. J. Hogarth. 2v $6 Knopf

"A novel of the Russian revolution . . . which some Europeans have in their enthusiasm compared to Tolstoy's 'War and Peace.' As picture after picture of recent Russian life emerges, the life immediately preceding the great war, the life during the first years of the war, life during the revolution and life immediately after, the reader is carried along by the vast panorama with something, indeed, of our old excitement in 'War and Peace.' And like a black thread woven through this tapestry, is the evil spirit of Rasputin."—N Y Times

---

"Besides being an imposing synthetic picture of Russian society before, during and after the World War and the Revolution, Ivan Nazhivin's 'Rasputin' is primarily a long and bitter invective hurled by a disgruntled emigré at his native land. Viewing her retrospectively, Nazhivin

NAZHIVIN, I. F.—Continued
sees his Mother Russia not as 'Holy Russia' but as brutal, lewd Russia—stupid, bungling, shiftless, slatternly, drunken." Joshua Kunitz
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 D 15 '29 550w
Boston Transcript p2 S 25 '29 1150w

"Ivan Nazhivin's 'Rasputin' consciously takes the form of the Russian classics. . . It is the traditional form, but the spirit has become attenuated. From the seeming irrationality of a Dostoevsky humanity emerges, terrible and pitiful and amazing. From Nazhivin we get merely horror piled upon horror until the thing becomes a bore. The actors so far lose the human form that one no longer believes in them. 'Rasputin' purports to be a historical novel of the Russian revolution, but unfortunately the writer became so engrossed in the blood-curdling episodes of the civil wars that he lost the real revolution altogether. The canvas proved altogether too large for a competent painter of miniatures." Harold Kellock
— Nation 129:434 O 16 '29 550w

"Nazhivin's creative and emotional capacities are of a high and varied order. The sovereign quality of clearness, unfortunately, he worships far less than did his master, Tolstoy. Tolstoy's characters have a way of establishing themselves early, incisively and unforgetably in the reader's mind, and once established they become too closely our acquaintances to be forgotten or even confused. Nazhivin's characters, upon the other hand, frequently become confused in the reader's mind like people met in a crowd, or almost in a brawl." H: J. Forman
+ — N Y Times p9 O 6 '29 1400w

NEALE, ARTHUR, ed. Great weird stories. 409p $2 Duffield
Short stories—Collections 29-26784

Twenty tales of mystery or horror by masters of the genre.

Reviewed by B. R. Redman
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Je 23 '29 120w

"A good book to slip into one's bag before going off on a week-end party and should provide a satisfactory antidote to dull company. Of the various stories included in the volume we still find Poe's 'The Black Cat' the best thing of its kind, an extraordinarily perfect affair. . . 'The Two Sisters of Cologne' is a real scaretaker, and one of the best stories in the book." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p4s Je 8 '29 200w

NEALE, RUSSELL. Hobby house. 299p $2.50 Harper
29-4759

The Hobby House with its noisy crew comes impertinently to rest on the mud flats at the edge of aristocratic Stiffey land. The elder Stiffey orders the disgraceful ark and its cargo off his land, but retreats before the Amazon mother of the houseboat and her barrage of epithets and sardine cans. To crown the old man's sufferings his son William marries the eldest daughter of the brood. After that it is a struggle to the finish between Stiffey pride and Hobby House persistence.

Bookm 69:xxiii Ag '29 80w

"This is a novel of unusual merit and distinction. That it is a first novel, that its author is only twenty-three years old, are interesting but irrelevant facts. For the book is an accomplished performance, and its primacy is significant only in revealing a matured, robust, and individual talent. Few young writers have recently matched Mr. Neale in richness of material and variety of effect." Lloyd Morris
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Mr 24 '29 350w
— Boston Transcript p2 My 22 '29 220w

Reviewed by E. L. Walton
Nation 128:537 My 1 '29 130w
New Repub 59:81 Je 5 '29 130w

"It is a story that tends for the most part toward the preposterous, unconvincing in many of its situations and hardly ever going beyond merely decorative effects. The dialogue, however, is not unconvincing, but is on the contrary rich, racy and unique. Here is the real promise of whatever the author may have to give us in his next book." Edwin Seaver
+ — N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 6 '29 170w
N Y Times p9 Mr 24 '29 580w

"Mr. Neale's story is rich with the charm of strangeness and the pathos of distance. The book's only two faults are periodic lapses into quaintness and repeated unconvincingness of the characters."
+ — N Y World p11m My 5 '29 130w

"The style is robust, and the story, which is quite short, absorbing."
+ Outlook 151:430 Mr 13 '29 30w

"It is a bit difficult to accept some of the figures as serious drawings rather than caricature, or perhaps unintentional caricature."
— + Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 21 '29 130w
Wis Lib Bul 25:162 My '29

NEALE, RUSSELL. Relatives. 284p $2.50 Harper
29-20107

Frustrated life as it exists in a small Pennsylvania town is the theme of the novel. Most of the people are relatives, the majority of them are grasping, sordid or ignorant, and all are unhappy and disappointed. The Palls, especially, are a detestable family, and the author has chosen to photograph them realistically, without adornment or the aid of retouching.

Bookm 70:xiv Ja '30 130w

"Mr. Neale has superb gifts. He now needs one other gift—a little human charity. . . [The story] is told in a style as sharp and inescapable as a pneumatic riveter and as interesting as a dog fight. In fact, the reader has a feeling he is being personally dragged into the Pall family battles. Epithets whistle over his head. Bitter allusions to individual infirmities and lusts miss him by a hair's breadth. Quarter is neither given nor asked. The inexhaustible vitality of these peasant folk gives one a dim and horrible notion of what life must have been in the prehistoric age, when society was savage and hard and the young threw out the old and lunatic to fend for themselves." W: McFee
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 O 27 '29 680w

"It is a masterly book, an interpretation of a little known aspect of American life that here becomes as vivid as if it were actually seen from the window of a moving train. Those who have journeyed through that part of Pennsylvania will understand its verity and the aptness of description and of character." G. R. B. R.
+ Boston Transcript p7 N 20 '29 430w

"Well done, in that stripped, non-committal and perfectly humorless manner so much the vogue just at present. 'Relatives' is a thoroughly depressing book; it is true enough, no doubt of that, but true to life in its grayest, dreariest and most sordid aspects."
N Y Times p30 N 10 '29 550w

NEALE, WALTER. Life of Ambrose Bierce. 489p $5 Neale
B or 92 Bierce, Ambrose 29-14471

Walter Neale, who as publisher of Ambrose Bierce's collected works did much toward establishing the literary reputation of this eccentric writer, first met Bierce in 1901, when he was 59 years old and known principally thru his newspaper and magazine writing. Bierce's life before this time is covered in one short chapter. The book is largely made up of quotations from his works, from his conversation, and from critical estimates of Bierce by Herman Scheffauer, Percival Pollard and George Sterling.

"Mr. Neale has written an extremely interesting book. It should be read by all who count themselves among the gentry." C. H. Grattan
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Ag 4 '29 900w

Reviewed by Carey McWilliams
Nation 128:769 Je 26 '29 300w

Reviewed by Herbert Gorman
N Y Times p5 D 29 '29 200w

"Walter Neale, publisher of the collected works of Ambrose Bierce, has written the third book to appear recently regarding that interesting and eccentric figure. His 'Life of Ambrose Bierce' does not add much to the information already gleaned about the adventurous journalist, Civil war veteran, cynic and alleged soldier of fortune, but it presents a great deal of candid gossip and analysis."
+ Springf'd Republican p6 S 3 '29 680w

NEARING, SCOTT. Black America. 275p il $3 Vanguard press

326 Negroes. United States—Race question. Negroes—Economic conditions 29-26477

An exhaustive study of the life, work, and lynching of the Negro in the United States which deals, as Mr Nearing explains in his introduction, with the American Negro, "not as a 'social problem' but as an oppressed race." Mr Nearing has amassed an immense amount of evidence bearing out his point of view.

---

"Mr. Nearing has made his volume interesting by many pictures of Negro life and labor. Also he gives a somewhat gruesome set of pictures of lynching—a lynching portrait gallery. However, in spite of his large canvas Mr. Nearing's picture of black America is hardly complete. There is little or no discussion of such aspects of Negro life as Negro literature and art, the Negro press, the social divisions and classes in the Negro social order, race consciousness and race movements, such as Garveyism, and such trade-union movements as that represented by the Brotherhood of Pullman Porters—a somewhat strange omission for Mr. Nearing. The interracial co-operation movement gets no attention. And there is no fundamental analysis of race prejudice." W. O. Brown
+ — Am J Soc 35:506 N '29 350w
Ann Am Acad 144:155 Jl '29 180w
Booklist 25:346 Je '29
Bookm 69:xii Je '29 130w

"There is nothing hysterical or sentimental about this volume. Mr. Nearing marshals his data with a practiced mind. The book is attractively printed, and the collection of 159 photographic reproductions, representing different aspects of Negro life and status, is more complete than any that has appeared recently in any book about Negroes." C: S. Johnson
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Ap 7 '29 500w

"The illustrations are unforgettable. They picture the life of the negro from its most deplorable to its most inspiring phases. The book is as fascinating as it is valuable to the student of the humanities."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 23 '29 250w

"Dr. Nearing displays his usual skill in the marshaling of his data, and the 159 illustrations carried in the volume are a totally new and valuable feature in books on this subject. There is, however, a persistent challenge both in the facts gathered and in the angle of presentation." C: S. Johnson
+ — Christian Century 46:744 Je 5 '29 430w
Cleveland Open Shelf p87 Je '29

"The first serious portrayal within the decade of the Negro worker in modern economic society. The author's failure to wade into this culture complex and subject its psychological growths to closer scrutiny leaves much undone in the way of economic interpretation of a very important phenomenon in American life." A. L. Harris
+ — Nation 128:sup482 Ap 17 '29 730w

" 'Black America' is a factual, unsentimental, bold and thorough account of the position of the Negro in the United States, presented through a carefully authenticated text and with the use of many undeniable and terrible photographs of physical and social outrage." M. P. Levy
+ New Repub 58:232 Ap 10 '29 380w
N Y Times p2 Mr 3 '29 430w

"It is because Scott Nearing's 'Black America' states facts with such fearless candor and emphasizes them with such convincing statistics and illustrations that it challenges immediate and extensive consideration. Compared with Dowd's 'The Negro in American Life' or Reuter's 'The American Race Problem,' Nearing's volume marks great advance in acuteness of analysis and sweep of conclusion. While most books on the Negro have about them a certain tone of apology and are often characterized by an element of condescension, 'Black America' is free of these limitations in spirit and motivation. . . 'Black America' is the best book on the American Negro that has appeared." V. F. Calverton
+ N Y World p5e F 24 '29 1250w
Outlook 151:430 Mr 13 '29 20w

"Scott Nearing's book is an able portrayal of the position of the Negro in American society." S. D. Spero
+ Pol Sci Q 44:618 D '29 1150w
St Louis 27:193 Je '29

"Apart from its thesis, Professor Nearing's book is valuable for two reasons: it traces the Negro's history in America from the important but neglected aspect of straight economics and adds in a remarkable series of 'snap' photographs a graphic cross-section picture of contemporary Negro life." Alain Locke
+ Survey 62:198 My 1 '29 320w

"The facts which the book presents reveal so clearly how economic and psychological factors are intertwined in the matter of race relationships, that it is difficult to see how an economic determinist could have written it."
+ World Tomorrow 12:475 N '29 200w

NEFF, MRS WANDA (FRAIKEN). Lone voyagers. 286p $2.50 Houghton 29-15570

A quiet story of professors and their wives in an American college, of their struggles to get along, and of the compromise they are forced to make between the necessities of life on one side, and the ideals of scholarship on the other.

---

Booklist 26:71 N '29

Reviewed by Florence Haxton
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Jl 21 '29 850w

"If Mrs. Neff does not always work her material as skillfully as she might, there are at least glowing scenes. She knows the heart of an average American Middle Western campus. . . The material Mrs. Neff has assembled is so vast that several novels might well have been written from the subject matter. She has created her characters in the slow-moving, meticulous manner of the Russian novelists. Her panorama is almost as widespread in its survey of human beings as any of the great Russian tales. As a suggestive and critical study of American education, the 'hope, a pathetic hope of America,' this novel is singularly illuminating." W: E. Harris
+ Boston Transcript p3 Ag 10 '29 1400w

"Mrs. Neff knows her occupational background thoroughly—and some of them are tragic enough. The book as a whole, however, is more impressive than its parts." R. M. L.
+ — New Repub 60:109 S 11 '29 250w

"A novel as well balanced and piercing as a bayoneted rifle. The author has sat her down and with a quiet skill, more shocking than scandalized outcry, has turned the bright raiment of Pallas Athene inside out, displaying the seams, the pitifully contrived patches, the pathetic darns and shabbiness that universities wear

NEFF, WANDA—Continued

next to their skins. Mrs. Neff has written a powerful and authoritative novel. She has kept her head and her art when it would have been easy to lose both in a blast of emotion, for she writes, not as a spectator but as a participant." F: F. Van de Water

+ N Y Evening Post p6m Ag 3 '29 800w

"It is the picture of the economic conditions of the faculty which is most valuable in 'Lone Voyagers.' The story is slender. The real message of the book is to reveal the love, tragedy, sportsmanship, self-sacrifice and idealism of a rather fine sort, of the men and women who teach in our universities, held down and smothered by American complacency and indifference as beetles are imprisoned under a sunny stone. More of a tract than a novel, but worth reading at that by all who have a liking for the less spectacular human qualities."

+ N Y Times p6 Ag 4 '29 760w

N Y World p11m N 17 '29 180w

Reviewed by Mary Shirley

Outlook 152:708 Ag 28 '29 380w

"In spite of the fact that she is a good reporter, or it may be because of it, the writing never rises to any heights. There is more poignancy in the tale than in the telling of it. There is no magic in the words, and a little magic would have gone a long way."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:274 O 12 '29 400w

Springf'd Republican p7e Jl 28 '29 300w

Wis Lib Bul 25:277 Jl '29

NEFF, MRS WANDA (FRAIKEN). Victorian working women; an historical and literary study of women in British industries and professions, 1832-1850. 288p $3.50 Columbia univ. press [12s 6d Allen & U.]

331.4 Woman—Employment. Women in England. Women in literature and art

29-28521

The book is a study of women in British industries and professions from the time when the working woman became a definite social problem to 1850, when factory legislation was beginning to show results. Mrs Neff also traces contemporary thought on the subject in the fiction of the time.

---

"Readable and worth while Mrs. Neff's volume certainly is, but the material brought together would have been vastly more valuable had it received the close-knit organization which is so marked a characteristic of Alice Clark's The Working Life of Women in the Seventeenth Century, with which this work invites comparison. Not only does the subject matter of each chapter need to be more carefully articulated but the book as a whole fails to carry the reader step by step to the conclusions of the last chapter. These conclusions, however sound, are not tied to the pages that precede them and neither they nor the questions set in the introductory chapter provide a guide through the maze of details which the author has painstakingly accumulated. They do, however, suggest rich fields for further work." Elizabeth Donnan

— + Am Hist R 35:404 Ja '30 500w

"We are never quite sure whether she is doing an economic history or a literary history of women workers—and the two, in spite of implications in the book, are not the same thing. The value of the extensive material collected is thus marred by blurring what should be the main lines of the thesis, and also by poor documentation: copious footnotes abound in page references to Hansard and parliamentary papers, yet give no inkling of the actual authority behind citations, incidents, or expressions of opinions." J. A. Flexner

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 S 22 '29 500w

"The author has spent much time in research and she writes with a thorough and concise knowledge of her subject. The picture that she draws is in such startling contrast to the conditions existent today among business women that, to read it, would prove of salutary value to those who sigh for the good old days."

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 27 '29 180w

"Mrs. Neff has put vast industry and much skill and humor into this early Victorian study of women in British industries and professions." J: A. Hobson

+ Nation 129:723 D 11 '29 750w

"Mrs. Neff's book is not one to be recommended to the idle-minded reader. It is one of the best documented historical studies that I have ever read. It is composed almost entirely of facts stated baldly with little figures after them, and the little figures refer to the Notes, which again consist of a line referring you to the authority for the fact. The authorities range from Blue Books to 'Vanity Fair' and Miss Jewsbury's novel. The facts are, however, so well chosen and arranged that the book is of the highest value to anyone seriously interested in the social history of women." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 45:338 Je 8 '29 1200w

Sat R 147:868 Je 29 '29 210w

"The author is temperate in her historical treatment, keeping, well within the vast amount of evidence she has accumulated. She has made exhaustive studies of English literature, stretching the word literature to its widest limit. Her sources are carefully listed in several pages of notes. Moreover, she supplies a bibliography of nonliterary materials with dates." E. P. K.

+ Springf'd Republican p14 N 21 '29 480w

Reviewed by Theresa Wolfson

Survey 63:359 D 15 '29 300w

"It is a useful and interesting piece of work, bringing together a large number of facts and written in clear, easy English, with but few distinctively Transatlantic expressions. Mrs. Neff's work suffers, however, from the drawbacks which almost inevitably attend the publication, without much alteration, of a student's thesis. The general reader not specially interested in the history of women will be baffled by the mass of detail, the limitation of outlook to one very short period, and the lack of a guiding idea to shed illumination on the facts. . . As a help to the student Mrs. Neff is not quite careful or comprehensive enough."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p472 Je 13 '29 980w

NELSON, WILLIAM HAMILTON. Tinker and thinker: John Bunyan, 1628-1688. 169p $1.50 Willett

B or 92 Bunyan, John

28-25388

A direct and vivid story of Bunyan's life which is brief, easy to read, and yet sharply evokes a living character in the midst of his times. A good introduction for young people.

---

"Mr. Nelson's little volume represents the 'reaction' of a convinced devotee to the teaching of his master; it is hortatory, edifying, pietistic, attempting to draw from the story of Bunyan's life a lesson which America needs to harken to, portraying Bunyan as a man of God." S: C. Chew

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 D 30 '28 300w

"The chief value of the book is the fact that Bunyan's message and experience have gripped the author's soul and shaped and fashioned a deep personal experience, and this life of Bunyan is not simply a literary or biographical study, but a living, throbbing testimony and tribute to his spiritual worth and vital power." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 16 '29 400w

"Mr. Nelson has drunk deep at the springs of Bunyan's genius, and has absorbed something of his ability to speak of high and holy things in the language of the market-place. . . It is a living Bunyan that is presented here moving in the midst of a scene that is as real as he is. The reader will not only acquire information about this remarkable man but will feel a sort of intimacy with him which is, perhaps, one test of a good biography." W. E. G.

+ Christian Century 46:22 Ja 3 '29 230w

"While the story of Bunyan's life is absorbing, the preachings and evangelistic zeal of his biographer at times befog the narrative and irk the reader. Both the moral and literary force of the tale are partly obscured in this book by maudlin preachments and a style which baffles classification. The author's metaphors and similes include phrases from Lindbergh, the football fields, the barroom, the automobile and a hundred other irrelevant subjects."
— Springf'd Republican p7e D 30 '28 750w

NEUMANN, ALFRED. The rebels; tr. from the German by Huntley Paterson. 333p $2.50 Knopf

29-15285

"The action of the story is laid in Tuscany in the 1830's, during the Carbonari revolt. The current unrest, the reaction against the Napoleonic regime, the stirrings of national consciousness, or the vicissitudes of individual fortune, had drawn into the maze of revolutionary intrigue a diversity of types and characters. . . The action is a fantastic maze of plots and counterplots, turning about the precipitation of an open revolt and the assassination of the Grand Duke. It is a dramatic and thrilling struggle between the devious and subterranean organization of the Carbonari, headed in Tuscany by Gasto Guerra, and the almost equally devious Buon Governo, the police system of the duchy. Much of the action centers upon the person of Maria Corleone, the mistress of the Grand Duke and the lover of Guerra."— N Y Evening Post

---

"The book is masterfully written and the background well drawn. The dialogue is spirited and not too profusely sprinkled over the more necessary and informative descriptive passages . . . A word should be said for Mr. Patterson's clever translation. He is to be congratulated on his style and adherence to the spirit of the original German." Francis Musgrave
+ Bookm 70:206 O '29 750w

"First among the absurd features of Herr Neumann's modernism is his desire to shock. . . His many carefully led-up-to scenes never quite click, and fall a long way short of realization. Yet that he could stage-manage such scenes at all bespeaks talent, and we bow to him as we do to the director of Roxy's spectacles." A. B. Parsons
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Jl 21 '29 800w

"The treatment in 'The Rebels' of the Carbonari uprising in central Italy from 1820 to 1830 is purposely oblique and fragmentary. Actually, the reader is not supposed to know what it is all about, to have any systematic understanding of the social and economic forces which presumably lie behind the movements of the personages. . . It is a deliberate and intelligent falsification of history, just as a romantic novel by Walter Scott is a childish and uncritical one. . . History is like a black veil behind which their faces are nebulous and frightening, their voices muted and elusive. Once the reader has experienced this strange terror effect, he has received most of what Neumann has to give." C. P. Fadiman
+ — Nation 129:277 S 11 '29 900w

Reviewed by L. L. Irvine
Nation and Ath 45:831 S 28 '29 40w

New Repub 60:182 O 2 '29 130w

"Neumann has the same fine instinct that Conrad had for bringing out the true qualities of a man's nature by setting him in the midst of great action. 'The Rebels' is a story as mechanically involved as 'The Three Musketeers,' as melodramatic as 'Macbeth,' as convincing as 'Lord Jim.' Although it is hardly as finely articulated as his former novel, 'The Devil,' it has a range and force which sweep the reader irresistibly to the end. 'The Rebels' is a vigorous, an almost appallingly vital book. In the end it fails of greatness because Herr Neumann cannot bear to leave anything at loose ends, because each thread of the complicated plot must be finally tied off and clipped to an exaggerated neatness. And somewhere in this process he loses the magnificent, almost casual verity of the rest of the book." Margaret Wallace
+ — N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 27 '29 800w

"Herr Neumann's method in 'The Devil' was a triumph of indirectness, of implication. This method is similarly employed in 'The Rebels.' But where 'The Devil' represents the triumph of Neumann's method, 'The Rebels' comes perilously close to representing its collapse. It is often fascinating because it is odd, clever, even brilliant; it is often stimulating because it is subtle, powerful, vivid; but it can never be accepted."
— + N Y Times p6 Jl 28 '29 700w

"The beginning, a long and tedious account of an incestuous relationship, has little to do with anything that follows. Even after the author approaches his main situation, he goes lurching from one set of characters to another. When finally the spotlight falls on Gasto Guerra, leader of the Florentine Carbonari, and his dubious sister, Magdalena, they are slow in acting up to their important rôles. The reader has hardly, at last, become vitally interested in them when the story abruptly closes with both in prison. Presumably in Herr Neumann's work, 'Guerra,' announced as in preparation, he will proceed with their careers. It is to be hoped, and expected, that, having a running start, he will produce a far more interesting book." E. S. Bates
— Sat R of Lit 6:560 D 14 '29 400w

Reviewed by V. S. Pritchett
Spec 143:784 N 23 '29 250w

"The book is an accomplished piece of what American technicians sometimes call 'atmospherics,' but it would have gained by firmer outlines of deed and character."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p816 O 17 '29 300w

NEUMANN, DAISY. Timothy travels from the Mediterranean to the North Sea. 307p il $2.50 Coward-McCann

914 Europe—Description and travel 28-23227

Timothy travels with his mother across Europe from the Mediterranean to the North Sea. The story, illustrated with drawings and sketch maps of the route, tells where Timothy and his mother went and what they saw.

---

"This book would have been a better book if the Todds had been 'licked' into better shape —more natural characters and given a better name before they started out to see the world. But it has vitality and contains a good deal of accurate, first hand information and some unpretentious maps and drawings which children will find not far removed from their own undertakings." A. C. Moore
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Mr 17 '29 280w

"Although Timothy seems wide-awake enough he seems unable to make any more intelligent remark than that he thinks such a view or project 'is swell.' This may be charming boyish enthusiasm but it certainly gets us nowhere." Isabelle Houck
— N Y World p11m N 4 '28 200w

"The style is natural and conversational, and the author's illustrations, while fairly simple as sketches, have a great deal of atmosphere and add very much to the value of the pages. Publisher or editor should, however, weed out expressions . . . if parents interested in their children's English are to be won to the book."
+ — Sat R of Lit 5:1058 My 25 '29 280w

NEUMANN, PHILIPP, freiherr von. Diary, 1819-1850; tr. and ed. from the original manuscript by E. Beresford Chancellor. 2v 298; 355p il $12.50 Houghton [42s P. Allan]

B or 92 [29-3538]

"Von Neumann, an Austrian attached to the London Embassy, kept a fairly constant record of affairs, political, diplomatic and social, between the years 1819 and 1850, during which he was au courant with what was happening, not only in Austria and in England, but also

NEUMANN, PHILIPP—Continued
France, Spain and Latin America. He wrote without the slightest thought of his record ever being published, and he therefore discusses men and events with remarkable frankness."—Boston Transcript

"An inveterate sightseer and a lover of ceremonial, his accounts of the festivities he witnessed are most delightful as well as full of important details. Though written for his own pleasure, the diary is interesting reading and supplements in a most unusual way those already known which cover this period."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 19 '29 300w

"He was a dull man, or at any rate a dull diarist. He hardly ever records an interesting conversation, or even an interesting remark. The diary is just worth reading as a contemporary record by anyone greatly concerned with the period, but it has little historical value."
— Nation and Ath 44:334 D 1 '28 120w

"Considering the authority and variety of the diary as a document for the social historian, one may regret that it was not possible, even at the cost of easy reading, to print the manuscript in its entirety. After all, there may well be entries which have not struck Mr. Beresford Chancellor as noteworthy but might nevertheless be significant to a student at some future time."
+ New Statesman 32:53 O 20 '28 1600w

"Represents the reactions of a man who, while he moved only among the elite in England and was deeply attached to that country, had a Continental outlook on life—that of a foreign aristocrat. His diary is a human document which will be savored and enjoyed by all interested in the transition period leading to the industrial age—and who are in a measure at home with its course of social and political development." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p8m Ja 5 '29 250w

"Neumann, judged by the reflection in the mirror of his own writing, translated dexterously into brilliant English, stands out in all the charm, brilliancy and shrewdness that characterized a gallant homme of the nineteenth century." T. J. C. Martyn
+ N Y Times p7 Je 23 '29 650w
Times [London] Lit Sup p849 N 15 '28 1100w

NEVILL, JOHN CRANSTOUN. Strange companions. 331p $2.50 Little 29-3181

Hughie, youngest of the old Randall family of ship-builders and owners is a sensitive child of too much imagination. He lives shyly, a little lonely and frightened in the adult family circle, loved but only sometimes understood by his elders. The story of Hughie ends when at twenty he gives up his career as an artist to become for a time at least the master of a Randall ship. It is an engaging and sympathetic study of an English boy set in a gallery of penetrating family portraits.

Bookm 69:xxv Jl '29 120w

"Mr. Nevill's style is pleasing, and his story is solidly and honestly built up of details which are charming. But it is not without some moments of dullness. The pages dealing with the war for instance, contain much that is irrelevant and not so freshly handled as to interest us for itself." Garreta Busey
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 My 12 '29 360w

"This story is particularly English in its emphasis on the importance of the family tradition. Mr. Nevill reveals rare perspicacity in the way in which he lets the family dominate while it does not swamp our interest in individuals." D. L. M.
+ Boston Transcript p7 My 4 '29 620w
Cleveland Open Shelf p111 Jl '29

"Either the author is glorifying one sagacious child of his acquaintance or he knows no children at all, for Hughie and his little companions talk as no children ever did outside of books."
— N Y Times p24 Mr 24 '29 400w

"It is obviously a careful job, written with meticulous attention to detail of all sorts; it has a largeness of conception and a pleasing variety of character, incident, and mood. Yet we do not remember the book with pleasure after we have finished with it. The reason for our tepidity is the conventionality of the basic idea. We are frankly sick of these nicey-nice youths who shrink from money-making but just love producing third-rate landscapes."
— + Sat R of Lit 5:1100 Je 8 '29 230w
Wis Lib Bul 25:160 My '29

NEVILLE, JAMES M. Mud and glory. 304p $2 Duffield
29-18947

A college foot-ball story, in which Terry Malone and Red Thomas, rivals for glory on the same team, were also rivals in the matter of winning Margot Blair. In the most important game of the season Terry, with his arm broken and further thwarted by the unfair play of Thomas, lost the game for his team—but he won Margot.

"'Mud and Glory' aspires to be but a lively football yarn, with sentimental trimmings, and as such it will decidedly do."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 N 3 '29 150w
Boston Transcript p5 Ja 4 '30 130w
N Y Times p18 S 29 '29 180w

"Football games and scrimmages and the mental attitudes of the players have been well handled, but the publishers apparently ignored the matter of editing and proof-reading. Mistakes in the author's manuscript have been perpetuated with the printer's typographical errors thrown in for good measure. Quotation marks have been recklessly squandered and experiments conducted in the matter of tense sequence."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:608 D 28 '29 120w

NEVINS, ALLAN, comp. American press opinion, Washington to Coolidge; a documentary record of editorial leadership and criticism, 1785-1927. 598p il $5 Heath
973 Public opinion. Press—United States. United States—History—Sources 28-24815

Allan Nevins has collected nearly four hundred specimens of the best editorials written since the pamphleteering of Washington's time. These include a galaxy of famous names and preserve an informal record of public opinion on successive incidents and crises in American history down to the present.

"No more vitally interesting reading has come to my notice. There are not ten dull pages in the entire book." P: H. Odegard
+ Am Pol Sci R 23:774 Ag '29 400w

"As a source book for students of both American opinion and American journalism, it should prove of enduring value."
+ Bookm 69:xxiv Mr '29 130w

"Let it be said at once that he has done his work admirably. No one better could have been set at the task and I do not believe a better collection could have been made." J. T. Adams
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ja 6 '29 600w

"Taken as a whole, these summaries constitute an excellent and comprehensive piece of work on the subject of editorial writing and the history of American journalism. The book itself should be very useful to newspaper writers and editors who desire quotable material, bringing together as it does a wide range of opinions under one cover. It should be useful to the historian who has not the time to pore over the musty files of old newspapers." R. M. Walsh
+ Boston Transcript p2 D 15 '28 2000w

"In mechanical features, the volume is an admirable piece of editing. The preface, with a clear-cut statement of the significance of good journalism to the true interpretation of history; the well-arranged list of editorials, with bracketed titles supplied where such did not occur in the original; and the judicious division of the long period into four parts, all help make the volume enjoyable and understandable reading. The editor has made the best compromise between flinging the editorials at the reader without introduction and introducing them so fully as to make their perusal unnecessary, by heading each section with a most curiosity-provoking short essay upon the 'American Press and Public Opinion' for the period to follow." Courtney Hall

+ Hist Outlook 21:37 Ja '30 1000w

"The range of editorials quoted is remarkable, not only in its extensive subject matter, but also in the widespread geography of origin. . . Mr. Nevins has performed a conspicuous accomplishment in his admirable annotations and introductions. Taken with the great body of the book, they comprise a contribution to scholarship of the utmost usefulness." Duane Squires

+ Nation 128:745 Je 19 '29 290w

"Here are American ideas on most things under the historical sun, from law, corruption, and slander, to woman suffrage, prize fights, and the righteousness which was Theodore Roosevelt. The extracts are brief, well ordered, and served with plenty of salt, pepper, and vinegar." C: A. Beard

+ New Repub 57:354 F 13 '29 200w

Reviewed by Herbert Solow

N Y Evening Post p9m Ja 12 '29 250w

"The editorials given in this volume reveal the drift of such opinion with almost the consecutiveness of a well-woven narrative and carry far more conviction to the reader. Whatever one may think of the power of the editorial now or in the past in shaping public judgment, Professor Nevins leaves no doubt that it has been an accurate interpreter of the American mind." A. S. Will

+ N Y Times p5 D 30 '28 650w

St Louis 27:261 S '29

"Here is a collection of editorials and editorial extracts filling nearly 600 large pages, and, while the material lacks organic continuity and does not quite attain the selective emphasis of historical writing, much of it has intrinsic interest as well as helping to provide that background of thought and sentiment which makes history real."

+ — Springf'd Republican p10 N 24 '28 720w

NEVINSON, HENRY WOODD. Last changes, last chances. 361p $5 Harcourt [15s Nisbet]

B or 92 European war, 1914-1918 29-26268

This third volume of Mr Nevinson's autobiography deals with his experiences in the War and in the revolution in Ireland, as press representative at the Washington conference, in Germany during the occupation of the Ruhr and in Palestine in 1926, where the narrative ends.

---

Booklist 25:284 Ap '29

"Nevinson's Last Changes Last Chances ranks with the two earlier volumes in charm and matter. . . He writes with a measured rhythm which carries the delighted reader from page to page until in surprise he finds that so thick a book has been so quickly read." M. D. Blankenhorn

+ Bookm 69:320 My '29 230w

"The highest praise that could be bestowed upon this volume, that it equals its predecessors in interest, in fascination and in charm, must be given to it." O. G. Villard

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Mr 3 '29 1700w

Reviewed by Frances Bartlett

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 2 '29 1500w

"If we were called to provide a book which would show England as its true lovers would wish it to be, we should offer this book, for of all that band of happy warriors there is none with a finer spirit than H. W. Nevinson, or with a greater mastery of the many weapons in the writer's armory." E: Shillito

+ Christian Century 46:746 Je 5 '29 1000w

"For American readers there is more of living interest in this third volume than in either of its predecessors, rich and various as those are. The last changes and chances here described come within the recent memory of us all, and the book includes a gallery of brilliant word portraits. Mr. Nevinson is a writer of very fine quality. He is incapable of a dull page; there is not a paragraph in the whole narrative that is below his own high level." S. K. Ratcliffe

+ Nation 128:350 Mr 20 '29 780w

"Nevinson never scruples—and we think he is justified—to reopen the old sore wounds of war-time, and his book is a record of human stupidity, ill-will, and aggression only fitfully shot through with glimpses of loyalty, tenderness, and hope. There are many pages where one's only consolation seems to lie in the fact of the ceaseless rebellion of such fine spirits and true hearts as Nevinson himself."

+ Nation and Ath 44:449 D 22 '28 650w

"In general the volume covers so much ground that there is no time for detailed treatment of important events. Mr. Nevinson is here the observer, not the historian, and his necessary method is rapid and impressionistic. What serves to integrate his volume, however, and give it a steadily increasing impact, is the consistent intelligence of his judgment and the rightness of his feelings upon the many and varied subjects which passed under his view." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 58:336 My 8 '29 1100w

New Statesman 32:332 D 15 '28 320w

"If Mr. Nevinson's last chance is not a mischance, it is because he offers, not postponed journalism, but literature. Here is autobiography, vivid and genuine; that is, life expressed in words by him who lived it." P. W. Wilson

+ N Y Times p1 F 17 '29 2050w

St Louis 27:206 Je '29

"This third volume must be considered with the other two, for the whole story has unity. But, taken by itself, it would be sufficiently astonishing. It contains a series of pictures—men, women and occasions—rare in their richness and variety: few have seen half so much as the author, and few indeed have half the power to say what they see." Gerald Gould

+ Sat R 146:685 N 24 '28 1200w

"The volume is of even greater interest than the preceding ones. Most of the issues dealt with are alive today, and doubtless will remain alive. One cannot dodge their importance, and one of Mr. Nevinson's great virtues is that one cannot dodge his remarks." F. V. Morley

+ Sat R of Lit 5:950 Ap 27 '29 900w

"Mr. Nevinson's revelation of character, descriptive powers applied to subjects of broad historical interest—the book deals mainly with his experiences as a newspaper correspondent during the War—and excellence of writing, are sustained to the end. Though a war correspondent during most of his long life, it might be said finally of him that few journalists have worked more consistently for peace."

+ Spec 141:999 D 29 '28 100w

NEVINSON, HENRY WOODD, comp. Voice of [2] freedom; an anthology of liberty; with an introd. by the author. 304p $2 Dutton

820.8 Liberty

An anthology of English prose and verse in praise of man's freedom, individual, political, religious and social. The authors quoted range from King Ethelbert to Rupert Brooke and Harold Laski.

---

"Mr. Nevinson, the latest, is also one of the best of the anthologists. It was a happy idea to bind together a selection of great passages in English prose and verse in praise of freedom."

+ Sat R 148:585 N 16 '29 650w

NEVINSON, H: W.—Continued

"No one is better qualified to deal with the question of freedom than Mr. Nevinson, who has been a lifelong fighter for it upon every modern field. In an excellent anthology he has assembled some of the best passages in English prose and verse written in praise of freedom. In his introduction, Mr. Nevinson, with his marvellous faculty for condensation and for terse English, surveys the nature, problems, and history of freedom."

+ Spec 143:632 N 2 '29 200w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 2 '30 800w

NEWBOLT, SIR HENRY JOHN. Naval operations. (Official hist. of the Great war) v 4 412p $6 (16s); with maps $7.50; also separate maps $2 (5s) Longmans

940.45 European war, 1914-1918—Naval operations

"The fourth volume of 'Naval Operations' carries the story from June, 1916, to April, 1917—a transitional period since Germany's fleet was changing to a coast-defense basis intended to cover U-boat operations and this in turn required a change in British naval strategy. The record of the period reflects on the interference of 'high politics' in naval administration."—R of Rs

---

"Perhaps the weakest characteristic of this official history is the evident effort on the part of its authors to refrain from all criticism of British leaders, a point which has repeatedly been brought out in the several reviews of the volumes of this work. . . On the other hand the volumes possess one great and valuable attribute, namely, that they are the storehouse of historical details and firsthand experiences, which with each fleeting year would have become more difficult to secure." E: Breck

+ — Am Hist R 34:834 Jl '29 1250w

"A book of absorbing interest and of primary importance." G: Aston

+ Eng Hist R 44:322 Ap '29 1350w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw

R of Rs 79:22 Ap '29 130w

"The volume is a worthy successor to the admirable work of Corbett. The first chapter of Sir Henry Newbolt's volume, entitled, 'After Jutland,' is really the conclusion of Corbett's work, summing up the effect of that action on strategy and tactics. This is a cool but crushing condemnation of those who still discuss the question whether Jutland was a British victory or not."

+ Sat R 147:78 Ja 19 '29 1150w

"Sir Henry never overburdens his writing with epithets, yet he never fails to emphasize what is critical. The right word is always at his disposal, but there are not too many words. And with all this economy of language he has produced a narrative which is clear, intensely readable, and often exciting."

+ Spec 141:790 N 24 '28 900w

"The book is admirably clear. The confused battles in the Straits of Dover are pieced together with skill, so that a picture is easily formed of the intense difficulties with which the officers in that wild night-fighting had to contend. Of criticism Sir Henry is very sparing, if, indeed, it can be said that he is critical; for the story tells its own tale, and it is left for the reader to draw from it the lessons it conveys. No reader will put it down without a feeling of deep admiration for the personnel who in conditions of intense hardship and danger wrestled with the submarine."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p947 D 6 '28 2500w

NEWMAN, EDWARD MANUEL. Seeing Germany. (Newman traveltalks) 406p il $5 (21s) Funk

914.3 Germany—Description and travel

29-21114

A heavily-illustrated travel talk on Germany. The author begins with a description of Munich and the Bavarian Alps, the Black Forest, Baden-Baden and Oberammergau. He then takes up, successively, Eisenach, Ratisbon, and Rothenburg, Bayreuth, home of Wagner, and Weimar, of Goethe and Schiller. Dresden, Heidelberg, and, finally, Berlin are described from historical and legendary points of view, together with modern travel hints.

---

"He takes the reader by the hand and gives him the whole works—cities, mountains, rivers, forests, palaces and museums. He lingers just long enough in each place to communicate the essentials, then passes on to the next. Having been a frequent visitor to Germany before the war, he is in a position to make the requisite comparisons. The reproduced photographs number more than 300 and they are excellent."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 N 17 '29 200w

"The volume throughout is replete with anecdotes of a personal nature, incidents in the lives of famous people, and legends and bits of historic data that make interesting reading. Highly informing from first to last is this 'Seeing Germany,' as have been all Mr. Newman's earlier books of travel." J. H. W.

+ Boston Transcript p2 N 6 '29 380w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw

R of Rs 80:26 N '29 120w

"It is not a particularly good travel book, but it contains some shrewd observations on Germany of to-day, which Mr. Newman obviously knows well. History is reduced to a minimum, and on the rare occasions when Mr. Newman indulges in historical talk he is not always accurate. This may be the kind of fare which suits the public for whom the book is intended, but one feels, with the author's experience as a traveller, that his readers deserved something less hurried and scrappy, and that Mr. Newman could have given them a much better book if he had liked."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p903 N 7 '29 270w

NEWMAN, SIR GEORGE. Citizenship and the survival of civilization. (Yale lectures on the responsibilities of citizenship) 254p $2.50 Yale univ. press [11s 6d Oxford]

323.6 Citizenship

28-27886

Sir George Newman brings to these lectures a high ideal of citizenship, a high standard of the responsibilities of the citizen, a world outlook and a humanitarian point of view.

---

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 2 '29 300w

"Sir George Newman is at once an expert and a humanist, able to survey history with the trained insight of the best-equipped official and the cultivated mind of a man of wide reading and catholic taste. . . We cannot imagine any exposition more stimulating in its sweep or more persuasive in its detail."

+ Nation and Ath 45:278 My 25 '29 450w

"Sir George Newman displays an astonishing width of reading and wealth of apt illustration and quotation from authors, ancient and modern, in prose and in verse; and an equally remarkable power of summarizing the history of social philosophy and legislation."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p266 Ap 4 '29 480w

NEWTON, THOMAS WODEHOUSE LEGH, 2d baron. Life of the Marquess of Lansdowne. 550p il $8.50 (25s) Macmillan

B or 92 Lansdowne, Henry Charles Keith Petty-Fitzmaurice, 5th marquis

The biography of Lord Lansdowne, English statesman, who began his public career at the age of twenty-four as a member of one of Gladstone's governments. "In succession he became Junior Lord of the Treasury, Under-Secretary of State for War and Under-Secretary of State for India. At the age of thirty-eight he became Governor-General of Canada. After five years there he was sent to India as Viceroy for another five years. Almost immediately upon his return to England he became Secretary of State for War under Lord Salisbury. He served in that capacity for five years and then for another five years as Secretary of State for Foreign Affairs. For a further fourteen years he was the unchallenged leader of the Conservative majority in the House of Lords." (New Statesman)

"The book is all the better for the writer's definite point of view, and is a contribution of great importance to the history of the Conservative Party. The personal portrait which Lord Newton draws—with some help from Lord Ernest Hamilton—is that of a good son, an accomplished man of affairs, and, in all the relations of private life, a great gentleman." Haslam Mills

+ Nation and Ath 46:255 N 16 '29 1000w

"Lord Newton was ill-advised, we think, to attempt to defend the most disastrous mistake [the Lansdowne letter] which his somewhat mediocre hero ever made in the course of a very long and otherwise fairly blameless life."

New Statesman 34:159 N 9 '29 1100w

Reviewed by P. W. Wilson

N Y Times p17 D 29 '29 1800w

"The life of a man in high office who disliked publicity, and never in his fifty-odd years of public service gave a press interview, should be worth reading on that count alone. But Lord Newton's Lord Lansdowne has other claims to consideration. It is solid without being dull, and will add something to your knowledge of British foreign policy in the past half century." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 153:548 D 4 '29 80w

R of Rs 81:18 Ja '30 200w

"Lord Newton has been personally concerned, both as spectator and participant, in the events here described; and the experience of forty-five years of public life in both Houses of Parliament has given to his judgment a maturity and a tolerance too often missing in those who write political memoirs." A. A. B.

+ Sat R 148:471 O 26 '29 1100w

"The book is much more than a document. It gives us real insight into the personality of a statesman who, after fifty years of public life, remained little known to the general public."

+ Spec 143:598 O 26 '29 1050w

"If Lord Newton has been prevented from writing an intimate book, he has certainly written an interesting book. No one who takes an interest in the English politics of 1870-1920 can fail to enjoy it. . . The book is not merely interesting, it is readable; and it becomes more so as it proceeds."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p853 O 31 '29 3550w

NEXO, MARTIN ANDERSEN. Days in the sun; auth. tr. from the Danish by Jacob Wittmer Hartmann. 297p $3 Coward-McCann

914.68 Andalusia—Description and travel

29-6773

Travel sketches and interpretations of the people of Spain, especially of Andalusia, by the celebrated Danish novelist, author of "Pelle the conqueror."

Booklist 25:317 My '29

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice

Bookm 69:xvii My '29 300w

"It is in the glimpses of the life of the country that Mr. Nexo's book excels. Art and architecture are not for him; he prefers to go about among the common people and find out what they are thinking." Herschel Brickell

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Mr 31 '29 430w

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 3 '29 700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p68 My '29

"The book is in no sense a guide to places, people, or understanding of the country. It is full of dubious generalities, and many of its facts have, by the passage of time, become fiction. He who reads it will learn a little about Andalusia and much about Martin Andersen Nexö." Mildred Adams

— Nation 128:720 Je 12 '29 420w

+ New Repub 59:215 Jl 10 '29 200w

"An extraordinarily interesting travel book. The author of 'Pelle the Conqueror' writes of Spain not as a tourist, nor yet as a theorist, but as a northerner with an enormous capacity for living come suddenly upon a new world. Those familiar with the work of Nexo will find in this book the qualities which have always distinguished his work—gusto, shrewd observation, fearlessness, dramatic intensity, understanding and sympathy. 'Days in the Sun' is just about all a first-rate travel book should be." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 16 '29 110w

"An impression of Spain seen through the eyes of a European—a sensitive and critical cosmopolitan personality. . . Intimate dialogue runs through the whole book. The traveler has gotten next to something real about the country, and in this sense Nexo's volume is more than a traveler's guide or pocket companion." W: Spratling

+ N Y Times p11 Mr 24 '29 550w

"His descriptions of the Andalusian basking in his sunlit country are very beautiful because they do not exaggerate. When he comes to the gypsies, however, he adopts the point of view of the respectable citizen who will have none of those loafers and parasites on society. He looks on them as unclean and so spares no details to point out their scabs and sores. I feel as if he were manfully struggling to destroy the romantic sense that as a good Northerner he must feel in his breast when he visits the South." Walter Starkie

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:128 S 14 '29 950w

NICHOLAS II, emperor of Russia. Letters of the tsar to the tsaritsa, 1914-1917; tr. by A. L. Hynes from the official ed. of the Romanov correspondence and now pub. for the first time in England; ed. with notes and an index, by C. E. Vulliamy; with an introd. by C. T. Hagberg Wright. 324p $5 Dodd [15s Lane]

B or 92 Alexandra, empress consort of Nicholas II, emperor of Russia. European war, 1914-1918—Russia [29-26484]

The tsaritsa's side of the correspondence was published in 1923 (Book Review Digest, 1924). The tsar's letters, written from 1914 to 1917 during his absences with the army or at General Headquarters, are most intimate in character and filled with affectionate solicitude for his family. His allusions to military matters are unimportant.

Booklist 25:388 Jl '29

"The whole volume is a ridiculous and infinitely tragic tombstone. The tragedy of the Tsar and his family is nothing compared with the tragedy of a people whose luck it was to be ruled by a sentimental, stupid, weak and colossally incapable tin soldier. These pages are almost unbearable. But they are a document of considerable importance." Robert Littell

Bookm 69:435 Je '29 650w

Reviewed by W: MacDonald

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Je 30 '29 750w

"It is long since such a boresome and at the same time significant book has been offered the public." N. H. Dole

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 13 '29 1300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p108 Jl '29

"The psychological and historical story revealed by these letters is now well known. Here, again, one is amazed at the strange vagaries of the human spirit. Nicky, 'always your old devoted hubby,' is simply the best type of good middleclass husband and father, stupid, fussy, devoted, hopelessly uncomfortable unless he is within the four walls of his family, in carpet slippers, sitting before the fire with the children playing on the floor and the wife knitting beside him. And this same man is Tsar of Russia, an autocrat with the traditions of autocracy, controlling the policy, deliberately taking it into his own feeble hands, in the middle of the great war! It is not surprising that he and his neurotic wife brought the Romanov dynasty to an ignominious end." Leonard Woolf

NICHOLAS II, emperor of Russia—Continued

Nation and Ath 44:842 Mr 16 '29 420w

"These letters of the Tsar, with their constant flow of family affection, are very touching, very moving, but somehow they do not rise to the tragic. For tragedy, not only emotions but noble minds are necessary. However tender the Tsar's letters to his wife, they seem to be written by some one with the mentality of a child." H: J. Forman

N Y Times p2 Je 16 '29 950w

"Letter follows letter, daily and sometimes oftener, through these years in which Europe was being slaughtered and Imperial Russia rushing down to ruin, and filled with so little but kisses and embraces and notes about the weather, that they might almost have been written by a man who neither could see nor hear nor understand what was going on about him—or by a child."

Sat R of Lit 5:1113 Je 15 '29 560w

Spec 142:340 Mr 2 '29 50w

"The Tsar's share in the correspondence does not add very much to our knowledge either of the workings of the autocracy, or even of the psychology of the writer. They show, once again, that his will was, in personal matters, largely subordinated to the Empress's: that his hopes, like hers, were bound up with the health of the unfortunate Tsarevich: that he was of necessity remote from public opinion in Russia and easily misled by equally ill-informed advisers. But there is little that throws light on events in Russia. [The correspondence] helps us to round off the picture of this gentle, patient, unhappy man whom fate had raised to a position of power beyond the strength of any modern ruler."

Times [London] Lit Sup p151 F 28 '29 880w

NICHOLS, ROBERT MALISE BOWYER, and BROWNE, MAURICE. Wings over Europe; a dramatic extravaganza on a pressing theme. 172p $2 Covici

822 29-26261

" 'Wings over Europe,' so beautifully produced by the Theater Guild and so slighted by the general public, is now available in print, and the text confirms the impression of the theater; that here is an example of 'intellectual drama' simple enough to be understood by anybody, well enough put together to create suspense and other necessary theatrical values, and with a theme of universal importance. . . There is no sex in 'Wings Over Europe,' no women at all in the cast, nothing but a study of the British Cabinet confronted with possession of a secret which can remake or destroy the world."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

---

Booklist 25:277 Ap '29

"The play is profound in its implications rather than its actual dialogue, which is sometimes a bit hifalutin, but its appeal is certainly pretty steadily mental." W. P. Eaton

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Mr 24 '29 250w

Cleveland Open Shelf p138 N '29

"The two poets and men of culture and interests who wrote 'Wings over Europe' have given it a lift and often a kind of eager sonority that charms the tired sense, and that turns our ear, worn down with the current paucities in sound and theme, into a special pleader for the play as a whole. . . The quality extends throughout the texture of the play. The conception and the motives have the glow of creative thinking, and exhibit that effect of an immersion in music, of surrounding idea and harmony, with which the poetic mind conceives and conveys its thought." Stark Young

+ New Repub 57:163 D 26 '28 1450w

"Wings Over Europe, finely written by Robert Nichols and Maurice Browne, must give an unexpected pleasure for its quiet humor."

+ Theatre Arts Mo 13:387 My '29 60w

NICHOLS, ROSE STANDISH. Italian pleasure gardens. 309p il $10 Dodd

710 Gardens. Italy—Description and travel 28-31079

"Rose Standish Nichols uses, to a considerable extent, the historical method in the development of her theme. She begins with the peri-styles, the villas and the gardens of the Romans, and follows the varying forms and fortunes of the garden as it was kept alive in monasteries and castles through the Dark and the Middle Ages, and then began to flourish again in town and country with the Renaissance. . . The reader sees these alluring Italian pleasure gardens as an expression of tendencies and influences upon national character. The final chapter deals with what Miss Nichols calls 'The Twentieth Century Renaissance' in gardening throughout the Italian peninsula."—N Y Times

---

"There is so much to see that one is tempted to forget the text, yet the author's clear exposition of the evolution of gardens and her detailed description of those she has visited are of high value."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ap 21 '29 150w

N Y Times p7 Mr 3 '29 220w

"The descriptions are brief and non-technical, and designed for the tourist and the amateur rather than for the specialist. There is much interesting historical and biographical material, and many beautiful photographs. A valuable feature of the book is a Garden Itinerary, giving the exact location of most of the important Italian gardens with directions for obtaining permission to visit the private ones."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:743 Mr 2 '29 100w

"Perhaps maps as well as illustrations would be too much to ask, but without them and some geographical re-arrangement of the text, we feel that Miss Nichols comes a little short of having produced a really first-rate book."

— + Spec 143:99 Jl 20 '29 200w

NICHOLSON, MEREDITH. Old familiar faces. 189p $2.50 Bobbs

814 29-22353

"Here is an obituary of the old Hoosier culture, which was the quintessence of the culture of nineteenth-century America. . . Mr. Nicholson paints a picture of Indiana, particularly of Indianapolis, some forty years ago, which may make a good many Hoosier young people wonder if the blessings of modernism are worth what they cost." (Sat R of Lit) Contents: One's grandfather; The oldest case on the calendar; Are we a happy people? Without benefit of college; An American citizen; Stay in your own home town; Should Nellie stay at home? Americans all.

---

"Every essay of the eight is well worth reading, even reading aloud. They are written in the easy pleasant style of a master craftsman who has never lost his public since 'The House of a Thousand Candles' met such an enthusiastic reception in 1905."

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 13 '29 400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p156 D '29

"I like the way Mr. Nicholson remains loyal to his Hoosier environment, extolling without sentimentality the virtues of small-town life and the achievements of the ordinary unrecorded American. . . It is good to read an essayist who does not seem to think the sum total of life is literature, one who attempts to understand America and the American people as realities rather than to psychoanalyze them as cases." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p10m O 19 '29 130w

"The delight of all these essays is their style —a lucid, flowing prose, leisurely, urbane, and mellow. Urbanity and mellowness are qualities not greatly prized, in this enlightened day; they belong to the age of the horse and buggy. Yet the historian of the future may feel that the age of the deferred-payment automobile was not in all respects the peak of civilization." Elmer Davis

+ Sat R of Lit 6:287 O 19 '29 750w

NICOLAUS CUSANUS, cardinal (Nicholas of Cusa). Vision of God; tr. by Emma Gurney Salter; with an introd. by Evelyn Underhill. 130p $2 Dutton [15s Dent]

248 Mysticism. Spiritual life [29-4654]

In response to a request by the Benedictines of Tegernsee for a book of study and contemplation, Nicholas of Cusa, a cardinal and mystic of the fifteenth century, wrote the Vision of God. Therein he set out to prove "that man's intellect cannot comprehend God, that his ultimate knowledge is to recognise his own ignorance: the conclusion, however, is not merely negative or agnostic, as he proceeds to show how faith, mystic vision, intuition, can unite with the Trinity."

---

"This is one of the most extraordinary books of devotion ever written. . . It has a fervor, a spirit of adoration, a humility and a hope that mark it as the product of a beautiful as well as profound soul. The translator has enriched the devotional literature in English speech by her careful version of Nicholas's exceptionally difficult Latin." W: L. Sullivan

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 D 16 '28 430w

Boston Transcript p9 O 6 '28 150w

Christian Century 46:992 Ag 7 '29 30w

Cleveland Open Shelf p36 Mr '29

"Nicholas of Cusa is an important writer and a philosopher of distinction, and it is eminently desirable that his thought be better known than it can be at present to one who reads only English. But it is desirable that the whole fabric, not some shreds, of his thought be exhibited. . . None the less, there is in this book, for the English reader who will read carefully and sympathetically, an introduction to a fifteenth-century philosopher, whose philosophy has by no means lost its interest and power." R: McKeon

+ — J Philos 26:712 D 19 '29 1200w

"Miss Evelyn Underhill contributes an interesting preface to this beautiful little book, pointing out that these 'are not the agreeable meditations of a leisured piety; but the support of a man weighted down with responsibility, whose varied and exacting duties were performed under the "gaze of God" of which he writes.' They will strike an answering chord in many minds."

+ Spec 141:491 O 13 '28 100w

"This translation of his treatise, modestly intended only for the prior and monks of the Benedictine Abbey of Tegernsee, will come as the revelation of a new luminary to readers interested in the literature of mysticism."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1015 D 20 '28 160w

NICOLL, ALLARDYCE. Readings from British drama; extracts from British and Irish plays. 446p $3.50 Crowell [10s 6d Harrap]

822.08 English drama—Selections, extracts, etc. 29-26337

A collection of extracts from British and Irish plays arranged by period.

---

Booklist 25:314 My '29

"The method is unsatisfactory in itself. Some of the extracts are simply dull, and they fail to suggest the quality of particular dramatists. One cannot learn the history of drama from extracts, any more than one can learn an opera from selections; and Professor Nicoll would have done better if he had followed Lamb and quoted passages for their intrinsic merit. Still, no anthology of the kind exists at present, and this book goes some way towards filling the gap."

— + New Statesman 32:452 Ja 12 '29 230w

"His book is valuable in that it contains selections from plays not heretofore to be found in students' texts; some of them could be found only in very specialized libraries." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p8m Ja 19 '29 120w

"What Mr. Nicoll has actually done is to give through these excerpts, chosen with the keenest discrimination—sometimes fine, sometimes poor, always characteristic, kept as closely as possible to the language of their day—a vivid and exciting history of dramatic form and dialogue, made more vivid by his introduction, notes and short biographies than any amount of dissertation could have made it." F: Morton

+ Theatre Arts Mo 13:629 Ag '29 600w

Wis Lib Bul 25:99 Mr '29

NICOTRA, TOBIA. Arturo Toscanini; tr. from the Italian by Irma Brandeis and H. D. Kahn. 236p il $3.50 Knopf

B or 92 Toscanini, Arturo 29-6240

With a few significant and vividly recounted exceptions, the outward events of the life of Toscanini are of less interest to the author than an appreciation and interpretation of the famous conductor's musicianship. On the more personal side, the book throws light on Toscanini's character and temperament.

---

Booklist 25:319 My '29

"The main value of this work lies in certain interesting concert programs which are quoted. The mighty Toscanini, with his astonishing talents and his celebrated eccentricities, deserves a study of a very different kind." P: Bowdoin

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 Ap 28 '29 480w

Boston Transcript p3 Mr 23 '29 500w

"If I were Mussolini I would make the author of this tiresome tome eat every single copy. Without benefit of castor oil, too. When you consider what a fascinating book might be made out of the achievements and personality of Toscanini, there is absolutely no excuse for such a compilation of press agent's tripe as this. . . Toscanini is too great a man to be slobbered over." L: Sherwin

— N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 6 '29 300w

N Y Times p22 Mr 17 '29 300w

"An Italian compatriot's thoughtful evaluation and appreciative analysis of the great conductor and his art, which, in translation, becomes the first book on Toscanini to appear in English. . . As a discussion not startlingly original, but penetrating and delicately and finely phrased, of the conductor's art, and particularly Toscanini's, this work is exceedingly successful." Grace Overmyer

+ N Y World p11m F 17 '29 750w

"Precision on the technical side, even if devoted only to one artist, is highly useful; but from a musician's point of view nothing here throws any light on the differentia of Toscanini's methods."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p759 O 3 '29 550w

NIEBUHR, HELMUT RICHARD. Social sources of denominationalism. 304p $2.50 Holt

280 Sects

A discussion of the social character of the Christian churches. Dr Niebuhr maintains that the caste-system of human society is a more powerful factor than theological differences in determining the character of the various denominations.

---

"That the determining factors in the rise of variant types of Christianity have been social and economic rather than theological, is a proposition whose importance exceeds its novelty. It is by no means as well understood yet as it needs to be, and as Dr. Niebuhr's book will cause it to be if it has the reading it deserves. . . Brethren, read this book. I will go so far as to say—whatever else you do or leave undone. . . read this book." W. E. Garrison

NIEBUHR, H. R:—Continued
+ Christian Century 46:1511 D 4 '29 1000w

"A splendidly clear, interesting study of denominationalism traced to its social roots, and as it has been influenced by economic, racial, sectional and nationalistic groups." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p14m N 23 '29 120w

"Dr. Niebuhr writes a chapter in church history that illuminates all its pages. The study of the relation of the color line to church division and of the way in which the social stratifications of the world enter into the churches is masterly. Other social differentiations, more subtle though none the less true, are skillfully traced." A. W. Taylor
+ World Tomorrow 13:40 Ja '30 950w

NIEBUHR, REINHOLD. Leaves from the notebook of a tamed cynic. 198p $2 Willett
250 Clergy 29-13462

As the youthful pastor of a small evangelical church in Detroit the author began to jot down in his notebook a vigorous and thoughtful commentary on his ministry and his people, on life and religious issues. The leaves from the notebook included here contain entries over a period of thirteen years, from 1915 to 1928.

---

"All of the comments are shrewd, incisive, humble and beautifully sincere—the witness of an active, able and intelligent mind to the curious experiences of the modern minister. Not properly to be classified as literature, these 'leaves' yet have great value as so many 'shots,' so to speak, at the Christian scene today." J: H. Holmes
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 Ag 11 '29 550w

"The simply, vividly written 'Notebook' itself stands out in creditable contrast with the obscure pedantic 'Publishers' Preface.' The author of the 'Notes' is not a confirmed cynic. He is only a sensitive soldier, wounded in the battle of life, his inner spiritual battle running parallel with the outer battles of the World War as he observed it and reflected upon its ethical and spiritual objectives." B. G.
+ Boston Transcript p4 Jl 24 '29 750w

"Some time ago I referred to Dr. Niebuhr as 'our American Dean Inge,' and I think I shall let that stand. Niebuhr is not 'gloomy,' though he is often pessimistic. This book, his latest, is frank, candid, and searching in its criticisms. I like to think of Dr. Niebuhr as 'a celestial surgeon' who possesses an almost uncanny faculty for laying bare the quivering weaknesses and wrongs of our modern life. Yet the surgeon in him is never happy in operations as such. Niebuhr has the tenderness of Grover Cleveland when in a public address to a group of doctors that occupant of the white house said, 'Tread gently, gentlemen, you deal with the temple of the Holy Spirit.'" E. D. Jones
+ Christian Century 46:990 Ag 7 '29 1200w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 80:14 Ag '29 50w
St Louis 27:303 N '29

"While it must be admitted that some of Mr Niebuhr's comments are immature or sentimental, the candor of his observations is usually backed by sensitiveness and insight. What he has to say will find a sympathetic response among most young ministers and critics of the church, both within and without."
+ Springf'd Republican p10 Jl 9 '29 700w

"If you are satisfied with the church as she is at present, you won't like this book at all. If you are too tired or too lazy to think, you won't like it, either. But if you do like it, you won't think Neibuhr especially cynical or especially tame. His cynicism is not sneering, and his tameness is not docility." C: S. Brown
+ Survey 63:106 O '29 350w

"The American book which it most resembles is Emerson's Journals, particularly the one-volume selection edited by Bliss Perry. There is the same sort of keen observation, significant generalization and understanding of human nature and motive. However, the notes do not have the rarefied, abstract quality of most of Emerson's aphorisms, nor is Niebuhr ever seized by the bland optimisms which frequently overtook Mr. Emerson and substituted lyrical rapture for critical thinking. The style sparkles. It is not the epigrammatic Roman candle sparkling which Chesterton industriously fires off, but, to use an appropriate Detroit figure of speech, they are sparks which go off in a cylinder and create driving power. He crowds meaning into all the nooks and corners of his sentences." H. E. Luccock
+ World Tomorrow 12:344 Ag '29 1100w

NIEZYCHOWSKI, ALFRED VON. Cruise of the Kronprinz Wilhelm; foreword by Walter McLean; introd. by Count Luckner. 304p il $2.50 Doubleday, Doran
940.45 European war, 1914-1918—Naval operations. Kronprinz Wilhelm (warship) 29-11454

The Kronprinz Wilhelm, caught on this side of the Atlantic at the outbreak of war, turned raider. This is the illustrated story, written by one of her officers, of the ships captured and sunk by the Kronprinz Wilhelm "without loss of life to passengers or crew."

---

Boston Transcript p5 Je 22 '29 820w
Cleveland Open Shelf p140 N '29

"Although it is much too literally translated from the German and inadequately edited, the book none the less has its place in the growing literature of the brilliant naval exploits of the Germans. To the student of strategy and those who believe that trade routes may be safeguarded by building cruisers in groups of fifteen, this volume is respectfully commended."
+ — Nation 130:22 Ja 1 '30 180w

"The author's attempt to invest the narrative of a commerce-destroyer's career with epic quality is apt to make it appear slightly ridiculous. This is a pity, for Count von Niezychowski can tell a plain tale well, when he will be content to do so, and he does succeed in giving a very pleasant picture of his commander and shipmates, and of life on board what the British sailor would call 'a happy ship.'"
— + Nation and Ath 46:354 D 7 '29 450w

"Aside from the fact that its plot is not new, it is a live, jolly and entertaining record of personal adventure stern-chasing Allied commerce which practically any one could read with pleasure." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p11m My 11 '29 110w

"He has written a book that deserves a place among the famous tales of war, that is likely to live because of its inherent human interest and the skill with which it is told. It is the more worthy of fame because the commander of the Kronprinz Wilhelm played the war game according to the recognized rules. It was legitimate warfare and he came out of it with a clean chivalrous record."
+ N Y Times p18 My 26 '29 500w
Times [London] Lit Sup p1006 N 28 '29 200w

NILES, ALFRED SALEM, and NEWELL, JOSEPH SHIPLEY. Airplane structures. 413p $5 Wiley
629.18 Airplanes 29-9194

"Applies the fundamental principles of structural theory to practical airplane design; and includes considerable data on allowable stresses in various materials, and on allowable loads on standardized airplane parts. Intended for students well grounded in the mechanics of materials and in calculus. Problems at the chapter endings. Authors are professors in Leland Stanford, Jr., University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology respectively." —N Y New Tech Bks

Booklist 26:58 N '29
N Y New Tech Bks 14:35 Jl '29
Pratt p20 autumn '29
St Louis 27:198 Je '29

NOBLE, EDMUND. Our slumbering world; a plea for the awakened mind. 301p $2.50 Holt

901 Progress. Civilization 28-29641

An effort to stir mankind to an awakened consciousness of what's wrong with the world—with society, the individual, and governments.

"The chapter on 'The Weakness of Normalcy' is stimulating; otherwise, Mr. Noble says little that is new. But his style is pleasing, and lucid enough to be dear to average readers."
Bookm 69:xxii Mr '29 220w

"The sensitive and tolerant liberalism which makes the more philosophic chapters of Mr. Noble's book mildly provocative in a strident and intolerant world is not of strong enough fiber to cope with a reality that calls for peculiar toughness as well as sharpness of mind. The boosters and the Babbitts, with their raucous optimism, are tireless enough; but the tender-minded literati who view modern life with equally simple consternation and regret are, in their quiet way, fully as obnoxious." Evans Clark
— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 D 30 '28 500w
Boston Transcript p3 N 10 '28 800w

"Disappointment could not justly grow from the failure of a single volume to cure all the wrongs that it discloses; but it is difficult to escape the conclusion that the limitation here is other than that of space. The fertility of idea for metaphysical discovery hitherto associated with the author's name is certainly much less, if not almost lacking, in the face of social data here surveyed." T. V. Smith
— + New Repub 58:78 Mr 6 '29 900w

NOBLE, EDWARD. Pulse of darkness; a tale of eastern seas. 287p $2.50 Houghton [7s 6d Jarrolds]

29-12501

A story of mystery, romance and adventure on the sea. Harold Grey, a seasoned young officer, took command of the ship Kow-Loon, when the captain was mysteriously murdered. For over a year Grey was accounted a very successful captain. Then in Hong-Kong a mysterious Eurasian, Shadara Williams, was given command of the ship and Grey demoted to chief officer. The voyage became a fearsome thing when the captain went mad, but Grey was equal to the emergency.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 F 24 '29 100w

"It is not only an amazingly good tale of ships and sailors, it is a novel of mystery and crime."
+ Boston Transcript p3 F 20 '29 520w

"Into a story of a mad captain and two brothers, linked by a mystery of the past and now brought together upon a sailing-ship trading from Hong-Kong, he introduces at close quarters the famous Krakatoa eruption of 1883. This is a touch of real originality, and is handled with imagination, though more might have been made of it."
+ — New Statesman 32:506 Ja 26 '29 80w

"What little plot there is does not satisfy the usual canons of fiction. The rescued heroine is the vaguest of lay figures. The book depends for its interest wholly on Krakatoa."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p1013 D 20 '28 200w
Wis Lib Bul 25:103 Mr '29

NOCK, ALBERT JAY. On doing the right thing, and other essays. 249p $2.50 Harper

814 United States—Civilization 28-29378

A variety of essays, entertaining yet written with sound critical purpose, on literary, social and other matters, first published in Harper's Magazine, and The American Mercury. Contents: Artemus Ward; The decline of conversation; On making low people interesting; A cultural forecast; Towards a new quality-product; Anarchist's progress; On doing the right thing; A study in manners; Thoughts on revolution; To youngsters of easy means.

"If Mr. Nock is occasionally a bit dreary in his attitude toward America, he is quite the opposite in his mode of expression. His style is pleasantly witty, never self-conscious. You will not be dazzled, but you will certainly not be bored."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 F 10 '29 280w

"Mr. Nock is an American of the most distinguished type, with the simplicity and honesty that proceed from acute sensibilities. The book is not easy reading; one must be continually on his toes; the style is not light though underlaid with a dry quiet humor. But for one who is not afraid to face ultimate truths, the pages hold a glow of satisfaction. For ourselves, we have not in many months set tooth into such sound, salt and crunchy fodder!" C. T. C.
+ Boston Transcript p3 D 19 '28 400w
Cleveland Open Shelf p29 F '29

"Mr. Nock is a wise and penetrating critic, and his objectivity and good humor make him an extremely engaging critic. If at times he appears rather exasperatingly above the battle, one must remember that it is precisely this aloofness that gives value to his work." Suzanne La Follette
+ Nation 128:378 Mr 27 '29 1000w

"There is more meat, more salty observation, more reasonable conviction convincingly set forth in Mr. Nock's 'On Doing the Right Thing and Other Essays.' He knows how to observe the American scene with a shrewd and unsentimentalized vision, and, in most cases, his convictions as to what is lacking in that scene are set forth in a persuading manner." Herbert Gorman
+ N Y Times p2 Ag 11 '29 700w
St Louis 27:268 S '29

"Mr. Nock does not seem at all a good example of a free intelligence, seeing things as they really are, unchanneled by prejudice, looking down on the messy American scene in the calm light of reason and culture. He seems to be as prejudiced as the rest of us, rather petulant and dogmatic, not always well informed." Arthur Colton
— Sat R of Lit 6:149 S 21 '29 2300w
Wis Lib Bul 25:99 Mr '29

NOCK, ALBERT JAY, and WILSON, C. R. Francis Rabelais; the man and his work. 359p il $5 Harper

B or 92 Rabelais, François

Rabelais as peasant, priest, and author of Pantagruel and Gargantua, the sources of and contributions to the products of his genius, constitute this biographical study. The relationship of the man and his work to the modern mind is especially emphasized.

"The greatest joy that the professional reviewer of books can experience is to come upon a volume that he can recommend with all the sincerity, enthusiasm and breath that are in him. For such a joy I am profoundly indebted to Albert Jay Nock and C. R. Wilson. . . It is the book, the one book, so far as I know, for any reader who requires help toward a clear, clean, unobstructed view of the temper of one of the world's greatest writers." B. R. Redman

NOCK, A. J., and WILSON, C. R.—Continued

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 D 22 '29 1200w

"The erudite data, while far from complete, have been checked with a fair degree of exactitude. The volume in a manner discursively presents the material to be found in M. Jean Plattard's tract on 'L'Etat present des etudes rabelaisiennes.' With some of the latest light thrown on Rabelais the man—such as is contained in M. Plattard's 'Vie,' for example—that authors do not appear to be familiar. . . In short, one finds just what he may expect when he sees the name spelled 'Francis' instead of 'Francois.' " S: Putnam

— N Y Evening Post p11m N 2 '29 800w

"Mr. Nock's portrayal of Rabalais's mind and artistry is a distinguished achievement. The writing has a simplicity possible only to the craftsman of superior knowledge. And the writer has the literary skill to give contagious truthfulness to his enthusiasm. We are made to believe that his capacity to appraise and appreciate are equal to the height of his theme. . . It is a stirring experience for a reader to follow scholarly intelligence, working in worthy and unusual material. Furthermore, we believe that Mr. Nock's enlightened commentary on Rabelais and his lucid exposition of literary art and the essential nature of the literary artist give the volume a notable place in the critical literature of our day." J: S. Phillips

+ N Y Times p9 N 10 '29 2250w

"Because of omissions which are apparently quite intentional, this biography of Rabelais will probably appeal far less to lovers of historical recreations than to serious students of literature already deeply imbued with the enthusiasm for Rabelais which has so evidently motivated the authors. As pure criticism, this competent and careful study must command serious consideration and will probably take high rank among appreciations of the genius of Rabelais. Moreover, this book has the unmistakable charm of a labor of love." Mary Shirley

+ Outlook 153:428 N 13 '29 650w

NOL'DE, BORIS EMMANUILOVICH, baron. Russia in the economic war. (Carnegie endowment for int. peace. Division of economics and hist. Economic and social hist. of the World war. Russian ser.) 232p $2.50 Yale univ. press

330.947 European war, 1914-1918—Economic aspects. European war, 1914-1918—Blockades. Russia—Economic conditions. Russia—Commerce 29-3422

A former member of the Permanent court of arbitration at the Hague, who was also professor of international law and under-secretary of state for foreign affairs, has prepared out of knowledge acquired thru personal experience this volume in the Russian division of a series on the economic and social history of the world war.

---

"The author brings to his task an authoritative knowledge of international law and an intimate acquaintance with Russia's foreign affairs. Mr. Nolde's clear and concise study should prove of interest to the student of international law and of international trade. Its value is increased by the documents contained in the appendix." V. A. M.

+ Am Pol Sci R 23:509 My '29 230w

Reviewed by W: MacDonald

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Ag 4 '29 200w

"The volume is a notable achievement and forms an important addition to the growing list in the series."

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 9 '29 100w

"Baron Nolde's volume on the economic war reads remarkably well, and is from that point of view the best of the series." Simon Kuznets

+ Pol Sci Q 44:270 Je '29 560w

NORDEN, HERMANN. Under Persian skies; a record of travel by the old caravan routes of western Persia. 255p il $5 Macrae Smith co. [16s Witherby]

915.5 Persia—Description and travel [29-8980]

From his journey thru western Persia, from Beirut to Basrah and northward to the Caspian sea, Mr Norden brought back an interesting account of the country traversed and an excellent collection of photographs.

---

Cleveland Open Shelf p109 Jl '29

"Mr. Norden observes acutely; with a true American zest he makes inquiries of everyone; his descriptions are here and there poetical, and he is transparently sincere. In spite, however, of all this the result he achieves is merely information."

— + Nation and Ath 44:272 N 17 '28 180w

New Statesman 32:supxii D 1 '28 150w

"The unvarnished log of a solid American traveller, full of facts, chary of generalizations. It is not literature, but good travel-talk, with a minimum of speculation, a maximum of action, pictures, prices, recommendations, warnings." F. Y. B.

+ Spec 141:sup781 N 24 '28 50w

"This is a poor book, below even the average of globe-trotters' effusions. . . The book is full of mistakes, ranging from historical and geographical errors to an easily avoidable mangling of names and slips due to mere carelessness."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p943 N 29 '28 300w

NORDHOFF, CHARLES BERNARD, and HALL, JAMES NORMAN. Falcons of France; a tale of youth and the air. 332p il $2.50 Little

29-18553

Two of the members of the Lafayette flying corps embody their flying experiences of the War in a novel. Charlie Seldon, a young American, goes to France and receives his training in an aviation school before being sent to the front. As a member of the Escadrille Lafayette, he goes into the thick of the action in the air. Scouting expeditions and battles at great odds in the air, the capture of German planes, Charlie's own capture by the enemy, and final escape from a German prison camp are high points in the narrative.

---

Booklist 26:75 N '29

"There is a quality in the writing which is as rare as it is remarkable. It is akin to the airmen's 'feel of the air.' All through the book you are as keen to take off, as doubtless were the authors themselves." D. C. Lunt

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 D 15 '29 380w

"Beauty and savagery, here indeed is the heart of a mechanistic age laid bare, the beauty and modernism young writers have unavailingly been straining for these many years." W. E. H.

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 9 '29 1100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p159 D '29

"If you want to know what it was like in the air on the western front, you can get a better idea of it from this book than from any other account we know. And you will at the same time be reading an exciting adventure story."

+ Outlook 153:193 O 2 '29 150w

St Louis 27:316 N '29

"We recommend this book unqualifiedly. It is an honest, informing, and throbbingly dramatic narrative."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:499 N 30 '29 270w

"The authors were both members of the Lafayette escadrille. They have been putting their flying experiences into print since 1919, however, and there is little in the present volume which has not been already told."

Springf'd Republican p10 S 11 '29 300w

NORMAN, CHARLES. Poems. 67p $2 Knopf 811 29-9140

"Homage to T. S. Eliot is perhaps the best thing in this volume of distinctive manner."—Yale R n s

"Mr. Charles Norman is a newcomer of considerable promise. He has a real feeling for words: he handles blank verse and the heroic couplet with delicacy and eloquence: and if he can outgrow a tendency to use stock poetic phrases and poetic properties—the twilights and purples and sunsets and dreams—and can shake off certain rather obvious contemporary influences, he might give us some first-rate work." Conrad Aiken
+ — Bookm 69:323 My '29 100w

"Charles Norman, first under the influence of Masefield, now under that of T. S. Eliot, writes with the skillful ease that points both toward success and toward failure as a poet. . . Facility at verse patterning, in expression, is more than apparent in every poem. Reading the book gives one the same impression of simplified motion as does riding on the Twentieth Century. But, alas! one sees almost as little of the country. The persuasive steadiness and balance defeat one of dramatic tension."
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Je 2 '29 280w

"Mr. Norman's sense of melody is hardly commensurate with his gifts of keen thought and subtle understanding of color value. His figures are original and striking, but at times they appear more fitted for use in prose than in the medium he has chosen for expression."
+ — Boston Transcript p3 Je 1 '29 200w

"Fine imagination, which is neither exactly nor necessarily a poetic point of view, is the distinguishing quality of Charles Norman's verse. Effectiveness, however, is sometimes sacrificed for brevity; and the poet often misses full expression by putting prose rhythms into verse forms." J. D. Tasker
+ — Nation 129:96 Jl 24 '29 200w

"There is little richness, little mouth-filling resonance, to Mr. Norman's product, which is definitely that of a twilight spirit that looks to the past."
N Y Times p18 Je 2 '29 400w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks
N Y World p10m Ap 28 '29 120w

NORMAN, HILDA LAURA. Swindlers & rogues in French drama. 259p il $3 Univ. of Chicago press [15s Cambridge univ. press]
842.09 French drama—History and criticism. Swindlers and swindling 29-1213

"In this semi-popular book Dr. Norman traces the history of the French money-play from the time of Molière to 1914. The early tax-collectors and usurers developed in the eighteenth century into men of affairs who sought to profit by schemes like those of Law or by fraudulent bankruptcies. After the Industrial Revolution money and its high-priests acquired new social importance and we find in plays devotees of the Bourse and promoters of all sorts, the imitators and victims of Mercadet, Maître Guérin, Teissier, etc."—Mod Philol

"Might make a pleasant and informative essay, but as a book of 250 pages it becomes a wearisome catalog of plays, characters, and French financial customs, from the days of Louis XIV on. It is doubtless the result of 'scholarship,' and represents the triumphant acquisition of a Ph.D."
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 S 9 '28 80w

"A thorough and authoritative study of that side of the French theatre which the more popular love dramas often make us forget. The author, aware of our ignorance, gives enough of the plot of the principal plays to make us understand the essential things; sometimes she tells too much and indicates relative importance too little. The book might be offered to those critics of America who imagine that we invented big business and are its only slaves."
+ — Dial 86:77 Ja '29 90w

"The author not only studies the plays intelligently, but is careful to relate them to the social and economic circumstances that explain them. Her reading is extensive and her grasp of her subject firm. With the exception of the verse translations, the book is well written. For the scholar are added useful bibliographies and an Index that includes the authors, most of the plays, and many of the characters referred to." H. C. Lancaster
+ — Mod Philol 27:108 Ag '29 220w

"A pioneer work on its theme, Miss Norman's book shows wide and careful research and is capably and interestingly written."
+ N Y Times p14 Ag 19 '28 500w

NORMAND, SUZANNE. Five women on a galley; tr. by G. S. Taylor from the French. 255p $2 Vanguard press [7s 6d Richards press]
29-5951

"Free love or marriage—which shall the 'new woman' choose in her quest for absolute freedom? This the question propounded and answered in 'Five Women on a Galley,' a translation from the French, which is not so much a novel as a thesis designed to prove that matrimony is still woman's best bet, and that the ideal of independence is a delusion and a snare. The five women who are the protagonists of this story share a common determination to make their own way financially and a common scorn for the bonds of matrimony."—N Y Times

Bookm 69:xxiii My '29 120w

Reviewed by A. B. Parsons
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 Mr 10 '29 520w

New Statesman 31:648 S 1 '28 150w

"The author's selection of five women to carry the burden of her argument seems as factitious and arbitrary as the other features of the book. For these characters are never imbued with the breath of life. They are intellectual creations only, flat pictures of the modern woman carried to the furthest degree of absurdity. . . Instead of a drama of conflict, the reader gets a tedious puppet show, lacking even the grace of competent presentation."
— N Y Times p22 Ap 28 '29 380w

"The author doesn't seem to prove much, since all the women are of the same type and have about the same experiences. . . We're sorry for these women, but they're a weak lot." W. R. Brooks
— Outlook 151:400 Mr 6 '29 100w

"As fiction the book has decided merit. No one would become so hotly irritated by the five galley-slaves if they were not real. They are so real that they rouse in the reader that strong urge to good advice usually called up only by the lamentably misdirected conduct of friends."
+ — Sat R of Lit 5:1165 Jl 6 '29 300w

"Though Mlle. Norman loads the dice against her characters, she brings to a subject about which much nonsense has been written a French matter-of-factness and logical realization of practical details that are entirely refreshing."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p649 S 13 '28 280w

NORRIS, KATHLEEN (THOMPSON) (MRS CHARLES GILMAN NORRIS). Home. 81p $1 Dutton
173.7 Home 29-3928

An inspirational essay on home and family life, addressed to young moderns by the popular author of "Mother."

Boston Transcript p3 Mr 2 '29 280w
J Home Econ 21:370 My '29 50w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p8m F 2 '29 200w

"Mrs. Norris sets forth her argument in the simplest style, informally, but with vivid picturing of the scenes she evokes and with a persuasive eloquence that springs from her own ardent feeling. Others have written on this subject more learnedly, but none with deeper conviction or more appealing force."

NORRIS, KATHLEEN—Continued
+ N Y Times p10 F 24 '29 430w

"We trust that the beauty-parlor patrons, bridge maniacs, radio listeners, golf widows and their husbands and offspring who are said to make up Mrs. Norris's public will read and ponder her honest homily. Not fiction."
+ Outlook 151:189 Ja 30 '29 60w
Pratt p8 summer '29
St Louis 27:155 My '29

NORRIS, KATHLEEN (THOMPSON) (MRS CHARLES GILMAN NORRIS). Red silence. 333p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Murray]
29-17223

From a life on the fringes of New York's Bohemia, Dory Garrison went to California, and found herself in the midst of the large, healthy, happy Penfield family. It was all very new to Dory who was trying to forget Bruce Macgowan, her first love. The Penfields en masse loved Dory, especially Jerd, the oldest boy, and in a short time she and Jerd were married. Happier than she ever dreamed possible Dory was suddenly confronted by her past, in the person of an obnoxious blackmailing actor. And then it took drastic action on the part of Bruce Macgowan to break the impasse.

Booklist 26:71 N '29
Bookm 70:xiv Ja '30 70w
Nation and Ath 45:808 S 21 '29 120w

"A typical Kathleen Norris story, cheerful, lively and ingenuous. Mrs. Norris has nothing to learn about smoothness and ingenuity. Her domestic interiors are most comfortable, her young people lively, her old people gentle and tolerant; and she revels in large, luxurious nurseries with multitudes of little cots."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p742 S 26 '29 460w

NORRIS, KATHLEEN (THOMPSON) (MRS CHARLES GILMAN NORRIS). Storm house. 351p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d J. Murray]
29-9219

Storm house in California by the sea is the home of Jerome Delafield the writer, his invalid wife, their little daughter, and her young governess Jane. The wife dies and to keep the home together for the little girl's sake Jane marries Delafield with whom she falls slowly and completely in love. On his side, the reciprocal process is interrupted by the reappearance in his life of the lovely Sylvia whose charm eclipses Jane—for a time.

Bookm 69:xxiii Ag '29 50w

" 'Storm House' boasts a most attractive setting on the California coast, a likable heroine and incident of the sort beloved by this author's vast clientele."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ag 11 '29 150w

"The females in this novel are mothers first and only secondly personalities. Kathleen Norris sells 'devotion' and 'sacrifice' to her readers with a rather convincing mediocrity." E. M. Benson
— Outlook 151:589 Ap 10 '29 90w
Times [London] Lit Sup p317 Ap 18 '29 170w

NORTH, JESSICA NELSON. Long leash. 75p $1.50 Houghton
811 28-23953

Simple, imaginative poems of love and nature in many moods.

Boston Transcript p4 D 26 '28 70w
Cleveland Open Shelf p54 Ap '29

"An intelligent talent that is seldom misled into over-lush, egotistical, florid statement, that depends for effect more upon a keen, incisive expression within well defined form than upon loose outflowing. These poems are not of uniform excellence or identical appeal. 'The Sleeper,' the title poem and one or two of the other longer poems lack the convincing personal authenticity and economy that distinguish most of the shorter ones. Sometimes these bespeak a tender comprehension of nature." R. M. Fisk
+ — New Repub 58:313 My 1 '29 280w
Wis Lib Bul 25:125 Ap '29

NORTH, JOHN. Patricia lacked a lover. 286p $2 Duffield [7s 6d Jarrolds]
29-10431

Patricia had a husband, but he bored her. She left him, to stay with some married friends who got her a job under the assumed rôle of a bereft young widow. The deserted husband, meanwhile, had his own adventures which, thru the medium of Sir Quentin, brought Patricia back to him again.

"Mr. North's tale is a most agreeable adventure in gayety, abounding in comic incident and slyly humorous dialogue."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Je 2 '29 100w

"A comedy which, though it totally lacks any humor in the way of 'lines' or in the otherwise manner of its telling, is, nevertheless, good fun. Mr. North's purpose is purely that of amusement, which he fulfills ably enough."
+ N Y Times p7 My 5 '29 400w

"It is all rather absurd, but neatly executed, never dull, and something of a relief from novels which deal with marriage seriously."
+ — N Y World p11m My 12 '29 110w

"This is gay comedy, with diverting dialogue and situations."
+ Outlook 152:78 My 8 '29 100w
Times [London] Lit Sup p890 N 24 '27 160w

NORTH, ROBERT CARVER. Bob North by canoe and portage; a twelve year old boy explores the Albany river and James Bay, Canada; with a foreword by the Indian, John Wesley. 195p il $1.75 (6s) Putnam
917.13 Ontario—Description and travel. Albany river, Ontario. James bay 28-21913

Bob North's journal of a canoe trip up the Albany river, Canada and a visit among the Ojibway tribes, made with his Indian guide John Wesley.

"Bob had a very exciting time, learned many things about woodcraft and Indian life, canoe navigation, portage difficulties, the wild life of the wilderness, and other matters, and he relates it all simply, directly and modestly."
+ N Y Times p10 S 23 '28 180w

"Bob North writes, 'I haven't the knack of writing out what I feel'; and while it is perfectly obvious that he hasn't, this understandable failing is more than offset by an ability to write out what he sees. With a fine attention to details he presents an accurate picture of the Canadian Indian as he is today and his mode of life. An added touch of interest is furnished by the preface, written by his Indian guide, John Wesley."
+ Sat R of Lit 5:546 D 23 '28 220w

NORTH 3-1, pseud. See Owen, E. D.

NORTON, THOMAS JAMES. Losing liberty judicially; prohibitory and kindred laws examined. 252p $2.50 (10s 6d) Macmillan
342.73 Liberty. United States—Constitutional law 28-25046

This discussion has to do with the power of government in the United States under the Constitution and the liberty of man under the same instrument. Its contention is that governmental restraint on individual liberty is bad and much space is given to an argument against prohibition.

Reviewed by F. J. Stimson
Am Pol Sci R 23:499 My '29 580w
Boston Transcript p2 F 6 '29 160w

"The reviewer would much prefer to praise, if he could, the work of a lawyer whose sixty-five years have created in him a sincere devotion to the Constitution. It is, however, necessary to challenge vigorously conclusions which, coming from a member of the bar and backed by the deservedly high reputation of the publishers, may give this book an unfortunate influence against legislation which is required to curb undesirable private enterprise and aid individuals who are unable to safeguard themselves." Zechariah Chafee, Jr.
— Nation 127:719 D 26 '28 1400w

"It is indeed a pity that the author weakens his plea by antiquated notions of laissez-faire. For there is a sound core in his argument, and the voice of well-informed juristic protest is much needed in an age and country where actions in themselves innocent are made felonies and where dominating groups succeed in incorporating into laws alike their own morals and their own prejudices. Against this form of tyranny the protest of the author is strong and telling." R. M. MacIver
+ — Pol Sci Q 44:630 D '29 950w

NORWAY, NEVIL SHUTE (NEVIL SHUTE, pseud.). Mysterious aviator (Eng title So disdained). 304p $2 Houghton
28-22962

Driving home thru a heavy rain, Peter Moran, agent to Lord Arner, overtakes an aviator soaked with rain and ill. He recognizes a fellow ex-member of the Air force and taking him home hears his story. Lenden has been taking air photographs of Portsmouth for the Soviet government. He has the plates with him, and suspects that the British authorities are on his trail. Peter lends his help, but he does it in such a way as to protect his friend and to defeat the Soviet scheme.

"With the exception of an absurdly sentimental finale it is reasonably interesting, for it is more than a mere adventure story."
+ — Boston Transcript p7 N 17 '28 120w

"We found nothing mysterious in the aviator, but what still perplexes us is why the author spun out to full novel length materials which could have as readily fitted into half that space. . . Though the tale is not badly written, we saw slight justification for writing it at all."
— Sat R of Lit 5:491 D 8 '28 180w

NORWOOD, EDWIN P. Circus menagerie. 230p il $1.50 Doubleday, Doran

791.3 Animals—Legends and stories. Circus
29-26792

Of circus-trained animals and what their keepers have to say about them, together with interesting photographs, Mr Norwood has written a very readable book. There are some diverting chapters on the giraffes, the camels, and the lions; an instructive piece on the hippo, or "blood-sweating behemoth"; a description of a night among sleeping elephants; and, finally, the life story of John Daniel, prince of gorillas.

Booklist 26:38 O '29
Cleveland Open Shelf p160 D '29
St Louis 27:344 D '29

"It has been a real pleasure to read Mr. Norwood's book. . . The menagerie tent is a world in itself and to be intimately taken inside is a fascinating privilege. This the author of the book has done so that after the adventure the reader feels a keen significance in the common term 'menagerie.'" R. L. Ditmars
+ Sat R of Lit 6:47 Ag 10 '29 850w

NORWOOD, ROBERT WINKWORTH. Man who dared to be God; a story of Jesus. 324p $2.50 Scribner

232.9 Jesus Christ—Biography 29-19090

The rector of St Bartholomew's church, New York City, has written this story of Jesus after the manner of "Doctor Luke" to his friend Theophilus, a young college man whose imagination had been stirred by hearing of the Galilean and who wrote to know if he was a real man and one to be followed.

"Taken for what it is, his work is excellent. It is touched again and again with beauty, poetic insight, just and tender appreciation." J: H. Holmes
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 D 29 '29 180w

"The attempt to make real, vital and compelling the humanity of Jesus is successful. Furthermore there is a charm about the story, the dialogue, the action, the human details, the very camaraderie of it all, that is fascinating. The same kind of criticism and praise will be evoked by this book as were by Bruce Barton's 'The Man That Nobody Knows' but it is different. This Jesus is no hustling business man abreast of the Rotary Clubs. It is a repetition of the Ecce Homo of the past done in current language and style." T. C. R.
+ Boston Transcript p1 N 9 '29 450w

"What has seemed hard to believe becomes easily believable; what has seemed baffling to the modern mind becomes real and easy of comprehension. It is no ordinary writer who can accomplish this, but Mr. Norwood has done it and has for that reason truly written a great book, and what is better, he has written it briefly so that one can read it in an evening." E: W. Bok
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 D 14 '29 200w
Cleveland Open Shelf p151 D '29

"To judge this book solely by its treatment of our Lord's death, would be unfair. Of His life, Dr. Norwood gives us a picture as virile and as tender as his own appeal from the pulpit. His pages pulsate with eager enjoyment of a great example." P. W. Wilson
+ — N Y Times p1 D 22 '29 850w

"Possibly the theology implicit in this book may not satisfy the creeds but this picture of Jesus certainly radiates the spirit of love incarnate in him. It is beautifully written and calculated to make us love the hero of it. Religion is not dead when its leaders can speak like this." E. B. Chaffee
+ Outlook 153:154 S 25 '29 230w

NOWAK, KARL FRIEDRICH. Versailles. 287p pl $5 Brewer [15s Gollancz]

940.314 Versailles, Treaty of, 1919. Peace conference, 1919. European war, 1914-1918—Influence and results 29-6159

Pen pictures of scenes at Versailles and character sketches of the statesmen gathered at the Peace conference. Herr Nowak was attached to the Austrian General Headquarters and had access to many important state documents which he has used (without footnotes or references) in this commentary on events at Versailles from the German point of view. Translated by N. M. Thomas and E. W. Dickes.

Reviewed by R. L. Buell
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Je 2 '29 880w

Reviewed by W: MacDonald
+ Nation 128:768 Je 26 '29 620w

"Nowak's 'Versailles' arrests attention by its striking lights and shades and by its novel perspective. Broader in scope than Keynes, Nowak treats of political and psychological as well as economic aspects, and gives the Germans a prominent place in the background. . . It is evident that Nowak has read widely in the sources. More than that, he has interviewed the leading German actors in the great drama and woven into his story the first-hand information thus acquired. This makes for freshness, vividness, novelty. But it also gives him strong personal likes and dislikes, which are heightened by his fondness for sharp lights and shades. . . The last third is the most valuable and interesting because of its new information and the less known German point of view." S. B. Fay

NOWAK, K. F.—Continued

+ New Repub 59:186 Jl 3 '29 850w

"Discounting the effect of his opinions upon Nowak's reasoning, discounting his frank prejudices, 'Versailles' is fair, well constructed, ably written and gives a coherent account of the conference, which at times rises to fine dramatic intensity. Nowak's book is particularly valuable [when] he conducts us behind the scenes of the German side of the story, offering as complete a defense of Brockdorff-Rantzau as has been published anywhere. He describes how the Germans contemplated resistance, giving us new and, excellent historical material on the situation in May and June, 1919." Percy Winner

+ — N Y Evening Post p11m My 11 '29 780w

"The German spectacles of the author do not distort the events; they present with rhapsodic energy well this side of exaggeration a German vision glimpsed by a nation hoping for little, retaining the shreds of its dignity amid its ruin, and yet stunned by a severity which in the hopelessness of its isolation it had to accept as inevitable." Gardner Harding

N Y Times p3 Jl 14 '29 2300w

St Louis 27:315 N '29

"Herr Nowak is a good journalist, but a bad historian. His attacks on President Wilson are ludicrous, and his understanding of the Allied and Associated protagonists at the Peace Conference is very limited. That part of his 'Versailles' which is valuable and dramatic describes the feelings of the German delegates in the hotel des Reservoirs."

— + Sat R 146:732 D 1 '28 220w

"It is quite clear that the author has talked to and been given information by some of those who were present at the Peace Conference; but it is also equally clear that he has not the general knowledge requisite for putting this private information into its right perspective, and that he has not taken the trouble, by a careful study of the available authorities, to get into his own mind a clear and consecutive picture of the course of events. . . The statements in the book can only be accepted with great reserve."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p974 D 13 '28 960w

World Tomorrow 12:524 D '29 20w

NOYES, ALFRED. Sun cure. 239p $2 Cosmopolitan bk.

29-16435

"The central character is a priggish curate who is enamored of the 'new' poetry. A college friend whose literary tastes are presented as more normal advises the clergyman to try sun bathing for the sake of his mental and physical health. So he betakes himself to a convenient beach, and there he has the misfortune of losing his clothes—a deprivation which compels him, in his denuded condition, to spend several days in a clump of bushes. His 'cure' is not effected by the sun, but by what he overhears while he is thus screened from human gaze."—Springf'd Republican

---

Booklist 26:71 N '29

"Mr. Noyes has arranged the farcical incidents with great skill and has made a vastly entertaining story. The book is more than a mere farce, however, for subtle humor and delicate satire are threaded into its texture. There are also certain passages of sweetness and beauty."

+ Bookm 70:xxix O '29 170w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Ag 18 '29 110w

"His story is really a satire on the literary 'modernists,' and a plea for traditional values. An eloquent and pointed plea, you may be sure."

+ Christian Science Monitor p12 S 7 '29 450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p144 N '29

Nation 129:363 O 2 '29 70w

" 'The Sun Cure' is frankly written to entertain. It is a light, an almost nonsensical tale, touched with satire and inclined to poke fun at earnestly intellectual movements and the stodgy people who espouse them. But it is very good fun and very kindly satire, and the story itself has color and action."

+ N Y Times p7 Ag 11 '29 630w

"The Sun Cure is pleasant midsummer madness, gracefully written, full of simple philosophy, comedy and sly satire, and makes good reading for warm weather. But beside that it is the pointed fable of a pale soul and how it got a coat of tan."

+ Outlook 152:672 Ag 21 '29 240w

"Alfred Noyes is known to most people as the writer of rather melodious verse of a rather Tennysonian timbre. In this book, however, he has gone stark, staring P. G. Wodehouse and has done it rather well. The one trouble with him is that, like the proverbial postman on a holiday, he cannot forget his true vocation and here spoils the effects of a very pleasant little jaunt into midsummer madness by introducing a lot of rather tasteless propaganda against free verse and the New Poetry." J: Carter

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:155 S 21 '29 520w

"Readers of Mr Noyes's novel will not have to proceed very far before they discover that the real theme of the book is supplied by the author's literary dislikes. Now very engaging novels can be fashioned out of literary satire. In proof of this it is enough to cite the name of Jane Austen. If Mr Noyes fails to challenge comparison with Jane Austen, one reason may be that he takes his literary satire too seriously. Another certainly is that the humor and invention are insufficient to vitalize the author's ideas. There is more contempt than fun."

— Springf'd Republican p8 Ag 10 '29 1500w

NUGENT, MRS MICHAELINA MARFA-MOYA (NAMOVICH) (JEAN STARK, pseud.). Phantom in the wine. 214p $2 Simon & Schuster

29-1959

"Michael and Feodor are brothers, the first all shiny virtue, the second all glittering vice. Nadya is a waif who has been inducted into a gypsy caravan by two Jim Tullys who love her. All men love Nadya. She and Feodor meet in a Saint Petersburg street. He forcibly carries her to her room, whence she escapes with her chastity and a love for him that lasts while her life lasts, but that doesn't keep her from marrying upright Michael. Nor do Michael's shining virtues keep him from finally killing his evil brother."—Sat R of Lit

---

"This first novel deserves rather more than the customary label, 'promising.' Unforced gayety and convincing local color are among its merits."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 F 3 '29 100w

" 'The Phantom in the Wine,' as a novel justifies itself almost entirely by its vivid picturing of the great estate, of the student days in Petersburg and the latter background of aristocrats and serfs. All are etched by one who plainly knows them, who understands their lights and shadows."

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Ap 10 '29 180w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p8m Ja 19 '29 320w

"Nominally, the author's background is Russia, but, except for a few minor details, it might have been Hungary, Rumania, Turkestan or China; for the distinctive characteristics of the country do not succeed in seeping through the turgid pages of the book."

— N Y Times p8 Ja 20 '29 320w

"Miss Stark has the extremely mistaken notion that a romantic story is sufficient unto its own situations. We are never given anything more of the characters than what will be necessary for the approaching complication. This is not enough. . . We are thus deprived of enjoying a book whose theme is comparatively fresh, and whose writing is engagingly facile."

— + N Y World p5e F 24 '29 240w

"The publisher calls this a defiant and impetuous first novel of passion and high laughter under the sun and stars of pre-war Russia. The author calls it an ironic romance. The reviewer calls it thinnish melodrama."
— Sat R of Lit 5:670 F 9 '29 150w

NUTT, LILY CLIVE (CLIVE ARDEN, pseud.). Spider and the fly. 370p $2 Bobbs

28-29729

"This is the old tale of the cynical young roué who wasn't a roué but a philanthropist, hiding his good deeds. The story might almost be taken for a satire. For the cynical Theo literally 'kept' a couple of hundred women, far exceeding the number of which he was suspected by the virtuous girl who loved and disapproved of him. But he kept them on a farm in the country, where they were fed pure milk and fresh eggs, and were lectured wholesomely about the 'cup of life.' This hobby led to all sorts of complications."—Bookm

Bookm 69:xxv Mr '29 70w

"It is marked by interesting and amusing characterizations, by cleverly wrought situations, and by wise and 'smart' remarks from the right people at the right time. Yet one feels that there is lacking a certain sincerity, a lack which makes it not quite true to life, despite its cleverness."
— + Boston Transcript p5 Mr 9 '29 100w

"In the drawing of the characters of Theo and Hessie, Clive Arden is over-careful. Their actions and reactions are explained and dissected and mulled over until only the vaguest outlines of the figures remain. It is in the delineation of minor persons that the charm of the book lies."
+ — N Y Times p19 Ap 14 '29 380w

Times [London] Lit Sup p569 Ag 2 '28 230w

NUTTING, WALLACE. England beautiful. 305p il $5 Dodd

914.2 England—Description and travel 28-29638

Jottings on a trip thru England illustrated by beautiful photographs, mostly of rural England.

Booklist 25:208 F '29

"For his latest volume Mr. Nutting goes to England, exploring highways, footpaths and rivers with indefatigable zest. There is none of the picture-postcard monotony in the scores of reproductions which he has assembled. They have the veritable atmosphere of the English countryside. The result is a charming album."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 F 3 '29 120w

"The illustrations [do not] overpower the text. Indeed the latter is, in its way, as interesting. Mr. Nutting moreover gives grateful travel suggestions."
+ Boston Transcript p9 D 15 '28 230w

Cleveland Open Shelf p68 My '29

N Y Times p9 D 16 '28 50w

NYSTROM, PAUL HENRY. Economics of fashion. 521p il $6 Ronald

646.01 Fashion 28-22952

"An interesting discussion of the actions and reactions of business, fashion and social conditions."—Pratt

"Dr. Nystrom's book is important because it makes available in a new and convenient form information of value to people concerned with fashion as a force and an opportunity in business. Some of this information may be obtained elsewhere, but not with Dr. Nystrom's comments. These have come to be much sought in the trade. In addition, the book opens some new territory. At various points the discussion seems to drag, but, on the whole, the book is well and clearly written. Doubtless it will be well received by the people for whom it is intended, for it comes at a time when fashion is receiving much attention." C. N. Schmalz
+ Am Econ R 19:465 S '29 650w

"Professor Nystrom has written this book primarily with the interests of the manufacturer and the retailer in mind, but it is quite valuable to the social scientist. It lacks, of course, the theoretical discussions that fit the particular concerns of sociology. The effort to describe the character of fashion and to discuss its psychology, while equal in merit to the usual attempts, like the latter, is weak in value. But if the theoretical discussions make no contribution to what remains a deplorably uncultivated sociological field, the concrete material should be of great importance. . . The book is copiously illustrated with charts and style plates. Merely to look at these will tell one a lot of interesting things about fashion. This is undeniably the best book in English which deals specifically with the topic of fashion." Herbert Blumer
+ Am J Soc 35:154 Jl '29 180w

"A most competent and comprehensive exposition of the nature of fashion cycles; and of the various geographical, cultural and economic factors that condition the degree of the popular acceptance and the longevity of different classes of fads and vogues. The chapters dealing with these phases of the problem of fashions should be valuable to all students of consumption economics." G. P. Warber
+ Ann Am Acad 144:161 Jl '29 90w

Booklist 26:17 O '29

Pratt p17 spring '29

"Dr. Nystrom has put much more into his work than an objective description. He has included many outside observations which somehow seem to have come to him during his studies and which are highly entertaining in themselves. Especially good is his chapter on the origins of modern fashions. Any one in whose field fashion movements are matters of importance should include a study of Dr. Nystrom's book as part of his daily work. To others, it will be a matter of interest and entertainment." O. W. Knauth
+ Survey 61:513 Ja 15 '29 180w

O

O. HENRY MEMORIAL AWARD. Prize stories of 1928; chosen by the Society of arts and sciences; with an introd. by Blanche Colton Williams. 299p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

Short stories—Collections (21-9372)

In this tenth annual volume of prize stories chosen by a committee of which Blanche Colton Williams is chairman, first honors go to Walter Duranty's "The Parrot." The sixteen other "ranking" tales are by well-known writers.

"Here is evidence that, despite the efforts of Anderson, Hemingway, Suckow and other contemporary pathfinders, the criterion of the short story for an exceedingly large group of intelligent people is still the old, mechanically clever O. Henry pattern. And this collection, bearing the blessing of a prize committee of short-story authorities, ratifies and confirms this standard every twelvemonth. As might be expected, the level of craftsmanship in this group is high and the general excellence is very low." Juana Allraum
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Mr 10 '29 380w

Reviewed by C. P. Fadiman
N Y Evening Post p8m N 24 '28 580w

"Except for 'Prohibition,' by Glenway Wescott, and an interesting but below standard story of Zona Gale's, this year's 'O. Henry

O. HENRY MEMORIAL AWARD—Continued
Prize Stories' can be called again, as so often before, a pretentious failure. And if it has been accepted as a criterion by even one purchaser, it is doing harm to the short story as a form of literature." L: Kronenberger
— N Y Times p2 D 9 '28 580w

OAKS, GLADYS. Nursery rhymes for children of darkness. 59p $1.50 McBride 811 28-30781

"The principal interest in this volume is the fact that it is a glorification of individual sex psychology. Such a record presents a lively mixture of a romantic joy of living and an equally romantic conception of human futility." —New Repub

---

"She reveals a genuine and vigorous talent, and an instinctive feeling for the lyrical and passionate. One feels an emotional richness in her, a largesse that many readers might wish more restrained in its expression, for the sake of art." C: Divine
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Mr 17 '29 100w

"The reader need not be a prude to recoil from her lusty excesses which outdo the Elizabethans and the Biblical writers in directness of description. . . A sureness of treatment and a maturity of conception mark even the trivialities and the modernistic vagaries with an authentic poetic seal." Johan Smertenko
Nation 128:207 F 13 '29 170w

"Miss Oaks is at times unconsciously comic, awkward, brilliant and genuinely lyrical. Her personality is vivid and real. She presents a rich and glowing confusion of ideas concerning the relationship of a woman to men." Horace Gregory
+ New Repub 57:280 Ja 23 '29 200w

"Most of Miss Oaks's poems in this volume, with the title not quite worthy of it, can be read again and again, with ever-increasing enjoyment. That is a high tribute to the veracity of her music." J: W. Crawford
+ — N Y Evening Post p9m Ja 26 '29 420w

"Miss Oaks's first book entitles her to immediate consideration; almost any line in the book would suggest to the discerning that here was a person to be reckoned with. Her language, though not infallibly original, is individual and adequate." Granville Hicks
+ N Y World p11m F 10 '29 230w

"Her subject-matter being primarily and frankly physical, is sure of popular response; her emphasis, though intellectual in slant, is emotional in pitch; her treatment is 'daring' without being over-realistic or overstated. She has, in addition, the gift of analysis which, while not profound, is sufficient to establish its modernity. Lastly, though her technique is not conspicuously dexterous—her rhythms are slipshod. It is only when the texture of her verse is examined that one finds, beneath a silken sheen, the basic shoddy." L: Untermeyer
— + Sat R of Lit 5:1093 Je 8 '29 920w

OAKS, LOUIS WESTON, and MERRILL, HORACE G. Your nose, throat and ears; their health and care. (Appleton popular health ser.) 167p il $1.50 Appleton
616 Nose. Throat. Ear 29-14156

A small practical volume, written by two specialists, which treats the structure and hygiene of these sense organs and the more common abnormal conditions that occur in them.

---

Booklist 26:58 N '29
Boston Transcript p3 S 4 '29 160w

"Throughout, the presentment is so careful and lucid as to be easily understandable and is still more aided by a series of line drawings. The little book has an important mission in an ailing and ignorant world and ought to be in the hands of the parents and nurses of all small children."
+ N Y Times p18 Ag 18 '29 380w
Survey 63:111 O '29 20w
Wis Lib Bul 25:318 O '29

O'BRIEN, EDWARD JOSEPH HARRINGTON. Dance of the machines; the American short story and the industrial age. 274p $2.50 Macaulay
808.3 Short story. American fiction. Machinery 29-21613

Mr O'Brien, known for his yearly anthologies of the best short stories, considers in this critical study the effect of the machine age upon the literary artist. He states that modern American life and the pursuits of the individual are so controlled by the machine that tastes and ideas have become stereotyped. Writers and producers of fiction, especially in the field of the short story, must conform. As a result, the writer must submit to editors and to the public a specifically manufactured product, "without even the right to exercise literary birth control."

---

Reviewed by Malcolm Cowley
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 N 3 '29 800w

"Mr. O'Brien in stimulating fashion wields a pen replete with a mastery of the art of provocative thinking. There is a direct challenge to American journalism. Every viewpoint of the matter is covered from a critical and incisive point of view. The most encouraging feature is that the whole is backed up by much practical and first-hand experience and is as far as can be from the mere idle patter of a muck-raker." A. S. R.
+ Boston Transcript p3 N 2 '29 270w
Nation and Ath 46:260 N 16 '29 280w
New Statesman 34:342 D 14 '29 130w

"It is a man-sized job that Edward J. O'Brien has attempted in his 'Dance of the Machines,' and if he has failed to carry it through with complete lucidity, with inevitable logic and with thorough satisfaction to all concerned, why, who is there among us to cast the first stone? . . When all reservations have been made, it remains true that Mr. O'Brien has had the great courage to attempt to link many perplexing matters together, and to make plain the quarrel that exists between those who would pursue science at the expense of art, and those whose interest lies in the world of value, color, depth, intuition and quality that is the province of the artist." J: Chamberlain
+ — N Y Times p2 O 13 '29 1500w

"For a number of years O'Brien has found that American authors are being ruined by the machine, are becoming mechanized. So he has written a book to expose the mechanized editors and the mechanized magazines to warn writers who are still free. It tells why American short stories are so terrible. It's because they have become mechanized. The first part of this book is chiefly derivative. There is not a new idea in it, but a lot of ideas already stated by Bertrand Russell and others are popularized, so perhaps O'Brien's book is of some use. When he begins discussing the short story I am ready to listen to him because he has an intelligent viewpoint." Harry Hansen
— + N Y World p18 O 8 '29 1000w

"I sadly agree with much that he says, especially as it applies to the editors, authors, advertisers, and readers of large circulation magazines. But I question whether the short story was ever the significant art form he postulates. And I wonder how he reconciles this universal indictment of machine civilization with what seems to me the recent manifest progress in the writing of novels and plays, history and biography. But, noting certain exceptions, I welcome a book as serious and sincere as this: one rich in speculation and wholesome chastisement." Leon Whipple
+ — Survey 63:300 D 1 '29 2000w

O'BRIEN, EDWARD JOSEPH HARRINGTON, ed. Best British short stories of 1929; with an Irish and colonial supplement. 363p $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d Cape]

Short stories—Collections (22-23919)

A number of stories by British, Irish and Colonial authors, published in 1929, selected from those, according to the editor, which have rendered life imaginatively in organic substance and artistic form. Among the authors represented are Martin Armstrong, David Garnett, Oliver Onions, L. A. G. Strong, Margaret O'Leary, and Pauline Smith.

---

Boston Transcript p6 N 20 '29 200w

"As usual, this year's is furnished with an industrious apparatus of bibliography, for the most part rather more portentous than it deserves. But the stories themselves give quite a fair proportion of good reading. Not many of the very familiar names are represented, and of the newcomers or rarer visitants, the stories by Mr. H. E. Bates, Mr. Nugent Barker, Mr. Eric Linklater, Mr. Malachi Whitaker and Miss Pauline Smith are noteworthy in widely different ways."

+ New Statesman 34:21 O 12 '29 150w

N Y Times p2 D 8 '29 500w

Reviewed by L. P. Hartley

Sat R 148:732 D 14 '29 100w

"Nineteen-twenty-nine's harvest of short stories has a richness of quality, but it lacks weight. The editor makes no unjust claim for the book; as he says, the selection does not imply that they are great stories. Nevertheless, a few—a very few—contain at least one of the elements of greatness. Some of them are excellent stories, but these, though adequately, are not beautifully written. Some are exquisitely polished, but are not stories at all: they are studies and lack point and plot. All the tales in the book are readable, but we hope that style and story may make a happier marriage in nineteen-thirty."

+ — Spec 143:554 O 19 '29 170w

O'BRIEN, EDWARD JOSEPH HARRINGTON, ed. Best short stories of 1929; and, The yearbook of the American short story. 399p $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d Cape]

Short stories—Collections (16-11387)

The annual selection together with the Yearbook of the American short story, selected and edited by Mr O'Brien for the past fifteen years. Among the authors represented in the 1929 volume are Sarah Addington, Sherwood Anderson, Konrad Bercovici, Morley Callaghan, Margaret Leech, Glenway Wescott and William Carlos Williams.

---

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell

Bookm 70:562 Ja '30 600w

N Y Times p2 D 8 '29 500w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p12 N 8 '29 1100w

"The American volume, considering what a brilliant tradition of short-story writing America boasts, is disappointing; the less successful pieces are sentimental without being moving, facetious without being funny, hard without being neat. The best of them present realistically the surface of modern American life." L. P. Hartley

— + Sat R 148:732 D 16 '29 100w

O'BRIEN, GEORGE AUGUSTINE THOMAS. Agricultural economics. 195p $4.20 (10s 6d) Longmans

631.1 Agriculture—Economic aspects [29-5677]

"An attempt to apply general economic principles to the peculiar circumstances of the agricultural industry. While the treatment of the subject is in the main theoretical or abstract, illustrations and examples drawn from current agricultural problems give reality to the discussion. Among other matters touched on are the effect of monetary instability on the farming classes, protection of agricultural produce, orderly marketing and the reform of land tenure."—Publisher's note

---

Am J Soc 35:515 N '29 180w

"Professor O'Brien has done a valuable service in clarifying many issues in the industry of agriculture, which of all must be the most complex and diverse. . . The tortuous avenues of agricultural economics in relation to politics are explored with a lucid simplicity of method which can be confidently recommended to all agriculturists."

+ Sat R 147:322 Mr 9 '29 980w

"Professor O'Brien's book may be confidently recommended as an excellent introduction to the subject not only for the professional students of agriculture but for all politicians and public men who must interest themselves in the fundamental question of the maintenance of the food supply."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p200 Mr 14 '29 1250w

O'CONNOR, JOHNSON. Born that way. (Human relations ser.) 323p $6 Williams & Wilkins

151.2 Ability—Testing. Employment management. Psychology, Applied 29-2342

"A most readable study of a group of tests or work-samples, which have demonstrated their utility in predicting aptitude for given occupations. Appendices (about half the book) are devoted to methods of interpretation administration, and scoring of the tests. An extension of the famous Kent-Rosanoff table of the free-association word test is also included. By the head of the human engineering department, General Electric Company."—J Home Econ

---

"When so many charlatans are dipping into applied psychology it is refreshing to have a first-hand account of work that is both scientific and industrially serviceable. The present volume not only describes such work, done under the direction of Mr. O'Connor at the General Electric plant, but it offers also much sagacious interpretation." C: L. Stone

+ Am Econ R 19:466 S '29 200w

Boston Transcript p3 S 7 '29 440w

"Intended primarily for employers, but of interest to anyone who wishes to follow the practical application of psychology to vocational work or personal efficiency."

J Home Econ 21:370 My '29 100w

"Half of the book is an appendix describing his principal tests. This is a valuable contribution to test literature, especially the revision of the Kent-Rosanoff association tables. The main text of the book, however, can be recommended to testers for its broad interpretations." D. A. Laird

+ Survey 61:814 Mr 15 '29 400w

O'CONNOR, THOMAS POWER. Memoirs of an old parliamentarian. 2v 388;342p $10 Appleton [£2 2s Benn]

B or 92 Ireland—Politics and government 29-11630

The autobiography of "Tay Pay" O'Connor, known as the "father of the House of commons," from the time when he was a struggling young journalist in London, in 1871, until the death of Charles Stewart Parnell in 1891.

---

"One quality that gives the book value as a contemporary historical 'source' is its good-tempered, objective outlook. Nothing is deliberately set down in malice or prejudice . . In short, T. P. has a long memory, a love of people, a knowledge of politics. We get the benefit of all three in this book." Norah Meade

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Ag 18 '29 900w

Reviewed by S. L. Cook

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 13 '29 1900w

"To everyone with a sense for personality and dramatic action their interest must be overwhelming. . . The two figures that stand out most prominently in the drama are Mr. Gladstone and Charles Stewart Parnell. . . I suppose Parnell remains the most inscrutable nature in political history, but here we are shown him more clearly than in any other book known to me, even than in his lover's and wife's own reminiscences." H: W. Nevinson

O'CONNOR, T. P.—Continued
+ Nation 129:171 Ag 14 '29 1600w

Reviewed by Haslam Mills
Nation and Ath 45:248 My 18 '29 720w

"Mr. O'Connor's memoirs do not reconstruct the past; what memoirs do? But they help to do so. They are almost like a moving picture film. Every face stands out stark and clear. His characters are not mannikins upon which are hung laws, movements, policies; they are living men. . . Mr. O'Connor is an unusually capable and experienced journalist. He writes, it must be remembered, as an eye-witness. What he has written will interest everyone and instruct many." W. P. Hall
+ New Repub 60:106 S 11 '29 850w

"Vividly as Mr. O'Connor writes about politics, he is less occupied with the game for its own sake than with its players. He tells us exactly the things that most contemporaries forget to record, and though these may seem trifles to the expert who desires enlightenment as to the strategy that inspired some insignificant movement of pawns on the political chessboard, to the reader of another generation they are more fascinating than any analysis of policy."
+ New Statesman 33:218 My 25 '29 1200w

"If the history of today is the news of the day before yesterday here is the source book for a study of the Irish question in the Parliaments of fifty years ago, written by a veteran journalist and an Irishman and written with an impartiality it has seldom been the fortune of that much-vexed issue to invoke." Lindesay Parrott
+ N Y Evening Post p7m Jl 20 '29 680w

" 'Tay Pay' is acknowledged to be the doyen of journalism, and the fact that an octogenarian should be able to offer volumes so gracefully written as these, with not a word misplaced and not a word superfluous, is indeed an evidence that the older journalism, when exhibited by a master of the pen, has something in it which compels attention and respect." P. W. Wilson
+ N Y Times p1 Jl 14 '29 2450w

"His descriptions of Gladstone and of other English politicians are not much more than parliamentary anecdotage. Perhaps the best portrait in the book is that of Biggar, the amorous Belfast pork merchant who invented 'obstruction.' Like others of eccentric life and feature thrown up by the Irish movement, Biggar is now almost forgotten. Mr. O'Connor's recollections of him and of such quite-forgotten brilliant men as O'Connor Power, the work-house boy, and F. H. O'Donnell, are well worth having, and are written with real feeling."
+ Sat R 147:480 Ap 6 '29 700w

"If those volumes are interesting to Irishmen on account of their subject, to others not so interested in Parnell and Irish politics, they will be made easier reading on account of the flexible and descriptive pen of journalism which T. P. O'Connor handles so well. These memoirs, I think will be invaluable to many people. 'The Father of the House' has done his work well." Dietmuid Russell
+ Sat R of Lit 6:72 Ag 24 '29 1300w

"He has the gift, or it may be he has acquired the art, of fluent narrative which is invariably readable and sometimes exciting. It must be admitted, however, that he has not mastered political narrative in its highest form."
+ — Spec 142:482 Mr 23 '29 930w

"He has wisely concentrated his memoirs on what may be called, politically, 'the roaring eighties' of the nineteenth century—a decade remarkable for its party disruptions and reorganizations. The chief value of the book is that it provides for the first time a complete account of the original Parnellite Party—its personalities and principles—from its rise in 1880 to its split in 1891, on the question of Parnell's leadership, with the House of Commons and London journalism of the period as a background."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p266 Ap 4 '29 960w

"Certainly these memoirs are easier to read than most. All those who suspect themselves of being overfond of the English and yet crave Englishmen in the pages they read, all those who have left in them some liking for the despised Eighties, and those not wholly carried away by the new biography may well spend a few evenings in listening to an agreeable man who had looked on many things during a long life recently closed." Wallace Notestein
+ Yale R n s 19:420 winter '30 650w

O'DARE, KAIN. Philosophy of the dusk; with an introd. by Guy Pearce Jones. 247p il $2 Century

B or 92 Crime and criminals 29-12782

This autobiography of a criminal is written, as the introduction points out, in an admixture of the styles of The rosary, Trader Horn, Daisy Ashford and Al Jennings. The story outlines O'Dare's career and sketches his ideas on life, love, death and religion.

Bookm 69:xxv Jl '29 70w
Boston Transcript p3 Je 22 '29 150w

"One finds in Mr. O'Dare's book the most curious juxtaposition of straight thinking and the sloppiest sentimentality imaginable. The shifting of gears from one level to another is always made with such surprising abruptness, one wonders exactly how much control the author has of his own mind." Edwin Seaver
— + N Y Evening Post p9m My 18 '29 220w

"Perhaps the book is not quite so valuable as a 'document in evidence' in the study of crime and the criminal as its introducer thinks. But it undoubtedly has interest as a literary curiosity and some value as the 'clinical record' of the shifting attitudes toward the underworld of one uneasy soul drawn into it by apparently congenital tendencies."
+ — N Y Times p15 Je 30 '29 400w

"Its confusion, sentimentality, honesty and occasional flashes of wisdom, struggling to expression through the incompletely mastered medium of the English language, make it extremely interesting, to those to whom crime and its prevention seem a vital problem, and to whoever seeks light on human character." W. R. Brooks
— + Outlook 152:190 My 29 '29 100w

ODELL, GEORGE CLINTON DENSMORE. Annals of the New York stage. 6v v 3-4 747;757p il $17.50 Columbia univ. press

792 Theater—New York (city)—History. New York (city)—Social life and customs (27-5965)

"Volume 3 takes the New York theatre from 1821 to 1834; the actor from Junius Brutus Booth to Charles Kean, the Kembles and Tyrone Power. Volume 4 brings the theatre through 'very hard times' to 1843. The pictures, taken from old lithographs, cartoons, paintings and drawings, are multitudinous." (N Y Times) Volumes 1 and 2 were entered in the Book Review Digest, 1927.

Booklist 25:239 Mr '29

"When he gets through, the record of the New York stage for two centuries will have been written down forever." W. P. Eaton
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 D 30 '28 900w

"Doubtless these volumes will be the standard for all time and it is well that the work has been done by one who takes such obvious joy in his task. Few commentators upon the contemporary stage seem as familiar with all its personages as Professor Odell does with those of a forgotten time."
+ Nation 128:568 My 8 '29 130w

"This is a great work as well as a massive; despite all the vivacity of the writer's style and the constant freshness of his enthusiasm, it is valuable chiefly for reference or for skimming, but for the purpose to which it is devoted it will be indispensable." Abbe Niles

+ New Repub 58:180 Mr 27 '29 540w

"It is a question whether any other important monograph history, like this great work of Professor Odell's, can match it in life, color and interest of presentation. . . In these two new volumes, which together cover almost a quarter of a century, the theatrical life and activities of the time are never revealed against a backdrop of empty horizon. Always, vividly, humanly, they are framed in an authentic setting of the city life of the time." F: H. Martens

+ N Y Evening Post p8m D 29 '28 900w

N Y Times p9 D 16 '28 220w

"Is it fancy that toward the end of Volume IV, as he emerges triumphantly from the increasing detail of his work, Professor Odell sounds a little weary? If he is, let him take heart, for the readers who have admiringly and delightedly followed him thus far will surely exact from him a keeping of the seeming promise of his last words in Volume IV. 'The reader, appalled by thought of the sandy tracts through which, at times, he has been reluctantly led, may be encouraged by glimpses of fair horizons in the near future. Within a decade or less he will be delightedly attending performances by the great stock companies that exalted among us the names of Burton and Wallack.' " G: P. Baker

+ Sat R of Lit 5:1188 Jl 20 '29 1350w

Reviewed by M. J. Moses

Theatre Arts Mo 13:379 My '29 1450w

ODENCRANTZ, LOUISE CHRISTINE. Social worker in family, medical and psychiatric social work. (Harper's social science ser. Am. assn. of social workers. Job analysis ser.) 374p $2.50 Harper

361 Social service 29-5079

An analysis of three types of social work, family, medical and psychiatric, which covers the training, duties and responsibilities of the social worker, and the conditions under which she must work, in each field.

---

Booklist 25:309 My '29

St Louis 27:194 Je '29

Wis Lib Bul 25:318 O '29

"An excellent discussion of various types of positions falling under the head of social work. A useful book for anyone who contemplates entering the field."

+ World Tomorrow 12:284 Je '29 100w

O'DONNELL, CHARLES LEO. Rime of the rood, and other poems. 78p $2 (7s 6d) Longmans

811 28-25474

The book is composed for the most part of religious poems. The few poems on secular subjects are infused with a deep religious feeling.

---

"Father O'Donnell's poetry is authentic because it has been struck and hammered out of experience; more than that, out of the highest and most intimate experience of man's life, his spiritual experience." C. P.

+ Cath World 128:626 F '29 430w

"It is a little startling for me, as a non-Catholic, to be obliged to admit that one of the few books of beauty and power I have read in recent years is the poetry of this Catholic mystic. . . Father O'Donnell's book maintains a consistently high level of poetic taste, from which it rises frequently to impressive heights of intense, clear, and beautiful perception." James Rorty

+ Nation 129:123 Jl 31 '29 800w

Wis Lib Bul 25:28 Ja '29

O'DONNELL, ELLIOTT. Fatal kisses (in history and tradition). 253p $2.50 Duffield [10s 6d Hamilton]

"The book contains fourteen miniature crime stories based on fact, or near fact. . . These death-dealing kisses are administered in many countries and in various periods of history."— Sat R of Lit

---

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p41 S 29 '29 130w

"It takes a great deal of imaginative ability and writing skill, much more than this author seems to possess, to invest such material with a glamour that makes the reader forget its horror and its sordidness."

— N Y Times p20 Ag 18 '29 500w

"Mr. O'Donnell has an extremely simple way of presenting his material, introducing the most naïve asides on feminism, morals, female wiles, and kindred topics, which rather disarms criticism in the reader."

Sat R of Lit 6:168 S 21 '29 360w

"His historical exhibits of infamous ladies could have been better displayed, and the light of research on his account of Queen Elizabeth and O'Rourke might rob the story of the thrill Mr. O'Donnell gives to it. The cases are interesting enough in themselves, but the author endeavours to make them larger than life by inventing dramatic dialogues, thereby making them less convincing."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p318 Ap 18 '29 100w

O'DONNELL, PEADAR. Adrigoole. 329p $2.50 Putnam [7s 6d Cape]

29-16822

A story of the peasants of Ireland. Hughie Dalach, like other peasant children, is hired out to earn his living. He marries, after his service in Scotland, and comes back to his own country to make a living off the treacherous bog-land and to raise his family. Things go from bad to worse, and in spite of his struggle tragedy overtakes them all.

---

"The propagandists have given us political novels, and the romantics, like Byrne, have written luscious prose poems of adulation. And in all these Ireland has been a moot subject. But Mr. O'Donnell, with artistic integrity, has placed his emphasis on the novel, of which Ireland happens to be the scene." Paul Allen

+ Bookm 70:562 Ja '30 300w

"The sense of human struggle and human destiny distinguishes the book, and there is fine feeling for character. But a distinctive flavor is contributed by the setting. Life in the characteristic Irish village presents a picture that is nearly unforgetable. If the late Seumas O'Kelly has any rival in depicting that life Mr. O'Donnell is that rival." D: Morton

+ Books ( N Y Herald Tribune) p22 N 10 '29 530w

Boston Transcript p7 D 4 '29 380w

"The book springs direct from the soil, and moves throughout close to it. For all its starkness it has real beauty. As the author himself says of the background of rock and bog against which his figures move, it is grim but beautiful."

+ New Statesman 33:506 Jl 27 '29 110w

"Mr. O'Donnell's naturalism is stark and overwhelming; at the same time it is informed with the quality of tragic poetry that lifts it out of the rut of mere reporting." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p12m N 2 '29 80w

" 'Adrigoole,' is the work of an Irishman who is humane, and bitter because he is humane. Quieter than his fellow-countryman, Liam O'Flaherty, and without the tremendous restless vitality that surges through books like 'The Informer' and 'The House of Gold,' yet Mr. O'Donnell commands his own force. . . There is tenderness in 'Adrigoole,' without sentimentality; there is starkness without life-draining excision. The style is simple and driving, and yet there is the happy Celtic faculty of conveying a sense of poetry through phrases that suggest more than is on the printed page."

O'DONNELL, PEADAR—Continued

+ N Y Times p6 N 10 '29 800w

Reviewed by L. H. Titterton
N Y World p11m N 24 '29 250w

"I find 'Adrigoole' very true and very moving. The book bears the stamp of talent and of individuality." D. C. Russell
+ Sat R of Lit 6:584 D 21 '29 530w

"One must regard Mr. O'Donnell's book rather as a moving account of the talk, customs and struggles of the peasantry scratching a living out of its bog and mountain, than a tragic picture of two human beings." V. S. Pritchett
Spec 143:198 Ag 10 '29 120w

O'DONNELL, PEADAR. The way it was with them (Eng title Islanders); with an introd. by Robert Lynd. 244p $2.50 Putnam

28-18238

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

For biographical sketch of the author see Wilson bulletin 3:328 N '28

Booklist 25:166 Ja '29

"The initial choice of the Catholic Book Club of New York. . . The people of this book live, and the reader lives with them. The story is beautifully told. Its style is simple and severe as the excellent woodcuts that adorn the book." J. J. F.
+ Cath World 128:629 F '29 380w

Cleveland Open Shelf p31 F '29

"Peadar O'Donnell gives us what neither J. M. Synge nor Liam O'Flaherty gave us in their account of the Aran Islands—the normal life of simple, upstanding, toiling men and women in a place where the dominating fact of life is an immemorial poverty. In the writing of the book there is no fantasy, eloquence, or lyricism, but there is faithfulness and literalness. The story places Peadar O'Donnell amongst the half dozen Irish writers who count."
+ Dial 86:264 Mr '29 200w

"Mr. O'Donnell writes a prose which has its own peculiar rhythm and terse beauty. With a tender but unsentimental understanding of the islanders, he creates characters which are singularly alive and sympathetic. At times the book seems just a bit too thin, too obvious in its simplicity."
+ — Nation 128:139 Ja 30 '29 100w

" 'Islanders' is remarkable for an exquisite simplicity both in its matter and its style. The only false figure in it is the doctor's sister, who belongs to a different class from the other characters, and is wholly absurd. But the island people are at once so obviously and so profoundly true that we never doubt them. This is a distinguished piece of work with only one serious flaw." Edwin Muir
+ — Nation and Ath 42:752 F 18 '28 200w

"Realism, such as this, free from grossness and morbidity, is as rare as it is refreshing. Mr. O'Donnell writes as though writing were as much a process of nature as the tides and the storms on the coast of Donegal."
+ New Statesman 30:602 F 18 '28 80w

"A living, breathing human document, told with the simplicity of the master craftsman and the imaginative sincerity of the artist. . . Read this book by all means, including Robert Lynd's introduction." E. G. Grady
+ N Y World p11m N 4 '28 220w

Pratt p37 spring '29

Times [London] Lit Sup p506 Jl 5 '28 220w

Wis Lib Bul 25:31 Ja '29

O'DUFFY, EIMAR. Spacious adventures of the man in the street. 406p $2.50 (7s 6d) Macmillan

[29-17553]

"Mr. Aloysius O'Kennedy, having his spirit lured out of his body by an experimental 'Philosopher,' finds himself adrift in the Universe, till, borrowing another shape, he alights in Rathé, and finds a highly evolved people. Their ways astonish him, his account of Earth inspires horror and aversion. The mockery of some social matters, however, is very telling, and Mr. O'Kennedy's slightly discreditable adventures have their humours."—Spec

"What opens as inauspiciously as any amazing story soon reveals itself a social critique, inferior certainly to those of H. G. Wells and James Branch Cabell, but, nevertheless, recognizably in the tradition of Rabelais, Swift and Voltaire." N. F.
+ — Boston Transcript p2 Ja 12 '29 450w

"This story of an Irishman's experiences in another planet where the ways of the world we live in are reversed is—true to the Swift tradition—at once an entertaining satire and a rather penetrating examination of the values of contemporary civilization." C. G. Poore.
+ N Y Times p2 Ja 20 '29 980w

"Mr. Eimar O'Duffy's vigorous satire, The Spacious Adventures of the Man in the Street, does not admit the existence of lovesome people. It has a flavour of Erewhon, a dash of The Martians, and, at its very best, a tang of Gulliver's Travels." R. A. Taylor
Spec 141:797 N 24 '28 120w

"Mr. O'Duffy has aimed higher than his weapon will carry. But on the whole he has carried out a difficult plan quite well enough to deserve a place in the company of 'Erewhon.' "
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p960 D 6 '28 480w

ODUM, HOWARD WASHINGTON. Wings on my feet. 309p $2.50 Bobbs

29-18933

A sequel to "Rainbow Round My Shoulder" (Book Review Digest, 1928) this is a story of the Negro in the World war. "Black Ulysses found the war not unlike the rambling existence that preceded the months of his service in uniform; he had been cold and hungry before, and violence was no new thing to him. Not at all certain what all the shooting was for, he 'thought him and the war was the same thing.' In its form 'Wings on My Feet' differs in only one detail from 'Rainbow Round My Shoulder.' Mr. Odum has chosen to omit the connecting passages used in the earlier book, leaving Black Ulysses to tell the story in his own words, so that the book becomes a monologue, in which the natural rhythms of uncultured speech are broken only by snatches of song, and many of the fragments of song are merely new words to old tunes." (Books [N Y Herald Tribune])

Booklist 26:72 N '29

" 'Wings on My Feet' adds very definitely to the epic proportions of 'Rainbow Round My Shoulder.' It is delightful reading; it is valuable documentation, history of a novel sort. And its seeming artlessness is all the more tribute to the complete self-subordination of its creator to the fine material he has made into genuine art." Herschel Brickell
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 S 1 '29 1200w

"Dr. Odum's book defies classification. It is beautiful, as the Rhapsody in Blue is beautiful. It has tune, form and rhythm. It is rugged with the virility of warriors. It is in prose form, but it scans. It is as primitive as the shards of Aztec architecture, as a Moroccan jewel. It has tragedy, pathos, and humor. One abominates superlatives, but one feels that this simple tale of a common soldier, in its indefinite rhythm, comes nearer to expressing the enlisted man's reactions in an engrossing narrative than any other has yet done." B. B.
+ Boston Transcript p4 S 14 '29 570w

"A strange and fascinating black parallel to 'All Quiet on the Western Front.' Odum knows his negroes."
+ Christian Century 46:1280 O 16 '29 40w

Cleveland Open Shelf p152 D '29

"My notion is that if a total stranger to America asked me for a description of the uneducated Negro, and if I were foolish enough to attempt so impossible a thing, I should end by giving this stranger 'Rainbow Round My Shoulder' and 'Wings on My Feet.' All that he got would be a Negro talking, but this would be enough in view of the fact that the talk comes direct and pure, with not only the proper diction there but the inflection, the volume of sound, the expression, the gesture as well. And all this without any of the favorite devices of the dialect writer. No misspelling, no labored grotesquerie. It is obvious, to be sure, that Mr. Odum has been conscious of one device: he has left out most of the definite articles, most of the small words which do not get one into the meat of a story. But I like to think that Mr. Odum has for the most part worked without tricks—that Gordon's talk has somehow come straight through him to us." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 129:494 O 30 '29 700w

" 'Wings on My Feet' is a book of dignity, written for the sake of both documentation and beauty. . . At times the tempo becomes monotonous, but it is a monotony that haunts rather than dulls."

+ N Y Times p5 S 1 '29 780w

"However important the merits of 'Wings On My Feet' as an authentic document echoing the war and revealing the vital sensations of an actual flesh and blood personality, as straight fiction the book lacks certain enduring qualities and the inventive force that would serve to rank it as an important literary achievement." R. E. Kennedy

— + Sat R of Lit 6:244 O 12 '29 580w

"It is poetry about elementals and cast in a kind of dithyrambic prose that slips into rhymed verse with every crescendo of emotion, here a stanza of religious yearning, here a scrap of 'the soldier man blues,' now a ribald marching song. The hundred vivid mosaic bits fall into a solid picture of the Negro at war. Fear, blood, women, gambling, work, mud, endurance ('I can do what I have to do') are somehow lifted toward poetry and meaning by singing, and an insouciant fatalism in the face of the universe." Leon Whipple

+ Survey 63:162 N 1 '29 850w

OEMLER, MRS MARIE (CONWAY). Johnny Reb; a story of South Carolina. 433p $2.50 Century

29-19457

Uncle Johnny Reb of Maryville, S.C. is a Civil war veteran who ran the town's old mule-drawn street car. His best friends were Dr Stephen Ambry and Paul de Villepointeaux. Most of the action centers around the doctor, his love for Cynthia Stone, and his rival, the town banker.

---

Booklist 26:120 D '29

"Sentiment runs rampant in many spots, but 'Johnny Reb' is the sort of volume one reads without noticing the passage of time. More important than the tale itself is the delightful characterization of Uncle Johnny. All the warmth of dreamy Carolina emerges from the thoroughly lovable Johnny Reb."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 O 27 '29 230w

Cleveland Open Shelf p142 N '29

"A repetitious and somewhat long-winded, but generally pleasant and wholesome little story."

— + N Y Times p26 O 6 '29 500w

OFFUTT, MILTON. Protection of citizens abroad by the armed forces of the United States. (Johns Hopkins univ. Studies in hist. and political science ser.) 170p pa $1.50 Johns Hopkins press

323.6 International law, Private. Citizenship. Intervention. United States—Foreign relations 28-28780

"The author deals with seventy-six occasions on which the armed forces of the United States have operated on foreign soil or have engaged in actual hostilities with the nationals of other countries within the jurisdiction of a foreign state. These range from the Aegean Islands to Manchuria and from Mexico to the Falklands. The study is prefaced with an introductory chapter on the Legal Aspects of Protection by Force, in which the author recognizes the well settled distinction between intervention and interposition."—Ann Am Acad

---

"While the writer does not examine some of the finer points of international and constitutional law treated in J. R. Clark's memorandum for the state department on the right to protect citizens in foreign countries by landing forces (1912), he has produced a useful résumé of a type of American official activity which is gaining in public interest." Quincy Wright

+ Am J Soc 35:145 Jl '29 320w

Am Pol Sci R 23:234 F '29 70w

Reviewed by J: G. Hervey

Ann Am Acad 145:208 S '29 220w

O'FLAHERTY, LIAM. House of gold. 348p $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d Cape]

29-20012

Nora Saunders is the wife of Ramon Costello, the wealthy tyrant of a little Irish town. She hates and fears him, longing to escape, and her lover, O'Neill, tries to aid her but fails. The parish priest, also under the spell of Nora's beauty, hates Costello. Nora's life ends tragically, and Ramon Costello meets financial ruin and death.

---

"This tragedy of an Irish country district after the revolution is perhaps, in broad body and subtlety of design, Mr. O'Flaherty's best work thus far. Mr. O'Flaherty is plainly in Swift's line though his satire is more indirect."

+ Bookm 70:205 O '29 250w

"Just why the author of 'Mr. Gilhooley' should have turned out this mush of romanticism is one of those enigmas that makes book-reviewing at once so interesting and so irritating. Here is one of those titillating tracts in which everyone is marvelously beautiful or ugly or rich or wicked or sinning (or combinations of these and other superlatives) and after the reader has got a vicarious thrill out of circumstances which he could hardly expect to attain for himself, appropriate retributions overcome all the mis-doers in a general flood of catastrophe, and he (the reader) is rewarded with that glowing superior assurance that of course sins (other people's), are properly punished in this universe."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 O 27 '29 350w

Boston Transcript p2 O 16 '29 330w

"The course of the calamity is so swift that neither time nor space is spared for anything but a record of its track. Once or twice there is a fleeting glimpse of a lovely bit of Irish sea coast; the rest is lust and squalor. Adjectives such as powerful, brutal, startling fit the book no better than desperate, melodramatic, and insignificant."

Nation 130:51 Ja 8 '30 100w

"The madness is the least convincing part of the book, the drunkenness the most, and though the whole is interesting and very readable, it varies extremely in value from page to page and almost from sentence to sentence. Parts of it are very good—the description of the people driving their cattle from the hills and neighbouring villages to the market at Barra, and arguing and gossiping by the way, Barra itself and the market, the drinking and rioting, Ramon Mor with his mother. Mr. O'Flaherty understands the life of the people better than that of individuals." L. L. Irvine

+ — Nation and Ath 46:52 O 12 '29 250w

"It is an exciting book: but the mythological concentration, which is its chief strength, also brings with it corresponding disadvantages: an extravagant intensity, a vein of exalted melodrama which tends to wear out the reader's patience." P. Q.

New Statesman 33:781 O 5 '29 280w

O'FLAHERTY, LIAM—Continued

"'The House of Gold' is at once the most ambitious and the least satisfying novel of a writer who has so many gifts that they are likely to overwhelm him. It seems to be a number of contradictory things. At times its realism is so sharp, its perceptions so keen, that one marvels at Mr. O'Flaherty's powers of sight and intuition. Then will come a burst of wild and wanton Celtic poetry. The people of the drama are by turns real and over-passionate human beings and symbols in some vast allegory of greed. Still, the book is unforgettable."

+ — N Y Times p2 O 13 '29 750w

Reviewed by Bernard Smith

N Y World p11m O 20 '29 480w

"The House of Gold, a chronicle of unspeakable evil, of horror, and overwhelming ruin, is lifted from the merely sordid to the levels of pure tragedy by a pervading sense of Nemesis, by imaginative richness and a dreadful beauty." Mary Shirley

+ Outlook 153:188 O 2 '29 270w

"Mr. O'Flaherty is neither a satirist nor a moralist, and this, from one point of view, makes his attack the more damaging. He goes straight ahead with his tale, he wastes no time on moral indignation. He is not an embittered philanthropist or reformer; he accepts the deplorable condition of affairs and uses it as material for his art. . . He certainly wields a spell; but the spell lasts only so long as one is able to be convinced by the amazingly one-sided, rudimentary type of human being he describes." L. P. Hartley

— + Sat R 148:456 O 19 '29 550w

"His peasants live; their conversations are recorded with amazing accuracy. O'Flaherty writes dialogue as brilliantly as Ernest Hemingway. Yet withal, he dilutes his effects with an unnecessary melodrama. Sean O'Casey writes melodrama, but it is the weeping, exaggerating quality that is to be found in the Irish soul. O'Flaherty's consists of metaphorical exaggerations, a description of spiritual struggle and tragedy with the use of cinema technique. His people must always look at themselves in mirrors and see their faces transformed into horrifying blobs of ghoulish flesh. They inevitably see red spots when they are angry; wheels grind in their skulls when they are disintegrating spiritually. His tragedy becomes less convincing because it is stagey." J. T. Farrell

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:472 N 30 '29 700w

"While in this book Mr. O'Flaherty has widened his range to a certain extent, his defects as an artist become increasingly clear. His capacity for physical description is unequalled, but his creatures become more and more either beautiful or monstrous animal enormities with scarcely any minds at all. Everyone is shouting and raging, as Mr. O'Flaherty stands beside them and pumps the contorting passion into them, and at times they are inflated to the grotesque dimensions of melodrama. It is, however, a fine, powerful and exciting book." V. S. Pritchett

+ — Spec 143:418 S 28 '29 400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p788 O 10 '29 400w

O'FLAHERTY, LIAM. Mountain tavern, and other stories. 287p $2.50 Harcourt [7s 6d Cape]

29-11444

Twenty stories of Irish peasant life, repellent but powerful. Contents: The painted woman; Birth; The ditch; The oar; The blackbird's mate; The Mountain tavern; Prey; Mackerel for sale; The fall of Joseph Timmins; The fairy goose; The alien skull; The sinner; The black rabbit; The letter; The little white dog; The stream; The strange disease; The stone; The child of God; Red Barbara.

---

Bookm 69:558 Jl '29 400w

"I like stories that have the warmth of human blood in them. I like to eat a story slowly and feel it mix with me and change my sight. There is a coldness in me toward Mr. O'Flaherty's stories because I don't feel anything at all when I read them. I don't have any thoughts about them. There is a chilled, locked place in my bones that only feeling can loosen, and as I read Mr. O'Flaherty I am conscious only of this locked part of me, the hard, dead dry bones." Margery Latimer

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Je 2 '29 800w

Boston Transcript p5 Jl 17 '29 420w

Cleveland Open Shelf p127 S '29

"There is a suspicious sameness in the catastrophe of each of these stories. They all end, as it were, in a shout. And in persisting in sacrificing everything to the stark act and the unsheathing of passion, Mr. O'Flaherty betrays not only a disturbing lack of intellectual substance and subtlety, but an apparent inability to widen and vary his range, and a tendency to neglect his great lyrical gifts."

— New Statesman 33:supx My 4 '29 420w

"Whatever the stories, whether they are about birds, or beasts, or humans, they are the work of a modern genius." J: Chamberlain

+ N Y Times p2 My 19 '29 1350w

Outlook 152:189 My 29 '29 180w

"Mr. O'Flaherty has certainly advanced in his art; he has shorn it of every superfluity, and like many shorn things, lambs and poodles, it has an air of nakedness. Many of the tales have little or no setting, they might happen at any epoch, in any country. They are extremely readable and, unlike human beings, who without their clothes tend to look alike, they have plenty of individuality." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 147:649 My 11 '29 230w

"The first thing we note about the stories in this volume is the real descriptive power that they have. But [the writer] is by no means a master of the inner world: his psychology is simplified; the men and women whom he puts before us have only a single emotion; often enough they do not possess, but are possessed by it. . . In spite of the violence which seems to be an obsession with him, Liam O'Flaherty often gives us the impression that, amongst all the Irish prose writers, he is the one who has discovered a beautiful way of writing about elemental people." Padraic Colum

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:73 Ag 24 '29 1000w

Reviewed by R. A. Taylor

Spec 143:662 Ap 27 '29 300w

"In imaginative and careful nature sketches, and in quieter tales, Mr. O'Flaherty preserves his power; but many of his stories appear to have been jotted down in fine frenzy rather than carefully written."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p364 My 2 '29 180w

OGBURN, WILLIAM FIELDING, ed. Recent social changes in the United States since the war and particularly in 1927. (Univ. of Chicago sociological ser.) 230p $3 Univ. of Chicago press

309.1 United States—Social conditions. Social problems. United States—Economic conditions 29-2546

"This book of nineteen chapters is mostly reprinted from The American Journal of Sociology for July, 1928. The studies cover Population, Natural Resources, Inventions, and Discoveries, Production, Foreign Trade and Investment, Foreign Policy, Labor, Wages, Employment, Social and Labor Legislation, Public Health and Medicine, Communication, Group and Community Organization, Rural Life, the Family, Crime, Religion, Education, and Government. The writers of the articles are nearly all well-known men in the field of practical or collegiate social research."—Survey

---

Reviewed by S. A. Rice

Am J Soc 34:1196 My '29 560w

Booklist 25:309 My '29

"The inevitable difficulty with this first attempt at social accountancy is that some of the authors have concentrated on the year 1927, while others have taken for their canvass a ten-year period. This discrepancy will undoubtedly be eliminated in later volumes."

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 My 19 '29 550w

"Every specialist in the social sciences and every one with a practical interest in the great American public will in the course of time have this annual on his desk. Within these pages lies an accurate short history of the postwar decade and the best material available for predictions in regard to the next decade." Winifred Raushenbush

+ Nation 128:323 Mr 13 '29 250w

St Louis 27:193 Je '29

"On the whole, the book is a bit disappointing. . . For brief discussion within the limits of the subjects selected, the material is admirably presented and many of the discussions contain facts and conclusions that should be in the equipment of every one interested in the social scene." J. K. Hart

+ — Survey 62:259 My 15 '29 300w

World Tomorrow 12:236 My '29 40w

OGDEN, GEORGE WASHINGTON. Sooner land. 329p $2 Dodd

29-4212

This historical novel is similar in theme to the author's "Oklahoma." It deals with the rush into the Middle West when that part of the country was opened to settlement, and the clash between the "sooners" and the settlers. The "sooners" were the lawless element who tried to wrest their land from the legal homesteaders.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 F 17 '29 70w

Boston Transcript p6 Mr 30 '29 130w

"It gives a good picture of old boomer days." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p10m F 23 '29 70w

"The wealth of detail presented by George W. Ogden in 'Sooner Land' would be sufficient to prove that he was either an eyewitness to the opening of the Cherokee Strip or else a close historical student of the event. . . In the concluding chapters, one must admit, the story becomes too much of a type with the standardized Western novel."

+ — N Y Times p9 F 24 '29 450w

Springf'd Republican p7e Jl 14 '29 50w

OGNYOV, N., pseud. See Rozânov, M. G.

O'GRADY, JOHN. Introduction to social work. (Century Catholic college texts) 398p $2.50 Century

360 Social service. Roman Catholic church—Charities 28-15904

Father O'Grady, editor of the Catholic charities review and professor of sociology at the Catholic university of America, outlines the various fields of social work and the methods by which the aims of each field are carried out. "This is the first attempt on the part of a Catholic writer to give a comprehensive view of the whole field of social work and to integrate the Charities of the Catholic Church in their proper relationship to the public and non-sectarian agencies of welfare." (Editor's preface)

"The reviewer knows of no more interesting or impartial description of contemporary social work for college students and others who have practically no knowledge of this field. Of course, along with the description there goes an interpretation that is very frankly Catholic." S. A. Queen

+ Am J Soc 34:543 N '28 150w

Boston Transcript p3 Ag 11 '28 420w

Christian Century 46:205 F 7 '29 40w

St Louis 26:377 D '28

"The book is remarkable in the way it develops the values of the different approaches to the tasks which social work undertakes without becoming controversial. This quality, combined with the completeness with which the field is covered, and its first-hand knowledge of social work makes it an ideal beginners' textbook for courses in Catholic colleges and universities." F. J. Bruno

+ Survey 61:511 Ja 15 '29 350w

O'HALLORAN, MRS ELSPETH (MACDUFFIE) (ELSPETH, pseud.). Strange truth. 104p $2 Houghton

811 29-6884

Witty, philosophic poems which rail at life and its absurdities. Many of the poems have appeared in the Conning Tower of the New York World, signed Elspeth.

Reviewed by C: Divine

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Ap 21 '29 120w

"Poems which run the entire course from collegiate buffooneries to calculated sonnets. Their common ingredient is a ready wit that knows no bending. The New York World's 'Conning Tower,'—F. P. A.'s—first recognized the vitality of their laughter, cynical as it often is."

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 13 '29 100w

Reviewed by Schuyler Jackson

New Repub 59:240 Jl 17 '29 320w

"Reading her poems as they are brought together in 'Strange Truth,' I have felt once more the admiration that moved me whenever I came across anything signed with her name in the Conning Tower; and in addition, I have recognized her uncommon versatility and mastery in form. Like most good lyricists, she has the ability to make difficult achievements seem nonchalantly effortless, and even the pieces which are obviously experimental bear the mark of the competent poet." Granville Hicks

+ N Y World p11m Ap 7 '29 400w

"Such a collection of verse as this, of course, is not of vast literary importance. But its popularity is one of the interesting phases of contemporary reading, and a rather natural reaction to an abundance of psychic novels." J. D. Tasker

+ Outlook 151:588 Ap 10 '29 150w

Wis Lib Bul 25:158 My '29

O'HIGGINS, HARVEY JERROLD. Detective Duff unravels it. 303p $2 Liveright

29-13470

Detective Duff has a flair for psychoanalysis. His knowledge of human nature and of the way the human mind works is responsible for his successes in these episodes variously reprinted.

"The subjects are totally unlike and each is handled in a neat psychological manner."

+ Bookm 70:xxv S '29 40w

"By all means read this one, unless you are dead set against modern psychology and other progress." Will Cuppy

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Je 30 '29 130w

"These stories are far above the average effort in their line; they are intelligent, pleasant little tales." Marjorie Johnson

+ N Y Evening Post p7m Jl 13 '29 480w

"The stories are not always convincing, unless one happens to be an unquestioning believer in the magical results to be attained by modern psychology and psycho-analysis."

N Y Times p16 Je 30 '29 200w

"Something new and rather pleasing in the detective line is Mr. Duff. The solution in each case is logical and inevitable. There is humor and subtlety in the handling—enough to go in a dozen detective stories of the usual kind. Highly recommended." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 152:470 Jl 17 '29 80w

"Of excitement and thrills there are virtually none in Detective Duff's adventures, but lovers of American efficiency will revel in this spectacular exhibition of one phase of it."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Je 16 '29 180w

OHTA, TAKASHI, and SPERRY, MARGARET. Golden wind. 269p pa 75c Boni, C.

The romance of a young Japanese, Takawo Muto, who has fled from imprisonment in his native land, to join the army of Ko in Manchuria. He performs many deeds of valor, falls in love with a Russian girl, Nadja, and is further influenced by two other women, Kay and Lee. The story of his wanderings in exile closes as he sails for Cape Town and the coasts of Brazil.

---

"I for one regret very deeply that Mr. Ohta did not try to write his own story in his own way. For he has led an enviably varied and fascinating life as a Japanese political exile in the Chinese revolutionary army and later as an Oriental, somehow making his way in Brazil and the United States. That is a story worth writing down. It seems to me that collaboration has spoiled what might have been a very unusual record of unusual adventures." Isidore Schneider

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 N 10 '29 400w

"The story has many elements of charlatanism. . . But in others ways, 'The Golden Wind' is sincere, and at least it has a background of actual experience. Moreover, being partially written by a Japanese, it has a certain grace of movement and delicacy of image that a western novel on the same subject would utterly lack."

+ — Boston Transcript p2 N 16 '29 200w

"The story of Oriental adventures here presented is not for every reader. Action there is and excitement; love and war and religious mystery offer sufficient incidents to satisfy the most melodramatic taste; yet it is not the thousands of sensation seekers who make for the popularity of books, but the limited number who can find enjoyment in prose of a high order, who will really appreciate this narrative." Johan Smertenko

+ Nation 129:723 D 11 '29 500w

"Not only is this book remarkable for a most unusual and successful blending of East and West in romantic narrative; its selection as the first of the 'Paper Books' published by Charles Boni marks it as a portent in American publication."

+ N Y Times p5 O 20 '29 700w

." 'The Golden Wind' is the product of an interesting collaboration. Mr. Ohta, out of his own past, has furnished a story full of dramatic incident and color. Miss Sperry has given shape and pattern to his story and clothed it all in a fine, vivid prose which has about it a quality as Eastern as the story. . . In the matter of characterization the conflict of tradition between the collaborators—the conflict of Eastern fatalism and Western romance—seems to have prevented a true understanding of the hero." Jonathan Daniels

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:363 N 9 '29 1000w

OLCOTT, VIRGINIA. Concetta, the coral girl. 77p il $1.75 Stokes

28-21421

A gay story of a happy little Italian girl who lived in a tiny Sicilian village, and what happened on her birthday.

---

Booklist 25:171 Ja '29

St Louis 27:33 Ja '29

"Not often does it fall to our lot to read such a charming and delightful book as Miss Olcott's latest. From the first stanza of the poem 'Cicily' to the last 'Addio,' the author saturates her book with the beauty and the fascination of Taormina-on-the-Hills. Especially pleasing is the serene atmosphere of the whole book." L. I. Sansone

+ Sat R of Lit 5:499 D 8 '28 280w

Wis Lib Bul 24:348 D '28

OLCOTT, WILLIAM TYLER, and PUTNAM, EDMUND WHITMAN. Field book of the skies; a presentation of the main facts of modern astronomy and a practical field book for the observer. (Putnam's nature field bks.) 534p il $3.50 Putnam

523 Astronomy 29-18707

A comprehensive field book of astronomy, which gives a chapter to each of the constellations and includes the myths connected with each one, as well as diagrams. There are chapters on the solar system, the milky way, and telescopes; a chronology of astronomy; a list of the names of stars and their meanings; a bibliography and an index.

---

Booklist 26:106 D '29

Boston Transcript p2 N 9 '29 250w

"It is intended chiefly for the use of beginners, but is so arranged that more experienced observers will find it a practical field book for use with small telescopes. In the first chapters there are eloquent and cogent arguments for the persuasion of those who may be skeptical about the value or interest to be found in the study of astronomy, explanations of reasons for surety about its principles, exposition of its fundamentals and directions for using the book."

+ N Y Times p11 O 6 '29 320w

OLDFELD, PETER, pseud. Alchemy murder. 315p $2 Washburn

29-9002

"Concerning a philanthropist who was murdered in cold blood in the course of carrying out his plan to link together all the large chemical corporations of the world to prevent a recurrence of the use of chemicals in warfare."—Bookm

---

Bookm 69:xxx My '29 50w

"International crookery, hardly up to the Oppenheim mark, but readable and exciting in spots." Will Cuppy

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Mr 31 '29 80w

Boston Transcript p2 My 25 '29 150w

N Y Times p16 Je 2 '29 180w

"A very good detective story."

+ Sat R 148:80 Jl 20 '29 160w

Times [London] Lit Sup p561 Jl 11 '29 200w

OLDFIELD, CLAUDE HOUGHTON (CLAUDE HOUGHTON, pseud.). Crisis. 264p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d T. Butterworth]

29-5952

John Raymond has but one year to live. Devotedly in love with his wife, a man of many friends, Raymond prepares himself mentally to meet the crisis and in doing so finds a way to help wife and friends meet the problems of their own lives. And after all the doctor was mistaken.

---

"Despite faults [the author] has written a pleasantly original tale that may possibly be useful to those who look to fiction for their daily philosophy."

+ — Bookm 69:558 Jl '29 320w

"Claude Houghton's first book to appear in America was 'Neighbors,' published in 1927. 'Crisis' does not fulfill the distinct promise of the earlier work. There is good writing, plenty of it, but the story as a whole remains unconvincing. Claude Houghton's ability deserves better material than this." Lynn Carrick

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Ap 7 '29 400w

Boston Transcript p5 My 25 '29 180w

"The author has set himself a problem fascinating in its diverse potentialities, but he has failed entirely to live up to the implications inherent in it. The result is a book in which the reader soon wearies of looking for that which is not to be found."

— N Y Times p16 Ap 28 '29 380w

Springf'd Republican p5e Je 2 '29 120w

"There is a quiet human appeal in this story of a business man who quietly learned resignation, and the happy ending, though expected, is almost superfluous."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p340 Ap 25 '29 180w

OLDFIELD, JOSIAH. Eat and be happy. 115p $1.50 Appleton [3s 6d Methuen]
613.2 Diet. Food [29-10729]

A short treatise on diet, written by an English doctor. He points out the fact that it is much better to eat too little than too much, shows the results of incorrect eating on the health, and outlines easy and practical rules of diet.

---

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 D 15 '29 70w

"It is a thoughtful little book, interestingly written and full of wise and helpful suggestions."
+ Boston Transcript p2 N 6 '29 250w
J Home Econ 22:52 Ja '30 50w
Times [London] Lit Sup p438 My 30 '29 150w

O'LEARY, CON. This delicate creature. 307p $2.50 Elliot Holt, 25 W. 45th St, N.Y. [7s 6d Constable]
29-2130

"Boda Coakley, the beautiful and high-spirited daughter of an impoverished Irish nobleman, has married, for his money, a rather stupid English peer twice her age; has remorselessly betrayed him for a slightly less stupid young Oxford Blue; and is leading, without qualm of conscience, the frivolous and empty life of her aristocratic set. From an East Indian explorer she obtains a marvelous drug, Nirvabogoea, which has the property of causing one to become all those, human or animal, whom he has ever injured. Eager for thrills at any price, she takes the drug. There follows a vision of no less than seventeen injured lives. . . Small wonder that when Boda comes out from under the influence of the drug she is a changed lady."—Sat R of Lit

---

"The sophistication is really not very crisp, the fantasy is ingenious rather than imaginative, and the moral lesson has been well-thumbed by the generations." Dorothy Brewster
Bookm 69:308 My '29 380w

"'This Delicate Creature' is the first book to be published independently by Mr. Elliot Holt, formerly vice-president of Henry Holt & Co., who has taken for his motto 'fewer and better books.' He will issue only one book a month, and if future selections measure up to his first, the project deserves loud applause." M. C. Dawson
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Mr 17 '29 750w

"'This Delicate Creature' is a novel that begins with an ironic laugh and ends with tremulous, pitiful tears." W. S. B.
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 23 '29 450w

Reviewed by Raymond Mortimer
Nation and Ath 43:564 Jl 28 '28 110w

"The stories are clever rather than profound, and the writing though good is not strikingly so."
New Statesman 31:546 Ag 4 '28 100w
— N Y Times p28 Mr 17 '29 450w

"The theme of the regeneration of a soul is usually dealt out with a heavier hand than is apparent in this book. The gayest of wit, the lightest of fantasy brighten it, the tenderest pity, the sincerest emotion soften it. It has what most books lack—flavor, mood and personality to a high degree. And its point of view is refreshing."
+ N Y World p11m Ap 28 '29 230w

Reviewed by L. P. Hartley
Sat R 146:218 Ag 18 '28 300w

"The dangers as well as the opportunities of such a plot are manifest. It takes the artistry of a Virginia Woolf to move serenely through a phantasmagoria. With Mr. O'Leary the result is too often mere confusion. . . Nevertheless, Mr. O'Leary's attempt to present the fanciful, the sensational, and the horrible, in the service of an abstract idea is of distinct significance and interest." E. S. Bates
+ — Sat R of Lit 5:747 Mr 9 '29 930w

"There is something fantastically unreal in his human characterization; and before the end we feel that the butterfly Boda has been broken on too many wheels. The story of 'Boy,' born scholar and ardent priest, is the sincerest and most touching episode in the book, which has real promise." R. A. Taylor
Spec 141:170 Ag 4 '28 150w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 5 '30 180w

"O'Leary avoids mere psychological subtlety and experiment. The satiric simplicity of his scheme with its compact style tends to isolate the episodes, but they are gradually unified by a culminating purpose and emotion."
Times [London] Lit Sup p566 Ag 2 '28 370w

OLIVER, JOHN RATHBONE. Victim and victor. 435p $2.50 Macmillan
28-28747

This is the story, from a psychological approach, of a priest of the Church of England who was unfrocked, denied restitution to his orders, and after a period of deterioration and despair, was regenerated thru the outcasts whom he saved.

---

Booklist 25:369 Jl '29

"Dr. Oliver could undoubtedly write either a good thesis or a good novel, but the result in 'Victim and Victor' is fatal to the success of either. The framework of his intention shows too gauntly through his effort." C. K. H.
— + Boston Transcript p3 Ja 19 '29 300w

"The book is written with deep earnestness, an expert knowledge of psychiatry, and much literary skill."
+ Christian Century 46:204 F 7 '29 140w

"Those interested in pathological cases will here find many worth-while studies and recognize, perhaps, that if they wish to treat such among their patients, their parishioners, or their friends, these pages have wisdom for them. One thing is sure—there are no dull pages for one who is interested in the most fascinating of all subjects, his human kind." S. B. Meeser
+ Crozer Q 6:260 Ap '29 200w

"The story of a deposed priest heart-broken by his exile from the Church is so anachronistic in interest as to make its plausible presentation a literary achievement. The theme belongs to the mood and measure of Mrs. Humphry Ward and Elizabeth Stuart Phelps. Although the literary method is lame and the characters—except that of the 'subject'—are lifeless, the case-history is absorbing enough to overcome disbelief in a situation so remote from current attention." D. B. W.
+ — New Repub 57:254 Ja 16 '29 160w

"Dr. Oliver has bungled grievously. Contrarily, he has achieved one magnificent success. He has succeeded in reporting the glory that motivates a priest, in setting down an account of that strange conviction known as a 'vocation.'" Byron Darnton
+ — N Y Evening Post p8m N 24 '28 520w

"The author has accomplished the feat of showing a man who was, in the best sense of the term, a born priest; one who helped and comforted others, whose sympathy, vivid imagination and bitter personal experience enabled him to understand the agony of sick and suffering minds, and so understanding give genuine aid. Michael Mann is a real person, a living, lovable, faulty human being."
+ N Y Times p6 D 9 '28 750w
Pratt p37 spring '29

OLIVER, J: R.—Continued

"The author's tender humanity redeems what would otherwise be an impossible book. There is much of it that reads like a tract. The thesis of the priest-physician is permitted to oust the living characters. Pages of expanded case reports are intruded. . . Perchance, however, the book will appeal more widely through its defects than through its merits. Today when the notion of the priest-physician is being eagerly discussed, 'Victor and Victim' may be welcomed simply because of its embodiment of the contemporary issue." E. S. Bates

— + Sat R of Lit 5:1047 My 25 '29 850w

"'Victim and Victor' is a scholarly portrayal of a somewhat 'queer' character type from a psychiatrist's viewpoint. It provides absorbing and instructive reading for professional and amateur students of psychology but can hardly have been written with any expectation that it would be received as a novel."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 21 '29 620w

OLIVER, LAURENCE, pseud. See Brown, L. O.

OLIVIER, EDITH. As far as Jane's grandmother's. 320p $2.50 Viking press [7s 6d Secker]

Jane's mother ruled her household by her colossal power of non-resistance; Jane's grandmother ruled her household and Jane's mother with a rod of iron. Between these two women Jane vibrated like the charming nonentity that she was. Just as her love affair with Julian was beginning, Jane's father and mother were killed in an accident. Jane went to live with her grandmother. It happened that grandmother did not regard Julian with favor so the affair came to naught. And Jane lived on even after her grandmother's death, a pitiful sacrifice to the utter selfishness of two women, each in her way supremely strong.

---

"Less imaginative than The love-child but by no means lacking in the delicacy and subtlety that made Miss Olivier's former novel so charming."

Booklist 25:396 Jl '29

"Miss Olivier works in miniature, but on the scale that she has chosen, her touch is unerring."

+ Bookm 69:309 My '29 500w

"The book belongs by intent in the company of significant work. The style is quietly competent but not distinguished. There is some excellent comedy. There is clever commentary on life and manners. But the warmth of conviction that could have fused all these excellencies into a living whole is lacking." A. B. Parsons

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Ap 28 '29 720w

"Done with as fine and delicate an instrument as an etcher's needle, this book has the cumulative effect of a blow with a sledge hammer. It is one of those revelatory themes, showing how people 'get that way,' and it is terrifyingly true to life. Like so much of the truest and vitalest of modern writing, it is ironical." G. K.

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 18 '29 420w

Cleveland Open Shelf p95 Je '29

"Although accurate the study is superficial. The decorous treatment of a subject that might well tempt other writers into deeper waters gives 'As Far as Jane's Grandmother's' but the meager charm of a stately and narrow tradition."

— + Nation 129:98 Jl 24 '29 80w

"It is an intelligent book; the author has not only taken a pleasure in telling her story for the sake of a story—no small quality in the novelist—but she has also conveyed the impression of knowing life all round her pronouncements, so that they do not echo as mere aphorisms in a void." V. Sackville-West

+ Nation and Ath 44:416 D 15 '28 200w

"A remarkable book. . . I rather resent the cult of Jane Austen, but this seems the most complete adaptation of her attitude and technique to modern times. Also every pitfall of the feminine writer has been studiously avoided." Cyril Connolly

+ New Statesman 32:327 D 15 '28 350w

"'As Far as Jane's Grandmother's' is intriguing, if nothing more."

+ — N Y Times p8 Ap 21 '29 660w

Reviewed by Harry Salpeter

— N Y World p7m Je 16 '29 170w

Pratt p41 summer '29

"'As Far as Jane's Grandmother's' is an amateur's novel, and like others of its kind it has an uncertainty of emphasis and is not fully under the author's control. But the amateurishness is more than atoned for by the freshness; by the extraordinarily life-like character of certain scenes; and by the feeling that whatever happens matters tremendously. Jane is recognizable in everything she says, if not always in everything she does. She is a most interesting person. Was it her fault that she is not a likeable one?" L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 146:856 D 22 '28 660w

"A novel of distinction. . . The style is clear and pure, with passages of grave and dewbright beauty; and Jane, very immediate to the sight, retains, for all her cowardice, an odd fascination." R. A. Taylor

+ Spec 141:968 D 22 '28 350w

"The author has bestowed so much good writing upon Jane that we wonder at the end why we are not more interested in her. The reason lies perhaps in the nature of the subject. Miss Olivier sets out to diminish her heroine's personality and the better she succeeds the less we can be interested in Jane."

Times [London] Lit Sup p1008 D 20 '28 360w

Wis Lib Bul 25:160 My '29

OMAN, CAROLA. See Lenanton, C. M. A.

ONCKEN, HERMANN. Napoleon III and the Rhine; the origin of the war of 1870-1871; with an introd. by Ferdinand Schevill; tr. by Edwin H. Zeydel. 209p $2.25 Knopf

944.07 Napoléon III, emperor of the French. Franco-German war, 1870-1871. France—Foreign relations 28-18305

The material here presented is a translation of a part of the first volume of a three-volume work by the professor of history in the University of Berlin. The material is based on hitherto unused sources in the archives, and adds numerous particulars to the story of Napoleon III's attitude toward the problem of German unification. Professor Oncken's book enables us "to have, as it were, a direct look into Napoleon's mind and to follow during a period of seven years (1863-1870) the crazy succession of his plans, hopes, and despairs anent the unification movement going on across the Rhine." (Foreword)

---

"The eminent German historian who writes this book exhibits, abundantly what he himself terms the 'naïveté which is characteristic of every virile national egoism.' His object is to exonerate the Prussia of Bismarck from responsibility for the war of 1870-'71. . . With less sensitiveness the author would have gained in dignity and persuasive power." W: K. Stewart

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p29 N 11 '28 650w

Reviewed by F. M. Crouch

Churchman p28 Ap 27 '29 230w

"No student of Franco-German relations can afford to be without this valuable and, incidentally, attractively bound volume."

+ Hist Outlook 21:39 Ja '30 260w

Times [London] Lit Sup p952 D 6 '28 1200w

World Tomorrow 11:474 N '28 60w

ONE-ACT plays for stage and study; fourth series; preface by Paul Green. 370p $3 French

808.2 Drama—Collections 28-27611

Twenty-two contemporary one-act plays which have never before been published in book form, by American, English or Irish writers. There is a preface by Paul Green.

Booklist 25:154 Ja '29

"One comes away from the reading of the collection wondering why writers of one-act plays continue to make novelty their guiding ideal when triviality is so often the result—playlets instead of plays—and so rarely a straightforward story convincingly dramatized in one act."

— Theatre Arts Mo 13:234 Mr '29 260w

Wis Lib Bul 25:72 F '29

O'NEIL, GEORGE. God-beguiled. 71p $2 Liveright

811 29-19320

"The heart of O'Neil's world is twisted and perverse, but it fails to turn or blunt his sharp, vivid feeling for that rarity of experience, which we flatly call beauty. Likewise, he indulges in no muddy baths of sentiment, he sheds no cheap tears, he pens no shabby emotions. He retains an unbroken control over his material. . . He transforms ordinary, and apparently negligible sensations into rare values. The death of a minnow, the breaking of day, the flight of pigeons (a recurrent theme), horses drudging through the noon, a woman passing outside the door, all become poetry."—N Y Evening Post

"His is at present the art of telling too little rather than too much, and with this economy, coupled with intellectual growth, comes an obscurity into his idiom which will be baffling to readers who found his previous book, 'The White Rooster,' clearer and warmer. Mr. O'Neil has limited his appeal. The lyrical qualities still cling to his work in the midst of his new, sharp-edged strength." C: Divine

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 N 10 '29 200w

"George O'Neil presents work more finished, more immaculate than in 'The White Rooster.' Expressing moods of a similar nature, he does it with a dazzling precision and measure. He is an unillusioned, objective poet who retains a fine feeling for lyrical writing. He has disciplined and polished his emotions, without killing them. O'Neil writes pure poetry." J. T. Farrell

+ N Y Evening Post p6m S 28 '29 470w

N Y Times p36 O 27 '29 300w

"O'Neil prefers to deal either with nature or with the subtler human qualities, and to both themes he brings a point of view, a philosophy, which it is difficult to describe, but which is correctly suggested by the tenseness and vitality of the lines. It is his great attribute that he can see beauty without becoming sentimental, that he can express the essence of his affirmation of life without falling into didacticism or vagueness." Granville Hicks

+ N Y World p11m O 20 '29 430w

"Mr. O'Neil's work is imaginative, comprehensible, and intellectual enough to be somewhat important." J. D. Tasker

+ Outlook 152:671 Ag 21 '29 200w

O'NEILL, EUGENE GLADSTONE. Dynamo. 159p $2.50 Liveright

812 29-21599

Ramsay Fife, atheist, and the Reverend Hutchins Light are bitter enemies. But Reuben, son of the minister, has fallen in love with Ada, Fife's daughter. Because of falsehood and betrayal on the part of his parents, Rube turns against them and declares that electricity is the only god. Two years later he is at work in Fife's plant. His worship of the Dynamo becomes an obsession. He comes to believe that his love for Ada is a barrier to his complete acceptance by the Dynamo Mother. The play ends with his killing of Ada, and his electrocution of himself at the Dynamo.

Cleveland Open Shelf p138 N '29

Reviewed by Padraic Colum

Dial 86:349 Ap '29 800w

"As a play, 'Dynamo' seemed to me to have some fine scenes, like that when the mother betrays the son's confidence, but to be uncertain in its whole result; as a personal document, it is significant." Stark Young

+ — New Repub 58:43 F 27 '29 1800w

"The asides which O'Neill first developed in 'Strange Interlude' are continued in 'Dynamo.' What the skilled actor used to portray in a tone of voice, a gesture, a movement of the body, O'Neill puts into wordy asides. The result is novel only because the Theatre Guild lends itself to its production on the stage. 'Dynamo' seems to me one of the weakest of the O'Neill plays. Toward the end it gathers force. But the whole seems to rest on a misconception." Harry Hansen

— N Y World p15 O 12 '29 360w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen

N Y World p14 O 19 '29 150w

"Merely as a drama of human life, it departs so far from reality in the last act—where a murder actually takes place before a group of people and no one notices it—that the illusion is broken and even the power of the dramatist departs. There remains only the inescapable fact that O'Neill at his worst remains more provocative and interesting than most of our other playwrights at their best." F. R. Bellamy

— + Outlook 151:331 F 27 '29 1000w

St Louis 27:339 D '29

World Tomorrow 13:43 Ja '30 70w

O'NEILL, ROSE CECIL. Garda. 305p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

29-8724

Garda and her twin brother Narcissus are the two parts of a single whole; she is the pagan undisciplined body, he the sensitive poetic soul. There is a strong psychological bond between them. While summering at a lake, assumably in the Catskills, Garda falls in love with her brother's friend Starke and unhesitatingly pursues him. Her Italian husband, Bastiano, tortured beyond endurance, shoots Starke and drowns himself in the lake. Garda wills Starke back to life. The language of the story is semi-poetical, and the effect of the whole—style, characters, setting, and the events of the story—is that of some bizarre and rather cruel other-world.

For biographical sketch of the author see Wilson Bulletin 3:667 Je '29

"An artist's book if ever there was one, Garda is written with a soul-satisfying extravagance."

+ Bookm 69:xxiii Jl '29 180w

"Miss O'Neill's novel is a blend of poetic romance with gay sophistication. Its morals are pagan and practical; its manners as worldly and as wittily persuasive as Aldous Huxley's; its words are honey. 'Garda' is opulent, with a voluptuous, yearning quality like the music of Tristan. It is wise, sometimes daintily blasphemous, with a compassionate wit: a gay —almost giddy—book." Florence Haxton

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Mr 24 '29 1050w

"Rose O'Neill words prove as malleable as the clay that is also her interpretative medium. One may or may not be charmed by the characterization, but one can not fail to be enthralled by the sheer beauty of its expression." H. F. M.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 27 '29 500w

"The characters are rich in contrast and weird enough to suit the sharpest craving for the grotesque. The method of revealing the plot in its larger aspects is skilful and competent. What ruins the book is an excessive Celticism in the style. It is completely undisciplined. Miss O'Neill delights in the misuse of words. She has a passion for tearing three metaphors to tatters in the same paragraph. Grammar and even sense are frequently abandoned in her anthropomorphic descriptions." C. A. C.

O'NEILL, R. C.—Continued

— + New Repub 59:107 Je 12 '29 320w

"Over the book hangs the faery beauty that is the Irish gift to art; that nebulous beauty, entrancing, remote and unreal." Lillian Rogers

+ N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 20 '29 480w

"In less skilled hands the story at times would border on the grotesque because of its bizarrerie, but with Miss O'Neill it remains lyrically beautiful."

+ N Y Times p6 My 5 '29 500w

Reviewed by Margery Latimer

N Y World p11m Ap 14 '29 180w

"There is a certain discordance between Miss O'Neill's theme and her style. The theme involves a 'Wuthering Heights' sort of atmosphere of dark and stormy passion, but the style is tricksy and whimsical."

Sat R of Lit 5:866 Ap 6 '29 90w

OPDYCKE, JOHN BAKER. In the service of youth; chapters on certain phases of the teaching of English in junior and senior high schools; with an introd. by William McAndrew. 404p $3.50 Pitman

420.7 English language—Study and teaching E29-98

A book for teachers of English in high schools, comprising lectures delivered to teacher-students at Johns Hopkins university and the College of the city of New York. Mr Opdycke discusses separately the personal, craftsmanship, cultural, social and technical phases of his subject, and adds in appendices, five outline courses illustrating his methodology.

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 9 '29 80w

Outlook 151:556 Ap 3 '29 70w

"A valuable addition to the professional library of English teachers and a book which students will find readable and impressive." E. E. Shepherd

+ School R 37:312 Ap '29 720w

OPPENHEIM, EDWARD PHILLIPS, Glenlitten murder. 309p $2 Little

29-16824

There was a party at Glenlitten for the shooting. It was the first time that Andrew, marquis of Glenlitten, had introduced his lovely, young, and slightly mysterious wife to some of his friends, altho he had been married for a year. Lady Glenlitten was looking very charming that night and she was wearing the famous family heirloom, Queen Charlotte's diamond necklace. And then the necklace was stolen and one of the male guests was murdered in Lady Glenlitten's room, which started a long train of events. It was some time before all the mysteries were solved.

Bookm 70:xxv S '29 60w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ag 11 '29 130w

"To an Oppenheim novice the story may appeal as an impossible romance of the 'movie' type; to old Oppenheim enthusiasts it will be reminiscent by contrast with some of his earlier and better work."

— Boston Transcript p5 Ag 31 '29 300w

"The reader is taken into the author's confidence to such an extent that the solution of the mystery, when it finally comes, can scarcely be a very great surprise, and yet the story holds the attention until the very end, as most Oppenheim stories do."

N Y Times p17 S 1 '29 180w

Springf'd Republican p7e S 15 '29 220w

OPPENHEIM, EDWARD PHILLIPS. Mr. Billingham, the marquis and Madelon. 283p $2 Little

29-11012

Mr Billingham, late of New York, meets in Paris the Marquis de Félan and his lovely niece, and embarks with them on a delicately crooked course. These are short stories of their various enterprises.

Booklist 25:396 Jl '29

Bookm 69:xxvi Jl '29 40w

"Barring the fact that Mr. Oppenheim is wont to include a few obvious explanations for the benefit of Lizzie Glutz, this will do nicely for the heated spell—particularly as there's a dash of vulgarity to offset the expensive Oppenheim settings." Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Je 30 '29 130w

"This collection of ten short stories reveals the gay Oppenheim charm worn a little thin perhaps, but pleasant enough reading for any week-end of leisure." D. F. G.

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 25 '29 450w

"He employs his usual suave style in exposing a series of swindling adventures engaged in by an ill-assorted trio at Monte Carlo. But of the three central characters one knows no more at the conclusion of the final tale than at the commencement of the volume and must rely for entertainment on a chain of bizarre situations, linked together by overtones of melodramatic suspense."

+ — N Y Times p19 My 26 '29 220w

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 16 '29 180w

OPPENHEIM, EDWARD PHILLIPS. Nicholas [2] Goade, detective. 255p $2 Little

29-23791

Ten stories, each involving an adventure for Nicholas Goade, who with his little dog Flip was on vacation in Devonshire. He encounters some stirring mysteries in various country places, which he usually solves to the satisfaction of all parties concerned: the mystery of the wild man, the two insane spinsters, Jazebel of Valley Farm, the beautiful sisters of Wryde, etc.

"Entirely unconnected, these adventures of Goade are worked into a continuous story, and bear the Oppenheim stamp of effectiveness."

+ Bookm 70:xxx D '29 100w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 D 8 '29 120w

OPPENHEIM, EDWARD PHILLIPS. Treasure house of Martin Hews. 372p $2 Little

29-3183

An ex-army officer, down on his luck, is hired by Martin Hews, a cripple, to guard the fabulous treasures with which his house is filled. The excitement and danger of the job increases as a notorious gangman makes an attack on the treasures and carries off Martin Hews's beautiful niece.

"An unusual Oppenheim story, done to a turn and guaranteed to satisfy the mystery lover."

+ Bookm 69:xxvi Ap '29 70w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 F 3 '29 100w

"Mr. Oppenheim has taught us to expect a great deal from him. In this story we have repetition, we have that commonplace of the third-rate mystery tale, warning notes tossed into rooms and handed to waiters. There are plenty of original touches in the story and all the material for Mr. Oppenheim's best effort, but he has not done it justice." D. F. G.

— + Boston Transcript p2 F 6 '29 520w

"A mystery thriller of the sort that made Oppenheim famous."

+ N Y Times p22 F 17 '29 130w

N Y World p11m F 17 '29 200w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 151:192 Ja 30 '29 80w

Springf'd Republican p7e F 10 '29 100w

Times [London] Lit Sup p638 Ag 15 '29 280w

Wis Lib Bul 25:103 Mr '29

OPPENHEIM, JAMES. Behind your front. 187p $2 Harper

131 Characters and characteristics. Psychoanalysis 28-27783

Are you an introvert or an extravert? If you do not know and would like to find out Mr Oppenheim has a rapid fire method of showing you how. He illustrates his analyses of introverts and extraverts by pointing out examples of both types among famous people.

"Here is a delightful book, plus one of great value to the intelligent layman."

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 29 '28 50w

Christian Century 46:116 Ja 24 '29 100w

" 'Behind Your Front' will please such as are still enchanted by the phantasmagoria of psychoanalysis. They may learn from it that Heywood Broun is an extraverted intuitive type, that Mencken is an extraverted thinking with feeling type, that Greta Garbo—maybe if they read about her they will get that way. Best of all, they will be able, with the help of 'Behind Your Front,' to spend hours figuring themselves out."

Outlook 150:1336 D 12 '28 70w

St Louis 27:87 Mr '29

Springf'd Republican p6 S 2 '29 600w

ORBISON, KECK, pseud. See Keck, M.; Orbison, O.

ORCHARD, WILLIAM EDWIN. Present crisis in religion. 281p $2.50 Harper [6s Cassell]

239 Religion. Christianity 29-14782

Dr Orchard analyzes the causes of the decline in the observance, attraction and power of religion. He believes that the masses will not return to religion till they are reassured in the foundations of their faith and he looks to a revival of mysticism as the most hopeful means of recovery.

Reviewed by J: H. Holmes

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ja 5 '30 630w

Boston Transcript p2 S 7 '29 450w

"A valuable contribution to Christian Apologetics. An outstanding merit of the work is that it does not presuppose, on the part of the reader, a learning beyond that of the man of average education." G. A. Carstensen

+ Churchman p16 O 5 '29 180w

"To read this volume is to discover why Doctor Orchard has gained a wide hearing in the English-speaking world." M. G. Evans

+ Crozer Q 6:504 O '29 1300w

"He confesses his own indomitable faith in the ultimate validity and value of the Christian religion. In fact, he overdoes it, for his empirical uncertainty is poorly concealed beneath the trite and loose arguments which culminate in the grand conclusion that 'the abandonment of religion, to which so much in modern thought, interest, and life seems to be tending, means the undermining of every rational interpretation of existence, the negativing of any hope of reaching secular stability, and the destruction of the compensating spiritual treasures which might make man content: it is therefore making for nothing else and nothing less than irrationality, madness, strife, and unendurable misery.' Such a contention is so evidently absurd that it is small wonder that his arguments do not prove it." H. W. Schneider

— Nation 129:552 N 13 '29 700w

"Here is a stimulating book, one to be read and pondered by religious men and women. Many of us cannot go with Orchard in his emphasis upon sacramentalism but this will seem to us if not to him of minor importance." E. B. Chaffee

+ Outlook 153:154 S 25 '29 200w

Sat R of Lit 6:328 O 26 '29 500w

Reviewed by C: S. Brown

Survey 63:176 N 1 '29 450w

"No one engaged in such a study as this can hope to win entire assent from his readers, but it will be generally acknowledged that Dr. Orchard sets out some of the main causes of the present crisis in the religious life of the country with combined frankness and sympathy. . . . Though we are driven to the conclusion that in some not unimportant respects he misinterprets the signs of the times, we warmly acknowledge the insight shown in a survey which seems to us more accurate in its estimate of present conditions than happy in its prognostications for the future."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p299 Ap 11 '29 350w

ORCUTT, WILLIAM DANA. Master makers of the book; being a consecutive story of the book from a century before the invention of printing through the era of the Doves press. 271p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

655.1 Printing—History. Books. Printers 28-27577

A distinguished bibliophile adds to his previous volumes on a favorite subject this history of book-making told thru the lives of the master makers of the book from the forerunners of Aldus to Cobden-Sanderson and Emery Walker.

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 Mr 23 '29

Booklist 25:198 F '29

"Mr. Orcutt knows his subject so thoroughly and it is all so vital and so interesting to him that there is a touch of magic in his treatment of it."

+ N Y Times p12 Ap 28 '29 450w

Pratt p18 spring '29

"What we have in this volume and what we have had in similar form before, is really little better than the bare bones of printing history, confusing to the non-technical reader because he cannot understand the why and the wherefor of it all. The canvas waits for the broad, illuminating picture, and we finish this volume lamenting that the real presentation of the very important position of printing as a factor in human progress remains to be written."

— Sat R of Lit 5:416 N 24 '28 350w

"This new book of Mr. Orcutt's is, like its predecessors, too easily written to be trustworthy as a work of reference without verification. But, on the other hand, it shows to the full the gift of the historical novelist who seeks diligently for facts which will invest his story with human interest."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p176 Mr 7 '29 720w

ORCZY, EMMUSKA, baroness (MRS MONTAGU BARSTOW). Blue eyes and gray. 305p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

29-2734

Amos Beyvin leaves his Canadian sweetheart and returns to England for a year. Two years later Amos, with a police record and a prison escape behind him, is back in Canada under an assumed name. And with the odds against him he makes good.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Jl 14 '29 110w

"Exciting and improbable adventure. It is carelessly written and irretrievably sentimental."

— N Y Times p7 Je 30 '29 180w

"The story seems to be far below this author's usual standard of romantic fiction."

— Sat R of Lit 5:1005 My 11 '29 100w

"Despite absurdities of plot and of coincidence, the novelist's joyful confidence lulls common sense to sleep. Local colour is effective, though sketchy, and one gathers from the dedication that Baroness Orczy thoroughly enjoyed a recent tour throughout the Dominion."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p1026 D 27 '28 180w

ORCZY, EMMUSKA, baroness (MRS MONTAGUE BARSTOW). Skin o' my Tooth, his memoirs, by his confidential clerk. 336p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]
28-19751

An acute lawyer-detective familiarly known as Skin o' my Tooth is the hero of these mystery murder episodes.

Cleveland Open Shelf p64 Ap '29

"The principal merit evident in the twelve short detective stories composing this book seems to be their compactness and their freedom from all superfluous detail. In fact, apart from their indispensable dialogue, the majority of them could pass for the skeletonized summaries of plots for full-length detective novels."

N Y World p11m N 18 '28 100w

"There is not much that is either novel or exciting in the walls of apparently irrefragable evidence reared around these suspects, nor in the manner in which Skin o' my Tooth topples them over."

— Sat R of Lit 5:543 D 22 '28 80w

"The stories are all ingenious. . . Most of them are good enough to read twice, once before knowing the solution, and again to see how the incidents look after the solution is known."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p433 Je 7 '28 110w

ORDWAY, SAMUEL HANSON, Jr. The intellect is a brute. 283p $2 Duffield
29-8386

Lilan, the young hero of the piece, is searching for a satisfactory philosophy of life. He is equipped for the search with the stuff of his dreams, and with fragmentary bits of theory and learning gathered as his education progresses. Ariad, his sweetheart in youth and later his wife, is the companion of Lilan's intellectual quest which finds its goal in a sort of suburban-home happiness.

"Though Mr. Ordway's ambitious effort in an extremely difficult field is hardly a complete success, he has brought off an intellectual comedy that glows with earnestness and shows many a glint of satiric humor. This tale of emancipated youth 'searching our confused intellectual heritage for a satisfactory philosophy of life' often stumbles awkwardly between fact and fantasy, and nearly as often manages the fearful leap with surprising agility."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 Ap 28 '29 200w

"The long and incessant dissection of ideas becomes wearisome; Mr. Ordway has sufficient talent to have done what he was trying to do in a novel of more conventional, and more readable, pattern."

— + Sat R of Lit 5:889 Ap 13 '29 230w

O'RIORDAN, CONAL O'CONNELL. Yet do not grieve. 555p $2.50 Scribner
28-29240

A long historical novel which moves from a charming setting of eighteenth century England and Ireland to the bloody theater of the Napoleonic wars as it follows the career from childhood of young David Quinn. David's adolescent love for Ruth never changes thru all his brief tumultuous life, tho she turns from him to his best friend and tho he, David, is besieged by the gallant and lovely Princess Charlotte.

"The peculiar charm and beauty of this essentially sad, uneven tale of a frustrated life does not so much lie in the conflict between David's lofty idealism and the baser passions of those who surround him. It lies in the manner in which the author—instead of a conventional historic backdrop—has reconstructed a whole society as it lived and breathed."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 D 9 '28 280w

"There is imagination in this writing and the ability to convey mental pictures to others. Except at the very end, where they become a little shadowy, the personages are intimately real and they stir our emotions and sympathies so that we regard them, across more than a century, as personally as if they lived in our town." F. K.

+ — Boston Transcript p6 N 3 '28 650w

"Good historical novels come only at long intervals. Yet Do Not Grieve is one of the best in a long time. Underlying its vivid picture of the Prince Regent and the Princess Caroline and all the lesser lights, there is a satiric attitude toward war itself which is not to be mistaken."

+ Christian Century 45:1399 N 15 '28 100w

"This is a slow-moving story which suggests at times that the author is dragging the weight of his historical accuracy. But the accuracy is there in the spirit as well as in the substance. The whole may give the effect of a 'command' artistic performance, such as is commonly seen in European guild-halls, but the delicacy of Conal O'Riordan's character sense and the vigor of his descriptive faculty insure more than a passing glance from the discriminating."

+ — Nation 127:sup638 D 5 '28 200w

"A historical novel of real quality." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p8m N 17 '28 130w

"Much of the book is well written; some of it is both vivid and impressive; taken as a whole, it is a commendable effort to accomplish something really worth while."

+ — N Y Times p14 N 4 '28 700w

Outlook 150:1290 D 5 '28 250w

"The novel is of the old school, Victorian in its virtues and purposes. Distinctly, Mr. O'Riordan is a natural story-teller, for his narrative is always uppermost in his mind. Memorable scenes abound. There is a splendid succession of excellences. Few novels capture the reader so harshly, yet so admirably."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:715 F 23 '29 280w

Wis Lib Bul 24:346 D '28

ORNSTEIN, MARTHA (MRS JACOB BRONFENBRENNER). Rôle of scientific societies in the seventeenth century. 308p $3 Univ. of Chicago press [15s Cambridge univ. press]
506 Scientific societies. Science—History
28-16301

"The book consists of a sketchy account of the origin of 'experimental science,' a survey of the organization and work of the chief learned societies and journals, an examination of the welcome accorded science by the universities, and a detailed bibliography. The main body of the book is a very useful compilation from the standard histories of the various bodies concerned, of great value to the general historian of culture."—Am Hist R

"This dissertation, first printed in 1913, has enjoyed a high reputation as the only general survey in English of a most important subject. It is now reprinted with a brief foreword by its instigator, James Harvey Robinson." J. H. Randall, Jr.

+ Am Hist R 34:386 Ja '29 480w

"The book is excellent both as social and scientific history."

+ Bookm 68:xxxiv O '28 70w

"The book is a sound piece of work, well written and well documented, and one which, within its compass, it would be difficult to improve upon. The book is beautifully printed, and presents its fascinating story in a form which also delights the eye." T. L. H.

+ Nature 122:989 D 29 '28 1400w

"There is no doubt that Martha Ornstein was a rare student and a rare teacher; the evidence is in this text. And from the text, the first discovery is something unusual in historians of science: excellent judgment and excellent taste. . . Those who look into Martha Ornstein's work will be surprised at the amount of local liveliness and quiet humor." F. V. Morley

+ Sat R of Lit 5:754 Mr 9 '29 620w

"Her work is admirably planned and executed, while bibliography and index are excellent. Although the authoress betrays at times her German origin in turns of phrase or selection of words, yet the writing is good and even; and the book is pleasing in manner as well as solid and informative in matter."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p679 S 27 '28 1200w

ORPEN, MRS ADELA ELIZABETH RICHARDS. Memories of the old emigrant days in Kansas, 1862-1865; also of a visit to Paris in 1867. 324p il $3.50 Harper

B or 92 Frontier and pioneer life [27-14926]

One hot day in August, 1862, the author, a child of seven, was set down by the stagecoach on the Kansas prairie, then on the very outskirts of civilization. Now from the viewpoint of seventy-five she writes her memories of those childhood years, her hardy experiences on the prairie and the borderland of the war that was raging not far away. The closing chapters describe a visit in Paris in 1867.

---

Booklist 25:354 Je '29

Reviewed by H: S. Commager
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Je 16 '29 680w
Boston Transcript p5 My 4 '29 250w
Cleveland Open Shelf p92 Je '29

"There is nothing new here about the more important aspects of the 'Kansas Crusade' period. The particular color of the time, however, is regained with some effectiveness, chiefly through Mrs. Orpen's remembrance of minutiæ." L. E.
+ — N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 27 '29 80w

"The book does not tell a connected story, but sets down the author's recollections at random in the form of little sketches. There is no attempt to relate them to each other in any way. While this method results in some choppiness, it makes easy reading, and has a vividness, in the isolation of each separate memory, which suits the subject-matter. An old lady's reminiscences, these—and what reminiscences they are!"
+ N Y Times p12 Mr 24 '29 480w

"When a lady of seventy odd, witty, experienced, of large humanity and independent as well as decided opinions sits down to write her memoirs, something delightful may be expected. If you add to that a literary style distinguished by simplicity and clarity, an amazing memory and a childhood romantic in the extreme, you have an unusual book."
+ Outlook 151:389 Mr 6 '29 250w

ORR, CLIFFORD. Dartmouth murders. 285p $2 Farrar & Rinehart

29-22681

Byron Coates, senior at Dartmouth, is the first victim, killed by a needle driven thru the base of the skull. Sam Anderson, who knew something, met death in the same way a week later. The father of Byron's roommate takes up the case. A very interesting family skeleton, beginning with the past of Byron's actress-mother, is dug up; but it is not until the murder of John Meseraux, a student whose marked resemblance to Byron had often been noted, that the mystery is cleared.

---

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 O 27 '29 120w

"Aside from the college atmosphere which permeates the story and adds to its fascination, here is a well-developed mystery novel of no little merit, with suspense and horror sustained to the end, with an unexpected solution of the problem and a feeling of dread lest the outcome show us the murderer is one of those with whom we have become friendly." G. B.
+ Boston Transcript p5 N 2 '29 900w

"Mr. Orr has told his story well and has succeeded in maintaining the suspense until the last chapter. The solution is quite unexpected and also rather improbable, but much may be forgiven a man who writes so readable a story."
+ N Y Times p40 N 17 '29 170w

Reviewed by W: R. Brooks
Outlook 153:520 N 27 '29 30w

"Clifford Orr certainly writes well; he has gotten away from the usual cut and dried fact telling which often makes the most gruesome tale far from thrilling, and originality plays a big part in his novel. He is also to be congratulated on the fact that he has chosen a subject for his first noticeable book far removed from the sex trash which his younger contemporaries seem to be choosing of late." D. F. W.
+ Portland Evening News p5 D 4 '29 500w

"People who find it easy to imagine murder at Dartmouth will doubtless respond to the story with greatest enthusiasm but the author really asks little more of the reader's credulity than the writers of 19 out of 20 tales."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e N 17 '29 550w

ORR, MRS GULIELMA DAY, and SCHIELE, HENRIETTE PAULINE ELLA (MRS HUGH KEPPEL BETHELL). Sally in South Africa. 242p il $1.75 Century

29-18335

An adventure book for girls. Myra and Sally Woods with their mother go traveling in South Africa, meet some charming people and some who are not so nice. There is a mystery about a fortune in stolen diamonds in which the girls, all unwittingly, get tangled.

---

Reviewed by O. M. Fuller
N Y World p11m D 8 '29 20w

Reviewed by M. L. Becker
Outlook 153:591 D 11 '29 30w

"Its unusual South African setting and good travel descriptions, with the addition of an adequate though conventional mystery plot, would give it value if only it were written in English of more dignity or of some literary value. It is such a pity not to distinguish platitudes from crisp English, nor banalities from interesting situations. Here all is mixed, and the girl reader will have to discard much as valueless if she holds her standards high." M. C. Dodd
— Sat R of Lit 6:404 N 16 '29 100w

OSBORN, ALBERT SHERMAN. Questioned documents; with an introd. by John Henry Wigmore; with citations of discussions of the facts and the law of questioned documents from many sources. 2d ed 1028p il $12.50 Boyd ptg. co., inc., 374 Broadway, Albany, N.Y.

343 Forgery. Writing—Identification. Photography, Legal. Typewriting—Identification. Trials (forgery) 29-9363

"The main features of the original edition have been retained. As before, the book opens with instructive chapters on the preliminary examination of documents and on standards of comparison. Then come chapters on photography and photographic methods, the microscope and its most suitable forms for examining documents, and on special measuring instruments. The following chapters deal with handwriting and its variations, and the methods used in its examination, including the detection of traced and other forgeries. Paper and its water marks, the evidence of folds in paper, inks, pencil writing, and typewriting, are all discussed in detail, [and] the way in which scientific evidence should be presented in Court is dealt with. A new feature of this edition is a very full classified summary of legal citations of discussions on the facts and law relating to questioned documents, with references to the several judgments. The bibliography, which was a valuable section of the first edition, has been retained and expanded."—Analyst

OSBORN, A. S.—Continued

Reviewed by C. A. Mitchell
Analyst Ag '29 430w

"The book reminds one of a laboratory manual and develops the subject in a truly scientific manner. Such methods admit of no prejudices, no emotions, no favorites, and recognize no law other than the law demanding cold facts accurately and intelligently displayed." Wilmer Souder
+ Ann Am Acad 146:276 N '29 230w

"All written in a peculiarly lucid yet scholarly style which reveals a wealth of reading, wholly distinguished from research. Withal, for a subject apparently so dull, Osborn treats it brightly and imbues it with extraordinary interest." E: Morphy
+ Argonaut Je 22 '29 1050w
Booklist 26:85 N '29

"An excellent book has been made better. Every favorable comment elicited by the first edition may be repeated with emphasis regarding the second. . . A very short time spent in reading any portion of the book will demonstrate its stimulating and fascinating character. Its value to the expert will be obvious. Its worth to the lawyer who is concerned with a questioned document will be even greater. Any lawyer who is concerned with the effective use of expert testimony in any field as an aid in the search for truth will find a multitude of suggestions which he can turn to profit. Any student of the law will gain from it a clearer conception of the interrelation between science and applied law. And the doubting soul will find within its covers ample evidence to rehabilitate in his mind the reputation of expert witnesses in general. If the book did no more than to demonstrate that there is and can be such a thing as a thoroughly honest, thoroughly competent and thoroughly conscientious expert witness, its publication would be justified." L. P. Wilson
+ Cornell Law Q Ja '29 800w

"The second edition of 'Questioned Documents' is an outstanding contribution to the science of criminal investigation; more particularly, that branch which deals with problems involving the genuineness of documents. In fact, no other work than this fascinating and interesting volume need be consulted because the author has so thoroughly and completely covered the whole field." August Vollmer
+ J of Criminal Law & Criminology N '29 400w

"Books like this are in a sense a labor of love. Their preparation represents time taken from active and profitable practice as a contribution to public justice, and the buyer gets much more than he pays for." W. A. Shumaker
+ Law Notes Je '29 550w

"The value of such a book in a law library is indisputable, and it has been suggested that it may prove helpful in solving certain problems regarding autographs, ancient books and identification of forgeries of various kinds that are sometimes submitted to the librarian of a general library. The 340 illustrations included in the book would be of distinct value toward a solution of any such questions."
+ Library J 54:983 D 1 '29 100w

"It is doubtless true that no one has given so much of time and effort to the solution of the problems growing out of questioned writings or has had so much experience with them, as the author of Questioned Documents, Mr. Albert S. Osborn of New York, and certainly no author has in this field used time and effort more diligently, with greater wisdom or accomplished more helpful results." V. H. Lane
+ Michigan Law R N '29 400w

"This book is one that, because of its exhaustive and careful treatment of its subject, non-technical handling of a technical subject, and a thoroughly practical adaptation to the ures of the legal profession, can at the same time be commended to the attention and study of lawyer and layman alike, either for profitable or for leisurely reading."
+ Tennessee Law R D '29 550w

OSBORN, HENRY FAIRFIELD. From the Greeks to Darwin; the development of the evolution idea through twenty-four centuries; 2d ed., rev. and extended to embrace recent scholarship. (Biological ser.) 398p $2.50 Scribner

575 Evolution—History 29-12356

First published in 1894 and last reissued in 1924, Professor Osborn's story of the evolution of the idea of evolution has been revised and expanded for this new edition. The work has involved a profound restudy of the entire period. Professor Osborn writes, "Many entirely new lines have been traced in the long lineage of Ideas; previously undiscovered anticipations of Darwinism, especially of the descent of man, have been unearthed; the work of certain outstanding authors has been more fully and critically examined."

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 3 '29 680w
Christian Century 46:897 Jl 10 '29 20w

"This account of the predecessors of Darwin is as remarkable for clarity as for condensation." J. G.
+ N Y Evening Post p7m Ag 10 '29 180w

"It will be eagerly welcomed not only by students of evolution but by the greatly enlarged field of lay readers, wherein interest in the subject has been extended and quickened by attempts to hamper and combat its teaching."
+ N Y Times p15 Je 16 '29 400w

OSBOURNE, LLOYD. Peril. 329p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Heinemann]

29-12912

Hal Curwen's new friend and host, big Tim Reardon, is just about to unburden himself of his troubling secret when he is called downstairs—and disappears. Hal and little Miss Nigma, short for Enigma because he does not know her name, enter whole-heartedly into the search, which seems to center about the big Westerner's peculiar wife and his wholly charming step-daughter.

"The author's bookish dialogue, trying comedy and rather slow amour need not deter the thrill seeker from sampling 'Peril.'" Will Cuppy
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Je 30 '29 150w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 29 '29 230w

"The plot of Peril is wonderfully ingenious, the story never lags, and the mutual relationships of the various heroes and heroines are portrayed with a subtlety and a distinction which we are not accustomed to find nowadays in books of this general type."
+ New Statesman 32:506 Ja 26 '29 220w

"An expert tale. . . A good thriller, with plentiful change of scene—what more could be asked?"
+ Sat R of Lit 6:42 Ag 10 '29 330w

"Though the actual occurrences turn out to be far less dreadful than the skilfully suggested possibilities, this is an extremely agreeable tale of mystery. . . A sufficiently exciting tale, with no criminals, an insignificant detective and an air of good-humour which is a relief from the grimness of our British mysteries."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p60 Ja 24 '29 600w

OSGOOD, ERNEST STAPLES. Day of the cattleman; a study of the northern range, 1845-1890. 283p il $3.50 Univ. of Minn.

636.081 West—History. Stock and stock-breeding 29-19222

"Other writers have traced various aspects of the rise and decline of the cattle kingdom, but the major emphasis has heretofore been on the more spectacular phases of the story, and the hero has been the cowboy. Mr. Osgood is more concerned with the mechanics and the economics of the cattle kingdom. He pays his respects to the imaginative side of the story. But his real business is the story of the organization and administration, internal and external, of the cattle business on the high plains." —Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"Based on facts carefully gathered, but sometimes presented in disarray, the book carries its conclusions with soundness and with impact. In the history of the frontier it will stand as a tribute to the affirmative, constructive influences of the cattlemen on the ranges of the trans-Mississippi Northwest." L: Pelzer
+ Am Hist R 35:424 Ja '30 350w

"Mr. Osgood has performed a difficult and meritorious task with exceptional ability. His data are based largely on little used source material—the manuscripts and papers of the Wyoming and Montana Stock Growers' Associations, Western newspapers and government documents, yet every page is eloquent not only of research and erudition, but of first hand knowledge of life on the high plains. This book is one of the most significant and valuable contributions to the history of the West that has appeared in recent years." H: S. Commager
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 S 15 '29 950w

"The material is so well arranged and in itself so much the stuff of American adventure that from first to last it is good reading." H: Chapin
+ New Repub 61:24 N 27 '29 130w

"Professor Osgood tells the story with such completeness of detail and such meticulous regard for the accuracy of every statement that his book has the value of a historical document. Its documentation is so thorough, indeed, that every page is burdened with footnotes, and the whole narrative makes solid, not to say heavy, reading. Yet the writing is lucid, straightforward and vigorous throughout, and the reader who will skim over the dull and statistical pages will come every now and again upon matter of absorbing interest." G. W. Harris
+ N Y Times p11 Ag 25 '29 1000w

O'SHAUGHNESSY, EDITH LOUISE (COUES) (MRS NELSON O'SHAUGHNESSY). Other ways and other flesh. 224p $2 Harcourt
29-5597

In this little book Mrs O'Shaughnessy recalls memories of visits many times repeated in a village of the Vorarlberg in the Austrian Tyrol. She writes sympathetically of some of its gentle inhabitants—the tranquil life of a world so different from our own and apparently undisturbed by the passage of time.

Booklist 25:323 My '29

"Written with Mrs. O'Shaughnessy's unfailing charm and skill, it will appeal to lovers of style and sentiment. One cannot help wishing that the writers of best-sellers had but a fraction of Mrs. O'Shaughnessy's talent for making real feeling articulate."
+ Bookm 69:xxiv My '29 80w

"This is a charmingly written story of a little town in the Austrian Tyrol. . . In spite of its sentimentality, perhaps, even because of it, I recommend this book for the honey that is to be found on every page, and for its mountain view, that disposition to remember the sky even after we have passed down into the streets of men." A. B. Parsons
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 F 17 '29 600w

"Unlike many attempts at interpretative description, there is nothing sentimental nor overdrawn in the telling, and in spite of the absolute unfamiliarity of such a scene to our eyes, it is quietly convincing. . . One puts the book down with the sense all too seldom experienced of having been privileged to learn about a little known corner of the world, not from a passing tourist with an ability for smart phrases, but from one who has found here in the words of a poem she quotes: 'a place of too much recollection and regret.' "
+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 16 '29 200w

"The book throughout is a notable example of distinguished and dramatic writing. . . No review can quite do justice to this book, so set apart from the mob of insignificant works by its warm humanity, its faith, tenderness and haunting beauty." A McG. S.
+ Cath World 129:115 Ap '29 420w

"Unassuming and unpretentious." Mildred Adams
Nation 128:722 Je 12 '29 60w

"These are charming sketches written with great sympathy, and in a delightful effortless prose."
+ Outlook 151:430 Mr 13 '29 30w

"There is a richness of experience and knowledge behind these often slight studies that gives depth to her picture. She has known her peasant friends for many years. She has lived season after season among them, and she does not pretend to get inside their skins and represent their outlook; they have other ways, they are to her other flesh. But she observes them with sympathy and affection."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p636 Ag 15 '29 420w
Wis Lib Bul 25:159 My '29

OSKISON, JOHN MILTON. Texas Titan; the story of Sam Houston. 311p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran
Houston, Sam—Fiction 29-8986

A romanticized story of Sam Houston which presents very readably the dramatic facts of his life—his friendship and life with the Indians, his career as warrior and statesman—and which drops into sentimentality as it deals with his three loves.

"Unpretentious of scholarship, Mr. Oskison presents his story of Sam Houston as 'fictionized biography,' but he need hardly have taken the precaution of so doing. Though there are perhaps a few inaccuracies and certainly many embroideries, he has scarcely taken more liberty with the facts than is considered permissible by the interpretive school of biographers. Perhaps the most serious discount should be made on the score of the author's thoroughgoing partiality for Houston." M. C. Dawson
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 Mr 31 '29 500w

"Certainly it is a dramatic presentation of one of the heroic but contradictory personalities of American history. The author has made the most of the thrilling adventures of a man who literally made history."
+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 30 '29 180w
Cleveland Open Shelf p72 My '29

"Novelistically easy to read, its heart and dramatic interest spotlighted, it will probably appeal to a large audience." F. H. M.
N Y Evening Post p11m Mr '29 100w

"Too much material has to be covered within the bounds of an average-length book to permit the author to dwell upon those illuminating details which provide bone and substance for the skillful fiction writer. What Mr. Oskison has accomplished, however, is to give us a book that holds the interest; a book that is informative, and a book that should do much to resurrect the strange story of Sam Houston from among the shadows of a half-forgotten past."
+ — N Y Times p12 Je 9 '29 520w
Reviewed by C: J. Finger
N Y World p10m Mr 17 '29 350w

OSSENDOWSKI, FERDINAND ANTONY. Lioness; a romance of the Riff mountains. 221p $2.50 Dutton
29-26339

The tribulations of a devoted Mohammedan couple of the Riff mountains who were separated from each other by the wiles of an enemy end in their reunion and death.

Booklist 25.323 My '29

OSSENDOWSKI, F. A.—Continued

"Adventure fans are strongly advised to skip a few Westerns and read this picturesque romance of the Riff Mountains by the great Ossendowski, who proves to be a more than competent novelist." Will Cuppy

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 F 24 '29 80w

"It is from first to last a thrilling and highly romantic tale."

+ Boston Transcript p7 Ap 13 '29 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p64 Ap '29

+ N Y Times p9 Ap 21 '29 520w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell

No Am 227:adv Ap '29 40w

"As a novelist, Mr. Ossendowski is a pretty good travel writer." W. R. Brooks

Outlook 151:351 F 27 '29 120w

OSTENSO, MARTHA. Young May moon. 301p $2.50 Dodd

29-17089

The account of a highly emotional woman, Marcia Gunther, who leaves her husband in a fit of pique, but returns within a few hours to find that he has committed suicide. Only Marcia and her husband's best friend know that it was suicide, but with that knowledge they wrestle for years until they are able to come to complete sanity and happiness.

---

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 Jl 6 '29

---

Booklist 26:72 N '29

"One is cheated of full satisfaction in a colorful book by the feeling that if the heroine had been gifted with one grain of common sense in addition to the courage with which she was lavishly endowed, she would have solved most of her problems in short order."

Bookm 70:xx S '29 80w

"The distinction of 'The Young May Moon' is neither of character nor action; but in the author's capacity to let events slip hazily by while she submerges herself in sweeping scene and strange verbiage. She writes of the ovate moon, of birds, scuttling somberly, of threening, scarp and nacre—and this is not ostentation but a delicate, conscious improvization upon an instrument whose voice she loves and for the playing of which she has a decided talent." Florence Haxton

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Ag 18 '29 900w

Reviewed by I. W. Lawrence

Boston Transcript p3 S 7 '29 1550w

"The course of the story is consistent, but somewhat too highly tinged with melodrama. It turns upon a conception of character which is undeniably sentimental and a little false. If you can accept Miss Ostenso's premises, her syllogism comes off fairly enough, for 'The Young May Moon' as a whole is well and smoothly written."

— + N Y Times p7 S 1 '29 630w

"This novel reads as though the author had thought of a theme, then a plot to fit it, then characters to fit the plot. In spite of competence and a mildly poetic style, the machinery of the story creaks."

— + Outlook 152:671 Ag 21 '29 110w

"Marcia is a stupid, self-centered young woman, and all Miss Ostenso's efforts to make her admirable are in vain. The notion behind the presentation of the character seems to be that if a person is sufficiently well intentioned, no matter how befogged and warped, that person deserves our sympathy. Miss Ostenso further errs in thinking that a mean-spirited small town is any longer news. Our fiction is already clogged with demonstrations that charity is not inherent in the rural mind."

— Sat R of Lit 6:324 O 26 '29 180w

Springf'd Republican p7e N 3 '29 130w

OUDARD, GEORGES. Amazing life of John Law, the man behind the Mississippi bubble; tr. from "La très curieuse vie de Law," by G. E. C. Massé. 362p $3.50 Brewer [10s 6d J. Cape]

B or 92 Law, John 28-24176

When John Law of Lauristan was born in Edinburgh in 1671 a career began which was to startle two continents; for this Scottish gentleman became internationally famous for his gallantries and his gambling, his banking and financial enterprises, and his promotion schemes, particularly the gigantic failure remembered as the Mississippi Bubble.

---

"This portrait of Law is intensely alive." R. E. Larsson

+ Bookm 69:101 Mr '29 150w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Ja 27 '29 200w

"A hybrid, produced by crossing biography with fiction, and then again crossing the progeny with history. As a result you get about three parts fact to one part fiction. The pill of fact is frequently gilded with the drama of dialogue, and history is simplified to a story." Leonard Woolf

Nation and Ath 44:110 O 20 '28 80w

"It is a fascinating account, not less authentic because it reads like fiction." N. Z.

+ N Y Evening Post p10m F 23 '29 280w

Outlook 150:1332 D 12 '28 130w

St Louis 27:168 My '29

"The narrative of M. Oudard is admirable in content and in style. Short, terse sentences give a sense of rapidity of movement that is fitting to the story itself. The treatment is dramatic but there are too many soliloquies. Soliloquies are tiresome and scholars are naturally suspicious of them." J: M. S. Allison

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:660 F 9 '29 550w

"M. Oudard is an adept in mingling fact and fancy. The outlines of the story are substantially correct, but the details are largely the product of a fertile imagination. Moreover, the fantastic financier becomes even more whimsical in the English version."

Spec 142:600 Ap 13 '29 600w

"M. Oudard has made the most of the romance of Law's career, and his translator has put the book into English that reads easily, with only so much strangeness in it as suggests the remoteness of the epoch. . . M. Oudard succeeds in conveying to the reader something of Law's personality—his convincing self-confidence, his personal attractiveness, his resourcefulness. In so far as it does this, the book is a useful contribution to economic history. Moreover, as a narrative the book has the interest and vividness that French biographers are able to give to their subjects."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1020 D 27 '28 1250w

OUDARD, GEORGES. Peter the Great; written in French under the title of Pierre Le Grand; tr. by F. M. Atkinson. 386p $3.50 Brewer

B or 92 Peter I, the Great, emperor of Russia 29-27809

The young French biographer of Peter the Great, the giant tsar of Muscovy, has treated his subject in the extreme of the modern manner. His bibliography of nearly 300 volumes indicates a study of the sources, but he has used his imagination freely to heighten the details of the picture. Peter is painted as a savage, and the Russia of his day as barbaric.

---

"Oudard is constantly aware of the fact, that while he is dealing with an extraordinary personality he is also dealing with an extraordinary country—slovenly, vile, barbaric—but extraordinary, and he never separates the one from the other. Peter himself—the boy, the youth, the man, the husband, the father, the drunkard, the clown, the charlatan, the executioner, the conqueror—this strange human phenomenon is portrayed with a lifelikeness that often overwhelms and terrifies. It is a magnificent narrative, and one only regrets that Oudard did not, like Stephen Graham, refrain from delivering himself of political judgments on contemporary Russia." Maurice Hindus

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 D 1 '29 750w

"This new biography of Peter goes far towards explaining the mystery of the Russian Revolution; it shows how beneath the veneer of western culture, the Slav was still the hopeless barbarian." G. R. B. R.

+ Boston Transcript p2 D 31 '29 1100w

"M. Oudard's book, although it is also intended to be history, and very scholarly history at that (the bibliography appended to it is truly imposing), abounds in impressionistic and imaginative touches, in graphic scenes, &c. He often boldly describes things which no document has preserved as though he had been their witness. . . And, unfortunately, M. Oudard's amplifications of insufficient historical data with his fancy often ring false and are unconvincing. Although M. Oudard's narrative at places is entertaining, one becomes tired of stumbling over inaccuracies, of wading through history handled in too informal a manner. Oudard's purpose seems to be not to characterize Peter but to deride him, and he does it with constant sarcasms, sardonic remarks, witticisms. A book written in that vein can hardly be regarded as a serious historical biography: it is a caricature." A. I. Nazaroff

— N Y Times p8 D 22 '29 620w

OURSLER, FULTON. World's delight. 425p $2 Harper

Menken, Adah Isaacs—Fiction 29-16850

A romantic biography of Adah Menken, narrating her numerous adventures in the rôles of ballet dancer, circus queen, tragedienne, adventuress, lover, and the idol of Swinburne and Dumas.

---

Bookm 70:viii O '29 170w

"Mr. Oursler is, I suspect, an incorrigible romantic. It would be difficult indeed to account otherwise for this quaint, belated effort of his to rehabilitate the memory of Adah Menken, high priestess of profane love in the Sixties. . . Mr. Oursler's interpretation of her career has the moral fervor of a Sunday school serial. . . Her present biographer might have an even jollier time discovering and revealing to us the Lord Fauntleroyish qualities of the Emperor Caligula." Florence Haxton

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 S 8 '29 680w

"Although repeatedly abusing our sense of verity, Mr. Oursler's novelized biography of Adah Isaacs Menken, the darling of the sixties, holds our interest. This in spite of the purple patches and the magniloquent manner which the author chose to tell his tale. He keeps his narrative at a steady gallop, is occasionally accurate, understanding and sentient and frequently evasive and apologetic. . . He has the pleasure of knowing that he is Adah Menken's most fulsome biographer." E. M. Benson

— + N Y Evening Post p4m S 14 '29 850w

"The author has spun a web of verbose descriptions about his heroine, too rarely revealing glimpses of deft characterization. In addition he has constituted himself her publicity man, with a wearying reiteration of her fine qualities and practically no mention of the baser elements. . . Hers was one of the most colorful personalities of the past century's theatre. Mr. Oursler has scarcely done her memory full justice."

— N Y Times p28 O 6 '29 380w

"In our opinion it fails in its attempt to romanticize that famous beauty into a figure of heroic size. Her beauty—the one thing which brought her fame and the friendship of Dumas, Swinburne and the others—is the one thing of which the author does not convince us. A colored balloon of a story—very pretty and graceful—but Mr. Oursler blew too much wind into it—and it burst."

— Outlook 152:69 S 11 '29 100w

Reviewed by E. M. Benson

Sat R of Lit 6:605 D 28 '29 850w (Same as N Y Evening Post)

OVERTON, GRANT MARTIN. Philosophy of fiction. 366p $3 Appleton

808.3 Fiction 28-25877

Grant Overton builds up his philosophy of fiction thru an analysis of novels of different types from earliest to contemporary works of fiction.

---

Booklist 25:203 F '29

"A diversified and untrammeled study of the novel. To the general reader the direct and practical approach to the subject is bound to be stimulating."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Mr 31 '29 200w

"Mr. Overton's philosophy of fiction rests upon a deep distrust of the rational faculty. And because philosophies are rather dependent on the rational faculty for convincing formulation, his reiterated distrust of that faculty tends to make the reader distrust his philosophy." Dorothy Brewster

N Y Evening Post p8m D 22 '28 340w

"As an expositor of the philosophy of fiction Grant Overton leaves something to be desired; he is wordy where he should be precise, and he falls into the easy habit of suggesting too much through a parade of titles. . . Where Mr. Overton is most valuable is in his analysis of the structure of various novels. One of these, a study of the methods that Miss Cather uses to get her effects in 'A Lost Lady,' is very sound." J: Chamberlain

— + N Y Times p2 Jl 21 '29 600w

N Y World p10m F 3 '29 150w

Pratt p26 autumn '29

"His summaries are unusually good, his comments always sensible and in certain cases extremely acute. But even more interesting is the similar detailed account appended to each group of a 'laboratory' novel in the same genre —that is, an original, unwritten novel the aim, theme, characters, viewpoint and outline of which are carefully, but also imaginatively developed from some single actual incident or situation. This has been done before, but seldom more soundly or attractively. As authentic accounts of the genesis of typical novels they have real value for students of the novel and criticism alike. . . Mr. Overton has not little to say in praise of both Mr. Forster's book on the novel and Mr. Lubbock's 'The Craft of Fiction'; and it can be said that he himself has produced a volume which, in its own slightly American way, is worthy to be set beside them."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p491 Je 20 '29 1150w

Wis Lib Bul 25:28 Ja '29

OVERTON, JACQUELINE MARION. Long Island's story. 348p il $3.50 Doubleday, Doran

974.721 Long Island—History 29-17844

The history of Long Island is here attractively told and illustrated and given a very fine format. Miss Overton is children's librarian of the Robert Bacon Memorial library, Westbury, Long Island, and has written her book for the Long Island boys and girls who asked for it.

---

Booklist 26:75 N '29

"A story good for children of any age, not written down to childish eyes and not made speciously forbidding and authoritative by show of footnotes and documentation. The bibliography of sources consulted and the use made of it throughout the book are convincing evidence of the real merit of this undertaking. It is an admirable list which appears at the back of 'Long Island's Story.' As a piece of bookmaking the work stands well to the credit of the Garden City press, with decorations by Edward Wilson charmingly in tune with the general tone of the story. . . Proofreading calls

OVERTON, J. M.—Continued
for some attention in a second edition." H. M. Lydenberg
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Jl 28 '29 900w

Cleveland Open Shelf p134 N '29

"It was written, Miss Overton explains, for Long Island boys and girls in response to many requests. Despite this derivation the book by no means belongs on the juvenile shelf and may be recommended to those adults who look upon histories with a schoolboy's aversion, for it is neither tedious nor prosy. In its unpretentious way it presents a vivacious sketch of the old Long Island life that Theodore Roosevelt loved to read about and to discuss." Halsey Raines
+ N Y Times p5 Ag 4 '29 1200w

OWEN, EMERSON D. (NORTH 3-1, pseud.). Pick up the pieces. 289p $3 Doubleday, Doran
362.2 Insane hospitals 29-8120

The author's medical history includes a succession of private sanitariums for the cure of alcoholism. Finally committed to a state asylum for the insane, he found a way to outwit the authorities and to write this story of the treatment he suffered in both private and state institutions.

"For all its rambling, for all its lack of organization, his story is vivid, at times revolting in its frankness, always engrossing. The tale omits a complete account of his regeneration, which would make interesting reading."
Bookm 69:iv Je '29 160w

"The story is a strong and masterly appeal for a stronger and sterner code of laws that will maintain an adequate supervision over the institutions that have jurisdiction over these forlorn ones of the earth." H. F. M.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 27 '29 500w

"An interesting if hectic account." E. S.
+ — N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 9 '29 80w

N Y Times p12 Ap 7 '29 430w

"There is little fundamental light to be obtained, much suspicion thrown on bad and good efforts alike, and a grave doubt as to whether the reader who seeks literary value, or the reader who seeks a better understanding of the needs and chances for help for a drinker, will get a reward for following the author through the 289 pages of narrative and pertinent and sometimes gratuitous jottings." Adolph Meyer, M.D.
— + Sat R of Lit 6:152 S 21 '29 1100w

OWEN, JOHN. Lark's fate (Eng title Shepherd and the child). 316p $2.50 Lippincott [7s 6d Gollancz]
29-20657

An English story of a gentle village shepherd whose instinct against killing was sorely tried during the war. When a handsome bully took his sweetheart from him he bided his time until the chance came to use his war-gained knowledge. Woven into the thread of the main theme is the story of a little lad who had killed a lark and who was trying to believe that the lark still lived.

"The whole picture fits squarely into its simple frame. It does not challenge the eye with a brilliance. It has no glitter. But it has an harmonious dignity. . . Whatever the cause, there is a tenuous, gauzy quality to 'Lark's Fate' which, while it may lull your emotions, nevertheless engenders a welcome mood of calm." P: Andrews
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Ag 11 '29 400w

"Mr. Owen handles his fragile subject too clumsily. It is impossible to deny his insight (or his memory) and the beauty of his conception, but, judged by the reasonably high standard which Mr. Owen would invite himself, the execution is not worthy of them. The prose, over which much care was probably taken, is indifferent. It is overdone, and not free from pretentiousness."
— + Nation and Ath 44:854 Mr 16 '29 200w

"A poet, apparently, has tried to write a novel and succeeded not as well as poets usually do. Mr. Owen's story is jerky and underdeveloped. He seems to have difficulty with its plot, shifting it with the obvious uneasiness of a man forced to hold a hot potato, and apparently dropping it a couple of times in the process. . . Compensating for many ailments of 'Lark's Fate' is a fantastic, dreamlike quality of loveliness. If the book had been kept in that key, it might have been better. Realism and fantasy don't blend smoothly." F: F. Van de Water
— N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 27 '29 140w

"The novel has a surface charm. It is full of bright color. It has imaginative feeling, for Mr. Owen is a poet at heart. In spite of these gifts of ingratiating quality, however, it is our contention that Mr. Owen has failed to grasp the tragic elements of life and character which afford stature and solidity to tragic form." Edwin Clark
— + N Y Times p9 S 22 '29 750w

"In Lark's Fate a tragic theme of classic proportions is inadequately handled. . . Reading the book, with its unkept promise of power and beauty, one feels that the author has conceived a subject fit for a great novel, but has been hopelessly handicapped in execution by a light-fiction technique."
— Outlook 152:627 Ag 14 '29 200w

"A portentous and improbable story. The Shepherd is a strange character, combining strong disapproval of any form of killing with a predisposition to blood-mania when his temper is irritated. It is difficult to share Mr. Owen's enthusiasm for his character. A murderous humanitarian is surely the least attractive of mankind." L. P. Hartley
— Sat R 147:256 F 23 '29 130w

"Mr. Owen has achieved something of a miracle in his new book, for he has brought the banal and the sublime so close together that we are hard put to distinguish one from the other. . . Over and over again, Mr. Owen snatches his book from the sugary slough of sentiment. There are passages of great beauty in this book."
+ Spec 142:549 Ap 6 '29 260w

Springf'd Republican p7e S 22 '29 450w

"The passages in Mr. Owen's novel that rise to a beauty which truly weds emotion and expression are those in which the shepherd and the child converse together. . . All the exchanges between Stephen and the boy are delightful; the tragedy of Lantorn himself is on another plane. . . The story is told with a restrained but unconcealed emotion, and in the tragic process the author has a rare power of reading the workings of simple minds."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p138 F 21 '29 600w

OWEN, ROSAMOND DALE (MRS LAWRENCE OLIPHANT). My perilous life in Palestine. 346p $3 Duffield [12s 6d Allen & U.]
B or 92

The author, a granddaughter of Robert Owen, founder of the communistic experiment at New Harmony, Indiana, married the brilliant eccentric, Laurence Oliphant, while he was organizing a party to start a colony in Palestine. He died within a few months and his wife went to Palestine where she endeavored to carry out his scheme of colonization. She spent many years trying to gain possession of a tract of land on the field of Armageddon which Oliphant had bought.

"A rare purity transfuses these intimate revelations. This the reader will respect, even if at the same time he deplore the minuteness of introspective analysis, and the unrestraint of its expression." F. B.
Boston Transcript p4 Ap 13 '29 800w

Nation and Ath 44:sup230 N 10 '28 80w

"It is a fantastic tale, filled with emotional adventures, audacious undertakings, inspirations of the moment, voices and visions. It seems, indeed, more like the phantasmagoria of some more than usually consistent dream, than the actual story of a real life."

N Y Times p14 My 5 '29 500w

OXFORD book of carols, by Percy Dearmer, R. Vaughan Williams, and Martin Shaw. words ed 248p $2 (4s 6d) Oxford

808.8 Carols 28-24870

"A collection of carols, traditional and modern, with a historical introduction and notes referring to tunes."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 25:350 Je '29

"As might be expected, such a work is based on old English usages, and the words and music of a large number of the carols have been doing merry duty for hundreds of years. Some of the carols are of European origin; German and French folk songs also are given. Bishop Brooks' 'O Little Town of Bethlehem' is included."
+ Boston Transcript p3 F 9 '29 200w
N Y Times p9 D 16 '28 80w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 33:635 D '28
Pratt p24 winter '29

"This is the most interesting, the most inclusive, the most useful collection of carols that has yet appeared." E: B. Reed
+ Sat R of Lit 5:511 D 15 '28 1050w

OXFORD book of regency verse, 1798-1837; chosen by H. S. Milford. 887p $3.75 (8s 6d) Oxford

821.08 English poetry—Collections 29-26262

"This anthology is intended, the editor explains, to bridge the gap between the 'Oxford Book of Eighteenth-Century Verse' and the 'Oxford Book of Victorian Verse.' It begins, therefore, with Wordsworth and Coleridge and ends with Tennyson and Browning." —Nation and Ath

Booklist 25:277 Ap '29
Nation 129:500 O 30 '29 140w

"Mr. Milford remarks on the large amount of first-rate poetry produced in the forty years covered by his anthology, and he also points out that while the major poets were 'so very major,' the minor poets were 'so very minor.' The latter fact caused the anthologist great difficulty, but he has surmounted it and produced an admirable collection."
+ Nation and Ath 44:630 F 2 '29 120w
New Statesman 32:255 D 1 '28 1550w

"For the thoroughness and critical intelligence that distinguish Mr. Milford's selections in the present volume—an extremely difficult task, considering 'the enormous and depressing bulk' of the lesser poets and the consistent unevenness of the romantic poets in general—one can have nothing but admiration." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p8m D 29 '28 300w

Reviewed by Percy Hutchison
N Y Times p2 Je 23 '29 380w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell
No Am 227:adv Mr '29 90w
Pratt p25 summer '29

"A piece of gratuitous book-making utterly unworthy of the scholarly house from which it issues. The title is an absurdity, for what have Blake and Keats to do with the Prince Regent; and the principles of choice which promote William Combe, Kirke White, Richard Chenevix Trench to a place among genuine poets are unintelligible. . . The book is not only a jumble of great poetry and mediocre verse; it is, as regards the good in it, a jumble of things good in very different ways and belonging to different ages under a label which implies relationship."
— Sat R 147:18 Ja 5 '29 450w

"Mr. Milford has handled his immense task with happy alertness and poetic sympathy in every direction."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p974 D 13 '28 1550w

OXFORD poetry, 1928; ed., with a plea for better criticism, by Clere Parsons and B. B. 59p $1.25 Appleton [3s 6d Blackwell]

821.08 English poetry—Collections [28-30842]

The 1928 collection of poetry from the work of the undergraduate poets at Oxford university.

Reviewed by C: Divine
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 My 19 '29 60w
Boston Transcript p3 Ag 3 '29 100w

"The reviewer looks timidly into the pages, and sees some new spirits pursuing Eliot, and others Sacheverell Sitwell, and others Wordsworth, and sees no reason why they should not. There is a natural affinity of voices as of minds. The only advice is: Remember the British Museum. It has acquired a very large number of poetry-books. Properly thought upon, this may help in the awkward movement when a man feels poetical, but has nothing special to say." E. B.
— Nation and Ath 44:528 Ja 12 '29 180w
Times [London] Lit Sup p15 Ja 3 '29 330w

P

PACH, WALTER. Ananias; or, The false artist. 281p il $4 Harper

750 Art. Artists. Art criticism 28-29553

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

Booklist 25:200 F '29

"Through near four hundred pages, there is nothing but such a ponderous accumulation of unintelligent bigotry, dull anecdote and sterile pedantry, compounded of a style that in self-conscious banality is at once a contradiction of his own dogmas of art and a boring display of an appalling unhumanity, that we must call this book, of that scant few on art that we have ever read, the worst." Rockwell Kent
— Bookm 69:108 Mr '29 800w
Dial 86:528 Je '29 130w

"His book is eminently readable and full of curious and apposite incidents and quotations from the Press and from conversation. Perhaps he has over-simplified his statement of the case. His reverence for the art of past times is, I think, exaggerated. But his main contention—that the false art of modern times stands alone in its brazenness and its originality—seems to me undeniable." Roger Fry
+ — Nation and Ath 44:848 Mr 16 '29 620w

" 'Ananias' seems to me to have cleared the air of our galleries, even if it has added to the litter in their cellars and storerooms; and I think Mr. Pach has performed a public service not less courageous than valuable." L: Mumford
+ New Repub 58:129 Mr 20 '29 1250w

"This is an important, interesting and very bad book. It is like straining the ear to listen to a little angry man mumbling and stammering a confused yarn, that slowly and piecemeal, rewards your patience. Which is as much as to say that Mr. Pach does not know how to write, but what he has to say is extremely worth while." W: Bolitho
+ — N Y World p10m N 25 '28 720w
Pratt p20 summer '29
St Louis 27:53 F '29

"A book which is very interesting and might even do some good."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p179 Mr 7 '29 780w

PACKARD, FRANK LUCIUS. Big Shot. 286p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

29-21420

The Big Shot is the leader of a gang of racketeers. When Enid Howard, friend of a young newspaperman, Phil Martin, saw a photograph of the Big Shot, she was sure it was that of her brother, reported missing during the War. Yet Phil, whom she loved, is bent on bringing the Big Shot to justice for his past crimes, and the girl is torn between her affection for these two men. But it turns out that the Big Shot is not Enid's brother after all (a birthmark proves that) and a rival gang sees to it that he and his confederates are rendered less dangerous to society.

PACKARD, F. L.—Continued

---

"The author of countless detective stories takes a chapter from the methods of modern gangsters that proves less interesting, on the whole, than the adventures of the famous Jimmy Dale."
— Bookm 70:xxxiv N '29 100w

Boston Transcript p7 N 13 '29 500w

"It is a lively story of adventure in gangland, with a mystery in it which leads the reader to expect a different ending from the one that the author provides."
+ N Y Times p22 N 3 '29 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p901 N 7 '29 200w

PAGE, KIRBY, ed. Recent gains in American civilization. 357p $3 Harcourt

917.3 United States—Civilization. Progress
28-25344

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

---

"To the reader who has been called upon constantly to peruse diatribes against civilization in all its phases the present volume comes as a welcome relief, particularly since it is not motivated by reckless optimism. The mere recital of half a dozen names of contributors should ease the reader's mind on that score. . . The gathering into book form of these papers, most of which originally appeared in periodical form, has proved definitely worth while."
+ Am J Soc 35:343 S '29 220w

Booklist 25:159 Ja '29

"Because the tone of this volume is one of doubt rather than one of dogmatic certainty, because the contributors have admitted imperfections in their measuring paraphernalia, this may become in time a valuable document. A more than superficial reading will not be particularly heartening to the hopeful, for it casts, to say the least, a reasonable doubt over the roseate picture as animadverted by rotarians, politicians, college presidents and other self-appointed publicity agents for 'God's Own Country.'" R. C. Brady
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Ja 27 '29 400w

"A vivid and, on the whole, a heartening picture of the contemporary scene. . . The reading of the volume leaves one in a mood of critical optimism and hopeful discontent." W. E. Garrison
+ Christian Century 46:455 Ap 4 '29 470w

"Presents the astonishing spectacle of some of the nation's best friends and severest critics in a palliative mood. Having birched the American scene until they are individually and collectively arm-weary, they offer a dose of kindness. . . The inventory has its merits, and can do no harm."
Dial 86:168 F '29 180w

"Despite the eminence of the contributors the student of the social sciences will find the volume only mildly interesting. Indeed, he may turn from its pages with the definite wish that analysts of the caliber here assembled might cease from tormenting their readers with 'skimmings' of this character and confine their activities to more fundamental attacks on the various realms of activity in which they are specialists." S. C. Wallace
— + Pol Sci Q 44:155 Mr '29 250w

Pratt p28 spring '29

St Louis 27:59 F '29

Reviewed by W. C. Abbott
Yale R n s 18:804 summer '29 460w

PAGET-FREDERICKS, JOSEPH ROUS. Green [2] pipes. 42p il $3.50 Macmillan

821 29-28659

Poems for children illustrated with the author's fantastic drawings.

---

"J. Paget-Fredericks, a true artist, has gone much farther than most other American illustrators of children's verse in his volume 'Green Pipes.' His is the primitive animistic conception of beauty. The flowers, the dust, the frost, the forest are alive and moving through patterns of life." E. L. Walton
Nation 129:596 N 20 '29 380w

Reviewed by M. L. Becker
Outlook 153:589 D 11 '29 40w

"J. Paget-Fredericks is a self-conscious, mannered draughtsman with a gift for adopting certain special tricks of other and better artists. In 'Green Pipes' his pictures show evidence of his having pored over Rackham, Beardsley, and Alastair far too assiduously. Throughout there is never a hint of the freedom or naturalness of childhood. Seldom, it seems to me, has there been a more outstanding example of trumped-up ingenuousness." Rachel Field
— Sat R of Lit 6:403 N 16 '29 170w

PAINE, SWIFT. Eilley Orrum, queen of the Comstock. 309p $3 Bobbs

B or 92 Bowers, Mrs Eilley (Orrum)
29-9214

Eilley Orrum, fifteen-year-old girl of the Highlands believed implicitly in her high destiny. Converted by a Mormon missionary she left Scotland for Nauvoo with enthusiasm, and in the course of the next few years acquired and divorced two husbands, married a third and achieved two children. Then came a silver mine, fabulous wealth and a mansion, and as wealth declined, a career as crystal gazer in Comstock, Nevada.

---

"In spite of his diligence in collecting the elusive materials which build up the career of the Bowerses, in spite of his obvious affection for his theme, Mr. Paine proves unfaithful to it in more than one essential way. He has striven toward a solid authenticity, explaining away the more fabulous parts of the story. At the same time he has fictionized the entire substance, packing it with imaginary conversations and spinning out contemporary details which never could have been recorded unless either Eilly or Sandy had been a Pepys. The two methods hardly match, and neither suits the Bowerses." Constance Rourke
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 Ap 21 '29 700w

Boston Transcript p2 O 2 '29 280w

Cleveland Open Shelf p108 Jl '29

"The story of Eilley Orrum, eccentric Queen of the Comstock, is so badly and so sketchily written that the reader gets only the faintest rumor of what may be a most engaging story of the mining frontier." H: Chapin
— New Repub 59:80 Je 5 '29 200w

"In a vividly picturesque true story exhumed from old newspapers of Virginia City, Gold Hill, Carson and Reno, the author reflects a curious life, flowingly and with a sense for drama and humorous appreciation." F: H. Martens
+ N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 27 '29 150w

"Mr. Paine's style, agreeably reminiscent of Thomas Beer's mannered locutions, is most happily employed in presenting the gaudy background of Eilley's ventures into matrimony, splendor, inn keeping and crystal gazing. The inner character of the living woman eludes him. He cannot create much beyond the material in the files. But that is rich enough."
+ — N Y Times p11 My 26 '29 650w

PALEOLOGUE, GEORGES MAURICE. Tragic empress; tr. by Hamish Miles. 264p il $3.50 Harper [10s 6d T. Butterworth]

B or 92 Eugénie, empress consort of Napoleon III 28-28378

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

Booklist 25:246 Mr '29

"M. Paleologue has written about Eugénie with a deep historical consciousness and a profound realization of her amazing destiny as a human being, and in a singularly urbane and felicitous style. The account he has given us of those confidences he received from Eugénie, which could be accurately described as her apologia pro vita sua, is extraordinarily interesting both from the point of view of the fresh light they cast upon the secret history of the Second Empire and, above all, as a revelation of the character of the Empress herself." Esther Murphy

+ Bookm 69:99 Mr '29 640w

Cath World 129:756 S '29 580w

"One of the most important, as well as one of the most readable, of the recent biographies." W. E. G.

+ Christian Century 46:21 Ja 3 '29 210w

Cleveland Open Shelf p93 Je '29

"Fairly animated and illuminating dialogues."

+ Nation 128:678 Je 5 '29 100w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:9 F '29

St Louis 27:137 Ap '29

"As materials for history the value [of the conversations] is limited. But as a revelation of the Empress herself in her old age they present a remarkable picture." F. M. Anderson

Sat R of Lit 5:599 Ja 19 '29 530w

Springf'd Republican p8 Ap 1 '29 800w

PALFREY, FRANCIS WINSLOW. Facts of modern medicine; a simplified statement of established knowledge on medical subjects, with reference also to certain current misconceptions. 490p il $5 (21s) Appleton

610 Medicine 29-8864

The purpose of the author has been to give in a single volume, for the use of the general reader and the beginning medical student, a concise survey of the whole field of medical science. Part I covers the fundamental sciences; Part II, diseases.

"This little volume should be in the library of every public health administrative officer and every volunteer health organization." B. F. Royer

+ Am J Pub Health 19:837 Jl '29 210w

Booklist 25:383 Jl '29

"The task is a mighty one, and he has not only written a remarkably ample compendium but has included much material new to such treatises. The layman will hardly find elsewhere so thorough a treatment of pathology, inflammation, infection and tumors. The illustrations are unusually telling, and scientific, as they should be, and the book is well indexed."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 N 24 '29 320w

Boston Transcript p4 My 11 '29 500w

"More detailed than several other recent popular books dealing with the subject but written in a clear and readable style, well-organized, and provided with an index which makes it unusually convenient for reference."

+ J Home Econ 21:450 Je '29 50w

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p458 Je 6 '29 60w

PALMER, FREDERICK. Clark of the Ohio; the life of George Rogers Clark. 482p il $5 Dodd

B or 92 Clark, George Rogers 29-13403

In a large and attractive volume with fine illustrations, Mr Palmer gives a lively, popular biography of Clark placing the emphasis on his military campaigns, and offering as background, vivid sketches of the frontier life of the time.

Booklist 26:29 O '29

"The biography is engaging for a number of reasons. In the first place it is completely unprofessional in its presentation. Colonel Palmer, a sometime war correspondent, writes a carefree, lightly colorful prose that is fresh even when it is technically infelicitous." J: Chamberlain

+ Bookm 70:212 O '29 720w

"Mr. Palmer's biography, while written with verve and occasionally with brilliance, and discovering a remarkable aptitude for the description of military events, is regrettably marred by numerous minor errors of fact and interpretation. It would be merest pedantry to call attention to these were it not that they indicate a certain lack of familiarity with the period." H: S. Commager

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Je 23 '29 1550w

"He has written a full biography of nearly five hundred pages, the life of a great pioneer, and has contrived to make it not only honest and authoritative, but entirely lively, picturesque and inspiring." S. L. Cook

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 15 '29 1300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p140 N '29

Reviewed by R. C. B. Brown

N Y Evening Post p6m Je 29 '29 550w

"There was urgent need for such a book. There have been biographies of Clark, the man who extended the United States from the Atlantic seaboard over the West; but generally they have been stodgy and wooden. It was necessary that Clark should be presented in a way to strike the imagination, so that he could take his place, not as one of the many Western adventurers; but as one of the few immortals in the making of America." C: W. Thompson

+ N Y Times p1 Je 23 '29 1850w

"He writes in a commonplace, almost juvenile way, and his book is the work of a man accustomed to writing hurriedly for an uncritical audience and guiltless of any distinction of style. But although one may wish he were an abler writer, the great interest of his subject, and his own enthusiasm for it and desire to transmit it to his audience outweigh his literary weakness."

+ — Outlook 152:309 Je 19 '29 380w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw

R of Rs 80:20 Ag '29 80w

"What he has done is to present in highly popular and readable form a good deal of the material which Dr. James offers rather drily. In particular, Mr. Palmer, who is an expert on military affairs, has told the story of Clark's campaigns in a stirring and vigorous narrative, which carries the reader along as he is carried by many chapters in Roosevelt's 'Winning of the West.' . . Unfortunately, his book betrays throughout his lack of any thorough knowledge of either Western history or general American history, subjects which cannot be 'gotten up' in six months for the purposes of a popular biography. There are numerous errors of fact, and still more glaring errors of interpretation and comment. The illustrations of the book deserve a special word of praise." Allan Nevins

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:1158 Jl 6 '29 300w

PALMER, JOHN LESLIE. See Beeding, F., pseud.

PALMER, LOIS. Your house; a workable book for the home decorator. 209p il $3 Boston cooking school mag. co., 221 Columbus av., Boston

747 House decoration. Furniture 28-25360

"It is strictly a how-to-do-it handbook, with color charts, diagrams for placing furniture, minute directions for the making and hanging of curtains and interesting advice on the selection of pieces of furniture. Of the fourteen

PALMER, LOIS—Continued
chapters seven are given over to detailed treatment of what to do with the various rooms of the house from sun room to drawing room, while the remaining space is taken up with sections on color and color schemes, window hangings, lighting, finishing and refinishing, furniture, floors and a brief outline of the history of furniture."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Booklist 25:239 Mr '29

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ja 13 '29 130w

"Miss Palmer knows what her public wants. For some years she has answered, through newspaper columns, the kind of question that every woman asks: What to do to a floor; what color one's curtains should be when the carpet is another color; what furnishing is best for which room—on through the house, from the front door to the kitchen exit. . . Miss Palmer's style is modern, crisp, sharp, witty." L. H. G.

\+ Boston Transcript p6 N 7 '28 450w

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 24 '29 180w

PALMER, VIVIEN MARIE. Field studies in sociology; a student's manual. (Social science studies) 281p il $2.50 Univ. of Chicago press [12s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

301 Sociology—Study and teaching 29-2359

"In this 'student's manual' we have one of the few attempts to introduce beginners systematically to sociological research. The book is made up of four parts. The first discusses the objectives, methods, and basic assumptions of sociological research, marking off the field clearly from the other social sciences and from social work and social reform. The second part outlines in detail three types of case studies—one of a territorial group (community), one of an interest group (boys' gang), and one of an accommodation group (immigrant colony). Part Three takes up the techniques of observation, interviewing, diaries, map-making, documentation, analysis, and interpretation. The Appendixes contain sample materials from studies actually made in Chicago."—Am J Soc

"The book can be most heartily recommended to every teacher and advanced student of sociology. It opens up the field of sociological research in a more satisfactory manner than any other book that has yet appeared." S. A. Queen

\+ Am J Soc 34:1197 My '29 320w

"As a handbook for students making field studies in sociology this volume fills a real need and it ought to find a welcome among schools of social work as well as departments of sociology." Nels Anderson

\+ Survey 61:814 Mr 15 '29 280w

Times [London] Lit Sup p167 F 28 '29 80w

PALMERSTON, HENRY JOHN TEMPLE, 3d viscount, and GLADSTONE, WILLIAM EWART. Palmerston papers: Gladstone and Palmerston; ed. with an introd. and commentary by Philip Guedalla. (Palmerston papers) 367p $5 Harper [16s Gollancz]

B or 92 Great Britain—Politics and government [29-4489]

Writing of this correspondence between Lord Palmerston and Mr Gladstone from 1851-1865, Philip Guedalla says in the Introduction, "If half the fascination of history resides in the opportunity to catch again the tone of voices long silent, I know of few corners where this agreeable form of eavesdropping may be more conveniently practised. And how distinct the voices are—the cheerful note of Palmerston countering his argumentative colleague with a brisk answer, Gladstone's sedate replies, and under all the talk the steady pulse of the mid-Nineteenth Century."

Booklist 25:319 My '29

"Mr. Guedalla shows us brilliantly the background against which these letters were written and makes a connected narrative of what would otherwise be a valuable but lifeless collection of documents. Though we may at times tire of writing which at all costs must be clever, there is no question that Mr. Guedalla has a magic touch which makes whatever he writes real and vivid." F. R. Dulles

\+ Bookm 69:331 My '29 520w

"This volume of letters is thin; if the greatness of the two men depended upon the impression given here they would be slightly anemic heroes. The volume is eminently worth while for the fifty delightful pages of introduction by Mr. Guedalla, in which he comments on the correspondence and suggests how it brings out the characteristics of the men." A. L. Sachar

\+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 Mr 3 '29 1000w

Reviewed by Sidney Homer

Boston Transcript p10 Mr 30 '29 1700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p140 N '29

Reviewed by G. B. Hurst

Eng Hist R 44:314 Ap '29 850w

Reviewed by S. K. Ratcliffe

Nation 129:724 D 11 '29 150w

Nation and Ath 44:496 Ja 5 '29 720w

"The letters are extremely interesting, and full of good things."

\+ New Statesman 32:supvi N 3 '28 780w

"Mr. Guedalla has done well a job worth doing. This correspondence is of value not only to the historiographer but to anybody who wants to sharpen his mental picture of nineteenth century England." L. Sherwin

\+ N Y Evening Post p6m Je 22 '29 650w

"In an introductory essay, so brilliant in its wealth of adornment, so sound in its foundation of common sense, so exquisitely polished in the style of its sentences that it throws into the shade all the letters of Gladstone and Palmerston that follow, Mr. Guedalla attacks point-blank what may be called the erudite history. He attacks it, not only because it is dull but because, being dull, it must be untrue. To any one acquainted with these strong personalities, the correspondence is fascinating." P. W. Wilson

\+ — N Y Times p11 My 19 '29 900w

"There is no collection in which the 'inner life of a Cabinet is more fully exhibited or the realities of government seen more plainly in operation.' Mr. Guedalla's Commentary is a model of biographical composition, such as we had reason to expect from this ablest disciple of Mr. Lytton Strachey. It is brief but extremely pregnant, and written with rare distinction and charm of style, with a wit that is always present and sometimes passes over into a kind of dry poetry." Van Wyck Brooks

\+ Outlook 151:348 F 27 '29 650w

"The Commentary which introduces the Correspondence is excellent, so good as to render the reading of the letters almost unnecessary. He says in effect, 'I have given you in another book my picture of Palmerston without bothering you with footnotes or letters. If you want such stuffy things as facts and dates and correspondence, I have shovelled them into a separate volume, which you may please yourself about reading and which you must explain for yourself.' This is the new method, which I admit has advantages for people in a hurry. I prefer the old method so successfully practised by Trevelyan and others of stitching letters together with words of explanation." A. A. B.

\+ — Sat R 146:496 O 20 '28 1150w

"It is a good book. The introduction is amusing; the commentary is interesting reading; the letters are useful and informing, and the whole is in the best modern manner. It lacks some of the elements of the 'modern manner.' It has few or no 'revelations'; it does not shock; it has no 'indiscretions,' and it has none of that 'sex appeal' which is so characteristic of some of our most acclaimed writers of 'biography' today." W. C. Abbott

\+ Sat R of Lit 5:1124 Je 22 '29 850w

Spec 141:549 O 20 '28 940w
+ Springf'd Republican p7e My 19 '29 1300w
Times [London] Lit Sup p767 O 25 '28 1900w

PARADIS, MRS MARJORIE BARTHOLOMEW. Caddis. 367p $2.50 Century
29-22140

The original caddis, taken from Kingsley's "Water babies," was a silly little creature with only one ambition in life: to adorn itself. Marion Galaway was like that, a selfish woman with one ambition in life, to make the most of her beautiful self, even tho it wrecked her marriage. She realized her ambition and nothing more.

---

"Written in excellent English, with subtle character drawing and no striving for theatrical effect."
+ Boston Transcript p7 N 20 '29 400w
Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p10m D 28 '29 80w
N Y Times p9 D 1 '29 370w

"As a study of American marriage the story compares not unfavorably with Sinclair Lewis's bitter denunciation of the American wife in Dodsworth." Mary Shirley
+ Outlook 153:269 O 16 '29 230w

PARADISE, VIOLA. Wits' end. 332p $2.50 Dutton
28-29960

A young Englishman under contract to write a play goes to Wits' End, Maine, to get it done. On the first day he meets two young women, artists and friends, who promise to enliven the summer. In spite of social and romantic entanglements the play gets written, and then suddenly and devastatingly disappears. But this slight mystery, like the playwright's love affair, is satisfactorily solved in the end.

---

"As nearly as can be discovered, the purpose is to please the reader. And she succeeds. There is not an unpleasant character in the whole crowd. . . There is a little frank and earnest dialogue about the relations of the sexes, some high thoughts on 'creative art', and a little mild satire on the dryness and general hollowness of the intellectuals—but nothing heavy, nothing harmful, and nothing to upset anybody." T. S. Matthews
Bookm 68:687 F '29 250w

"This novel by Viola Paradise has all the satisfaction of something light and simple and well done. . . An accurate and neat psychological insight flavors this comedy of circumstance, especially in the relationship between the two girls, Elinor and Kate. The result is as easy and natural and pleasant as really good manners, and as rarely met with." Mary Ross
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p23 Ja 13 '29 400w

"A little less labor on the part of the author would have bettered the book. A little less marking of moods and a lighter touch would have made her story sparkle along instead of dragging. 'Wits' End' might be an excellent comedy; as written it is rather prosy."
— + Boston Transcript p3 Ja 2 '29 230w

"'Wits' End' is one of the analytical stories in which the author finds the thoughts of her characters more engrossing than their actions. There are pages and pages and pages of thoughts, painfully true to life, since few of them seem particularly worth thinking. Miss Paradise writes easily, but we find her book a little idealized, a little too fluttery, like a Brinkley drawing." F: F. Van de Water
— + N Y Evening Post p9m Ja 5 '29 130w

"'Wits' End' is written with an agreeable humor and a satisfying sense of characterization—an altogether readable story."
+ N Y Times p12 D 23 '28 300w

"This book is neither particularly new nor startling, but it is above the average and is good light reading."
+ N Y World p11e Ja 6 '29 150w

"The book is essentially a long-drawn-out, heavily introspective love story with characters not fully projected. The quality of the author's mind, her variety of interests, and a quiet humor save 'Wits' End' from being quite as bromidic as it sounds."
— + Sat R of Lit 5:630 Ja 26 '29 170w

"The story has true grace and refinement, but her characters lack vitality and the narrative lacks substance. Yet the novel can be welcomed for its personal charm and finished writing."
+ — Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 24 '29 100w

PARIJANINE, MAURICE. The Krassin; tr. by Lawrence Brown. 216p il $2.50 Macaulay
919.8 Krassin (ship). Italia (airship). Arctic regions
29-3211

"Maurice Parijanine, a Parisian journalist, was the only non-Russian correspondent who was allowed to go aboard the ice-breaker Krassin when she came back from Spitzbergen. While giving many essential details of the trip of this gallant craft in its heroic attempt to rescue the members of the ill-fated Nobile expedition, Parijanine's account is most focussed on the Malmgren mystery. It is easy to perceive what he thinks to be the truth, and this does not redound to the favor of Captain Zappi."—Boston Transcript

---

Booklist 25:281 Ap '29
Reviewed by C. L. Skinner
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 F 3 '29 500w
Boston Transcript p2 F 27 '29 330w
Reviewed by Freda Kirchwey
Nation 128:163 F 6 '29 500w

"The book gives the story of the Krassin presumably from the Russian point of view. The phenomenal voyage of that rescue ship makes fascinating reading, even if the author does mar his work every once in a while by slipping in a bit of nonsense under the guise of Arctic lore. But the main purpose of the book is to repeat certain sensational and gruesome charges against Captain Zappi that were hinted at in the press at the time of his rescue. . . We cannot accept Parijanine's word as final, because his source-material is highly questionable." Earl Hanson
— + N Y Evening Post p8m Ja 26 '29 520w

"It is a swift, coherent, exciting piece of reporting, embodying stark nightmare. The facts Mr. Parijanine alleges and the conclusion he draws therefrom make 'The Krassin' a grisly yet fascinating book." F: F. Van de Water
+ N Y Evening Post p9m F 2 '29 420w

"A sensational, though well documented, account by a Parisian journalist of Communist sympathies, in which the seeds of discord, recrimination and terrible failure which attended the ill-fated flight of Nobile to the North Pole yield bitter fruit." H. L. Matthews
N Y Times p4 Ja 20 '29 800w

"Parijanine is a French journalist with Communist sympathies, and his book leaves out very little of the ugly side of the tragedy. It is documented, if sensational, and some of its most distressing facts are hardly to be denied." Herschel Brickell
+ No Am 227:adv Mr '29 200w
St Louis 27:205 Je '29

"Despite the occasionally forced conclusions of the author, 'The Krassin' will be an important document to any student of the Italia venture, at least until such time as the archives of the Soviet and Fascist governments are opened for an authoritative examination of the case. The style of the book is journalistic throughout, repetitious at times, but always clear."
+ — Springf'd Republican p10 F 20 '29 700w

PARK, RUTH BROWN. Book shops; how to run them; introd. by Cedric R. Crowell. 152p $2 Doubleday, Doran

655.5 Booksellers and bookselling 29-4070

For those teased by the lure of owning or running a book shop here is excellent practical help on all the problems involved in setting up shop. The author writes from experience, having been a staff member of the Doubleday, Doran bookshops.

---

Booklist 25:311 My '29

"What Mrs. Park has tried to do in her volume on 'Book Shops' is to sift out the best in current shop practice and arrange it into convenient and readable chapters so that those who come to consider bookselling as a possible livelihood may be able to check over their hopes and fears. Her laboratory has been the Doubleday, Doran bookshops, which, for a dozen years or more have been testing out the technique of retailing in New York and other cities. The facts may be vouched for, and the presentation is spirited." F: Melcher

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 F 24 '29 300w

"A careful study of what the book shop proprietor should do and how he should do it from the moment he sets out to secure his location until the business is a going concern."

+ N Y Times p10 Ja 20 '29 180w

PARK, WILLIAM HALLOCK, and WILLIAMS, ANNA WESSELS. Who's who among the microbes. 302p il $3 Century

616.01 Micro-organisms. Bacteria 29-8142

The photographic illustrations show the laboratory staff of the New York City Health department at work among the test tubes. The text is an expansion of radio talks describing the microbes of communicable diseases and what has been discovered about them.

---

Booklist 25:349 Je '29

Bookm 69:xiv Je '29 130w

Boston Transcript p5 My 11 '29 420w

"The authors can introduce them all with as much information about them, individually and collectively, as anybody can give you at this moment, and they speak with authority."

+ N Y Times p12 Ap 7 '29 520w

"A very readable and informative book which will give you some understanding of and a good deal of respect for the science of bacteriology." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 152:113 My 15 '29 100w

Pratt p14 summer '29

St Louis 27:264 S '29

" 'Who's Who Among the Microbes' introduces the general reader to representatives of the principal groups of microbes in such a pleasant way that it is difficult to put the book down. It is particularly free from the technical language of a text-book as well as from the 'froth' which is so often found in definitely popular expositions."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:1061 My 25 '29 330w

"A straightforward story, easy to read but not merely jazzed up. This is one of those books that takes the layman beyond his customary superficial acceptance of theories and practices, and for the reading of alert young people of twelve to twenty it is not too technical."

+ World Tomorrow 12:316 Jl '29 70w

PARKER, BERTHA MORRIS. Book of electricity. 314p il $1.50 Houghton

621.31 Electricity 28-23015

"Can be read with profit by children of pre-high school age. The chapters, Frictional Electricity, Electric Circuits, Magnets, Using Electricity to Produce Heat and Light, Using Electricity to Do Work, Electroplating, Ways in Which Doctors Use Electricity, and Sending Messages by Means of Electricity contain many interesting stories of the development of 'our new slave.' "—Sat R of Lit

---

Booklist 25:172 Ja '29

" 'The Book of Electricity' is just the kind of a book an engineer would expect a woman to write on this subject. Excellently arranged and with words suitable for children from ten to fourteen years of age, the book is distinctly feminine in its treatment and grasp of a most practical field of endeavor. . . A particular virtue of the book is that it is not written in text-book style; it does not smack of school." J. O. Perrine

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:635 Ja 26 '29 720w

PARKER, ERIC. English wild life. (English heritage ser.) 180p $1.40 (3s 6d) Longmans

591.942 Natural history—England [29-20305]

In this volume of the English heritage series a lover of wild life, once a hunter of wild things but now an intimate watcher of their ways, writes of the Englishman's inheritance of animal life, of creatures past and passing, and of interesting birds.

---

"Mr. Parker's is a book to slip in the pocket on a country walk or sigh over in London."

+ New Statesman 34:161 N 9 '29 180w

Reviewed by T. E. Welby

Sat R 148:513 N 2 '29 300w

"It is refreshing, it is of the best of its kind, and it is in the tradition." H. M.

+ Spec 143:548 O 19 '29 230w

"In all his descriptions of things seen there is something picturesque, intimate, illuminating, of a quality to incite the dullest of no-eyes to look for those fine things which may meet us at any turn. The book will appeal, perhaps, most strongly to the would-be observer, not too old to learn, who has put away his guns and rods and is aware of a new world before him."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p863 O 31 '29 800w

PARKER, ERIC, and others. Shooting by moor, field, and shore; a practical guide to modern methods. (Lonsdale lib. of sports, games and pastimes) 380p il $7 Lippincott [21s Seeley]

799.2 Hunting. Game and game-birds

A compilation of articles by several authorities on various subjects pertaining to different types of game hunting.

---

Sat R 148:554 N 9 '29 180w

"A wholly modern and, if compressed, yet a complete encyclopaedia in little for the gunner and for all who are concerned with the rearing and preservation of game. Merely as natural history, too, the book, written as it is by trained observers, will be found of particular interest and charm to the many who do not shoot."

+ Spec 143:632 N 2 '29 280w

Times [London] Lit Sup p861 O 31 '29 1550w

PARKS, GEORGE BRUNER. Richard Hakluyt and the English voyages; ed., with an introd., by James A. Williamson. (Special publication) 289p il $5 Am. geographical soc.

B or 92 Hakluyt, Richard, 1552?-1616. Hakluyt, Richard, d. 1591. Discoveries (in geography) 29-1256

"We are indebted to the Professor of English in Washington University, St. Louis, for this first study of the Hakluyts and their important contribution to the British Realm."—Times [London] Lit Sup

---

"This excellent monograph will be welcomed by investigators of Tudor literature, by researchers in the development of geographical ideas, and by students of Elizabethan expansion and American colonial history. Dr. Parks has contributed richly to our understanding of Hakluyt's function and busy career. He is to be particularly commended for his scrupulous determination to show his hero, at stage after stage of his life, actively concerned with the commercial affairs of his day." Fulmer Mood

+ Am Hist R 34:817 Jl '29 550w

"Mr. Parks has given the world a most notable book, and the American Geographical Society has well seconded him. It has many illustrations and maps, is liberally supplied with informative notes and appendices, a good bibliography and clear index. It is written in an interesting and readable style, which is not always characteristic of books of serious research. It is illuminating on the state of geographical knowledge in Elizabethan days. It is an impressive sketch of a great figure." C: J. Finger
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Mr 31 '29 1150w

"The book is printed in the impressive style to which we are accustomed in the output of the American Geographical Society. It is, as the author says, 'the first life of Hakluyt' and is prepared with thorough and even elaborate scholarship. There are thirty-two excellent illustrations, some of them facsimiles of pages of works connected with Hakluyt." G: M. Wrong
+ Canadian Hist R 10:159 Je '29 500w

"A body of knowledge much less romantic than the nothing we knew of Hakluyt before, but much more interesting."
+ Nation 129:23 Jl 3 '29 60w

"I know of no other biography of the industrious 'preacher' comprised in one volume and this new publication is warmly welcomed. The style of the book, not unduly professorial, is of all things lucid, and one is made familiar with Hakluyt's life work and that of his cousin and elder, Richard Hakluyt of the Middle Temple." D: W. Bone
+ Sat R of Lit 6:5 Jl 27 '29 600w
Times [London] Lit Sup p445 Je 6 '29 1200w

PARMENTER, CHRISTINE (WHITING) (MRS KENNETH R. PARMENTER). Silver ribbons. 287p $2 Henkle 29-13374

" 'Silver Ribbons' is a story of young people set in New England. It celebrates with gentle sympathy that country of green hills, white villages and strong characters. A plain-spoken old lady, her good and pretty granddaughter, the old doctor and the new one, a tried and true sweetheart, local lights and shadows and a situation in regard to the old homestead which is suspiciously like the time-honored mortgage make up the story."—Outlook

---

" 'Silver Ribbons' is an average story told with only average skill; the sophisticated probably won't like it, the dear old lady from Dubuque undoubtedly will; as for the rest of us, we may take it or leave it, and reading it leaves a pleasant taste in the mouth."
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Jl 14 '29 350w

"The story is cleverly constructed and well written and it holds our interest to the end."
+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 6 '29 300w

"Miss Parmenter has written a volume that deserves coronation by the Boston Watch and Ward Society. For general consumption, it seems to us it can best be employed as an antidote for the sufferer from too much Ernest Hemingway or Sherwood Anderson. 'Silver Ribbons' is a lot of pleasant words wrapped attractively about nothing much." F: F. Van de Water
N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 27 '29 200w

"Mrs. Parmenter portrays a simple life, touched with frugality and pathos, but very noble, nevertheless."
N Y Times p18 Jl 21 '29 300w

"A placid well-written story for a summer's afternoon." F. L. Robbins
Outlook 152:391 Jl 3 '29 60w

PARRISH, ANNE (MRS CHARLES ALBERT CORLISS). Methodist faun. 334p $2.50 Harper 29-20108

Bill and Cathleen called Clifford Hunter the Methodist faun, in secret. His mother was the leading feminine Methodist in town, while Clifford had a leaning toward art. And Clifford was very much his mother's boy. It was probably that fact which accounted for Clifford's frustrated life, for frustrated it was at every turn: his love for Cathleen, his attraction for Evie, his art which never quite clicked and his marriage with Margaret. One night, in delirium, he wandered out into a snowstorm, vaguely seeking his beloved woods, and that was the end of the Methodist faun.

---

Booklist 26:120 D '29

"All the persons in all Miss Parrish's books pose, and she gets down their posing without pity. She has no more than a transient compassion for the universal attempt to bridge the discrepancy between the disappointments of reality and the richer life that, by some cruel irony, is always within the reach of imagination. . . If Miss Parrish will lay aside her contempt of all her fellows for the time it takes to write one book, she will produce a novel of unbearable poignancy and great value."
— + Bookm 70:321 N '29 220w

"The second half of 'The Methodist Faun' is better reading than the first, probably because it contains more of the faun and less of the Methodist: which means on the one hand that its banalities are fewer than its purple passages, and on the other that the genuine side of Clifford's character, the passionate side of him, being more highly developed, comes into sharper conflict with his environment. The end of the book is appropriate and original." Garreta Busey
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 O 13 '29 1000w

"Of all Anne Parrish's novels this is by far the most fascinating and the most artistic. The character drawing seems perfect. For there is logic in all her hero's inconsistencies and the reader feels, if not always sympathetic with his vagaries, at least a complete understanding of why life and the Methodist faun should be continually at odds with each other." D. F. Gilman
+ Boston Transcript p8 O 11 '29 1500w

"There is nothing funnier in the world than adolescent love, and nothing more tragically beautiful. It all depends on the point of view. Anne Parrish has succeeded in giving such a panorama of it that the reader sees it with all of its ridiculous panoply of gestures and yearnings and all of its young beauty and loveliness. That tragic-comic struggle is memorable. The book as a whole, however, is not so good as her previous novels." Fanny Butcher
+ — Chicago Daily Tribune p15 O 12 '29 420w

"After two not entirely successful attempts to equal her first novel, 'The Perennial Bachelor,' Anne Parrish has scored a brilliant victory with her fourth. 'The Methodist Faun' matches 'The Perennial Bachelor' in degree of technical excellence, and surpasses it in emotional depth and vigor. . . It is art of high quality that has made so wry and distorted a story as this one appealing and memorable." Margaret Wallace
+ N Y Times p7 O 13 '29 700w

"Despite its title there is very little Methodist baiting in the book. The community in which most of the action takes place is Methodist, but the author is not striving to deny the humanity of the inhabitants on that account. The surprising thing is that she has been able to write so well about them. Her prose is uniformly excellent—so good that one wonders why she took the trouble to spend such careful work on 'The Methodist Faun.' But then the story is just entertaining enough to bring the second reflection: Is any writing worth while? And that way lies madness." D: Loth
+ N Y World p11m O 13 '29 300w

"The best thing about Mrs. Parrish's new novel is its clever title. The story is entirely commonplace, the characters, a collection of types, recognizable in the first few paragraphs, and the style, as usual with this author, is bright."

PARRISH, ANNE—Continued
— + Outlook 153:230 O 9 '29 200w

Reviewed by Johan Smertenko
Outlook 153:397 N 6 '29 120w

"Anne Parrish in her first novel, 'The Perennial Bachelor', struck twelve and since then she has been steadily running down. . . The book is filled with one of the largest collections of bromides ever collected between two covers. However, it is only just to add that there are several passages describing Clifford in the woods, absorbed in the beauty around him, that are as good as anything Miss Parrish has ever written." K. C. Boyer
— + Portland Evening News p5 D 4 '29 280w

"Anne Parrish's art has deepened. Her touch is as crisp and delicate as ever, but a new undercurrent of sympathy plays about her characterizations and flows, ever so gently, over the shining pebbles of her satire, washing them smooth. Into her acute sense of the futility of her nonentities, there obtrudes in her latest novel a consciousness that even insignificant people may be meet for compassion." Grace Frank
+ Sat R of Lit 6:341 N 2 '29 370w
Springf'd Republican p7e N 3 '29 230w

PARROTT, KATHERINE URSULA. Ex-wife. 272p $2 J. Cape & H. Smith
29-17090

"This thin volume purports to be the true story of a woman who was discarded by her husband, and who sought forgetfulness in promiscuity. Her rather lurid career terminated in a sincere passion for a married man. When he left her, she died emotionally, and her final remarriage was merely a passive half-humorous acknowledgment of loneliness."—Nation

"It is a sincerely written autobiography, presented as fiction, and the author has set her scenes and painted her characters convincingly. Her picture of women's freedom, which she terms 'God's greatest gift to men,' is less attractive. Beneath the alluring glamour of such freedom can be felt the hopeless despair of wrecked ideals. It is a vivid footnote to Twentieth Century matrimony."
+ — Bookm 70:xx S '29 170w

"The book has just about the same fidelity to life as 'Gentlemen Prefer Blondes'; is about the same sort of sociological document Miss Loos's was. In other words, provided you are not shocked too easily by casual immoralities and unabashed frankness, you'll find 'Ex-Wife' 'telling all' good entertainment, and you can learn about women from her." Florence Haxton
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 Ag 11 '29 850w
Christian Century 46:1314 O 23 '29 40w

"It is evident that the dramatic sequence is exaggerated and that even the more prosaic details of her flight from memory are theatricalized. Nevertheless, the narrative seems to be authentic; it has a certain intangible quality of truth. Whether it is true or not, however, the book is an interesting portrait of a particular type of post-war woman."
— + Nation 129:310 S 18 '29 200w

"The writing is often sloppy, and the ending strikes a false note, sounding, indeed, as if the author had needed more of a catharsis than confession would allow and had, therefore, decided upon a grand release through a faked renunciation. But the faults only mar; they do not defeat. . . The greatest tribute to 'Ex-Wife' is the avidity with which it is read."
+ — N Y Times p3 Ag 11 '29 850w

"Told in a pedestrian, uninspired tone that probably is ingenuous. The story is constantly on the edge of dullness, chiefly because of the author's lack of skill. There are many tedious passages where Patricia and her roommate philosophize upon the cares and privileges of an 'ex-wife,' who in their minds seems to be a very definite type. This definiteness of type is not apparent to us who read, and consequently much of the point of the book is blunted. There are other annoying faults in the narrative, such as meticulous enumeration of the clothes that Patricia wore, too precise accounts of her work in the advertising department of a large store, and an eccentric, mannered style of writing. The book is unimportant except as an illumination of how a few women-about-town live and what they think about." R. B. Macdougall
— Sat R of Lit 6:91 Ag 31 '29 540w

"'Ex-Wife' has neither sociological nor literary value. It is merely a manufactured 'sensation.'"
— Springf'd Republican p7e Ag 25 '29 240w
Times [London] Lit Sup p1084 D 19 '29 240w

PARRY, SIR EDWARD ABBOTT. Berrington; or, Two hundred years ago. 336p $2.50 Morrow [7s 6d Heinemann]
[28-23051]

"Picaresque novel of London 'Two Hundred Years Ago.' Its hero, Nic Berrington—Hogarth's model for his 'Rake's Progress'—was the adopted son of the infamous thief-taker Jonathan Wild, and his adventures are set forth in an easy, pleasant, unhurried style. . . In its fictional guise it offers a very authentic and detailed study of London life in the days of Queen Anne and George the First."—N Y Evening Post

Booklist 26:120 D '29

"It is a composite section of a century remarkable for its studied grace and its horrible injustices; and if only Judge Parry would forget to judge his characters he would be an unfailing source of pleasure." Donald Douglas
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 S 8 '29 220w

Boston Transcript p3 O 11 '29 580w

"Sir Edward Parry has laid a banquet not only for addicts to the eighteenth century but for all who favor excitement, romance, and adventure. . . The whole dazzling age is encompassed in one man's life and is made into a composite picture that is convincing because the bare facts are more amazing than any fabrication." Florence Codman
+ Nation 129:387 O 9 '29 450w

New Statesman 31:648 S 1 '28 100w

"The book is exceedingly good reading, its characters and action picturesque as well as picaresque." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p5m S 14 '29 100w

"The book is written in a precise and vivid manner well adapted to the period. It should prove a refreshing tit-bit for those whose appetite is not too jaded to enjoy an old-fashioned tale of adventure."
+ N Y Times p6 N 10 '29 250w

Reviewed by Gilbert Thomas
Spec 141:224 Ag 18 '28 170w

"It is a fine posset, to be sipped leisurely as it has been brewed."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p592 Ag 16 '28 550w

PARRY, SIR EDWARD ABBOTT. Bloody assize. 301p $5 Dodd [21s Benn]
942.06 Bloody assizes, 1685. Jeffreys, George Jeffreys, 1st baron

Sir Edward first outlines the careers of the three curiously assorted principals in the Bloody assize—the Duke of Monmouth, son of Charles II; George Jeffreys, who rose to be Lord Chief Justice; and Titus Oates, unscrupulous zealot and fanatic. Then follows the story of religious and political intrigue which culminated in 1685 in the chapter of horrors known as the Bloody assize.

"Sir Edward's spirited and learned book covers considerably more than is indicated in the title." H: S. Commager
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Ag 18 '29 1500w

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett
Boston Transcript p6 O 26 '29 600w

"Judge Parry—for that is the name by which one still likes to call him—gives you in this book all the excitement that you get from a first-class detective story, from a full-blooded melodrama on the stage, from a good psychological novel, from a novel of adventure, from a murder case in the daily paper, and even from a General Election (for in this old history you cannot help being a violent political partisan of one side or the other)—all rolled into one." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 45:204 My 11 '29 1200w

"Sir Edward is a fierce Whig partisan, of the good, old-fashioned type. . . The average modern reader will probably find this unconcealed partisanship a distinct defect in an otherwise interesting and careful account of the treason trials which followed Monmouth's rebellion."

+ — New Statesman 33:480 Jl 20 '29 200w

"The two main events are in themselves so tragic, so dramatic and so terrible that from the eighteenth century until now no historian, however dull, has been able to divest them of that kind of interest which brings a constriction of the throat and a chill at the heart. . . Sir Edward's way of dealing with this part of his book is to go into the stenographic records and produce an account of what was actually said and done. In a dramatic story this tends to hamper the interest, and, except to readers who never heard of the Bloody Assize before, it makes hard reading." C: W. Thompson

N Y Times p4 Ag 4 '29 1250w

Sat R 148:107 Jl 27 '29 500w

"Jeffreys was full of flavour as an open and unabashed rascal should be, and the relishing pen of Judge Parry (if he will forgive the use of a title by which he is best known) gives full value to it. Quite frankly His Honour acknowledges to a liking for history taken dramatically, and in Judge Jeffreys, in Titus Oates and the sorry rogues who circled round him, and in the poor weak libertine whom all Puritan England delighted to honour as the Protestant Duke, he has an admirable opportunity of which he has admirably availed himself. He makes the dirty, intriguing, cruel, bloody past live again, and his story of the two arch-rogues and of the skittish good-looking fribble, Monmouth, who was made the unhappy tool of powerful forces which eventually brought him to the block, is told with skill and verve, and is absorbingly interesting."

+ Spec 143:56 Jl 13 '29 1000w

Times [London] Lit Sup p444 Je 6 '29 780w

PARSHLEY, HOWARD MADISON. Science and good behavior. 281p $2.50 Bobbs

171 Ethics. Ethics, Evolutionary. Psychology, Physiological. Science—Methodology. Conduct of life 28-24838

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

---

Reviewed by W. R. Crawford

Ann Am Acad 141:276 Ja '29 70w

Booklist 25:192 F '29

Christian Century 46:838 Je 26 '29 200w

Nation 128:235 F 20 '29 100w

"Without presenting Professor Parshley's admirable volume as a complete solution of how to adjust modern behavior to modern ideas, one may express the large aid which thousands of readers will derive from this clear and attractive statement. It is in itself an aid both to the appreciation of science and of good behavior." Joseph Jastrow

+ Sat R of Lit 5:640 F 2 '29 650w

"He is as human and irascible as a Fundamentalist. He delights in flouts and jeers. His proposition speaks loud and thunders in the index, but does not seem to fulfil as much as it promises. . . One is not an obscurantist if he asks to be shown, and the examples given of 'the new ethics,' seem to be as debatable, to have as much argumentative emotion mixed into their foundations and superstructures as any ordinary example of the old ethics. Perhaps that is why Professor Parshley is so readable, and also why he is not very impressive." Arthur Colton

Sat R of Lit 5:1065 Je 1 '29 1850w

PARSONS, MRS ALICE (BEAL). The insider 284p $2.50 Dutton

29-7489

The story, which is a little difficult to follow because of its shifting point of view, first shows Moira Robertson living, a successful novelist, in Greenwich Village. Alf Purdy, who had loved her in New England twenty years before, comes to see her there. The story goes back to their early love affair, introducing Moira's father, a diabolical character, and her mother, and then returns to the present and the end of Purdy.

---

"There is much in The Insider that is pertinent, much that is intelligently conceived, and several scenes that display acute and distinguished writing. The book as a whole, however, does not exhaust its subject enough and the reader has the uneasy feeling that not all of the tale has been told when the last page is reached." Herbert Gorman

Bookm 69:196 Ap '29 460w

"When she is at her best Mrs. Parsons writes profoundly, economically, even brilliantly. At less fortunate moments she is awkward and prolix. But her novel leaves me with the incomplete and yet satisfying feeling that I have known several men and women well; that I am not sure what sort of persons they are, but that I should be interested to know more of them." Dorothy Van Doren

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 Mr 17 '29 900w

"There is a broad sweep to this colorful story, a delving into obscure psychological reactions that betokens a deep and understanding sympathy. The character drawings are limned against a background whose versatility never stales. It is an altogether charming story, moving as life moves from grave to gay and back again to grave."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 29 '29 200w

"Although 'The Insider' is often uneven, sometimes heavy and involved, and in method not entirely satisfactory, it sets Americans a problem which they cannot afford to ignore." D. V. D.

Nation 128:sup488 Ap 17 '29 220w

"Mrs. Parsons's style is admirably compatible with her form and content. Her writing is slow, measured, detached and highly intellectualized, with the exception of patches of vivid description wherein one suspects that she wrote in the midst of deep feeling. . . Her characters are admirably planned and executed, while one is occasionally disappointed in those situations which depend for their interest on the sentimental, the extraordinary or the purely accidental." Tess Slesinger

+ — N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 16 '29 860w

"Rich in figures of speech which characterize, by deft comparisons, subtleties of appearance and character that would require many paragraphs otherwise to describe, 'The Insider' is nevertheless a novel with too many shifting points of view, too many omissions, to be either unified or complete. It is as if the author could not make up her mind which of her characters the story was to be about."

+ — N Y Times p6 Mr 17 '29 600w

"Her book fails to satisfy as a work of art, and even as an authentic picture of life."

— N Y World p11m Ap 21 '29 220w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell

No Am 227:adv Ap '29 70w

"This is a novel with a thesis, carefully shown through a series of excellent characterizing episodes, and ultimately failing to prove anything of importance. As a first novel it is a promising piece of work." J. D. Tasker

+ — Outlook 151:480 Mr 20 '29 160w

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 9 '29 140w

"We are made aware in this book of people whose destinies move obscurely beneath the obvious current of their days. Nowhere do they break into action, nor do they come up to the surface of the pages they adorn, yet perhaps this same method of indirection, flashing an iridescence, lends them a quality they would not otherwise obtain." Halle Schaffner

PARSONS, ALICE—Continued
Survey 62:201 My 1 '29 300w

PARTRIDGE, BELLAMY. Amundsen, the splendid Norseman. 276p il $2.50 Stokes

B or 92 Amundsen, Roald Engelbregt Gravning 29-20038

A boy's life of the great Norwegian arctic and antarctic explorer who died, as he had hoped to die, somewhere in the frozen North.

"While this volume is roughly classed with books for boys, let no adult feel it beneath him. It is a far more thrilling tale of vital adventure and glorious achievement than any work of fiction. From the first exploration, the atempt of a young cadet on leave to cross an impassable plateau near Oslo, to his noble death, Amundsen's life is full of good story material." B. B.
+ Boston Transcript p6 D 14 '29 580w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p10m O 20 '29 300w

Reviewed by M. L. Becker
Outlook 153:591 D 11 '29 80w

"This life impressively reveals the study and preparations which lie behind the labor of modern exploration. Mr. Partridge's picture of a genius's patience, and petulance, is engrossing. He has the advantage of a life-story which grew constantly more picturesque, through the misadventures of the Northwest Passage, the conquest of the South Pole, the flight in the Norge, to the dramatic decision to go to the rescue of the hero's bitterest enemy, Nobile." T. M. Longstreth
+ Sat R of Lit 6:426 N 16 '29 120w

PARVAN, VASILE. Dacia; an outline of the early civilizations of the Carpatho-Danubian countries. 216p il $3 Macmillan [7s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

939.82 Dacia. Rumania—Antiquities [29-235]

"The brilliant Roumanian scholar, whose book has been well translated by two Cambridge friends, Mr. Evans and Mr. Charlesworth, has sketched the early history of the whole region overshadowed by the Carpathians and traversed by the Danube and shown that for many centuries it was in close contact with Italy. . . Professor Parvan contends that, while Pannonia—the modern Serbia and Croatia—succumbed to the barbarians because it was inhabited by mixed races, Dacia, the home of one strong race, contrived to keep its Roman culture, though it was isolated. To this extent, at least, he confirms the orthodox view."—Spec

"Professor Parvan has made an obscure land and a remote period interesting and his excellent bibliography will encourage further investigation of a hitherto unexplored field of research."
+ Boston Transcript p3 D 1 '28 260w

Reviewed by H. R. Fairclough
Class Philol 24:209 Ap '29 630w

"Professor Parvan's decipherment of the Danubian palimpsest is the more enlightening since he himself has been responsible for much of the recent field work in these regions."
+ New Statesman 31:674 S 8 '28 750w

"His little work is solidly based on the results of many excavations, of which little has been heard here, and it is illustrated with some notable photographs."
+ Spec 141:268 S 1 '28 220w

"The origin of the Dacians and the circumstances which encouraged the survival of a Latin language have been much discussed. In this book the distinguished Rumanian scholar whose untimely death last year was a serious loss to archæology has written an excellent introduction to the subject."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p680 S 27 '28 1500w

PASVOLSKY, LEO. Economic nationalism of the Danubian states. (Brookings inst. Investigations in int. economic reconstruction) 609p $3 Macmillan [12s 6d Allen & U.]

330.94 Balkan Peninsula—Economic conditions. Eastern question (Balkan). Austria—Economic conditions. Czechoslovak Republic—Economic conditions. Hungary—Economic conditions. Rumania—Economic conditions. Yugoslavia—Economic conditions 29-2355

"Part I of this study sets forth the pre-war economic status of Austria-Hungary and of Rumania and Serbia and discloses the immediate economic consequences of the dissolution of the old Hapsburg empire. In Parts II to VI the author presents a concise yet authoritative analysis of the post-war economic history, respectively of Austria, Hungary, Czechoslovakia, Rumania, and Yugoslavia. Part VI—Nationalism vs. Unity—surveys the maladjustments and difficulties from which this economic region as a whole has suffered since the Great War and discusses the possibilities of future improvement along lines of economic cooperation." —Director's preface

Am Pol Sci R 23:508 My '29 320w

"The book is written with the thoroughness and judgment which generally characterize the publications of the Institute of Economics."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 Mr 3 '29 220w

Times [London] Lit Sup p164 F 28 '29 40w

"A solid but not uninteresting study of the international economic status and relations of the region embracing the emergent 'new' countries of Austria, Hungary, Rumania, Czechoslovakia, and Yugoslavia."
+ World Tomorrow 12:284 Je '29 50w

PATCH, EDITH MARION. Holiday Pond. 147p il $2 Macmillan

590 Natural history—Juvenile literature 29-10020

Stories of the frogs, fish and turtles that lived in Holiday Pond, of the animals that lived nearby, and even of the birds and flies that flew about it, told for children.

Booklist 25:400 Jl '29

"One can depend on the books by Edith M. Patch. Their entomological data is accurate and the writing has much the same charm as has a pond itself on an early Summer evening." M. G. Bonner
+ N Y Times p5 Jl 28 '29 180w

" 'Holiday Pond' is nature-study with real photographs, and any child who lives near a pond would find it entrancing: it has insects, fish, animals, and flowers like the arrowhead and cow-lily, and little children find life itself strange enough without fairyfying it." M. L. Becker
+ Outlook 152:392 Jl 3 '29 50w

"It is perhaps too grandiloquent to say that the book has a simple dignity, in its quiet and straightforward style; but it is, indeed, very delightful to read—not lively enough, perhaps, for the youngest children, but excellent material for those just above, in its suggestion of quiet and friendly observation of small live things all about. The illustrations, partly photographs and partly quaint and imaginative drawings, add much to the reader's pleasure. The book is square and rather flat, and offers a pleasant firmness for a child's grasp."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:491 N 30 '29 150w
Springf'd Republican p7e D 1 '29 100w
World Tomorrow 13:42 Ja '30 40w

PATMORE, MRS BRIGIT. No tomorrow. 290p $2 Century

29-18259

Two parallel love stories carry forward the action in this novel, both affairs being seen, objectively, by Merion Bythe. Gervase Morivane, a poet, loves Helga Woburn, who cannot return his love. Hugh Gaunt divides his love between two mistresses. Frustration—the promise of happiness forever deferred—is the theme of the novel.

---

"Mrs. Patmore's characters are rather bloodless creatures acting in psychopathic charades. . . The whole story floats in a nebulous limbo, illuminated by an occasional epigram. Part of the responsibility for the unreality of the figures lies on the author's style, which is overwrought in the imagist mode, and beset with mannered intricacies."
— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p38 S 29 '29 190w

"There is a certain bizarre brilliancy to the novel which might easily be mistaken for artistic excellence; it is doubtful, however, if another generation would find it intelligible."
— Boston Transcript p7 N 30 '29 400w

"The author so obviously strives for the exact word, the unusual turn of phrase, the unexpected juxtaposition of noun and adjective, that our attention wanders from story to style. It becomes obtrusive and attention-absorbing, drawing us away from plot and characterization. It is only in the descriptive passages, with which little fault can be found, that the strained effort is fortunately absent."
— + N Y Times p31 N 24 '29 300w

PATRICK, DIANA, pseud. (MRS DESEMEA [NEWMAN] WILSON). Family group. 288p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Hutchinson]
29-16555

The story discloses what happens to the romantic sons and daughters of a middle-class English family when a legacy of a hundred and fifty thousand pounds comes suddenly to the father.

---

Reviewed by Evelyn Page
Bookm 70:320 N '29 250w

"The five young people are done with something of the passion that informed 'Dusty Answer'; but this passion has less sincerity to aid it." A. B. Parsons
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ag 4 '29 440w

"It is all very natural, and very fascinating, with its little city life, and the lovely Cornwall inheritance, until the end, when the author apparently loses her head, her ethics, and her common sense, and finishes it all up in a welter of sentimentalism. But the first part is so good that we have great hopes of the author's next novel." I. W. L.
+ — Boston Transcript p2 Ag 3 '29 340w

"'Family Group' is a mixture of glibness, sentimentality, and—strangely enough—charm. Miss Patrick is suspect: do her people live or are they like the figures in Madame Toussaud's; waxy perfection, closely imitating reality? . . She uses literary tricks for wringing tears from her audience. She is verbose, indulging herself in pseudo-poetical descriptions and emotional soul-searchings. She is mildly cheap. Yet unaccountably, infrequently, she is charming. There have been innumerable better novels, and some worse." M. G.
— + New Repub 60:158 S 25 '29 170w

"Miss Patrick has written a book with a moral: Money isn't everything. Hers is not a particularly novel thesis. The method whereby she drives it home is incredibly saccharine." F: F. Van de Water
— N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 20 '29 500w

"In spite of its melodrama the solution makes up in color what it lacks in plausibility. 'Family Group' is a novel worth reading, if not worth remembering."
+ — N Y Times p7 Jl 14 '29 650w

"There is nothing very novel about the development of the plot, and the moral is pretty obvious. But the story is told with such gusto, such good detail and dialogue, and such warmth that one can forgive its ingenuousness and enjoy its honest simplicity." F. L. Robbins
+ — Outlook 152:467 Jl 17 '29 180w

"The story is gracefully written, pleasantly entertaining, and worked out with a semblance of consistency, but try as Miss Patrick does to suggest the psychology of her creations, little deeper than impressions of their surfaces is conveyed."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:258 O 12 '29 200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p968 D 6 '28 100w

PATRICK, DIANA, pseud. (MRS DESEMEA [NEWMAN] WILSON). See my shining palace! 355p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Hutchinson]
29-1192

The idealistic daughter of a wealthy builder and contractor marries into an old and degenerating English family. The estate has dwindled and fallen into decay but neither of the sons of the house has the stamina to redeem it. The marriage loses its romantic glamour after a year or two and to the good of all concerned Isabel divorces the charming but weak Nevile to marry a sturdy lover of earlier days.

---

"A thoughtful and subtly told narrative, the more readable in that Miss Patrick has not been tempted to exaggerate the class distinctions between her main characters, all of whom are well and interestingly contrived."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 F 3 '29 150w

"To give the author credit, it must be said that she draws a colorful contrast between the fading and the decadent life of the de Tourmeilles and the shining, nouveau rich splendor of the Herrolds. The plot of the story, however, is both artificial and preposterous."
— + Boston Transcript p2 Mr 27 '29 260w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p8m Ja 5 '29 250w

"Besides being modern in viewpoint, the book is a brilliant study in social contrasts."
+ — N Y Times p8 Ja 13 '29 680w

"The book never rises above a superficial and romantic treatment of its rather absorbing theme."
— + N Y World p11m Ja 27 '29 200w

"Though the Herrold De Tourmeille marriage is the heart of the book, this is a broad-bosomed novel filled to overflowing with people, places, events, and comments on life, all given in Diana Patrick's swiftly moving yet conversational style."
+ Sat R of Lit 5:760 Mr 9 '29 240w

"The story is well written and presents a keen, if somewhat obvious, study of social contrasts."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e Je 16 '29 170w

"A well-told story, but there is more than a touch of unreality in the picture of Tormil Place and its inhabitants."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p316 Ap 26 '28 150w

PATRICK, GEORGE THOMAS WHITE. What is the mind? (Philosophy for the layman ser.) 185p $2.50 Macmillan
158 Psychology. Behaviorism (psychology). Intellect. Evolution 29-1094

The author, professor of philosophy in the University of Iowa, explains to the layman the theory of behaviorism ("the study of the mind has become the study of behavior"), and the theory of creative evolution.

---

Booklist 25:306 My '29

"Whatever your favorite brand of psychology, be it behaviorism, purposivism, psycho-analysis or Gestalt, you will be interested in the philosophic discussion of the nature of the mind which Professor Patrick offers to the layman."
+ Bookm 68:x F '29 200w
Boston Transcript p2 Je 26 '29 220w
St Louis 27:124 Ap '29

PATRICK, G: T: W.—Continued

"This lucid discussion of the concept of mind under modern interests may be cordially recommended."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:937 Ap 20 '29 400w

PATRICK, MARY MILLS. Greek sceptics. 339p $4.50 Columbia univ. press

186.1 Skeptics (Greek philosophy) 29-16086

The theme of this work by the president emerita of Constantinople woman's college is one upon which few sources of information have been available in the English language. She shows that the type of thinking represented by the Greek skeptics, their attitude of open-mindedness and spirit of questioning, has had an awakening influence on the later history of thought and prepared the way for modern scientific progress.

---

"Dr. Patrick is commendably clear; her sentences are short and direct. She summarizes, recapitulates, when necessary, repeats and in general does all that can be done, within the limits of the space at her command, to make the significance of her theme clear, to the attentive student at least. . . Her statements are constantly supported by references to standard authorities on the history of Greek philosophy; a bibliography and an extended index will add much to the usefulness of the volume." G: M. Whicher

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 S 22 '29 850w

Boston Transcript p5 N 27 '29 280w

"There has been hitherto no volume in English wholly devoted to the subject, one which has been strangely neglected by modern philosophers. Much information has been made available in concise form by Miss Patrick's book. . . It was inevitable from the synoptic character of the book that the treatment of the subject should be somewhat encyclopedic, in marked contrast to that of Paul Elmer More, for example. But the treatise maps out the ground for further study in a useful way."

+ — Springf'd Republican p6 S 30 '29 220w

PATRICK, MARY MILLS. Under five sultans. 357p il $4 Century

949.6 Turkey—History. Turkey—Social life and customs. Constantinople woman's college 29-19315

Autobiographical description of the author's fifty years in Turkey, where she went as a girl of twenty-one. For several years she taught at Erzerum, and in 1875 was appointed to the staff of the new Constantinople woman's college, in the upbuilding of which she was a great factor.

---

"The changes from the primitive and picturesque Ottoman Empire of fifty years ago to the modern republic, and the life of a woman's college within its boundaries, though they might have been set forth in a more varied and dramatic style, could not have been explained with greater simplicity and directness. Even in the midst of the absorbing narrative the reader can find added excitement in watching the play of a fine and just intelligence over the tangles of Oriental government and European diplomacy." H. F. Whicher

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 O 27 '29 1000w

"Miss Patrick has written of the early struggles to keep the college going, the political upheavals which occurred periodically, the strange customs of the country, as well as the students who have made their school and their country proud. The gradual change in the life and status of the women of Turkey is traced to the present day."

Boston Transcript p2 O 5 '29 180w

"Her book gives a kind of intimate and gossipy bird's-eye-view of the history of Turkey during the last half century, and is crowded with interesting anecdotes and portraits. At the same time it attempts a serious account of historic developments. In any event it is a very readable book about a Turkey that has now passed into limbo."

+ Nation 130:22 Ja 1 '30 170w

"The pictures of Oriental life and nature which we find in Miss Patrick's book are very valuable. . . Her historical outline of Turkey is almost irreproachable." N. Martinovitch

+ N Y Times p42 D 8 '29 850w

St Louis 27:314 N '29

PATRICK, MASON MATHEWS. United States in the air; introd. by F. Trubee Davison. 191p il $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

623.74 Aeronautics—United States. United States. Army. A.E.F. Air service. United States—Army—Air corps 28-28518

General Patrick, who was in charge of the American army air operations in France, "discusses the many perplexing problems of wartime aviation with which he had to deal. He also paints one of the clearest pictures ever presented of American air operations over the front, behind the lines, and at home." (Introd.) Several official photographs illustrate General Patrick's account.

---

Booklist 25:198 F '29

"In telling the story of his air work he is scarcely graphic, nor does he relate his experiences with a fullness sufficient for historic value." F. E. Hill

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 F 10 '29 350w

"What General Patrick could tell about individual men and events during his service as chief of the Army's flying, is very important. He has let drop a few hints in this book. But it does neither him nor the opportunity justice. He has passed along the corridor, but on tiptoe and without looking into any of the rooms."

— + Boston Transcript p7 D 15 '28 230w

"It is at once a history, a primer and a prophecy of aviation, educational and encouraging." F: F. Van de Water

+ N Y Evening Post p9m N 10 '28 250w

"The book is to some extent an autobiography, it is obviously not intended to be exhaustive; but it is permeated with a force and thoughtfulness which spring from the mind of a man who has devoted his energy assiduously to unraveling some of the knottiest problems that have ever faced military aviation." T. J. C. Martyn

+ — N Y Times p3 D 16 '28 850w

St Louis 27:93 Mr '29

PATTON, CORNELIUS HOWARD. Foreign missions under fire; straight talks with the critics of missions. 180p $1; pa 60c Pilgrim press

266 Missions, Foreign 28-30692

"A vigorous defense of the modern missionary movement from the world point of view. Cast in dialogue form it purports to be conversations between a 'secretary' and representative types of objectors and inquirers, as met in a lawyer, business man, pastor, student, editor, etc. As secretary of the Home Department of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, Dr. Patton is in a strategic place to answer what is a strong and rather unprecedented attempt to show the utter futility of missionary achievement or support. Such material as is here gathered, either in the 'conversations' or the addenda at the end of the chapters, will make 'ready to use' ammunition for study classes, for pulpit illustrations, even for press comment, which last needs to be very much guided in these days."—Churchman

---

"Few modern defenses of foreign missions have been compressed into such compact form and with such a real dynamic."

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 2 '29 230w

"No other book known to the reviewer is as well calculated to make the case for modern missions with the average layman. It is easily read—all the dialogues in it can be covered in less than an hour—and it knows how to state the argument as the layman states it, and to answer without recourse to the semi-technical vocabulary in which some missionary literature is couched."

+ Christian Century 46:82 Ja 17 '29 150w

Churchman 139:30 Ap 20 '29 230w

"We pronounce this a timely, dignified and constructive defense of one of the most hopeful movements of modern times." W: R. McNutt

+ Crozer Q 6:252 Ap '29 300w

PATTON, HARALD SMITH. Grain growers' co-operation in western Canada. (Harvard economic studies) 471p $5 Harvard univ. press

338.1 Grain trade—Canada. Grain elevators
28-16295

"Presents an economic history of the rise of co-operative marketing among the grain growers of Western Canada, from early beginnings in 1900 due to grievances with the middlemen, to recent culmination in the interprovincial Canadian Co-operative Wheat Producers, Ltd., the world's largest wheat exporting agency. . . Also draws inferences regarding the results, policies, and outlook of the Canadian co-operative movement which are full of practical significance both for that movement and for others."—Am J Soc

---

"This book gives a complete account of the background of the pool movement and a description and analysis of pool operations up to date. Mr. Patton has presented a study more thorough and satisfactory than has previously been produced. He has succeeded admirably in presenting intelligibly the mass of detail which necessarily relates to the organization of such extensive bodies as the wheat pools." W. A. Mackintosh

+ Am Econ R 19:111 Mr '29 1200w

"It is comprehensive, impartial, well constructed and clearly written, and thoroughly scientific in temper. Particularly noteworthy is the historical treatment of the subject." J: F. Fennelly

+ Am Hist R 34:666 Ap '29 500w

"Dr. Patton has made a scholarly addition to the economic history of farmers' co-operation. His tracing of the trends in the development is especially well done. Moreover, his historical material is so complete and so carefully treated that it may eventually be used with that of similar studies as data for testing theories of economics, organization, and collective action. For many readers the chief weakness of the book will be the narrowness of its practical and economic point of view. They will feel the lack of theoretical analysis, and of efforts to go below economic events for human motives." T: C. McCormick

+ — Am J Soc 34:745 Ja '29 420w

Am Pol Sci R 23:239 F '29 120w

"For any study of the evolution of the Canadian West. Mr. Patton's work is entirely indispensable." H. Michell

+ Canadian Hist R 9:268 S '28 1800w

"In showing the competitive forces which led to the organization of the wheat growers of western Canada Mr. Patton has rendered an important contribution." W: R. Camp

+ Pol Sci Q 44:439 S '29 2100w

PAUL, ELLIOT HAROLD. Low run tide; and, Lava rock. 2v in 1 311p $2.50 Liveright 29-20891

These are two novels of contrasting community life. "Low Run Tide" deals with the decline of the Plummer family of a New England fishing village. "Lava Rock" is the story of the construction of a dam in the West, and life at a Western mining camp.

---

"About five years ago Elliot Paul was known as a promising young novelist who was well on the way toward writing best sellers. . . After a period of silence he can no longer be pigeonholed as a young writer with promise. Younger men have superseded him and have been promoted over his head. His two novels published in one volume are not merely new experiments; they are deliberate and mature, the result of earlier successes and failures, the work of a highly intelligent and talented artist who has found a necessity for building his future upon solid foundations." Horace Gregory

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 O 20 '29 1000w

Boston Transcript p7 N 20 '29 450w

"Both extremely clear and effective tales, and would perhaps be more so but for the anomaly of their form and appearance here."

+ N Y Times p6 N 24 '29 600w

" 'Lava Rock' is infinitely more moving a story than 'Low Run Tide' and, sociologically, far more significant. Elliot Paul has done very well indeed by the America he forsook; he is herewith encouraged to remain in Paris if it gives him such vigor of detachment. His two brief novels fail in only one respect: they have no characterization to speak of and present people merely as being affected or not affected by environment. Otherwise, they are distinctly valuable as interpretations and unusually successful as fiction." Emanuel Eisenberg

+ N Y World p11m D 1 '29 380w

"In his departure from a mannered style, in his new simplicity, assurance and dignity Mr. Paul has risen far above his earlier work. He needs but expansion to achieve an American masterpiece." Johan Smertenko

+ Outlook 153:398 N 6 '29 250w

"Taken together, these novels form an interesting attempt to write in terms of communities or movements instead of individuals."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:607 D 28 '29 170w

PAULL, HARRY MAJOR. Literary ethics; a study in the growth of the literary conscience. 358p $3.75 Dutton [15s T. Butterworth]

809 Literary ethics. Plagiarism. Literary forgeries and mystifications [29-594]

Various forms of literary malfeasance are discussed by the author in this study which confines itself largely to English literature of the past, with a few cases from the work of living writers. Mr Paull discusses literary theft, forgeries, hoaxes, and questionable ethics in works of history, drama, biography, etc.

---

Booklist 26:99 D '29

"The title of this excellent and valuable book is misleading, since there is almost no discussion of the actual ethical points involved, and no philosophical conclusions are drawn."

+ Bookm 69:xiv Ag '29 50w

"Even if one cannot always share Mr. Paull's indignations, one must marvel at his erudition. He has dug out of the archives some of the choicest examples of freebooting in literary history, and some of these piratic exploits are amazing."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 S 8 '29 230w

"The byways of literature are thoroughly explored by Mr. Paull throughout the course of his book, and he has obviously spared no time and trouble to gather his material from the most obscure places. It is, moreover, made easily accessible by wise chapter headings and an excellent index." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 29 '29 1500w

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett
Boston Transcript p5 O 5 '29 650w

"The book contains a large number of examples from English literature which are extremely interesting, and represents obviously a great deal of work on the part of the author. But Mr. Paull is unsatisfactory as a guide, for two reasons: first, because he makes no real distinction between honesty which is more or less compelled by law, and honesty dictated by conscience; second, because he looks forward to a Utopia from which all parody, hoax, borrowing, hack translation, anonymous criticism, bowdlerism, depiction in novels of living people would be excluded by common consent."

+ — New Statesman 32:389 D 29 '28 560w

PAULL, H. M.—Continued
Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p7m Je 22 '29 500w

Reviewed by F: F. Van de Water
N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 13 '29 210w

"This pillory for authors is adorned on every page, almost, with sprightly anecdotes and rib-shaking quotations. It is a wondrous combination of accuracy and wit." C: W. Thompson
+ N Y Times p2 Jl 7 '29 1800w

"Scholarship, sound feeling and charm of style have gone into Literary Ethics. Every page is fascinating."
+ Outlook 152:433 Jl 10 '29 150w

Springf'd Republican p6 Ag 24 '29 950w

"Literary Ethics is more than a delightful collection of curious and amusing lore on literary thieves and misdemeanants and eccentrics. It is a prolegomena for a modern code of the ethics of print offered by a man who is lovingly devoted to literature and admirably aware of the intricacy of his theme." Leon Whipple
+ Survey 63:40 O 1 '29 2000w

"His morality is on the whole perhaps too austere, but he is never illiberal, though his concern for the author's point of view does lead him too far when he urges at least the ideal of perpetual copyright."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p969 D 6 '28 230w

PAVLOV, IVAN PETROVICH. Lectures on conditioned reflexes; tr. from the Russian by W. Horsley Gantt, with the collaboration of G. Volborth; with an introd. by Walter B. Cannon. 414p il $6.50 Int. pub.

612.82 Brain. Reflexes 28-27883

Lectures by a noted Russian scientist embodying the results of twenty-five years of study of the conditioned reflexes of animals. From his experiments concerning the nervous system of dogs and other animals Prof Pavlov makes valuable deductions concerning human behavior. A biographical sketch of the author, by his translator, introduces the lectures.

---

"To the reviewer this book of Pavlov cannot be praised too highly. It is thorough, full of adequate descriptions of many ingenious experiments, brilliant yet cautious in interpretation—in all an admirable picture of scientific research." Herbert Blumer
+ Am J Soc 34:1189 My '29 920w

Am J Soc 35:519 N '29 130w

"The forty-one papers collected present what is probably the most brilliantly meticulous work on the physiology of the brain and nervous system, a meticulousness which brings physiology as close to physics as it has ever been brought."
+ Bookm 68:xi Ja '29 120w

"What is interesting to the non-technical reader is the opportunity that these lectures afford for making a visit, in spirit, to Pavlov's Moscow laboratory, standing by his side as he conducts his physiological experiments and noting the meticulous care with which the scientist carries out each detail and the rugged honesty of mind with which he sticks to his facts."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 F 10 '29 200w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 3 '29 400w

"The work is remarkable both for the usefulness of its technique and the suggestiveness of its conclusions." W: C. Trow
J Philos 26:275 My 9 '29 780w

"The book is a welcome presentation of what has become a fundamental premise in prevailing thought about the life of the mind. This premise is 'the conditioned reflex.' . . [The theory] provides at last a precise, fruitful, quantitative laboratory method for the investigation of animal behavior. . . Upon the matters they have studied, Pavlov and his followers have thrown a high and significant light, a light purgative and debunking." H. M. Kallen
+ New Repub 58:sup145 Mr 20 '29 1050w

"Its value to the student of physiology and psychology can hardly be overestimated. The significance for the general reader lies in two main features: the disclosure of the methods of masterly investigation in a special field, and the bearings of this investigation on human psychology." D: Seabury
+ N Y Times p9 S 29 '29 2500w

"[The papers] deal, one and all, with differing aspects of the problem to which, with singular constancy Professor Pavlov has devoted his scientific life—namely, that of the 'conditioned reflex.' The name and the work are as likely to be associated for years to come as have been those of Darwin and evolution."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p549 Jl 11 '29 1000w

PEAKE, HAROLD JOHN EDWARD, and FLEURE, HERBERT JOHN. The steppe & the sown. (Corridors of time) 160p il $2 Yale univ. press [5s Oxford]

571 Civilization, Ancient. Man, Prehistoric. Archeology. Migrations of nations 29-233

The fifth in a series of eight archeological essays called "The corridors of time," the present small and closely illustrated volume covers the period from 2600 to 2200 B.C. when the nomad hordes of the Russian steppes moved southward to raid and conquer the empire of Sargon. "Here in a small compass is the story of the opening stages of that persistently recurring turmoil out of which Europe was eventually born." (New Statesman)

---

Booklist 25:243 Mr '29

New Statesman 32:448 Ja 12 '29 150w

"Though interesting to specialists this archæological essay, which is after all so dependent on provisional conclusions, might mislead young students."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p1026 D 27 '28 200w

PEARSON, EDMUND LESTER. Dime novels; or, Following an old trail in popular literature. 280p il $3 Little

813 Dime novels. American fiction 29-23770

An informal and amusing account of the history of dime novel publications, covering a period of some seventy years in the United States, with comments upon their publishers, authors, extracts from their stories, reproductions of their illustrations, and testimonials of some prominent men who confess to having read and enjoyed such series as Nick Carter, Old Sleuth, Deadwood Dick and Jack Harkaway.

---

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 F 9 '29

---

"When a librarian turns to vice the outcome is as exciting as it is unusual. . . To preserve some decorum, Mr. Pearson is very thorough. He gives the social and political background of the times in the Mark Sullivan manner and he devotes a chapter to present-day notables who read dime novels in their youth and were whipped for it. But his zest and the numerous illustrations defeat his purpose. For the book is a thriller. In fact, it might be called, in the good old manner, 'The Thriller's Revenge; or, from Haymow to Exhibition Case.'" Paul Allen
+ Bookm 70:460 D '29 380w

Boston Transcript p3 N 6 '29 700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p154 D '29

Reviewed by C: W. Thompson
N Y Times p2 N 3 '29 1200w

"Edmund Pearson has written delightfully of Dime Novels. . . Mr. Pearson gives quotations galore, which are always amusing and sometimes quite exciting. Especially interesting to the Professional literary person of today are the 'blurbs' written for the Beadle books, the publicity which was given them, and the Beadles' rules for their authors." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 153:386 N 6 '29 230w

"Here at last Cap Collier, Nick Carter, Old King Brady, Old Sleuth and others come into their own. One may read about them without retreating to 'behind the barn' or climbing the hayloft, where the younger generation of an earlier day enjoyed them in comfort, safe from the paternal wrath. The book carries the proper atmosphere by showing many reprints of the covers of those ancient shockers."

+ Springf'd Republican p6 N 4 '29 700w

PEASE, HOWARD. Shanghai passage. 301p il $2 Doubleday, Doran

29-18702

Stuart Ormsby, expelled from West Point, is shanghaied abroad the freighter Nanking, bound for the China coast. He soon discovers that mutiny and even more serious trouble is promising. However, Stuart becomes a friend of Tod Moran, of the crew, and an ally of the captain. Shark Bashford, the mate, is his acknowledged enemy. A bad typhoon, a mysterious disappearance of one of the crew, and certain clues brought to light by Ming, the Chinese cook's monkey, are events that lead up to Stuart's heroic signalling, under enemy fire, of an American transport.

Booklist 26:126 D '29

"Mr. Pease makes no attempt to create literature. The thing is that he tells a good, wholesome, lively tale and a healthy reader can enjoy it as he enjoys the scene from some breezy hill top. You can read with assurance that you'll not be wearied by characters indulging in tender discourse." C: J. Finger

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 N 17 '29 700w

"Adventure is continuous, there is a good plot, and Stuart Ormsby's story probably has special value for adolescent American white blackbirds who need more iron in their blood." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p14m N 16 '29 80w

"The story is slow in getting under way and continues slowly as though the author were not sure what was going to happen next. Mr. Pease has written other, more successful books. He should know better than this. And for one who is advertised on the jacket as one who 'knows the sea,' I should say that he slips up frequently in nautical terminology and information." R. L. Roe

— Sat R of Lit 6:327 O 26 '29 220w

PEATTIE, DONALD CULROSS, and PEATTIE, MRS LOUISE (REDFIELD). Down wind; secrets of the underwoods. 231p il $2.50 Appleton

29-4887

Stories for nature lovers of the wild life of the woods, and of friendships between men and animals.

Booklist 25:361 Je '29

"Did you love the stories of Gene Stratton Porter? And did you weep over Ernest Thompson Seton's animal tragedies? If so, you will like the lush prose of Donald and Louise Peattie. There is a deal of keen observation in these stories and a warm love of animals."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 My 19 '29 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p96 Je '29

"Very pleasantly written and charming to read." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p11m My 11 '29 50w

"Very engaging and particularly well told are these fifteen tales of birds and beasts of many kinds. Their variety, unusual for such collections, adds greatly to their interest."

+ N Y Times p15 Jl 14 '29 380w

PECK, ANNE MERRIMAN. Storybook Europe. 215p il $2.50 Harper

914 Europe—Description and travel. Europe—History, Juvenile. Literary landmarks—Europe 29-5278

Delightfully illustrated with woodcuts and drawings by the author these descriptions of things to see and do in Italy, France, and England are linked with the story-book past of Europe.

Booklist 25:325 My '29

"It is unpretentious and by virtue of its drawings and the unhackneyed and informal quality of its text takes a place of its own as a book for the bon voyage box or the travel bookshelf of stay-at-home high school boys and girls." A. C. Moore

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Mr 17 '29 300w

Cleveland Open Shelf p132 N '29

"The author has managed to be replete without being verbose, and of quietly inculcating enthusiasm rather than striving for it by staccato enthusiasms of her own." M. G. Bonner

+ N Y Times p5 Jl 28 '29 250w

St Louis 27:273 S '29

Springf'd Republican p6 Jl 8 '29 250w

Wis Lib Bul 25:164 My '29

PECK, ANNE MERRIMAN. Vagabond's Provence. 273p il $3.50 Dodd

914.49 Provence 29-20231

The account of an artist's rambling journey along the lesser known highways of Provence. Avignon, Arles, Marseilles and the fashionable Riviera were touched in passing, but the remote villages were of more interest to the author, and it is of these that she writes.

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 27 '29 180w

Cleveland Open Shelf p149 D '29

"Her book will be wholly delightful to people who enjoy this kind of informal traveling. . . . There is much history in the book, but all historical references are narrated in a style so fresh and lively that the whole work, whether engaged with the immediate surroundings or the ancient past, is keyed upon a human note that makes its narrative as entertaining as it is informing about a little-known place and people."

+ N Y Times p20 O 13 '29 250w

PECK, WINIFRED. King of Melido. 191p il $1.25 Harper

Three little boys who have been living in England move to Scotland. The charms and excitements of the new home are second only to those of the kingdom of Melido of which Robin, eldest of the boys, is king by right of discovery.

Cleveland Open Shelf p32 F '29

"There is a stir and humor about the book that will appeal to young readers. In short, this story has and keeps an individuality."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:495 D 8 '28 180w

Springf'd Republican p7e D 16 '28 100w

PEDERSEN, VICTOR COX. Man a woman marries; problems in consideration. 266p $2.50 Minton

176 Marriage. Sexual ethics. Sex 29-19013

The companion to Dr Pedersen's previously published book, "The woman a man marries." The book is sociological rather than medical in nature, and takes up the various problems which a man faces in different aspects of married life. Like its predecessor, this book defends the institution of normal marriage, and points out the necessity of monogamous relationship.

"No work in recent years is more comprehensive in its discussion of the biological and sociological sides of sex than Dr. Pedersen's. It is not written from a medical standpoint purely, although it is clear at all times that the high-minded, idealistic physician speaks through its pages. Through it all the soundest ideals of the home and preservation of the family are undercurrent. . . Dr. Pedersen is of the old school first, last and always—the man of science, delving into the whys and wherefores, yet keeping fast his faith in a just God." M. M.

+ Boston Transcript p4 S 14 '29 500w

PEDERSEN, V: C.—Continued

"Dr. Pedersen writes with the intense seriousness of a man who is deeply concerned by the fundamental importance of his theme, and who, by reason of wide observation and still wider study, knows the dangers into which the race is willfully straying. One of the valuable features of this book is the widely ranging reading, evidenced by excerpts and footnotes, that throws upon his argument light from so many angles."

+ N Y Times p9 S 29 '29 450w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1039 D 5 '29 40w

PEDLER, MARGARET (BASS) (MRS W. G. Q. PEDLER). Guarded halo. 331p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

29-10180

Shirley Wilson, in the position of travelling companion to a Mrs Harwick, meets Neil Kenyon at a French bathing resort. She falls in love with him, but he tells her that, for a reason he must not reveal, he cannot marry her. It is only after Shirley learns that Neil is shouldering the disgrace belonging to another person that the clouds roll away and the two romantic lovers are free to marry.

"When you come upon a book so fragrant with the odor of desiccated violets, so passionate with the love of abstract ideas, you feel indeed that you are listening to one of great-grandma's lovely stories. It quavers gently on, preparing you beforehand for the crisis, careful to reassure you throughout that human nature can be relied upon, that there's a reason for tribulations, that the innocent shall inherit the earth."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 O 27 '29 380w

"Her latest novel is scarcely up to Margaret Pedler's average as purveyor of well-knit sentimental romance. . . . Her backgrounds have considerable color: she shows us, through Victorian glass, a pretty picture of the modern girl struggling to earn an honorable living and gaining true love as a reward; her narrative has smoothness and grace. And the early part of her story has considerable drama. Unluckily it is drama in which, in theatrical parlance, the two leading men kill each other's scenes."

— + Boston Transcript p6 N 20 '29 380w

PEEL, DOROTHY CONSTANCE (BAYLIFF) (MRS CHARLES S. PEEL). How we lived then, 1914-1918; a sketch of social and domestic life in England during the war. 235p $4 Dodd [15s Lane]

940.342 European war, 1914-1918—Great Britain. European war, 1914-1918—Economic aspects [29-18314]

A graphic and moving picture of England in war-time when women stepped into jobs left vacant by their men, when rich and poor alike were rationed, and when Zeppelin raids scattered death and terror from the air. Photographs and personal narratives add vividness to the account.

"We wish Mrs. Peel had taken her task as a historian rather more seriously. Her dates are frequently difficult to follow, even to the year, and many of the documents are not dated. A number of important subjects scarcely appear at all. And, such omissions apart, Mrs. Peel confines herself almost too much to the simple facts; of the spirit of the times she conveys little or nothing. Some may judge it not a fair comparison, but it is indisputable that, say, 'Mr. Britling' for the earlier period, 'The Pretty Lady,' perhaps, for the later, and the Repington and Beaverbrook diaries to finish off with will tell one more of the truth about the home-front during the war than the most prolonged study of Mrs. Peel's pages."

— + Nation and Ath 44:796 Mr 9 '29 380w

New Statesman 32:644 F 23 '29 140w

"She writes easily and candidly a book which makes no literary pretensions but which has real social and in a broad sense, political consequence." Gardner Harding

+ N Y Times p5 S 1 '29 1250w

Outlook 152:551 Jl 31 '29 40w

"This is an unpretentious sketch of the social and domestic life of that period as a woman saw it. Some of the most vivid passages of the book are extracts from contemporaneous letters and journals. The behavior of the British people, and particularly of the British women, in a crisis without parallel in their history is described here in a sympathetic and yet detached manner." W: B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 80:20 Ag '29 300w

St Louis 27:330 D '29

"Mrs. Peel manages her material cleverly, and there is a good deal of pleasure to be got from this skilful reminder of the lesser pains of the near past."

+ Spec 142:291 F 23 '29 300w

"Mrs. Peel has reviewed the domestic history of the War years very systematically, illustrating her book with many pictures from the War Museum and from other sources. She has written a lively narrative, full of pleasant personal touches and authentic quotations from private letters, that has an immediate appeal and will doubtless become a useful footnote to the history of these times."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p112 F 14 '29 450w

PEERS, EDGAR ALLISON, ed. Spain; a companion to Spanish studies. 302p $4 Dodd [12s 6d Methuen]

946 Spain—History. Spanish literature

The book represents the combined work of eight authorities on some aspect of Spanish history: Spain: the country, its people and languages, by William Atkinson; Spanish history to 1492, by the Rev. H. J. Chaytor; Spanish history, 1492-1898, by the editor; Spanish literature to 1681, by William J. Entwistle; Spanish literature since 1681, by the editor; Spanish painting, by S. C. Kaines Smith; Spanish architecture and sculpture, by Martin S. Briggs; Modern Spanish music, by Sydney Grew; Spain since 1898, by Aubrey F. G. Bell.

"Essentially a work of reference, a kind of headquarters to which the traveler and the student can turn and receive every encouragement to his own curiosity." V. S. P.

+ Christian Science Monitor p7 N 23 '29 250w

"The essays are all somewhat didactic, and those on literary subjects suffer from lack of space and tend to deteriorate into catalogues of names. . . Professor Allison Peers and his colleagues have succeeded in doing what they set out to do—that is, to give a general idea of Spain and its culture. If the result is rather academic, it must be remembered that the book was compiled for academic purposes, and, if dull in parts, that it is accurate and scholarly."

+ — Nation and Ath 46:116 O 19 '29 270w

PELL, JOHN. Ethan Allen. 331p il $5 Houghton

B or 92 Allen, Ethan 29-23480

The biography of the noted pioneer and American revolutionary commander. Early in life he bought 100,000 acres of land in what is now Vermont and New Hampshire and organized the famous Green Mountain Boys to defend it. When the Revolution broke out he captured Fort Ticonderoga. A few months later he was taken prisoner and sent to England, but was exchanged within two years. The end of the adventurous life was spent on his immense farm near Lake Champlain.

"With charming good humor, with keen appreciation of values, and with untiring industry in research, he has portrayed one of the most picturesque and typical figures which the American frontier produced. The work is 'vivid' and 'modern' without ever being cheap; it is sound without being pedantic. It is a book that should find permanent place in American biography." Avery Craven

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 D 29 '29 1250w

Boston Transcript p3 N 23 '29 1400w

"The special value of Mr. Pell's volume, and the point at which it differs very largely from the earlier lives of Ethan Allen, is in the attention paid to the non-military activities of the hero. In this respect it furnishes a most illuminating picture of the social conditions in New England immediately following the close of the Revolution. . . The wealth of anecdotes and the occasional outcropping of unconventional humor on the part of the author have made this a most readable as well as an original and valuable work." W. J. Abbott

+ Christian Science Monitor p10 D 14 '29 1000w

"The biography, though shakily written, contains a multitude of entertaining facts and quotations and, from his painstaking research, becomes a valuable life of one of the most picturesque characters in our history." T: Boyd

+ N Y Evening Post p12m D 21 '29 900w

"In this life of Ethan Allen by Mr. Pell Vermont's hero stands clearly revealed for the first time, his figure cleared of the myth which has so long enveloped him. John Pell knows every foot of the wilderness associated with Allen and his Green Mountain Boys; and his pages are suffused with precious local color. They are well-written pages, and the reader finds himself swept along. Mr. Pell shows himself particularly skilful in avoiding overemphasis of the obvious." Poultney Bigelow

+ N Y Times p4 N 24 '29 1050w

Reviewed by Mary Shirley

Outlook 153:467 N 20 '29 420w

R of Rs 80:20 D '29 230w

"Mr. Pell has written a book that may not be the 'last word' on the subject but that will hold first place for a considerable time. A sympathetic interest in his hero we concede him at every step; but he is not blind to the angles in Allen's rugged character, nor does he try to conceal or condone them. He touches them with a dry humor."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e D 1 '29 870w

PELLEY, WILLIAM DUDLEY. Golden rubbish. 422p $2 (7s 6d) Putnam

29-19246

A Vermont printer, Potiphar Buss; a young husband in need of a job, George Robling; and a successful business woman who runs a chain of tea-shops, Louise Garland, are the three main characters in a story upon which the author hangs his mystical doctrines of the "greater" Christianity, with special trimmings of cosmic vibration and dual personality. George Robling, who performs wonders following a psychic war experience, is the logical mouthpiece for Mr Dudley's theories; and the conversion of Louise, the hard-boiled modern woman, to his cause constitutes the first step in the salvaging of mankind.

---

"Mr. Pelley expounds what he claims to be a new Christian revelation that will bring religion into accord with what he conceives to be modern physics. But he couches his message in a novel, and the result, of course, is neither good fiction nor convincing doctrine. . . Perhaps Mr. Pelley's doctrines would bear more weight if the story into which they are injected was more convincing."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 N 24 '29 380w

"Mr. Pelley makes the novel a vehicle for the presentation of various strongly-held personal psychic beliefs and theories. . . While admitting the many excellencies of Mr. Pelley's technique, we must admit also, that the story, as a story, brought often to our mind the Victorian classic, 'It does not interest us.' "

— Boston Transcript p4 O 9 '29 400w

"To the plain reader, this volume is so dull that it is practically unreadable. Mr. Pelley saddles a tolerable narrative with [an] incubus of pseudo-mysticism, and as a result the narrative is completely done for before the book is well under way. As a novel, 'Golden Rubbish' simply doesn't exist."

— Sat R of Lit 6:460 N 23 '29 250w

Springf'd Republican p6e D 15 '29 280w

"This American novel, by 'a man who has been interpreting the phenomena of spirituality for several years and gained a wide and constantly increasing following for his explorations in the Eternal Verities,' opens in melodrama and closes in revelation."

Times [London] Lit Sup p928 N 14 '29 200w

PEMBER, EVELYN. Coucou. 212p $2 Houghton [6s Constable]

29-23246

"Mademoiselle Coucou is a vivid, tragic Pippa, who comes from the unknown into a little provincial hotel in France, where assorted English people stay, who remains a mystery to every one, whose very appearance throws each onlooker into a sort of spiritual tumult, and whose strange, sad departure leaves no one quite as he had been before."—Outlook

---

"Miss Pember has turned neatly a difficult technical trick—that of making a vague and unexplained character arouse as much interest as any of the personages portrayed in detail; and that without the buncombe of mysterious hints."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 O 27 '29 280w

Boston Transcript p3 S 28 '29 320w

"Coucou is rather a charming novel. It appears to have been written by a young woman of considerable sensibility but of limited experience. Her criticisms of life are naive, but her powers of description are considerable, and she reproduces very vividly the atmosphere of an hotel in Provence. . . It is definitely a good book, and we shall expect to have something still better and more mature from Miss Pember. If her philosophy is a little elementary, her powers of observation are evidently very acute and just."

+ — New Statesman 33:382 Je 29 '29 210w

N Y Times p22 O 13 '29 350w

"The author has decided literary gifts, but lacks the novelist's necessary interest in sustained drama, active or passive." F. L. Robbins

+ — Outlook 152:628 Ag 14 '29 140w

" 'Coucou' shows a charming lightness of touch and great dexterity in hitting off, with the least possible expenditure of words and direct descriptions, a large number of types, some interesting, some poignant, some colourless. It has the defect of what might be called an exaggerated femininity of technique—it flirts with severity of art, taking short cuts and adopting poses, trading upon its charm." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 147:839 Je 22 '29 300w

"Miss Pember shows herself to be a typical young intellectual of the post-flapper period—hard, disillusioned, intolerant of ignorance and pretense. The novel is interesting as a perhaps unintentional revelation of a widespread attitude toward life. As an example of the art of fiction, it is respectable but nondescript."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:299 O 19 '29 180w

"Miss Pember has contrived to give a fair degree of vitality to the company at the Provençal pension. Some of the characters, especially the two elderly English spinsters, belong to stock types, and the girl Coucou, flame-like, mysterious, and disturbing, remains perhaps a little too evanescent, though she affords a good enough focus for the chatter and the varied reactions of the other guests. The dialogue is clever and sometimes brilliant."

— + Spec 143:470 O 5 '29 150w

"It is a clever, uncomfortable piece of work, not very real."

Times [London] Lit Sup p560 Jl 11 '29 170w

PENDEXTER, HUGH. Gate through the mountain. 320p $2 Bobbs

29-7076

This "Western" is a tale of adventures in New Mexico in 1867. The action centers around the "gate through the mountain," a toll-house on the road used by the Overland stage company. Gentleman Ralph's gang of bandits has its headquarters near this pass and while the United States soldiers are engaged in quelling Indian uprisings the robbers attack the defenceless stage coaches. There is also a mystery involved.

PENDEXTER, HUGH—Continued

---

Booklist 25:361 Je '29

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Mr 24 '29 100w

"It is a notable tale when the starting point is reached, but certainly it could begin a little sooner. However, perhaps this is Mr. Pendexter's method of arousing his reader's avidity for the astounding denouement."

+ — Boston Transcript p6 My 11 '29 280w

Cleveland Open Shelf p96 Je '29

"A good plot, real characters, a vigorous, racy style and a mystery unveiled only at the tale's end, make it worth while." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 30 '29 100w

N Y Times p19 Ap 21 '29 200w

PENDRILL, CHARLES. Wanderings in mediæval London. 256p il $4 Macaulay [10s 6d Allen & U.]

914.21 London—Description [28-27696]

The author of "London life in the fourteenth century" (Book Review Digest, 1925) writes a second book on medieval London full of interesting and curious facts about old streets and buildings, parish churches and churchyards, trade methods, peculiar customs, and the origin of odd names.

---

Booklist 25:279 Ap '29

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice
Bookm 69:xvii Je '29 200w

"Mr. Pendrill has delved to good purpose in the ancient archives and has taken note of many a picturesque anecdote and homely detail through which the everyday life of five or six centuries ago is made vivid to the modern reader."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 F 10 '29 250w

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 12 '29 600w

"One turns the pages of this book with an increasing sense of amazement at the enormous amount of antiquarian lore which the author has gathered together and the labor which must have been involved in its collection. . . The author does not attempt to do anything more with it than to present it in a straight, authentic narrative. But even so it makes a striking and colorful pageant of ancient streets and by-gone ways of life."

+ N Y Times p12 Ja 13 '29 300w

Outlook 151:158 Ja 23 '29 40w

"Several years' close study of the civic records of London have furnished Mr. Pendrill with the material for a highly entertaining book. . . His account of the social customs of medieval London is extremely readable, and the illustrations from contemporary manuscripts are quaint and pleasing."

+ Sat R 145:295 Mr 10 '28 110w

"Mr. Pendrill has steeped himself in the knowledge of all sorts of medieval rolls and chronicles, and with a light pleasant touch he brings his acquisitions to bear in resurrecting certain parts of old London within the Wall. The author calls his work 'a book of digressions,' and so it is; but we are always pleased to go wherever Mr. Pendrill's learned fancy chooses to lead." M. J. C. M.

+ Spec 140:738 My 12 '28 380w

"Mr. Pendrill has used his researches to very good purpose, and his excellent book is full of curious and interesting things both about the methods of trade and the domestic life of medieval London."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p441 Je 14 '28 820w

PENMAN, JOHN SIMPSON. Lafayette and three revolutions. 362p il $5 Stratford

B or 92 Lafayette, Marie Joseph Paul Roch Yves Gilbert de Motier, marquis de. United States—History—Revolution—French participation. France—History—Revolution. France—History—Consulate and empire 1799-1815. France—History—July revolution, 1830 29-6539

This biography is not a complete story of Lafayette's life but an account of his part in three revolutions—the American revolutionary war, the French revolution, and the Revolution of 1830.

---

"Mr. Penman's book presents all the negative earmarks of sound scholarship: it is thoroughly free from the courtly irony of Strachey, the subtle sympathy of Maurois, the superficial, but undeniable dramatic vim of Ludwig. Indeed, it is painfully in harmony with the usual verdict upon Lafayette himself: it is long, conscientious and dull." Albert Guerard

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ap 21 '29 200w

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 17 '29 1000w

PENNELL, ELIZABETH (ROBINS) (MRS JOSEPH PENNELL). Life and letters of Joseph Pennell. 2v 349;368p il set $10 Little

B or 92 Pennell, Joseph 29-25172

"Mr. Pennell had already gone over the ground himself, in 'The Adventures of An Illustrator,' which he published in 1925, but the trouble with that delightful book was that in it Joseph Pennell was all the time getting between the reader and Joseph Pennell. He pretty nearly smothered the appeal of his own personality in an uproar of querulous railing. Such a display of garrulous egotism obscured the real man, leaving the impression that he was great fun, but incurably cantankerous. Mrs. Pennell redresses the balance, especially through printing a quantity of letters dating from the illustrator's earlier life."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

---

"It is Joe Pennell as he really was who emerges from this book. The man is set before us in a straightforward recital of his life, day by day. The story is inspired by loving understanding." F. Weitenkampf

+ Bookm 70:565 Ja '30 750w

"This is a book to be read with the warmest sympathy and the liveliest enjoyment by every one who cares to look over the artist's shoulder to see how he works—and feels. It is a singularly documented affair, a kind of log constituting an almost day by day record of Pennell's life. From a certain point of view the record is too minutely given. The reader looking for picturesque anecdotes will find comparatively few of them and he will feel, too, I dare say, that a good many of the letters, significant of mere comings and goings, might well have been omitted." Royal Cortissoz

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 N 24 '29 1350w

Reviewed by G. R. B. Richards
Boston Transcript p8 D 7 '29 1800w

Reviewed by Francis Snow
Current Hist 31:632 Ja '30 50w

"Mrs. Elizabeth Robins Pennell's life and letters of her husband is something more than a labor of love. So many details, relevant and irrelevant alike, are poured into her two volumes that it takes on the form of a mountainous daily record. Through it all we see Pennell tearing along at top speed, meeting celebrities, traveling, drawing, etching, writing, too busy to think, too busy to modify even the most casual of his many prejudices." Horace Gregory

+ N Y Evening Post p13m D 14 '29 1000w

"This biography is primarily Joseph Pennell's book and Mrs. Pennell, sometimes, indeed to excess, has followed carefully the career of her husband, describing his work, retracing his peregrinations, orientating his place in the art circles of his time, and generally illustrating his career and nature. It is an extremely complete book, but less precious for what light it has to throw on the development of art in America during the past fifty years than for its loving presentation of a man." Herbert Gorman

+ — N Y Times p3 D 1 '29 2050w

"In these two volumes the Pennell attitude goes gayly marching on. He is again on view, active as ever, wrangling over this and that, setting down on paper terse comment pointed with acerbity. If you ran into him on the street you would never forget his stinging rebuke. But his wife deflates his egotism. She tells us that he was a lovable character; shows that he was." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p15 N 21 '29 1050w

"It was a mistaken devotion that led Mrs. Pennell to extend this memoir of her talented husband to the customary two-volume form. It could better have been made in one volume, and even Mrs. Pennell's extraordinary literary tact in compiling and linking the material is inadequate to enliven many dreary stretches." F. J. Mather

— + Sat R of Lit 6:615 Ja 4 '30 600w

"Though the material might better have been condensed, these two volumes have considerable charm and not a little substance. The narrative of Pennell's early life is refreshing, and through the rest, especially in Pennell's own letters, there is a sustaining spirit. Well-chosen reproductions of Pennell's lithographs and etchings and of portraits of Pennell are sprinkled through the volumes."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7e D 8 '29 1350w

PENNELL, JOSEPH. London reverie; arranged with an introductory essay and notes by J. C. Squire. 30p il $8 (25s) Macmillan

914.21 London—Description 29-2728

"Fifty-six drawings by Joseph Pennell, with introductory essay and notes by J. C. Squire. He gives us here the London of twenty years ago—buildings, streets and traffic as they were in pre-war days and before the arrival of the motor. Each picture occupies a full page—a large one—and the book itself is sumptuous and beautiful. Mr. Squire's essay is both a reverie on London and a critical appreciation of Pennell."—Christian Century

Booklist 25:244 Mr '29

"Whatever their exact date it is obvious that Pennell made them in the full tide of his technical proficiency. . . Pennell really knew his London and these drawings have an intimate quality giving them a conspicuous place in his voluminous oeuvre. Mr. Squire's share in the book is amusing. He has made his preface more or less autobiographical, with allusions to various notable personalities, like Rupert Brooke, and gives us thereby some distinctive, readable papers. The notes have the same unconventional quality." Royal Cortissoz

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 D 16 '28 330w

"A treasure-house of Pennell's best work in black and white and of the scenes and atmosphere of old London. And Pennell's best in this particular field was equal to anybody's best."

+ Christian Century 46:365 Mr 14 '29 220w

Nation 127:720 D 26 '28 100w

Nation and Ath 44:sup382 D 8 '28 220w

"Every lover of London and everyone who cares for brilliant draughtsmanship, will be delighted with A London Reverie. . . These drawings are marvellous in their originality and variety, and yet they are all recognizable at once as representations of definite places."

+ Spec 142:136 Ja 26 '29 150w

"The fresh and notable feature of the book, setting it apart from any other collection of Pennell's work which has been made or will be made, is the opening essay of Mr Squire. Here is the informal essay at its best, with charm, gusto, learning, sentiment and the impress of an arresting personality. The drawings, which are of the London of 20 years ago, take Mr Squire back to the days when he was first discovering London for himself and awaken memories of people and places gone forever, thus helping to create the mood which gives the essay its distinctive character."

+ Springf'd Republican p6e D 16 '28 600w

PEPYS, SAMUEL. Further correspondence, 1662-1679; from the family papers in the possession of J. Pepys Cockerell; ed. by J. R. Tanner. 381p $6 Harcourt [18s Bell]

B or 92 29-5283

From the family papers in the possession of J. Pepys Cockerell this selection from the correspondence of Samuel Pepys from 1662 to 1679 has been made. The letters, which comprise communications official, semi-official and private, supplement the famous Diary by giving fuller information about various matters mentioned there.

Booklist 25:320 My '29

Reviewed by S: C. Chew

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Mr 17 29 670w

Cleveland Open Shelf p72 My '29

"To lovers of Pepys and to students of naval history alike, the book is invaluable." C. E. Fayle

+ Nation and Ath 44:762 Mr 2 '29 430w

"Pepys tells us so much to his own discredit in the Diary that there is a special interest and importance in anything which shows him, as this volume does, as the thoroughly able and good fellow he was. Needless to say, the book is admirably edited, and the quotations from the Diary which are inserted at the head of many of the letters make it much easier than it would otherwise be to appreciate the significance of its contents."

+ New Statesman 32:795 Mr 30 '29 620w

Sat R 147:148 F 2 '29 580w

"This volume offers the best commentary on and the best supplement to the Diary which has ever appeared. It will be invaluable to all who are, for any reason, interested in the Diary or its author or his period." W. C. Abbott

+ Sat R of Lit 5:877 Ap 13 '29 560w

Spec 142:165 F 2 '29 600w

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 10 '29 900w

Times [London] Lit Sup p57 Ja 24 '29 1100w

PERGLER, CHARLES. Judicial interpretation of international law in the United States. 222p $2 (10s 6d) Macmillan

341 International law and relations. Sovereignty. Jurisdiction. Citizenship. Aliens. Treaties. Law—United States 28-20618

"Mr. Pergler presents a combined text and case book explaining some topics of international law in time of peace as understood and applied by the judiciary of the United States. After showing the acceptance and enforcement of international law in this country as part of the law of the land and describing its relation to legislation, Federal and State, the author preceeds to investigate the interpretations given by the courts of the United States to the rules of international law relating to Independence and Sovereignty, Jurisdiction of States, Citizenship and Alienage, Treaties, and Remedial Measures short of War."—Columbia Law R

"The writer has disregarded the facts of the cases considered and thus fails to distinguish clearly and accurately at all times between law and dicta. Such treatment leads one to suspect that the author has not properly digested and clarified some parts of the material presented. Furthermore, the numerous articles covering the subjects treated in this volume which have appeared in the Columbia, Harvard, Michigan, and Yale law school publications seem to have been completely overlooked by Mr. Pergler. To the reviewer, it appears that there is little to justify the publication of the volume." J: G. Hervey

— Am Pol Sci R 23:505 My '29 300w

PERGLER, CHARLES—Continued

"Much of the material can be found scattered in other works, such as Moore's Digest, but here for the first time the holdings of our courts on a wide range of questions are conveniently collected in one volume and brought up to date. For the most part the writer contents himself merely with stating the decision of the courts, but occasionally he enters into a discussion of the merits and principles involved in disputed decisions." Amry Vandenbosch

Ann Am Acad 141:281 Ja '29 100w

"The book is the result of careful and conscientious study and should be recommended both as a valuable and handy source of information and as evidence of the amazing extent to which international law has penetrated the administration of justice." Francis Deák

+ Columbia Law R 29:849 Je '29 220w

Times [London] Lit Sup p189 Mr 7 '29 30w

PERKINS, JACOB RANDOLPH. Trails, rails and war; the life of General G. M. Dodge; pub. under the auspices of the Hist., memorial and art dept. of Iowa. 371p il $5 Bobbs

B or 92 Dodge, Grenville Mellen. Pacific railroads. Railroads—United States. Union Pacific railroad 29-8871

A biography of the great railroad builder whose whole career "is synchronous with railway expansion west of the Mississippi River, and is an integrant part of it. Beginning with his first independent survey across Iowa, in 1853, for the Mississippi and Missouri River Railroad and culminating, thirty-three years later, in a final active survey for the Mexican and Southern, of which General Grant was president, Dodge's services were basic in railroad pathfinding and building throughout the West." (Introd.)

---

"The material is rich, the effort honest, the viewpoints and judgments not always satisfactory. It is a book of medium merit which contains much of real significance. . . The chief weakness in the work lies in an uncritical attitude toward the later years of Dodge's activities. . . A more critical treatment of these men who made the modern America would detract nothing from their glory and might help the new age in finding new attitudes better fitted to its realities." Avery Craven

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Ap 28 '29 1100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p108 Jl '29

Reviewed by H: Chapin

New Repub 59:80 Je 5 '29 130w

"This 'Life of General G. M. Dodge,' tells in exhaustive (even exhausting) detail its hero's blazing of the iron horse trail of the Union Pacific. Its value as a painstaking, reliable historical monograph which completely covers its subject is undeniable, however, and one cannot expect the Minnigerode touch in every evocation of the American past." F. H. M.

— + N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 13 '29 60w

"In spite of its mediocre quality as a piece of writing, and its occasional banalities of comment, this book is of considerable importance both as a contribution to American history and as the biography of an American of sturdy character and remarkable abilities, of exceptional achievements and noteworthy service to his country." G. W. Harris

+ — N Y Times p4 My 26 '29 1050w

R of Rs 80:12 Jl '29 180w

"Though several histories of the Union Pacific railroad have been published, Mr. Perkins succeeds in throwing much new light on the planning, the financing, and the construction of that line. . . The book is a genuine addition to our political, our military, and our railway history." Allan Nevins

+ Sat R of Lit 6:72 Ag 24 '29 300w

PERKINS, KENNETH. Gold. 315p $2 Stokes

29-17279

The ingredients are a whaling ship in the days of the California gold rush, a religious New England skipper and his gentle and lovely daughter, a villain of a mate, and a crew of devils. The result is a swift tale of mutiny and mystery.

---

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ag 25 '29 100w

Reviewed by F: H. Martens

N Y Evening Post p7m Ag 17 '29 100w

"Mr. Perkins writes so well that you find yourself wishing he hadn't been in too much of a hurry to write a little better. He summons up situations on which he might profitably have spent more time. His characters are mostly sketchy or preposterous, but for the action and tumult that fill 'Gold' we are willing to forgive worse offenses."

+ — N Y Evening Post p6m S 7 '29 100w

"For first-rate entertainment this novel is entitled to an evening all its own. Mr. Perkins is able at characterization; to take the crew of a ship and individualize each man by speech alone is no novice's task."

+ N Y Times p26 S 22 '29 400w

"Reasonable and exciting, and fairly well written."

+ — Outlook 153:70 S 11 '29 120w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ag 25 '29 80w

PERKINS, LUCY (FITCH) (MRS DWIGHT HEALD PERKINS). Farm twins. 205p il $1.75 Houghton

28-25021

Mr and Mrs Tilly live on a farm. They have nearly everything to make them happy but they have no little girl or boy until the magic clothes basket brings them twins. Mrs Perkins tells, delightfully, how it all came about.

---

Booklist 25:217 F '29

Cleveland Open Shelf p80 My '29

"Has all the feeling of an old-time fairy tale and a perfectly real happening." M. G. Bonner

+ N Y Times p8 D 16 '28 80w

St Louis 27:33 Ja '29

"Another charming little pair step forth to take their place in the long line of delightful children whose existence we owe to Mrs. Lucy Fitch Perkins. These last are the youngest of the group, mere babies, but quite adorable and real."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:764 Mr 9 '29 120w

Springf'd Republican p7e D 16 '28 60w

Wis Lib Bul 25:77 F '29

PERRY, MAUDE CALDWELL. Tide house. 338p $2.50 Harcourt

29-20008

Argyll, a gaunt outpost town on the North Pacific coast, was one of the loves of Matthew Gulick. Altho he was of doubtful origin he hoped one day to be a ruler in the town. With the aid of a little black book of shady transactions he achieved his ambition, and finally in the shifting sands of Tide house he buried the memory of his none too savory past.

---

"This is a well analyzed and not in the least morbid picture of the beginning and the end of the age of the Olympians. . . An achievement on the part of Mrs. Perry who narrates swiftly, with no low moans from the wings over the baseness of these struggling men and women. On the other hand this telegraphic rapidity is responsible for the loss of some fine ironies which the author might have pointed out had she given herself space."

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 O 27 '29 450w

"The author reveals a sound imaginative power as well as cleverness and understanding in the telling of her story."

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 13 '29 320w

"Maude Caldwell Perry has woven together with great skill the diverse and seemingly opposed elements of her story. From an artistic point of view, 'Tide House' is so mature and satisfying an achievement that one awaits with more than the usual curiosity the second novel from the pen of a writer whose singular talents are so well displayed in her first."
+ N Y Times p6 S 29 '29 500w

"This, her first novel, had such elements of strength that it is to be hoped and expected that others will follow."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e N 17 '29 250w

PERRY, MRS STELLA GEORGE (STERN). [2] Extra-girl. 298p $2 Stokes

29-17394

"Record of Hollywood and its people. It is the tale of a small-town girl, confronted with the conventional traps of temptation by evil leading men and directors and surrounded by a society of adventuresses and dope fiends, poets and press agents."—N Y Times

Bookm 70:xxxi O '29 50w

"The novel does not inflict any great wear and tear on the emotions, but affords an authentic glimpse into the more or less glamorous world of film making."
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 O 27 '29 130w

"The situations of the narrative are not unduly exaggerated, but the author's injudicious mixture of sentimental romance and melodrama casts the whole story in an atmosphere of unreality, the principals standing out as grotesque and rather absurd caricatures against the rambling structure of the plot."
— N Y Times p31 N 24 '29 230w

"Readers who cannot get enough information about Hollywood life and celebrities out of the film magazines will enjoy 'Extra Girl.'"
— Sat R of Lit 6:256 O 12 '29 180w

PERRY, THOMAS SERGEANT. Selections from [his] letters; ed. with an introd. by Edwin Arlington Robinson. 255p $3 Macmillan

B or 92 29-23358

Thomas Sergeant Perry, 1845-1928, was a cultivated Bostonian, a great reader and appreciator, an aristocrat by birth and instinct, and a conservative with violent political prejudices. His letters, selected by Edwin Arlington Robinson and addressed, most of them, to Moorfield Storey, William James, John T. Morse, jr., and Salomon Reinach are interesting for their frankly personal opinions on literary and social subjects.

"So few gentlemen of the old school survived until the post-war era, therefore these letters revealing the many-sided culture of one so eminent and distinguished, and full as they are of comments that connect the events of today with the standards of yesterday, form a notable contribution to Bostonian letters." G. R. B. R.
+ Boston Transcript p6 N 23 '29 570w

"What Perry thought about the War, religion, history, philosophy, public personalities, etc., was nothing more or less than what Back Bay and the Best of Boston thought about such matters—neither acute nor clairvoyant. What he himself really was—too meagerly revealed in this collection of his letters, which is rather narrowly selected from what must have been an enormous correspondence, and mechanically put together—is a whimsical, humorous, lovable man, a great, an omnivorous reader and annotator of books, a bouquiniste if America ever produced one, with a keen flair for the distinguished, the rare, in literature." Robert Herrick
+ — New Repub 61:174 Ja 1 '30 1250w

Outlook 153:349 O 30 '29 70w

"Perry's letters have value, apart from their wit and spirit, because the writer's views are so personal and unprofessional. He may have indulged overmuch an aristocratic right of wilful judgment, but his judgments, outside politics, usually mean something. Persons who regard Henry Adams as a choice exotic will be glad of the opportunity to make the acquaintance of another New Englander of highly individual and slightly rasping intellect."
+ Springf'd Republican p8 N 16 '29 950w

PERSONS, WARREN MILTON. Construction of index numbers. 90p $1.25 Houghton

311.26 Index numbers (economics) 29-5009

The object of this study is to measure the average change of prices of two or more commodities during two or more periods. The problem is that of averaging a number of price relatives.

Am Econ R 19:165 Mr '29 150w

Booklist 26:13 O '29

PERTWEE, ROLAND. Hell's loose. 301p $2 Houghton

29-7720

An exciting adventure story in which a British general strike, Commander Robert Shaftoe, a formula for a gasoline substitute, great oil companies and a nice girl figure prominently.

Bookm 70:xxxiii O '29 70w

Cleveland Open Shelf p78 My '29

N Y Times p22 My 12 '29 130w

"We recommend this to any one who likes an exciting adventure story, well told." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 151:516 Mr 27 '29 90w

"For the most part, Mr. Pertwee has done well with this melodramatic adventure story. Mr. Pertwee is shrewd enough to sound the proper note throughout the story; he is gay, humorous, facile, inventive. The only trouble is that he was slightly too inventive for the final good of his plot."
+ — Sat R of Lit 5:934 Ap 20 '29 130w

Wis Lib Bul 25:277 Jl '29

PETERKIN, MRS JULIA MOOD. Scarlet sister Mary. 345p $2.50 Bobbs

28-24477

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

"If there is any other writer who knows so well the intricate simplicities of the Negro mind as it exists in a place completely isolated from white influences—for there is not a white character in the book—certainly there is no other who can so well depict them." W. E. G.
+ Christian Century 45:1494 D 6 '28 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p46 Mr '29

"She dispenses to a considerable extent with dialect and relies upon a narrative form which preserves in essence the characteristics of Gullah speech. The result is easier and more rapid reading. Yet the language is rich, the humor implicit and each page is touched with a mellow beauty. The plot moves steadily to a climax and coincidence is so handled as to heighten the effect of superstition." Dale Warren
+ N Y World p11m N 4 '28 680w

Pratt p41 summer '29

St Louis 27:251 Ag '29

"It is certainly a fine piece of work—appealing to the heart by its simplicity, to the mind by its gift of simplification. . . Mrs. Peterkin's account of the negroes is devoid of sensationalism; and in spite of its austerity it has a lyrical quality which sings through the drab record of Sister Mary's sins, softening them with its poetry and humanity." L. P. Hartley
+ Sat R 148:108 Jl 27 '29 250w

"It is a sympathetic and exceedingly careful study of primitive character, given extra force by the poetic handling of the background against which it is drawn."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p96 F 7 '29 400w

PETERSHAM, MAUD (FULLER) (MRS MISKA PETERSHAM), and PETERSHAM, MISKA. Miki. unp il $2 Doubleday, Doran 29-23125

"Miki is a little boy who goes to Hungary and travels about with Sari, the green goose, and Matyi, the shepherd's dog with the silver curls. They listen to the shepherd's folk tales, dance with the gypsies and ride on the merry-go-round in Budapest."—Cleveland Open Shelf

---

"Maud and Miska Petersham have brought to this book all the brightness of atmosphere and character of illustration for which they have long been known. And because of the manner of its inception, there is about it the intimate touch of verity to which children so quickly respond." Helen Ferris

\+ Bookm 70:308 N '29 150w

"It is a gay book, and for better or worse Hungary will seem an incredibly gay and romantic place to those who meet it first with Miki." Lynd Ward

\+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 N 17 '29 270w

"A story bringing out many Hungarian customs and characteristics, which children from three to seven will enjoy. The bright-colored illustrations by the author-artists are in the merry spirit of the text."

\+ Cleveland Open Shelf p133 N '29

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

\+ N Y Evening Post p14m N 16 '29 80w

Reviewed by M. L. Becker

Outlook 152:392 Jl 3 '29 100w

St Louis 27:345 D '29

"A gay and altogether delightful volume about the surprising things a small American boy did and saw when he returned to visit his grand-parents in Budapest." Rachel Field

\+ Sat R of Lit 6:403 N 16 '29 100w

PETERSON, HOUSTON, ed. Book of sonnet sequences. 459p $3.50 Longmans 821.08 Sonnets, English. Sonnets, American
[29-18471]

Sonnet groups selected and abridged by Mr. Peterson, representing twenty-one poets: Sir Philip Sidney; William Shakespeare; John Donne; William Wordsworth; John Keats; Elizabeth Barrett Browning; David Gray; George Meredith; Henry Wadsworth Longfellow; Thomas Hardy; Dante Gabriel Rossetti; Christina Georgina Rossetti; Wilfrid Scawen Blunt; George Santayana; Eugene Lee-Hamilton; William Ellery Leonard; Rupert Brooke; Alan Seeger; Edna St Vincent Millay; Thomas S. Jones, jr.; Conrad Aiken.

---

"The saints' lives of Thomas S. Jones jr. hardly belong in such a collection. . . Wordsworth deserved better of Mr. Peterson than to be represented by the Duddon pieces. . . These are minor and rather capricious criticisms. The important thing is that the book is everywhere readable, everywhere human and interesting." Mark Van Doren

\+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 O 20 '29 450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p155 D '29

Nation 129:447 O 16 '29 260w

"On the whole, this is a thrilling collection. The errors and omissions are few, the merits great. Mr. Peterson has done his work with a tactful and sensitive appreciation of the intrinsic beauty of the sonnet. There is music here, some of the finest in the language. There is an endlessly absorbing laboratory for any one concerned with a comparative study of the sonnet. There is a mine of pure poetry for those readers interested in renewing their poetic impressions or recasting their poetic judgments." Margaret Wallace

\+ — N Y Evening Post p7m S 7 '29 800w

St Louis 27:339 D '29

Reviewed by W: R. Benét

Sat R of Lit 6:210 O 5 '29 280w

"The volume is offered without pretense and is meant for reading. It does not invite extended criticism. Mr Houston's comments on individual poets are not models of precise thought (what does he mean by 'such fundamental themes as nympholepsy, vicarious experience and personal identity'?) but are sober and unassuming."

\+ — Springf'd Republican p12 S 12 '29 420w

PETRE, EDWIN ROBERT. Shrines of the great in Europe; a unique tourist guide. 391p $2 (8s 6d) Funk
914 Europe—Description and travel—Guidebooks 28-29362

Here, alphabetically arranged by country, are the shrines of great Europeans—the birthplaces, homes and monuments of famous men and women, and the places connected with their works. The second part of the handbook lists alphabetically the famous people themselves with a brief note, and a cross reference to the shrine of each.

---

"Seldom do we find a book accurately described in its title or sub-title, and we are therefore compelled to emphasize the fact that with Mr. Petre's book it is true. It is 'a unique tourist guide,' in that it arranges in convenient form the shrines of the great in twenty-three countries of Europe. The volume has the compactness of a Who's Who, and by a cross reference of the figures and places mentioned, gives one the full data of great men and women and their associations."

\+ Boston Transcript p5 Mr 23 '29 250w

"The author of 'Shrines of the Great in Europe' has hit upon a new idea in guide books. He has listed the famous personal associations of places in most of the countries of Europe, and has made a little travel companion which may well bring added enrichment to the traveler's days. This will be found to be a helpful handbook."

\+ N Y Times p22 D 2 '28 220w

St Louis 27:135 Ap '29

PETRIE, SIR CHARLES ALEXANDER. Story of government. 329p $3.50 Little [7s 6d Methuen]
320 Political science 29-18677

Starting with the earliest form of polity known to mankind, the patriarchal, this book traces the development of government through the ages and looks at the trends today that indicate the possible future of human government.

---

Boston Transcript p7 N 20 '29 500w

"Sir Charles Petrie has managed to compress into a small book a lively and stimulating discussion of the various forms of government which the Western World has known from the days of the Greek City States to our own times. As a prehistorian he is an inadequate guide. On the other hand, his survey of monarchy, tyranny, dictatorship, aristocracy, oligarchy and democracy from the Homeric chieftains to Mussolini, from Pericles to Baldwin, is never allowed to drift far from the facts; and his criticism of these various forms of government is studiously fair."

\+ — New Statesman 33:250 Je 1 '29 150w

"It is this fact, that he sees the political organizations of the present time evolving from those of the past and changing form even while they are being studied, that gives his book its great vitality and its keen intellectual relish. . . There is a chapter on government in America, with the lion's share of attention turned on the United States, of whose political development his estimate is noteworthily just."

\+ N Y Times p11 O 13 '29 500w

"A stimulating little book which perhaps simplifies the history of government but certainly provokes thought on theory. Historically its principal weakness is too slight an indication of the importance of law. . . Sir Charles Petrie sometimes stimulates us to register dissent, but that response is really itself a tribute to his book."

+ Sat R 147:803 Je 15 '29 400w
Spec 142:797 My 18 '29 100w

"Sir Charles Petrie has written a workmanlike textbook marred, in passages, by its overdogmatic tone. Beginning with the Greek City State the argument moves rapidly to modern democracy, whose problems are carefully analysed. A feature of the treatment is the detail given to Spanish affairs and the light they throw on processes of political thought."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p406 My 16 '29 130w

PETTEE, FLORENCE MAE. Palgrave mummy. 265p $2 Brewer
29-10669

Axminster sends a mummy to his friend Palgrave with explicit directions as to uncasing it in the presence of witnesses. The arrival of the mummy brings death and terror to the Palgrave household and seems to have especially evil effects on Olive, Palgrave's niece.

Bookm 69:xxvi Je '29 40w
Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 My 12 '29 100w

"The true explanation is rather too elaborate to be convincing."
N Y Times p19 Je 16 '29 180w

"The first few chapters, by their strained efforts to be mysterious, give an impression of unreality and become rather dull. However, the results of unwrapping the mummy of Prince Amon Ya do gradually become exciting."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p669 Ag 29 '29 200w

PETTIT, CHARLES. Woman who commanded 500,000,000 men; tr. from the French by Una, Lady Troubridge. 319p $2.50 Liveright
Tzŭ-hsi, empress dowager of China—Fiction
29-14296

A fictionized biography of the woman, known as the Old Buddha, who rose from the position of royal concubine to be virtually empress over China's millions of inhabitants.

"While not so bitingly satirical as his two former works, the book makes fine light reading for those who are not averse to the introduction of a little Chinese history and the author's rage against the ruthless 'barbarians' from the West."
Bookm 69:xxiv Ag '29 100w

"It is always highly readable, often brilliant, and occasionally in the old manner wholly charming. It brings to life the mysterious court of the Violet City, and illuminates it with passion warm under the weight of thousands of years of ritual." R. B. Sanborn
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Je 23 '29 820w

"Mr. Pettit has no aptitude for understanding the Oriental, and no real wish to; he prefers to see him always in the light of his amazing and amusing differences from the European. In consequence, 'The Woman Who Commanded 500,000,000 Men,' is an inhumane, amusing, vulgar, witty and unscrupulous book." Florence Haxton
— + N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 6 '29 480w

"This is literary chop suey, elegantly served. In it there is a mixture of Oriental intrigue and scandal, purple-patch writing, and chunks of Chinese history presented with such prosaic terseness that the dates parenthetically inserted are wholly appropriate. It is palatable at times, dull at others and occasionally cloying. On the whole, it is conducive to intellectual indigestion."
— + N Y Times p7 Jl 7 '29 550w

"There is a delicate irony in the author's treatment of his rather terrific heroine which should please you." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 152:469 Jl 17 '29 80w

"A true portrait of Ye Ho Na La known as Tz'u Hs'i, the Late Empress Dowager of China; or is it a work of fiction pure and simple and are historical inaccuracies and anachronisms to be ignored for the sake of their dramatic quality?" Florence Ayscough
— Sat R of Lit 6:55 Ag 17 '29 700w

PHELPS, GEORGE HARRISON. Our biggest customer; [introd. by James J. Davis]. 192p $2 Liveright
331.8 Labor and laboring classes—United States. Consumption (economics). United States—Economic conditions 29-16320

Our biggest customer, according to the author, is the American workingman. "Writing as an advertising agent, he is reminding all employers of labor as well as all merchandisers of goods, that the lowest income group in our country, constituting over eighty per cent of the population, has, despite its low relative buying power per family, a greater absolute consuming ability today than ever before. And he urges that great attention be paid both to sustaining high and higher earning power and to meeting the new wants of this tremendous class by intelligent selling." (Sat R of Lit)

"A little book well written but not distinguished in style, and doing the service of picking out, holding in the light, turning over and examining, one most important aspect of the contemporaneous economic situation."
+ N Y Times p11 N 3 '29 850w
Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 80:18 S '29 200w

"His treatment of the newest aspects of this valid theme is highly suggestive and adds an underscoring to the familiar work of Foster and Catchings, at least as to part of his message. To think of manual workers as the major market for goods, not merely as a vaguely upreaching class whose demand for 'higher wages and shorter hours' seems to the outsider a constant plaint, is a wholesome corrective." Ordway Tead
+ Sat R of Lit 6:338 N 2 '29 180w

PHILLIPS, ULRICH BONNELL. Life and labor in the old South. 375p il $4 Little 975 South—Social conditions. South—Economic conditions. Slavery in the United States. Plantation life 29-11204

"This social-economic history of the South before the Civil War is based upon a large collection of diaries and other contemporary sources not allowed to impede the vigorous march of the narrative."—Yale R n s

"Life and Labor in the Old South is unique in that it brings into the compass of a single volume an unusual amount of descriptive information. A number of illustrations, including cabins, mansions, plantation maps, and an economic map of the South in 1860, aid in visualizing the antebellum scene." W: K. Boyd
+ Am Hist R 35:133 O '29 1100w
Booklist 26:25 O '29
Reviewed by Irving Astrachan
Bookm 69:669 Ag '29 480w

"Messrs. James Truslow Adams, Worthington C. Ford and Allan Nevins are to be congratulated on their fine discrimination in awarding to this volume the prize of $2,500 offered by Little, Brown & Co. for the best unpublished work on American history. It is characterized by a ripened and well rounded scholarship, an erudition, an impartiality and an understanding which make it perhaps the most significant contribution to the history of the Old South in this generation." H: S. Commager
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 My 19 '29 1700w

"The greatest virtue of this book is its unemotional historicity. Its author is generally magnificently non-partisan." S. L. Cook
+ Boston Transcript p4 My 11 '29 1800w

"Its scholarly character is notable; it is, besides, absorbing reading."
+ Nation 129:177 Ag 14 '29 130w

PHILLIPS, U. B.—Continued

"Professor Phillips' volume is one of the most distinguished additions to the new history, and in its particular field it is without an equal." Allen Tate

+ New Repub 59:211 Jl 10 '29 850w

"This book proves afresh that in the writing of history sanity need not be wedded to dullness nor vitality consort with the smart manner and the iconoclastic temper. . . The author has learned the hardest lesson for the historian—what to ignore. Setting aside most of the secondary works he has quarried for his data amid musty plantation records, overseers' reports, contemporary diaries, travelers' journals, newspapers and technical manuals. He has throughout discarded the generalization for the vivid description of the life of a particular person or family." Max Lerner

+ N Y Evening Post p9m Je 1 '29 880w

"Though the book has been cursed with a title which amounts to a pledge of dullness, it is as full of entertainment as it is of meat." H. I. Brock

+ N Y Times p6 My 26 '29 2400w

"Mr. Phillips's treatise is both a work of original and thorough scholarship and a book of distinct literary charm." Allan Nevins

+ N Y World p10m My 19 '29 1100w

Pratt p31 autumn '29

"Undeniably it is history in the fullest sense, and yet as a piece of literature it has the rarely achieved merit of making the reader forget for the moment that its purpose is historical."

+ R of Rs 80:16 Jl '29 500w

St Louis 27:315 N '29

"Ulrich B. Phillips has no rival in the field of the antebellum South. A lifetime of solid research and a mellow, tender yet discriminating and not at all sentimental love for the land of Dixie have made this book a masterpiece." M. E. C.

+ Springf'd Republican p5e Je 2 '29 800w

Wis Lib Bul 25:275 Jl '29

Reviewed by J. H. Easterby

Yale R n s 19:176 autumn '29 450w

PHILLPOTTS, EDEN. Apes. 182p $2.50 Macmillan [6s Faber]

"The Apes" is a satire on human progress. On a prehistoric morning in the great simian age, the council of seven—the chief monkeys of the land—assembled. Each of these wise apes propounded a project of reform. One pleads for land cultivation, another for an ape army, another for courting rather than capture of the female. The vision of Man appears to them; but only part of the Nation of apes accepted the vision as ideal, and division occurred. In the epilogue, Man in actuality does come into Apeland, and shoots all the monkeys he encounters.

---

For biographical sketches of the author see Boston Transcript p1 N 30 '29; and Wilson Bulletin 3:418 Ja '29

---

"Mr. Phillpotts's satire is at least generous. He stands up for the right things, the abolition of war, the equality of the sexes, freedom of thought, the necessity for considering the individual as part of the race in evolution, and so on. But his satire is not very good. His attitude is neither new nor distinctive; and he seems rather to miss the point of this kind of satire."

— + Nation and Ath 46:296 N 23 '29 150w

"A tedious satire on humankind done in simian terms. In general, Mr. Phillpotts is first rate in writing of his own rural England. In his novels of society life, in his mystery stories, in such things as 'The Apes,' he tapers down." Edwin Seaver

— N Y Evening Post p10m D 28 '29 100w

"Mr. Phillpotts is challenging science with a fable, or rather an hypothesis, and while it is most entertaining his satire might have been even more effective if it had been less reasonable." V. S. Pritchett

Spec 143:784 N 23 '29 140w

PHILLPOTTS, EDEN. The torch, and other tales. 286p $2.50 Macmillan [7s 6d Hutchinson] 29-26785

Short stories about the lives of the author's beloved Devon folk. Contents: 'Santa Claus'; The returned native; John and Jane; The old soldier; When Fox was ferryman; Mother's misfortune; Steadfast Samuel; The hound's pool; The price of Milly Bassett; The amber heart; The wise woman of Walna; The torch; 'Spider'; The woodstock; The night-hawk.

---

Booklist 26:33 O '29

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Ag 25 '29 80w

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 10 '29 110w

"Mr. Phillpotts has gone again to his beloved Devon for his material, and as usual has found that well-tilled field as fertile in character and incident as ever it was."

+ New Statesman 33:382 Je 29 '29 70w

"Eden Phillpotts's stories of the West country [are] told simply as a native of Devon might tell them in his own language. They do not, however, seem to me to be stories of the first magnitude, and the critical estimate of certain contemporary Englishmen that puts Mr. Phillpotts on the same plane as Thomas Hardy is rather uncritical. Mr. Phillpotts has a fine ear for the language; the precision with which his stories render the speaking and thinking of his characters is, indeed, his chief virtue. But what we might call the inner ear of the imagination is not greatly apparent in the present volume." Edwin Seaver

+ — N Y Evening Post p7m Jl 20 '29 600w

"They are simply fifteen more tales from Mr. Phillpotts in his familiar Devonshire vein. They have nothing more charming in them than excellent descriptions of the countryside, and nothing less appealing than a good many rather too patently whimsical characters periodically uttering orotund bits of philosophy."

— + N Y Times p16 S 29 '29 500w

"The short stories in 'The Torch' represent his middle register. They are written as by an educated but observant rustic. They show most of Mr. Phillpotts's qualities in combination: his narrative gift, his fair-mindedness; his power of subduing his characters to their environment and yet letting them work out their own destiny in accordance with their individualities. They are sober and balanced; they are ingenious and exciting. A compromise, and with the merits and defects of a compromise." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 147:839 Je 22 '29 180w

"His book is not modern, but exciting, and not important, but it is as soothing and pleasant as a cool draught of water from the old oaken bucket itself."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:298 O 19 '29 300w

"They are written in colloquial style, as though, like some invisible scribe in a chimney corner, he had taken down the words of villagers, grown discursive on winter evenings. The result is very effective, we feel in reading as though we too were listening to narratives that are free of tedious descriptions and any extravagance of phrase. The title story is by far the best, but 'Santa Claus' is a brilliant little tale, and so too is 'The Wise Woman of Walna.' "

+ Spec 143:167 Ag 3 '29 200w

"Mr. Phillpotts's many thousand admirers will rejoice that in this collection of short stories he has contented himself with doing once more what he has proved a hundred times before he can do delightfully."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p496 Je 20 '29 130w

PHILLPOTTS, EDEN. Tryphena. 392 $2 Macmillan
29-15571

From the time that a strange woman leaves her baby in ten-year-old Leonard's arms, he considers that Tryphena belongs to him. The child is adopted by his parents, grows up in their Devonshire village, and at eighteen becomes engaged to the handsome young blacksmith of the village. Just then her father turns up, a man of wealth and position, and takes her away with him. But in spite of all these changes, Tryphena discovers that she does really belong to Leonard.

---

Booklist 26:120 D '29

"Contains a minimum of action and a maximum of discussion. It is written in a stiff, rather crabbed style, probably a deliberate echo of the speech of its characters, for the scene, which is painstakingly described in an early chapter, is the Devonshire countryside near Deancombe, with Cliff Castle Farm as its focal point." Garreta Busey

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 O 20 '29 680w

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 10 '29 1100w

" 'Tryphena' is a delightfully interesting story of the characteristic Phillpotts sort of which there can never be too many." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p5 S 14 '29 320w

"A long, full book which refuses to be hurried and is none the worse for that; it may maunder, at moments, like an old man in the chimney-corner, but it is never meretricious, careless, or slick, and this is much to be thankful for." V. Sackville-West

+ Nation and Ath 44:790 Mr 9 '29 220w

"The drama is one of character, and is worked out with great skill to its just psychological conclusion. It may be questioned if Mr. Phillpotts has ever done better work."

+ New Statesman 32:772 Mr 23 '29 150w

N Y Evening Post p7m Ag 17 '29 290w

"The book is slow in starting, and, once started, holds that pace. To read it is like looking at a slowly meandering stream where the long sheets of still water are broken only by half seen eddies. Bucolic conversations between minor characters fill a hundred pages, and the news that we glean from them is not striking. The digressions are sometimes good, as are sections of descriptions of people and scenes, but, except in one or two chapters, Mr. Phillpotts fails to strike a spark from his tale."

— + N Y Times p30 N 24 '29 250w

"Mr. Eden Phillpotts is not really at his best in Tryphena. But it is always pleasant to wander in Mr. Phillpotts' familiar country, with its apple-scents, amber streams, mists of blue-bells in the woods, and long calm lines of ploughed land; and to watch Tryphena's hands dance over the bobbins that weave the butterflies in Honiton lace. The conversations and descriptions are very leisurely: the racy and juicy qualities of Devonshire speech are as welcome as ever." R. A. Taylor

+ — Spec 142:292 F 23 '29 100w

Springf'd Republican p7e N 3 '29 380w

Times [London] Lit Sup p291 Ap 11 '29 160w

PHIPPS, RAMSAY WESTON. Armies of the first French Republic, and the rise of the marshals of Napoleon I; v 2, Armées de la Moselle, du Rhin, de Sambre-et-Meuse, de Rhin-et-Moselle. 472p $7.50 (21s) Oxford

944.04 France—History—Revolution. France—Army

"The first volume of this work [Book Review Digest, 1927] dealt with the general conditions of the change-over from the Royal Army to the Republican Armies and the operations of the Armée du Nord. The present volume gives the stories of the armies, other than the Nord, which served on the north-eastern frontier of France from the commencement of hostilities in 1791 until the end of 1797 and the Peace of Campo Formio."—Times [London] Lit Sup

---

"Colonel Phipps' careful study and research has produced a remarkable history, which while lacking the elements of sensation or resembling a popular account of wars and battles, is of value to many students of military history." J. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 16 '29 500w

"In general interest it fully maintains the high standard of its predecessor."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p525 Jl 4 '29 900w

PHOCAS-COSMETATOS, S. P. Tragedy of Greece; tr. by E. W. and A. Dickes; with a foreword by Cyril Hughes Hartmann. 327p $4.50 Brentano's [15s K. Paul]

949.5 European war, 1914-1918—Greece. Greece, Modern—Foreign relations. Greece, Modern—History [29-11377]

"The defense of the character, motives, and policies of the late King Constantine, of Greece, almost inevitably involves attacks on the conduct of Lloyd George and his British associates, of the French Governments and of the Greek premier, Venizelos. . . The motives of Great Britain, France, and Italy are shown in the most sordid light, as being dominated by economic and political imperialism, international jealousies, and a lust for territorial aggrandizement, using Greece as a pawn in the game."—Sat R of Lit

---

"The author is a well-known journalist and an extremely skilful pamphleteer. His material is ably documented. And if the chapters and verses he quotes are at all true, then indeed M. Venizelos's relation with the Allies and theirs with Greece throughout the period of the World War and after are not particularly edifying."

Bookm 68:xviii N '28 90w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 F 10 '29 300w

Nation 128:324 Mr 13 '29 230w

"Seldom is such severe, almost violent, criticism made so convincing by quotations from public documents, and private memoirs and letters. . . The book is certainly worth reading by anyone who desires to gain a reliable comprehension of the Great War, since it presents a side of the question which is usually ignored or glossed over, but which is entitled to a fair consideration on its merits. The style is unusually readable, even eloquent in places."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:287 O 20 '28 450w

"Most readers will approach the book with a sympathy for Greece. Unfortunately, the present champion of Greece is too much concerned with his own thesis (that Constantine was one of the great kings of Hellas and that Venizelos falls little short of Satan himself) to give real substance to our sympathy."

— Sat R of Lit 5:840 Mr 30 '29 350w

"In spite of the author's declarations on the subject, it has all the character of a propaganda book to show that King Constantine's behaviour during the War has been misunderstood, that he was friendly to the Entente, and that Mr. Venizelos was responsible for all the disasters and misfortunes of Greece. Unfortunately the author's vehement language and tendency to exaggeration spoil the desired effect, for his voice is anything but the 'stern, calm voice of History,' and raises suspicions that his case is not by any means so good as he would have it appear."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p399 My 24 '28 180w

PIAGET, JEAN. Child's conception of the world; [tr. by Joan and Andrew Tomlinson]. (Int. lib. of psychology, philosophy and scientific method) 397p $4 Harcourt [12s 6d K. Paul]

136.7 Child study [29-5717]

Two recent books by the same author—"Language and thought of the child" and "Judgment and reasoning of the child"—investigate the form and functioning of child thought. The present volume is devoted to the study of the content of the child's mind at different stages of his development.

PIAGET, JEAN—Continued

Booklist 26:100 D '29
Bookm 69:ix Ag '29 170w
Reviewed by J. B. Temple
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Je 9 '29 470w
Boston Transcript p3 My 25 '29 360w
Cleveland Open Shelf p137 N '29

"The innumerable examples of his catechisms make in themselves fascinating reading, and Professor Piaget's deductions are summed up with a thoughtfulness and lucidity that give his work very great interest. If an objection has to be made, it is that the necessary systematization of the results seems to lay down a too rigid and arbitrary mould for the child's nebulous hypotheses and beliefs."
+ — Nation and Ath 44:886 Mr 23 '29 450w
Nature 124:686 N 2 '29 160w
Reviewed by Augusta Alpert
New Repub 58:366 My 15 '29 560w

"M. Piaget has so far revealed himself as a very cautious investigator. . . The aim of his books, of which this is the third, is to examine the nature of children's minds and to trace their development into what seems to him to be the perfect machinery of adult intelligence."
Sat R 147:478 Ap 6 '29 980w
Times [London] Lit Sup p488 Je 20 '29 1700w

PIERARD, LOUIS. Belgian problems since the war. (Inst. of politics publications, Williams college, Williamstown, Mass.) 106p $2 Yale univ. press
335 Socialism in Belgium. Labor party (Belgium)

In six lectures delivered before the Institute of politics at Williams college a member of the Belgian parliament discusses labor and socialism in Belgium today and the workman's use of his leisure time. The introductory lecture explains the differences between Walloons and Flemings.

"Four chapters are given over to a discussion of the structure, principles, and activities of the parti ouvrier belge, or, as it is popularly called, the 'P. O. B.' . . M. Pierard himself is a fine example of the charming and brilliant 'intellectuals' who have been largely the directive influence in the P. O. B. He is an artist-writer-politician, a combination sufficiently rare in the United States. This book will well repay the reading of anyone who is interested in Belgium, socialism, social reform, or political parties. The P. O. B. is undoubtedly the best organized political party in the world." T: H. Reed
+ Am Pol Sci R 23:765 Ag '29 300w

"The material reflects the fact that it was presented orally, for it is of a popular nature, containing those general statements so common in lectures and omitting detailed information. The book is, however, a useful one, written in a clear, simple English, which smacks from time to time of the foreign. . . The best section of the book is the treatment of the Parti Ouvrier Belge. . . M. Pierard, although partisan, has described this party in an excellent manner." S. B. Clough
+ Hist Outlook 21:38 Ja '30 450w

"[These] six lectures delivered at Williamstown may be strongly recommended to those who wish to know something about the present condition of that country, all the more so that they deal chiefly not with political parties and Parliamentary discussions but that they give a full account of the work and ideals of the Labour Party, with regard to which the author is so well qualified to speak."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p563 Jl 11 '29 250w

PIERCE, S. W., pseud., and PIERCE, J. T., pseud. The layman looks at doctors. 251p $2 Harcourt
616.8 Physicians. Psychoanalysis. Nervous system—Diseases 29-20582

Purports to be the experiences of a young woman who shortly after her marriage suffered a disastrous nervous breakdown. She tried one doctor's favorite method after another. She describes the various methods of treatment as minimization, methodic brutality, encouragement and infinite patience, sex appeal, terminology, experimentation, efficiency, but none of them cleared up the matter. After three years of exhausting and useless attempts to get well, she embarked on psychoanalysis and was cured.

Bookm 70:xiv N '29 80w

"This is a book that is well worth reading by anyone who is at all interested in the problems arising as an inevitable result of our over-crowded, mechanistic age." G. R. B. R.
+ Boston Transcript p7 N 20 '29 520w

"Psychoanalysts and their disciples are likely to regard the book with the warmest favor, but regular physicians will wonder where the anxious husband and his afflicted wife found the famous freaks of medicine whose amazing methods speeded her along the road toward an early grave."
N Y Times p34 O 20 '29 200w

"No single adjective will adequately describe this book. It is both true and false, humorous and tragic, and is calculated to arouse either a feeling of hopefulness or one of hopelessness, depending upon the emotional pattern with which the reader approaches it . . . handed to the right sort of person it ought to be a work productive of understanding." W: A. White, M.D.
+ Sat R of Lit 6:312 O 26 '29 1000w

PIGOU, ARTHUR CECIL. Study in public finance. 323p $4.50 (16s) Macmillan
336 Finance [28-14301]

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

"Professor Pigou possesses exceptional technique and tools of the trade. Any intelligent reader (and others cannot safely venture) must feel that, having followed the inquiry, he has not surveyed the entire field, but visited hitherto unexplored recesses of the labyrinth of the theory of public finance in charge of a competent guide." J. P. Jensen
Am Econ R 18:770 D '28 1250w
Ann Am Acad 141:281 Ja '29 60w

PILCHER, VELONA. The searcher; a war play; reading version. 84p $3.50 Doubleday, Doran [10s 6d Heinemann]
822 [29-16526]

A Red Cross searcher attached to an evacuation hospital near the front is the principal figure in the play. To the accompaniment of the sounds of war, rising, dying, rising again to a furious din, the searcher goes about her duties voicing thru eight expressionistic scenes at the battle front, a passionate indictment of war. The book is beautifully produced and there are ten effective wood-cuts by Blair Hughes-Stanton.

"The monologues are an impassioned, at times almost a turgidly rhetorical indictment of war, but the scheme of the play and the wood-cut illustrations of the sets suggest the possibility of a most fascinating and certainly at times emotionally disturbing performance in the theater." W. P. Eaton
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 My 5 '29 150w

"There is sincerity of feeling under the somewhat sophisticated artificiality of the play, but the work as a whole is vitiated by a contemporary staginess, which robs it of any real universality either of meaning or of appeal. The book is fortunate in its production."
— + New Statesman 32:708 Mr 9 '29 200w

"There is feeling behind it and a lavish use of puissant phrase in her descriptions of stage-tactics and in her suggestions for dialogue. But the Searcher's denunciations grow wearisome. The scenes in and around hospital are less moving than they should be because the characters are formalized and jig about in their agony like marionettes instead of reacting with the varied gestures and distresses of men. An air of self-consciousness infects the whole."
— + Sat R 147:183 F 9 '29 540w

"A momentous, intensely theatric, brilliantly written expressionistic play." J: Hutchens
+ Theatre Arts Mo 13:385 My '29 650w

PILLSBURY, WALTER BOWERS. History of psychology. 326p il $3.50 Norton

150 Psychology—History 29-12786

The development of psychological thinking from the earliest period, with emphasis upon the individual psychologist from the standpoint of the value of his contribution to modern psychological theory. Greek and medieval psychological theories are first discussed; then the beginnings of modern thought with Descartes and Spinoza. German psychologists are given careful attention; psychologists of England, France and America are also studied. The volume concludes with a discussion of the modern schools of psychology.

Booklist 26:9 O '29

"The writer indulges in none of the artfulness of style that makes the perusal of Durant's 'Story of Philosophy' such a primrose path to the reader. What it tells it tells plainly and impartially, estimating the psychologists reviewed from the standpoint of their value as contributions to present-day theory rather than by the esteem of their contemporaries. . . . The 'History' is no more technical than is necessitated by its nature and is highly valuable in the thoroughness with which it recounts the development of psychological thinking through the centuries." Uffington Valentine
+ N Y Times p6 Jl 21 '29 2200w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 80:24 S '29 130w

St Louis 27:279 O '29

PILNYAK, BORIS, pseud. See Vogau, B. A.

PINCHOT, ANN. Hour upon the stage. 288p $2.50 Dodd

29-18424

Israel Challanty came to the Michigan lumber camps and, as a store-keeper at Muskenaw, in time became the leading merchant of that growing city. The major part of the story is concerned with the individual life of each of the Polish Jew's children—Kopal, Leon, Sophie, Teresa and Gregory, and the influence of the father's coarse, shrewd character and wealth, and of the mother's kindness, upon them.

"If it is an accurate picture, it is a depressing one—a tale of crudest mediocrity, written without hope, sympathy, or kindled imagination."
— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 N 3 '29 280w

"Strict unity of time, place and action were long ago abandoned and no critic now thinks of admonishing a novelist to 'begin at the beginning and tell us how it all happened.' But the author of 'Hour Upon the Stage' has abused this privilege to no literary or artistic end. Given a certain point in the story, the reader is taken back, led on, reversed, whisked unknowingly past the familiar point—and then taken back to begin all over again."
— N Y Times p34 O 27 '29 400w

"A remarkably true and balanced book in regard to Jewish life." Marie Luhrs
+ N Y World p11m O 27 '29 320w

"A rambling ineffectual attempt at realism and psychology. The author's material lacks cohesion and direction."
— Springf'd Republican p7e N 10 '29 70w

PINK, LOUIS HEATON. New day in housing; with an introd. by Alfred E. Smith. 208p il $3.50 Day

331.83 Housing. Housing—New York (city). Labor and laboring classes—Dwellings
28-28775

Mr Pink, lawyer and member of the New York State housing board, has made a survey of enterprises at home and abroad to improve housing conditions for the lower and middle classes. The most notably successful of these, particularly in slum areas, have been carried out by the cities of Europe. Of our own experiments Mr Pink describes those which have succeeded, and explains how and why others have failed. Illustrated with photographs and plans.

Am J Soc 35:345 S '29 130w
Am Pol Sci R 23:513 My '29 120w
Booklist 25:194 F '29

"We have much to learn from Europe with respect to both the financial and architectural solution of the problem. Mr. Pink describes in detail, with very effective use of photographs, what England and Germany, Austria and even postwar Belgium have done." W. R. Agard
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Ja 13 '29 280w

J Home Econ 21:449 Je '29 60w

"An exceedingly interesting, a forward-looking and on the whole a hopeful book. This is the first volume on modern community housing to be published in the United States, and it is, before all else, readable."
N Y Times p6 Ja 6 '29 600w

Reviewed by W: O. Scroggs
N Y World p11m D 23 '28 180w

"His book is a challenge to the American public and should prove a stimulus. Thoroughly aroused himself by the transformation in living standards through housing which is going on in Europe, he hurls facts, figures and pictures in swift succession at his readers. He is not advocating any particular method, but is interested in all that produce results." E. E. Wood
+ Survey 61:688 F 15 '29 200w

PINKEVITCH, ALBERT P. New education in the Soviet republic; tr. under the auspices of the International inst., Teachers College, Columbia univ., by Nucia Perlmutter; ed. by George S. Counts. 403p $4 Day

370.947 Education—Russia

"The work was designed primarily as a source book for university students and is the product of a course of lectures. In preparing it for translation I have found it necessary, on the one hand, to add certain materials which do not appear in the Russian edition and, on the other hand, to reduce the book in those parts which are without special interest to the American student of pedagogy. An effort has been made to include only those materials which are characteristic of the soviet system of pedagogy."—Preface

"Here is not only the story of how the educational system of a whole nation was completely scrapped, but how an entirely new point of view was adopted in teaching. Ten years ago the schools of Russia were in chaos, but the development of the new system has been scientific. Its chief aim was to teach the labor point of view and discard completely any imperial or capitalistic approach to knowledge." Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p16 D 9 '29 1300w
R of Rs 81:12 Ja '30 200w

PINTER, RUDOLF. Educational psychology; an introd. text. 378p $2.50 Holt

150 Psychology, Educational. Mental tests
29-13609

A text designed for a one-semester course for students beginning a study of educational psychology. It covers the general field of educational measurements and tests, illustrated by charts and diagrams. At the end of each chapter are given reviews in the form of true-false statements and a selected list of readings and references.

PINTER, RUDOLF—Continued

"Informing book, sure to be useful to both student and teacher."
+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 3 '29 400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p117 S '29

"The outstanding characteristic of Professor Pintner's book is its treatment of measurement as a fundamental part of educational psychology. . . The chapter entitled 'The Learning Curve' is excellent. Likewise, the later discussions of learning contain very good material. The teaching aids at the end of each chapter give evidence of careful preparation. The book represents an extension of Thorndike's earlier contribution." G. T. Buswell
+ El School J 30:230 N '29 700w

PITKIN, WALTER BOUGHTON. Psychology of happiness. 419p $3 Simon & Schuster

171.4 Happiness 29-20533

A treatise on the psychology of happiness, the concrete part of which is "made up of samples of human lives taken in part from literature or history, but largely from Mr Pitkin's own heavy notebooks in which stand recorded the experiences of men and women whom he studied often for a period of years in personal contact, correspondence and in some instances minute analysis in a somewhat technical sense. The names are obviously and admittedly fictitious, but the persons are real, and many of them are now pursuing in their lives the stories snatches of which are revealed in the book." (Books [N Y Herald Tribune])

Bookm 70:x N '29 130w

"Mr. Pitkin's method can best be described as a systematic application of refined common sense and not a little intuitive perspicacity, to the interpretation of live human material—neither polluted nor diluted—at the hand of all available physiological, psychological and psychiatric knowledge. The method is good, and the author's exciting study may well be taken as an earnest of the range of new perspectives thus opened up for psychological exploration." Alexander Goldenweiser
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 O 27 '29 1000w

Boston Transcript p3 O 11 '29 420w

"From the point of view of social progress 'The Psychology of Happiness' is a dangerous book. It would lead the individual to seek happiness within himself while the world about him endured every form of distress. And what of those men, the great reformers and revolutionists of the ages, who spurned happiness while others suffered, who fought and often died for causes that aimed to bring happiness to all rather than to themselves or to a few? What of social sacrifice as a means toward social happiness? Why, one asks, does Mr. Pitkin have nothing to say of these? It is because happiness to him is a form of individual triumph which has nothing social in its challenge." V. F. Calverton
— Nation 129:778 D 25 '29 650w

"Why should he have written this tract that opens like a Brisbane editorial promising a new world, but due deliberation having intervened, closes softly on an injunction to be integrated and you'll be happy? What more can you be than your own pattern of integration? It is all very difficult and not a little bleak. It may remind you of the young lady Life once portrayed as saying to her swain, 'I know we have found happiness, Darling. But can't we have a little fun?' " Clarence Britten
— N Y Evening Post p7m S 28 '29 400w

"As for the dozen-page analysis and interpretation of what the author seems to believe to have been President Wilson's character and temperament, it can be dismissed at once as wholly unimportant because of its evident animus. A similar tone in equal or less degree marks so many of the interpretations of character offered as bases of the author's argument, a tendency to attribute to human actions contemptible or pitiable or ridiculous or puerile causes and to see personalities in this contemptuous and belittling light, that the thoughtful reader early begins to wonder if there is not a twist in Mr. Pitkin's own mentality that makes him an unreliable interpreter of other people's mental and psychical make-up." F. F. Kelly
— + N Y Times p13 O 20 '29 900w

St Louis 27:327 D '29

"The method of this contribution is journalistic, cyclopædic, with filmed projections in high light setting and close-up analyses. But underlying it all is an alert and sound psychological insight which yields an illuminating formula. . . The thesis proceeds by the case method, and in less deft hands would prove a dud. But Mr. Pitkin is a man of varied contacts with an expert's insight into personality, and a psychologist's background. Happiness is the song-theme, but the personalities are the moving pictures, often with the speaking likeness of an actual voice." Joseph Jastrow
+ Sat R of Lit 6:230 O 12 '29 1100w

PLESS, MARY THERESA OLIVIA (CORNWALLIS-WEST), fürstin von. Daisy, princess of Pless, by herself; ed. with an introd. by Desmond Chapman-Huston. 529p il $5 Dutton [25s J. Murray]

B or 92 29-10901

The memoirs of Daisy Cornwallis-West, an Irish-Englishwoman, brought up in all the freedom of an English country house, who married at eighteen the Prince of Pless and went to live in a German castle, where she was hedged in by etiquette and stiff formality of every kind. Her book proves that no amount of court etiquette could quench her charming vivacity.

Booklist 26:29 O '29

"Her book is written with the extraordinary candor that seems possible only to the supposedly reserved English, and it is a mine of conscious and unconscious information about one of the most charming and carefree societies that ever danced on the top of a volcano. I find it as unfailingly interesting as Pepys, and it goes at once into my permanent library."
+ Bookm 69:436 Je '29 200w

"Her memoirs, salted with common sense and lovable, if perhaps at times a bit trying human qualities, are better reading than nine out of ten far more pretentious volumes."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 My 5 '29 220w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 15 '29 320w

"Her art consists in the fact that she literally has no art except the sublime one of being able to enthrall her readers by her utterly unsophisticated babble about nothing at all."
+ Nation 129:558 N 13 '29 80w

"It is impossible to read through the book without getting to like its generous, impetuous, rather silly, author. Undeterred by Kings and Emperors, Thurn-Thurns and Salm-Salms, Ladies-in-Waiting, and yards of pearls, she remained her high-spirited self." Raymond Mortimer

Nation and Ath 44:327 D 1 '28 1000w

"A great deal of the book is tedious. There is too much in it that is of no more than personal interest. But it is a unique record of the experiences of a very highly placed Englishwoman in Germany during the war, and, as such, must be regarded as a not unimportant historical document."
+ — New Statesman 32:90 O 27 '28 1000w

Reviewed by Lillian Rogers
N Y Evening Post p7m Jl 27 '29 430w

"This book is an extremely interesting human document, doubly valuable as the emanation of an extraordinarily gifted personality and as an illumination of some of the dim corners of history during the twenty-five years preceding the great war." L: Rich
+ N Y Times p5 Je 23 '29 1900w

"The social details are complete, diverse, and accurate enough to please the most ardent title-loving democrat. When they come down to the War, the memoirs become extremely moving."

+ Outlook 152:108 My 15 '29 130w

"These memoirs are exceptional in many ways. In spite of her almost startling frankness, the Princess manages to be entertaining without indulging in any of those crude 'indiscretions' of which we have had rather too much in recent years. She avoids them because they do not interest her. But on matters of more general interest, on international politics, and on the many distinguished people, both German and British, who have been her friends, she hits out right and left with an engaging candour, which is none the less 'spicy' for being nearly always good-natured. The Princess's study of the ex-Kaiser's character, for instance, is penetrating as well as sympathetic."

+ Sat R 146:774 D 8 '28 750w

"What her Silesian and other 'in-laws' will think of her memoirs we can only guess: as to the public, it will certainly besiege the libraries for them, for they are both history and a charming human document."

+ Spec 141:598 O 27 '28 900w

Springf'd Republican p6 Je 17 '29 300w

PLOMER, WILLIAM CHARLES FRANKLYN. Paper houses. 288p $2.50 Coward-McCann [7s 6d Hogarth press]

29-13067

"Stories and sketches of Japan. . . Mr. Plomer has an artist's attitude toward his human material as well as toward those strange stylized Japanese landscapes which he describes so well. He wastes no time in the shallow waters of the picturesque—this is not the familiar mixture of cherry blooms and Yoshiwara. Instead, what we are given is a strongly felt response to the quality of Japanese life."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"The stories are shrewd, unsentimental and yet often tender. There is no scandal-mongering for scandal's sake—the white man in the East gets very little quarter from Mr. Plomer—but there is, at least to the reader untravelled in the Orient, a series of very convincing pictures of manners, minds and customs strange to us."

+ Bookm 70:xxi S '29 100w

"Mr. Plomer's gift for expression aids his native sensibility in the extraction of essential reality from relatively unimportant objects. Mr. Plomer writes whole pages of English prose, which for hard, solid beauty have not been surpassed since the early James Joyce. . . The book is extremely uneven; its sketches range in value from a long and beautifully developed story of almost Chekhov quality, 'A Piece of Good Luck,' to a foolish little burlesque-fantasy called 'Mother Kamchatka.' Not many living writers could do what Mr. Plomer does at his best." Vincent Sheean

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Je 2 '29 700w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 1 '29 880w

Reviewed by V. Sackville-West

Nation and Ath 44:790 Mr 9 '29 150w

"The fantasy is a full-fledged satire. It is marred, among other things, by the author's still further inflated ego and by his use of vulgarity for the sake of being vulgar. But the six stories and the preface show none of these faults. They might have been written by a different man. They are splendid." C. A. Chapman

+ New Repub 60:27 Ag 21 '29 430w

"Mr. Plomer writes of Africa better than of Japan. Africa is in his blood, Japan only on his dissecting bench. If Mr. Plomer has still to escape from his immaturities, he is, nevertheless, a writer of vigorous and original talent to whom we continue to look for better work than he has yet achieved. This book is best regarded not as a collection of stories, but as Mr. Plomer's Japanese travel notes and observations."

+ — New Statesman 32:742 Mr 16 '29 160w

"One cannot read very far in Mr. Plomer's book without observing that his stories are 'different,' that they attempt through the guise of fiction to adumbrate certain peculiar spiritual and mental attitudes of the Japanese, and that an unsensational honesty is behind every paragraph."

+ N Y Times p6 Jl 28 '29 920w

"Much of the material of these sketches is sensational in a thoroughly journalistic manner. But the style is not journalistic except in its swift fluency. The author seems to understand the people of whom he writes and he has a distinct talent for story-telling."

+ — Outlook 152:147 My 22 '29 90w

"We fail to learn as much about Japan from Mr. Plomer's book as he expects us to. He has high hopes for the success of his method: a series of short narratives that shall, by implication and suggestion, expound for us much that is of particular interest in the Japanese temperament. But Mr. Plomer is not sufficiently explicit; he seems too close to his material to remember that we (average untraveled Westerners) have no experience that can help us appreciate his elusive commentary. He makes the mistake of not writing as a Westerner interpreting the East. He resolutely excludes not only all glamour, but all sense of exoticism and novelty as well."

— Sat R of Lit 6:372 N 9 '29 350w

"His 'pieces' are not entirely story nor entirely propaganda, and it is difficult to see the real purpose that underlies the chaff of cynicism. There are eight of these case-histories, and each portrays, in subtly amusing manner, some aspect of Japanese life. Much stress is laid on the casual suicidal habits of the Japanese young."

Spec 142:603 Ap 13 '29 100w

"The first excellence of Mr. Plomer's book lies in what he has brought to the subject, in the dramatic force of his phrase and his creation. Among the newer authors of short story and impression, he is distinguished by his significant brevities and decisive delineations; and Japan equally with Africa gives him opportunity enough to strike out new models of his art. . . Patient in acquainting himself with things pleasant or unpleasant, he is calmly intense at length in communicating them, and by means of his book the reader may take a very close view (at 10,000 miles) of a national existence full of seeming inconsistencies."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p228 Mr 21 '29 710w

PLUMLEY, LADD. With the trout fly. 270p il $2 Stokes

799.1 Trout fishing. Fly-casting 29-6138

An illustrated manual on trout fishing with the fly, written for the angler by an expert who has been for many years Fishing editor of "Field and Stream."

Booklist 25:350 Je '29

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Mr 17 '29 100w

"This book is of especial interest to the expert as well as to the novice. 'With the Trout Fly' is a sound and practical book, having a few explanatory illustrations that will lend zest to any sportsman's evening."

+ Boston Transcript p3 My 11 '29 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p91 Je '29

"Mr. Plomer has revived our obsession that sometime, by constant reading of authorities and infinite practice, we can become an expert fly fisherman. He writes with persuasion and glamour and authority marred only by his preference for brown trout over brook." F: F. Van de Water

+ N Y Evening Post p9m Je 1 '29 120w

St Louis 27:165 My '29

POCOCK, GUY NOEL. Knight's gambit. 295p $2.50 Dutton [7s 6d Dent]

[29-29440]

Andrew Tyers came in one night and found that someone had left a very angry baby-boy

POCOCK, G. N.—Continued
in a basket on his doorstep. And the basket was addressed to Andrew, who was twenty-three and a member of the University settlement in London. So the baby was duly sent off to Andrew's uncle and aunt, who had no children, and were delighted with young Aubrey. The development of Aubrey from an oversensitive little lad into a thoroughly fine man completes the story.

"The book depicts, among other things, a rare and beautiful friendship between two boys —Aubrey and his foster-cousin, John Wells— and is, on the whole, a new and pleasing variation on an old theme."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ag 4 '29 350w

"Sometimes the narrative is interesting, and sometimes it drags. The book suffers from a certain aimlessness. The central theme is not powerful enough to bind the various threads of the narrative together. Some of the characters are interesting, but they spend a great deal of time doing uninteresting things, to the damage of the novel as a whole."
— + Sat R of Lit 6:64 Ag 17 '29 130w

"It is, on the whole, a humane and tolerant book, with a sincerely grieved conscience about the social evil of the slums."
+ Spec 142:397 Mr 9 '29 130w

Times [London] Lit Sup p182 Mr 7 '29 300w

POLIAKOFF, VLADIMIR (AUGUR, pseud.). Eagles black and white; the fight for the sea. 205p $1.50 (5s) Appleton

943.8 Poland—Foreign relations—Germany. Germany—Foreign relations—Poland
29-20661

The cause of Polish independence and the struggle over Poland's right to an outlet to the sea—the whole present problem in the conflict between the "Black Eagle" of Prussia and the "White Eagle" of Poland—is the theme of this book. With maps.

"The subject is handled in a fashion to attract the general reader."
Am Pol Sci R 23:790 Ag '29 60w

"A discussion of eastern Europe, particularly of the Polish corridor, by an anonymous but well-informed student of foreign affairs."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 Ap 21 '29 70w

"The 'Polish Corridor' it admittedly one of the danger problems of Europe. The arguments most frequently used concerning it condemned the solution reached in the peace settlement. 'Augur' is hard on the other side in a strong argument, which he urges with much skill."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p319 Ap 18 '29 240w

POLIAKOFF, VLADIMIR (AUGUR, pseud.). When lovers ruled Russia. 284p il $3.50 (15s) Appleton

923.1 Russia—History. Russia—Kings and rulers. Russia—Court and courtiers 28-27608

A story of the influence upon Russian history of the love affairs of Russia's rulers from the time of Peter the Great to Catherine II.

"The volume is compact of color and royal scandal told in a properly unscandalous spirit."
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 F 24 '29 130w

"This is one of the most readable of books on Russia." H: J. Forman
+ N Y Times p4 D 30 '28 520w

St Louis 27:168 My '29

"Excellent reading, written in a vivid and vigorous style. It should be a popular book."
+ Spec 141:831 D 1 '28 230w

"M. Poliakoff's book, though well documented and partly based on unpublished authorities, will be of less interest to historians than to those readers who have a taste for horrors and scandals. The book is admirably printed and illustrated, but contains too many lapses from good English."
Times [London] Lit Sup p110 F 14 '29 720w

POLING, DANIEL ALFRED. Youth and life. 310p $2 Dial press

170 Youth. Conduct of life 28-13835

These short talks to young people, by the minister of the Marble collegiate church, New York city, were originally given over the radio in the National youth radio conference.

"Why should such fugitive addresses be gathered between the covers of a book? They are harmless enough—commendably free of dogma, full of friendly spirit and practical idealism, edifying. But they are incorrigibly commonplace—trite, obvious, sentimental—neither in form nor substance worthy of Dr. Poling's real distinction." J: H. Holmes
— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 S 8 '29 180w

Boston Transcript p3 Je 8 '29 280w

POLK, JAMES KNOX. Polk; the diary of a president, 1845-1849; covering the Mexican war, the acquisition of Oregon, and the conquest of California and the Southwest; ed. by Allan Nevins. 412p il $5 Longmans

B or 92 United States—History—War with Mexico, 1845-1848 [29-22530]

James K. Polk, the editor says in his introduction, was the first dark horse in our political history to be nominated for president. He was long misunderstood and belittled, but a fairer perspective and fuller research reveal him as an executive who, if unimaginative and uninspired, yet possessed "an intellectual acuteness and energy which impressed his associates and served the nation well." During his presidency, from 1845 to 1849, he kept a full and conscientious diary from which Mr Nevins has selected the most interesting and valuable portions and fully annotated them.

"Mr. Nevins's abridgment will be a real boon to those who do not need to consult the full text. The present volume includes all of the entries in the diary that are of primary importance for the history of Polk's administration, and a good many others that throw light on Polk's character and motives or chronicle the typical routine of his official life. The footnotes, of which there are a liberal number, not only explain allusions in the text whose significance might not at once be caught by the reader, but also serve to give the story somewhat more of a connected character." W: MacDonald
+ Am Hist R 35:422 Ja '30 470w

"Will be invaluable to those who wish to immerse themselves in the political history of the period when Manifest Destiny was growing to be a strong and lusty child. It will not prove so interesting to those who like to savor either personality or the social flavor of an epoch." J: Chamberlain
Bookm 70:565 Ja '30 430w

"The Polk diary is of unquestioned value. It offers primary information on one of the troublesome periods of American history and sheds light on days distorted by passion. . . Polk is here better revealed than in any secondary account yet written." Avery Craven
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 N 24 '29 480w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett
New Repub 61:74 D 11 '29 400w

"In the pages of this diary a dull and mediocre President becomes, not a great man, for Polk can never be regarded in that light, but at least a live personality in a predicament with which one can sympathize. . . Mr. Nevins's task of editing was not an easy one. But he has done it well, cutting out much that was unessential and leaving us a valuable picture of a period and a man." R. L. Duffus
+ N Y Times p10 N 3 '29 1500w

"Mr. Nevins in his selections has given us an abridged diary that reads like a story, illuminates a period too little understood and compels a revaluation of Polk himself. A student of history can read it straight through without effort and with entertainment and immense profit. The vivid portrait of Polk which appears in Mr. Nevins's eminently just and unconventional introduction would give the volume distinction if the diary itself were dull. But the diary, as abridged, will be found exciting literature to any one with any interest in American history." C. G. Bowers

+ N Y World p10m O 20 '29 770w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 80:24 N '29 160w

POLLARD, ALBERT FREDERICK. Wolsey. 393p $5 (21s) Longmans

B or 92 Wolsey, Thomas [29-10691]

This study of Henry VIII's prime minister is a companion volume to Professor Pollard's study of the king. The book is not so much a biography as an estimate of the significance of Wolsey's place in English history.

"This book is soberly bound, heavily laden with learned footnotes and without illustrations. There is not even a cardinal's hat upon the cover. It will be caviar to the general, but no serious student of Tudor history can afford to ignore it for it presents the considered opinion of one of the foremost living authorities on sixteenth century England upon one of the greatest Englishmen of the century." Conyers Read

+ Am Hist R 35:337 Ja '30 800w

"Wolsey's reputation, like that of a much greater man, Oliver Cromwell, has risen steadily with the passing centuries. Professor Pollard begins something of a reaction. He dwells on the less attractive sides of Wolsey's character. On the other hand, Professor Pollard does to Wolsey a justice he has never before received for his work in Chancery, the Star Chamber, and the Court of Requests."

Christian Science Monitor p16 S 14 '29 520w

"Professor Pollard is a great authority on his subject, and he writes brilliantly, in the last two chapters almost glibly, yet not so as to prejudice conviction. The book is too well documented for that."

+ Nation and Ath 45:371 Je 15 '29 600w

"For once, Professor Pollard has written a book not to startle but to convince. His studio is full of portraits which are pictures first: here is a portrait which is primarily a likeness. . . Here, drawn to the life, is the butcher's son who wanted to be Pope. All the artist has done is to strip off his disguise, to show us the very soul of the ambitious vulgarian who has so nearly convinced posterity that he was the architect of the balance of power."

+ New Statesman 33:346 Je 22 '29 650w

"Professor Pollard does not claim to have put Wolsey in his place, and he freely admits that on many points it is still inevitable that his conclusions should be tentative, pending more exhaustive investigation, but he has at the most guarded estimate produced an essay on the Cardinal's place in history which will prove of lasting value. . . It is probably his analysis of foreign policy which will be reckoned his most valuable contribution to the subject."

+ Sat R 142:772 Je 8 '29 480w

"Extremely able and brilliant monograph."

Spec 142:903 Je 8 '29 1000w

"Professor Pollard has enjoyed the writing of this book, and he does not fail to communicate his enjoyment to his readers. It is the product alike of original investigation and of original reflection; and its pages not only sweep away much of the traditional assessment of Wolsey's greatness, but also provide a constructive estimate which, probably in less guarded phraseology than its author permits himself, will dominate the future textbook for many years to come."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p429 My 30 '29 1900w

POLLOCK, CHANNING. Mr. Moneypenny. 166p $2 Brentano's

812 28-23946

"A well known dramatist portrays the effects of wealth and luxury in our modern world. The play has been highly praised and vigorously criticized."—World Tomorrow

Booklist 25:203 F '29

Cleveland Open Shelf p28 F '29

"Channing Pollock's latest dramatic stew 'Mr. Moneypenny' is the most irritating mixture of blah thinking and startling dramatic talent imaginable. It is as if George Gershwin had set a recipe for dishwasher to heroic jazz music. The orchestration is done with breath-taking sweep, a fine sense of staging, pace, contrast, line and color." Paul Sifton

— + N Y World p11m D 16 '28 100w

Pratt p26 summer '29

"Mr. Pollock's play belongs, because of the sincerity and vigor of its 'message,' to that didactic tradition of playwriting of which Mr. Pollock has made himself a leader during the last few years. It is a morality play that is not very much above the level of the Sunday school basement pageant in its profundity and eloquence." J: M. Brown

— Sat R of Lit 5:1093 Je 8 '29 490w

"It is not a great play, but its spirited attack on the gold-pleasure complex is certainly needed in this day and generation. Mr. Pollock is a good showman, so his piece zipped and clicked with staccato expressionism, spectacle, and modernity. Much of it was true and all of it good theater." Leon Whipple

Survey 62:69 Ap 1 '29 400w

World Tomorrow 12:139 Mr '29 20w

PONDER, ZITA INEZ. Bandaged face. 288p $2 Macaulay [7s 6d Selwyn & B.] [27-23874]

"Amazing misdemeanors following Dr. Fanshawe's invention of solidified gas. The savant disappears, and the reader is required to wonder whether he is responsible for the series of murders committed with strange African drugs, deadly poisons, fatal germs and pokers by some one with a trick face—the dastard also does people with the Laughing Bean."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 F 17 '29 100w

Boston Transcript p8 My 18 '29 180w

"About the average." W. R. Brooks

Outlook 151:274 F 13 '29 80w

"The story develops into one of horror well calculated to thrill the blase reader of mystery yarns."

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 17 '29 140w

Times [London] Lit Sup p793 N 3 '27 60w

PONSONBY, ARTHUR AUGUSTUS WILLIAM HARRY. Falsehood in war-time. 192p $2 Dutton [2s 6d Allen & U.]

940.488 European war, 1914-1918—Propaganda. European war, 1914-1918—Atrocities. Propaganda [28-24972]

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

Am Pol Sci R 23:518 My '29 130w

Booklist 25:280 Ap '29

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 F 3 '29 180w

"Mr. Ponsonby has done an admirable piece of work, which ought to be read thoughtfully by every intelligent person."

+ Nation 128:335 Mr 20 '29 900w

Reviewed by Katherine Woods

N Y Times p2 Ja 27 '29 1100w

"It should be read by all, and kept in some convenient place for the beginning of the next war when the same old lies will be crammed

PONSONBY, A. A: W. H.—Continued
down the throats of the same gulls, unless the gulls have learned something in the meantime." Herschel Brickell
+ No Am 227:adv Mr '29 200w

St Louis 27:170 My '29

Reviewed by H: K. Norton
Sat R of Lit 5:978 My 4 '29 380w

Springf'd Republican p8 Ja 26 '29 400w

"You should read this book, and it should be included in our curricula under 'history.' " Leon Whipple
+ Survey 62:206 My 1 '29 270w

PONSONBY, ARTHUR AUGUSTUS WILLIAM HARRY. Samuel Pepys. (English men of letters; new ser.) 160p $1.25 (5s) Macmillan

B or 92 Pepys, Samuel 28-30455

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

---

Booklist 25:212 F '29

"The composite portrait is extraordinarily complete and considerably enhances our pleasure in Pepys's Diary."
+ Bookm 69:viii Mr '29 100w

"A notably good addition to the English Men of Letters series." G: F. Whicher
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 Ja 27 '29 900w

"An excellent job. In showing us the Pepys as known to his contemporaries, as known immediately after his death to the eighteenth century and as known to us today, he gives us a clearer portrait than many have yet achieved. In a very small space he has achieved a very considerable end." H: J. Forman
+ N Y Times p5 Ja 20 '29 2000w

Pratt p34 spring '29

St Louis 27:169 My '29

Springf'd Republican p8 Ja 26 '29 250w

"Mr Ponsonby had a great yet a difficult subject. He has handled it amazingly well. His book is almost as interesting as that amazing book which is his subject." H. K.
+ Springf'd Republican p7e S 22 '29 1150w

"His comparison of Pepys's complete self-revelation with the partial revelations, innuendoes, and reticences of other diarists is most illuminating; and his judgment is that in this department of literature Pepys is supreme, possessing all the good qualities of other diarists together with other qualities which they either possess in less abundant measure or else lack altogether." S: C. Chew
+ Yale R n s 19:408 winter '30 400w

POPENOE, PAUL BOWMAN. Child's heredity. 316p il $2 Williams & Wilkins

136.7 Heredity. Child study 29-16880

"In this volume, which [the author] calls 'a guide book for parents,' he has brought together an immense amount of material gathered from his own and other scientists' observations, from the arguments and conclusions of biologists and from a variety of other sources, and has made of it all a lucid, logical and interesting presentation of the factors of a child's nature influenced by heredity, so that parents can understand better what went into the making of each child, physically, mentally and temperamentally, and how the physiological machinery works to produce these results."—N Y Times

---

"Parents will find this book a good one to add to their general cultural knowledge and we trust that many will read it. . . The book contains good reliable material well arranged and is an excellent presentation of the subject from the angle of major emphasis on hereditary influence." W. D. Ludlum
+ Am J Pub Health 19:1273 N '29 330w

"The present book is a readable and interesting presentation of some of the main features of the study of heredity, intended as a handbook for parents."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 O 6 '29 170w

J Home Econ 21:858 N '29 180w

"Mr. Popenoe treats his large theme largely and comprehensively."
+ N Y Times p5 S 8 '29 500w

PORCHE, FRANCOIS. Charles Baudelaire; tr. by John Mavin. 235p $3.50 Liveright [10s 6d Wishart]

B or 92 Baudelaire, Charles Pierre 29-11772

Writing in slightly florid style M. Porché makes vividly real the wretched suffering and despair, the mental and physical torments which racked Baudelaire during most of his life. The emphasis of the biography is on an analysis of Baudelaire's character; very little is said of his works.

---

Reviewed by L: P. Shanks
Bookm 69:204 Ap '29 320w

"We cannot, as M. Porché says, subtract Baudelaire's poems from his life, for in a sense they are his life. It is this fact which makes his biographer's task so difficult. No doubt M. Porché has succeeded far beyond his predecessors. He has found a few new sources; he has given new interpretations to several others; above all, he has avoided the silly magniloquence that most critics feel called upon to assume when dealing with Baudelaire. But M. Porché also writes too briefly; he is often superficial, and he discovers more trails than he ever follows to their end." Malcolm Cowley
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 F 10 '29 1350w

Reviewed by Sidney Homer
Boston Transcript p3 Mr 23 '29 1150w

"M. Porché has not failed; the mere life of Baudelaire has interested him as a spectacle or tragedy, and he has tried to convey the vision of this spectacle to us by relating the events of Baudelaire's life. He succeeds only partially, because, I suspect, his own interest was not quite strong enough nor his artistic vision quite strong enough—but it is an interesting book." Leonard Woolf
+ — Nation and Ath 43:210 My 19 '28 130w

"It is an accurate book, and written with such skill, sympathy and penetration that it would be an absorbing novel even to one unacquainted with the subject. M. Porche not only throws a new light over periods formerly obscure, but, where he cannot do this, suggests interpretations of a lucidity plausible, perhaps, because they are indicated with such delicacy and lack of insistence." Marjorie Johnson
+ N Y Evening Post p10m F 23 '29 1350w

"In 1926, M. Paul Valéry could write: 'Baudelaire est au comble de la gloire.' He is at the height of his glory now, at the shining peak, and so sensitive and understanding a biography as M. Porché's can do no harm, frank as it is in portions. It can but reveal a tortured and unhappy man with abnormal impulses flashing forth at times into the purest poetry that has been written in modern French." Herbert Gorman
+ N Y Times p4 F 17 '29 1650w

"Mr. Porche has written a thrilling book; accurate, balanced and intelligently sympathetic. It has the additional quality of being admirably translated." Tom Davin
+ N Y World p11m Mr 17 '29 280w

"M. Porché has stressed the weakness of Baudelaire and glides over his strength. To write of his sensuality, his addiction to drugs, his untrustworthiness in money matters, his selfish treatment of his mother, no matter how sympathetically and discerningly these themes are handled, and to leave his poems, the achievements of a character strong in one thing at least, on one side, is as grave a distortion of the truth as it would be to write about Tennyson as a great poet and also a teetotaller." E: Shanks
— Sat R 145:562 My 5 '28 1100w

"A most excellent biography, distinguished alike for its humanity and lack of bias. We are shown the man Baudelaire as he really was, with his sadism and tenderness, his fury and lethargy, his squalor and fastidiousness and the flowering of that hope which sprang so readily from decay. M. François Porché spares us, and Baudelaire, nothing in this story of a wretched life."

+ Spec 141:141 Jl 28 '28 120w

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 24 '29 120w

"M. Porché's biography includes everything of any importance, and the fluent style of the narrative has been carefully copied by his translator. Admittedly this is a book more for the common reader than for the specialist, though we should not hesitate to recommend it as a preliminary to a reading of M. Robert Vivier's thesis on Baudelaire's originality, which is a book for the specialist who can read French and has read Baudelaire."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p590 Ag 16 '28 900w

PORTER, VICTOR W. Practical candy making; delicious candies for home or shop; a text book of candy making. 138p il $2 Stokes

641.85 Confectionery 29-17801

Utensils for candy-making, practical recipes, and full directions for making hard candies, fondants, fudges, caramels, dipped chocolate and cake frostings. For commercial producers, tea rooms and candy shops there are additional chapters on the packing and selling of candy and equipment for shops.

"For the home candy-maker who desires something a little better than the average home made sweets, this little book will be most helpful. It deals with all the best known types of candies and in such a way that each is made to give the best possible results. Simple in its directions, and yet clear and straight to the point, an inexperienced candy maker instinctively gathers self-confidence from its pages"

+ Boston Transcript p4 S 28 '29 120w

"Women who want to earn pin money by making and selling candy will find it useful, as will also teachers and students of candy making. It is a practical book that does not waste so much as a word of type, but it is clear and definite in its recipes and directions."

+ N Y Times p13 S 1 '29 180w

PORTUS, GARNET VERE. American background; sketched for Australians. 126p $2 Macmillan

330.973 United States—Economic conditions. United States—Social conditions [29-14503]

An appreciative survey of the racial, political, and economic aspects of America from the point of view of an Australian economist. Problems of production and distribution, including advertising, and of labor, are discussed.

"Mr. Portus writes with an admirable clarity and freedom from prejudice, bestowing measured praise and pointing out genuine flaws. His appraisal of American high-pressure marketing, with its advertising and overproduction evils, is of particular value. His study of the labor problem is comprehensive and to the point. 'The American Background' is, in short, an excellent hand-mirror in which the American may see his own features reflected without distortion and without flattery."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 Ag 4 '29 150w

" 'The American Background' reveals an intelligent grasp of the economic situation. It is sound and well written, and though not a 'popular' book, is one which deserves serious consideration." R. M. W.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 6 '29 380w

POST, MELVILLE DAVISSON. Bradmoor murder; including the remarkable deductions of Sir Henry Marquis of Scotland yard. 297p $2 Sears

29-5229

Seven short stories of murder and mystery in which Sir Henry Marquis, chief of the C. I. D. and Sir Godfrey Simon, the famous alienist, are prominent. Contents: The Bradmoor murder; The blackmailer; The cuneiform inscription; The hole in the glass; The phantom woman; The stolen treasure; The garden in Asia.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 F 24 '29 130w

"Melville Davisson Post seems to have found the secret of making you fascinated with his story till the very end. His style is somewhat short and staccato, his situations unusual, but his plot structures, on the whole, are unwieldy and unnecessarily intricate."

+ — Boston Transcript p5 My 25 '29 190w

"The merit of these stories lies not only in the ingenuity of their plots, but even more in the manner of their telling, for Mr. Post has the rare ability to create an atmosphere of mystery in the opening words of a story and to maintain that atmosphere throughout."

+ N Y Times p22 Mr 3 '29 160w

"Mr. Post manages to do a good deal with a very slight plot, and all these stories are written to a definite pattern." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 151:314 F 20 '28 100w

"The author shows a mastery of the mystery novel, propounding cases that seem absolutely impossible of solution, at least through human agencies, and then quickly showing at the end that there is nothing miraculous about the affairs whatsoever."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 17 '29 200w

POSTGATE, RAYMOND WILLIAM. That devil Wilkes. 275p $4 Vanguard press

B or 92 Wilkes, John. Great Britain—Politics and government 29-28532

The biography of an English radical politician, 1727-1797, who led a successful movement toward the curtailment of the powers of the Crown in the days of George III. Demagogue and pamphleteer, he was held in high popular esteem as "a friend to liberty."

Reviewed by S. L. Cook

Boston Transcript p12 D 14 '29 1900w

"Mr. Postgate's study of this stormy petrel of Georgian politics is incisive, witty and brilliantly written. He gives us the whole man etched against the social and political background of his times. And Chapter VIII contains one of the best pictures of the London of George III that have been penned." F: H. Martens

+ N Y Evening Post p12m D 7 '29 500w

"A book distinguished for a clear and pleasant style, sets forth the turbulent life of this particularly turbulent man." F: F. Van de Water

+ N Y Evening Post p13m D 21 '29 100w

"Mr. Postgate has achieved an admirable biography. He tells the story in a simple style. But the simplicity is the result of a solid scholarship and a sincere fidelity to sources of information." P. W. Wilson

+ N Y Times p7 D 15 '29 2100w

POTTER, BEATRIX. Fairy caravan. 225p il $2 McKay

29-22257

A story for small children about an animal caravan which traveled at a leisurely pace about the English countryside. There were Tuppeny, the guinea pig with long hair; Pony Billy; Jenny Ferret; Iky Shepster, the starling; Princess Xarifa, the dormouse, "a most sweet person, but slumberous;" and others in the little company.

"With all the beauty and the poetry of the tale there is still the same strain of matter-of-factness and plausibility in the speech and actions of the animals, the neat economy of phrase that made the earlier books such a delight to read aloud to children." Marcia Dalphin

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 N 17 '29 700w

Reviewed by O. M. Fuller

N Y World p11m D 1 '29 50w

POTTER, BEATRIX—Continued

"Though each separate part is charming, the whole is a bit of a jumble. But we use the word affectionately. We are taken into the animal world and hear their conversations with one another and their remarkable experiences recounted in musical, pictureful prose. There are a few colored illustrations and many dainty black and white sketches. The sketches are inexhaustibly delightful." Helen Chrystie

+ Sat R of Lit 6:430 N 16 '29 80w

"Infrequently one comes across a children's book which is pure magic—the ageless tale of adventuresome animals which has charmed us since the days of La Fontaine. Such is 'The Fairy Caravan.' "

+ Springf'd Republican p12 D 20 '29 200w

POTTER, CHARLES FRANCIS. Story of religion as told in the lives of its leaders, with special reference to atavisms, common elements, and parallel customs in the religions of the world. 627p il $5 Simon & Schuster

209 Religion—History. Christian biography
29-12634

" 'The Story of Religion' is 'told in the lives of its leaders.' It is a comprehensive story—from the religion of ancient Egypt to 19th century sects, such as Mormonism, Millerism, Christian Science and New Thought."—Springf'd Republican

---

"Certain peculiarities of idiom are our first warning that Mr. Potter's book departs from conventional standards. . . These racy idiosyncrasies of speech prepare us for novelties of judgment in larger fields. The Jeremiah, for example, who had so shrewd a nose for notoriety, is spoken of thus: 'Jeremiah was the Jesus of the Old Testament and Jesus the Jeremiah of the New.' He forms furthermore 'the link between Judaism and Christianity.' This confers upon Jeremiah an importance never discovered in him before and probably never to be recognized in him again. So immense a revision of history deserves more than jejune statement. . . However this may be, it is a useful deed to bring before us the great chieftains of religious history, and for having laboriously done this Mr. Potter deserves appreciation." W: L. Sullivan

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Je 9 '29 1050w

Boston Transcript p5 Je 29 '29 800w

"There are too many gaps in the record to permit it to be wholly satisfactory as a 'story of religion.' There is, for example, no account of the rise of the Catholic church, no treatment of the medieval period except a not very illuminating chapter on Thomas Aquinas, and no mention whatever of the fortunes of Catholicism since the thirteenth century. These are not faults of the author but of the method. The biographical method has its merits, chief of which is that it makes possible the vivid and concrete presentation of the most important religious ideas and points of view as these were embodied in the personalities of the creative thinkers who introduced them; but a great part of the story of religion consists of the record of what happened to these ideas after they were introduced, and what organizations crystalized around them, and how they functioned in the world." W. E. Garrison

+ — Christian Century 46:778 Je 12 '29 780w

"Dr. Potter's 'Story of Religion' reaches what is in all probability the lowest point thus far achieved in the labors of the outliners. The method chosen, that of recording the history of religion in 'the lives of its leaders,' is as bad a method as ingenuity could devise. . . The material, which is accurate enough for a popularization, is treated uncritically and with no suggestion of fresh insight or imaginative grasp. Moreover the style, which is supposed to be readable, entertaining, and all the rest, is frequently both cheap and childish." Granville Hicks

— Nation 129:469 O 23 '29 380w

"We find 'The Story of Religion' as stupid as any volume on that subject can possibly manage to be. A large part of our irritation is due to the condescending, head-patting, smiling-over-the-spectacles attitude of its author. The text is lumpy, lacking in continuity and written in a ponderously whimsical style. It is generally informative and occasionally interesting. It might have been splendid and inspiring." F: F. Van de Water

— N Y Evening Post p6m Je 29 '29 320w

"Here is a book by Dr. Potter which strengthens the opinion that the interpretation of specialized knowledge in terms of the average mind need not be pretentious or puerilely arrogant. For general ideas are by no means necessarily superficial; they may, indeed, be fundamentals, needing an ingenious dissemination. Intelligent humanization may perform such a function, and 'The Story of Religion' is a splendid affirmation of the possibilities." Leonard Ehrlich

+ N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 20 '29 620w

"It is a long book, yet so cleverly written and, let us add, printed, that it reads like a short one. Dr. Potter has cultivated a most artful way of putting the pith of a page into a paragraph and the pith of a paragraph into a phrase. . . In a Sunday school it is the task of the teacher to state the lesson and of the children to take his statements on trust. So with Dr. Potter. He does not argue. He tells you. Indeed, over most of his admirable vignettes there is likely to be little dispute. . . But when Dr. Potter directs the telescope of history on to the older founders of Judaism, it almost seems as if, imitating the Nelson touch, he applied it to his blind eye." P. W. Wilson

+ — N Y Times p4 Je 30 '29 1900w

St Louis 27:304 N '29

"The lives of twenty-four religious leaders are traced in a vivid, racy style which disdains to dwell upon the mere ideas or convictions of these leaders. . . Mr. Potter is out to sell religion in the manner of travelling salesmen. The place for his book is in rotarian hotels beside the Gideon Bible." E. S. Bates

— + Sat R of Lit 6:289 O 19 '29 380w

"Mr Potter's book is neither vulgar nor irreverent, but it is a highly popular and oversimplified account of the lives and beliefs of various religious teachers. There is very little theology in the narrative, and the chapter on St Augustine dwells almost entirely on his life and very meagerly on his thought."

Springf'd Republican p12 Je 14 '29 130w

POTTLE, FREDERICK ALBERT. Literary career of James Boswell, Esq., being the bibliographical materials for a life of Boswell. 335p $15 (42s) il Oxford

012 Boswell, James—Bibliography [29-18372]

A detailed bibliography, with carefully complete annotations of all the works of Boswell, both prose and verse. Of his work the author writes in his introduction, "Though I make no claim to have written a new biography of Boswell, I have naturally been able to present a good deal of new biographical information, some of it affecting considerably our whole conception of his character."

---

Reviewed by D. M. Stuart

Nation and Ath 45:374 Je 15 '29 850w

"An admirably full, erudite and exact bibliography of Boswell's writings, in which every detail is carefully noted and discussed. This offers excellent material for a biographer, but not an account of Boswell's 'literary career' for the average reader, because it supposes knowledge he does not possess."

+ — New Statesman 33:278 Je 8 '29 800w

"It is a most invaluable source work, in which Prof. Pottle serves Boswell better than even Johnson was served by the late William Prideaux Courtney and David Nichol Smith in their bibliography of Johnson published in 1915. After six years of patient, industrious scholarship, a scholarship which gladly eschews the more immediate response of a popular success, Prof. Pottle has put himself in the very first rank of world scholars." Harry Salpeter

+ N Y World p10m N 24 '29 520w

"Out of an amazingly complicated subject, Dr. Pottle has created an orderly, intelligent, and even fascinating work—he has omitted nothing of importance to collectors, even though it may have seemed useless to him as a scholar, but on the other hand, with an unusual appreciation of his duties as a bibliographer, he has included details that they alone would wish to know. It is impossible to over-rate his book, or to be grateful enough to him for this additional proof that bibliography, exactly as history, depends for the quality of its success quite as much upon the manner of treatment it receives as it depends upon the accuracy of the facts presented to the reader—it is seldom possible to find as satisfactory and as brilliant a piece of work as this." G. M. T.

+ Sat R of Lit 6:44 Ag 10 '29 700w

"The book will be invaluable to all Boswellians and Johnsonians."

+ Spec 143:129 Jl 27 '29 170w

POTTLE, FREDERICK ALBERT. Stretchers; the story of a hospital unit on the western front. 366p il $3 Yale univ. press

940.76 European war, 1914-1918—Hospitals, charities, etc. United States. Army. A.E.F.

[29-24186]

The story of "Evacuation Eight," a hospital unit during the War, as told by one of its members. The author describes hospital activities in certain of the war regions and the nature of modern war surgery, as observed by him during his five months' service in the operating room of a busy evacuation hospital. The book contains extracts from diaries, letters and other records, and is illustrated from photographs made by the X-ray photographer of Evacuation Hospital No. 8

---

"He has written a book of intrinsic value and definite historical importance."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 N 24 '29 170w

Boston Transcript p3 N 30 '29 230w

"His book has that integration of description and episode which is so rare in writing about the war. The man with an eye for picturesqueness emphasizes the episode out of all proportion to its importance; the technician is interested in routine detail. Prof. Pottle is an intelligent mind moving through the war scene; his account bears witness to his keen discernment and his fine observation." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p14 O 19 '29 600w

"True and simple and moving record of ambulance service in the World War."

+ Outlook 153:350 O 30 '29 50w

"It is excellent writing, clear and economical exposition going hand in hand with vivid personal experience. Nor is it merely the story of 'most of what he saw and part of what he was.' It contains many extracts from the diaries and letters of comrades, and all of the technical material has been carefully sifted and criticized by competent army surgeons. It is a gripping book, and it leaves you feeling not so much that war is horrible as that it is utterly futile. And the author waves no torch of propaganda against war." E. C. Marriner

+ Portland Evening News p5 D 31 '29 1200w

"Through this faithful account of the movements of one military unit various well known truths appear. The writer has not, as he explains in his preface, written the book as an indictment of war or the policies of the United States Army. Nevertheless he states facts and the facts make that indictment stronger than words. . . As to its writing, only in rare bursts does 'Stretchers' give the feel of war. You can read the book with the same detachment that you might read a scientific treatise by a surgeon. At the end you are well informed about your subject. But it leaves you almost entirely unmoved." Mary Lee

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:554 D 14 '29 1200w

"One of our younger writers, Frederick Pottle, detailing the operations of a hospital unit in the World War, has evoked, with uncompromising realism, the sad human situation under war conditions. His is the material for intrinsic history—dealing with man, and launched forth from his own humanity. He is counting the cost and pain of the greatest of wars. From enlistment to mustering-out he tells all there is to tell, with utter frankness and deadly accuracy." E: C. Streeter

+ Yale R n s 19:394 winter '30 580w

POURTALES, GUY DE, comte. Mad king; tr. from the French by Charles Bayly, jr. (Eng title Ludwig II of Bavaria). 260p il $3 Holt

B or 92 Ludwig II, king of Bavaria. Wagner, Richard. Nietzsche, Friedrich Wilhelm

28-28530

The mad king, is Ludwig II of Bavaria, who won his place in musical history and his title to immortality by his mad infatuation for Richard Wagner.

---

"This type of work represents neither sound and authentic biography, nor good romance." Elbert Lenrow

— Bookm 68:697 F '29 260w

"It is a very readable book, a portrayal in outline, with a dexterously coloured background and a sometimes very happy turn of irony. It is not a documented biography, however, and hardly does justice to the political theme of Ludwig's story. But the essence of an extraordinary and moving historical drama is here; the details of the king's reign and its lurid climax, of course, cannot fail to be picturesque in the highest degree; and the subsidiary portraits, of Ludwig I, Lola Montez, Wagner, Elizabeth, and others, are appropriately filled in."

+ New Statesman 33:276 Je 8 '29 650w

"The story is not without a perfectly healthy fascination and only rarely goes over to the frankly pathological. It has been skillfully translated." Oscar Thompson

+ N Y Evening Post p8m D 29 '28 450w

"This is an extremely French 'psychograph, to use the word of one of the German psychographers. That is, it is cool, graceful, brilliant, written with thorough understanding. It is analytical without being preposterously psychoanalytical, though the author understands psychoanalysis; he can use it but is no slave to it."

+ N Y Times p13 O 6 '29 650w

"So much emphasis on the relation between the two men [Ludwig II and Wagner] important as it was, leaves much of interest concerning Ludwig untouched. And so sentimental a presentation left him, for us at least, unexplained. We have no clear picture of Ludwig after reading his book. He is still the picturesque and pathetic legend he was for us before we turned its pages." W. R. Brooks

— Outlook 150:1258 N 28 '28 120w

Reviewed by Carl Engel

Sat R of Lit 5:424 D 1 '28 150w

Spec 143:103 Jl 20 '29 630w

Times [London] Lit Sup p502 Je 27 '29 520w

POWEL, HARFORD WILLING HARE. Married money. 298p $2.50 Little

29-21219

Wee Legg, a rich little poor girl of Beacon street, Boston, inherits one million dollars on her marriage to Jerry McCoy, athlete and bond-salesman, and goes to New York to get rid of her Boston inhibitions by spending money. Yachts, night clubs, champagne and airplanes put in their toll, and Wee becomes a poor little rich girl. The timely arrival of a young son, however, turns Wee back toward sanity and Boston.

---

POWEL, H. W. H.—*Continued

"To read this delightful novel, which satirizes Boston with rapierlike adroitness, offers distinguished entertainment to those marching serried ranks within the royal inclosure of the Social Register and for certain thousands of close observers who cheer them on from the sidelines." Dorothy Gilman

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p33 D 8 '29 600w

"Mr. Powel has written a fascinating story by doing all the things he should not have done. His triumph is that you do not care how many rules he breaks. It is a story of brilliant purple patches, of highly diverting scenes, of clever characterizations of sharp, swift, penetrating summings up of men and manners and customs." D. L. M.

+ Boston Transcript p2 O 19 '29 550w

" 'Married Money' is excellent comedy; mockery rather than satire but mockery that, by its very good humor and absence of acid, is more blighting than diatribe and excoriation. Mr. Powel may make others angry but he never scowls himself." F: F. Van de Water

+ N Y Evening Post p11m O 19 '29 150w

"The trouble with 'Married Money' is precisely that one can't forget Mr. Powel and the Harvard banner and the praise of Beacon Hill. He doesn't let his point emerge. He doesn't prove, through setting New York before us in contrast to Boston, that there can be a logical choice in favor of the Massachusetts city. In fact, what he does prove, if anything, is that San Francisco is a pretty fine place to live in if you can't afford to settle down in Paris."

— + N Y Times p28 N 10 '29 420w

"It is frankly a 'light novel,' but it is amusing and the character of the girl-wife is particularly life-like and appealing." Mary Shirley

+ Outlook 153:269 O 16 '29 130w

POWELL, DAWN. Bride's house. 296p $2.50 Brentano's

29-6349

"The underlying theme is this: That there are certain breeds whose womenfolk are foredoomed to tragedy by force of irresistible passion. The story of Sophie Truelove, worked out against a convincingly veracious background of farm life in Northern Ohio in the late 1890's, invests this theme with the dignity of real tragedy. Sophie grew up beautiful, apart, proud to the world, but terrified within her own mind and soul by secret fears and premonitions. When love blossomed between her and Lynn Hamilton, she thought she had found the answer and the security she needed. But the other man swept into her life like a dark wind, and Sophie was as helpless to resist as a leaf clinging to a tree."—N Y World

---

"The fresh spontaneity that marked Dawn Powell's earlier novel, 'She Walks in Beauty,' lights this story of an Ohio farm. Like the earlier book 'The Bride's House' has the engaging charm of warmth and directness—liking people as they are, without prettifying, deploring or lamenting over them. . . There is flavor and richness in the book, and the stanchness of honesty as well: it is as soft and sturdy as a pansy." Mary Ross

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 F 24 '29 750w

Boston Transcript p5 Ap 20 '29 250w

"The main theme is handled with vigor and sincerity, but Sophie's lover, who is continually dashing about at midnight on a galloping horse, seems too melodramatic. The characterization of Sophie herself is excellent as far as it goes, but it is disjointed." G. T. H.

+ — New Repub 59:53 My 29 '29 200w

"Miss Powell's book is decidedly inferior to 'She Walks in Beauty.' " Tess Slesinger

— N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 6 '29 400w

" 'The Bride's House' is a novel which dares to reject all sentimentality and build on truth. As a study of human passions it has a power that grows from page to page to a tremendous climax. Having truth, passion, people of real flesh and blood, and compelling interest from first to last, it is a novel that must stand high in the ranks of American fiction."

+ N Y World p5e F 24 '29 380w

"There are many women in the novel, and Miss Powell seems to write of them with unusual penetration and insight. Here, too, is a story without any very large significance, but [one] which is skillfully done and good reading." Herschel Brickell

+ No Am 227:adv Ap '29 60w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 7 '29 300w

POWELL, EDWARD ALEXANDER. Last home of mystery; adventures in Nepál, together with accounts of Ceylon, British India, and the native states, the Persian Gulf, the Overland desert mail and the Baghdad railway. 332p il $4 Century

915.4 India—Description and travel. India—Social life and customs. Nepal—Description and travel 29-8016

A veteran traveller visits India, and equipped with excellent introductions is entertained in the palaces of princes and other places inaccessible to the ordinary tourist. To the entertaining account of these adventures Mr Powell adds a chapter on the "unclean gods" of India, frankly sensational material borrowed with acknowledgements from a book written in 1825 by a French missionary in India, the Abbé Dubois.

---

Booklist 25:390 Jl '29

"Acknowledging his indebtedness to previous writers, Colonel Powell presents a vigorously graphic account of the wonders of Nepal, which will put the little known kingdom squarely on the map. . . These are 325 pages of 'high-power' writing. Never a phrase that is not surcharged with assertion. Never a doubt or hesitation about anything. Motion-picturesqueness blares like a bugle. Colonel Powell is the Maharajah among foreign correspondents." Lawton Mackall

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 My 19 '29 720w

" 'The Last Home of Mystery' is written with the zest of the practical traveler who takes and records things as he sees them, and who has no desire to reconstruct the world. His India is the real India, more real than the India of Katherine Mayo, who writes with the zeal of the reformer rather than with the insight and the skill of the dispassionate observer. He writes also with imagination but with an interest and an enthusiasm that shows no flagging after two decades of wandering through and writing about the distant places of the earth." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p6 Mr 30 '29 1500w

"Such a story of adventure and mystery as the most ardent 'thriller fan' could desire." E. A. Cummins

+ Churchman 139:17 My 4 '29 120w

Nation 129:256 S 4 '29 180w

New Statesman 34:342 D 14 '29 220w

Reviewed by F: F. Van de Water

N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 20 '29 150w

"He has gone out of his way to dwell upon certain aspects of Indian life in the worst of possible taste. It would not be so bad if his observations were based upon real knowledge, but they bear the marks of sanctimonious bombast, of a hypocritical turning of the light upon foul recesses with a high moral purpose. . . Some of his descriptions are beautiful, much of his information about Nepal is fascinating, and many of his photographs are admirable. He had unusual opportunities for understanding India, but cheap jokes and moral indignation require less thought." L. H. Titterton

— + N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 20 '29 400w

N Y Times p7 My 12 '29 1100w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 151:636 Ap 17 '29 130w

St Louis 27:204 Je '29

"Filled with descriptions which have rarely been equalled of its natural beauties, picturesque buildings, and unusual customs. He is a master of the art of word painting and makes the scenes seem as vivid as if seen in a color 'movie.' " C: Batchelder

+ Sat R of Lit 5:1146 Je 29 '29 750w

"Readers must take Colonel Powell's volume for what it is, a lightly written book of travel, written by one who has travelled in many lands. There are humorous incidents in plenty, recounted with American verve and bonhomie. There are shrewd observations on political and administrative problems, as well as on the men whose duty it is to grapple with them. The illustrations are fair."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p988 N 28 '29 800w

Reviewed by R: B. Gregg
World Tomorrow 12:473 N '29 160w

POWELL, JOHN UNDERSHELL, and BARBER, ERIC ARTHUR, eds. New chapters in the history of Greek literature; second series; some recent discoveries in Greek poetry and prose, chiefly of the fourth century B.C. and later times. 232p $5 (15s) Oxford

880.9 Greek literature—History [29-19568]

"In 1921 Messrs. Powell and Barber published a volume on the recent discoveries in Greek poetry and prose of the fourth and following centuries. This convenient summary of the important new material furnished by inscriptions and papyri was so welcome that they have now issued a Second Series, including both material omitted in the first volume and discoveries made since its publication. Thus one chapter deals with Epigrams from the inscriptions discovered since Kaibel's publication in 1878, while others merely supplement the discussions of Callimachus, the lyric writers, and the moralists in the First Series."—Sat R of Lit

"Mr. Powell and Mr. Barber and their coadjutors present in readable form and with sufficient reference to the sources nearly everything that the ordinary student is likely to desire to know and much more than he can remember." Paul Shorey

+ Class Philol 24:305 Jl '29 900w

"To scholars or keen students this book is, naturally, indispensable. The materials are handled throughout with the highest scholarly competence and judgment. But while assigning the main credit to Mr. Powell, we find that his t's occasionally need crossing." A. Y. C.

+ — New Statesman 33:121 My 4 '29 770w

"The Second Series, it must be confessed, has much less to offer in the way of first class literature: many of the 'chapters' might with greater accuracy, be entitled 'paragraphs,' highly valuable to the scholar but not of large significance. . . Until we have a new history of Greek literature, both volumes will be indispensable."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:41 Ag 10 '29 240w

"The most shining gem is undoubtedly the chapter on Menander. Professor Gilbert Murray gives us, with the sure touch of a mastercraftsman, a portrait of the gentle, witty Athenian man of letters living in a world where all that he could value was falling in ruins."

+ Spec 142:543 Ap 6 '29 240w

Times [London] Lit Sup p401 My 16 '29 560w

POWER, RHODA D., and POWER, EILEEN EDNA. More boys and girls of history. 273p il $2.50 Macmillan [7s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

920 Biography 29-26340

Similar to its predecessor, Boys and girls of history (Book Review Digest, 1927). Contents: The Bristol apprentice; The childhood of Mary Queen of Scots; The voyage of the Bonaventure; Your Honour's slave; The eagle of the North; Pocohantas, the little tomboy; Martin on the Isle of Devils; Nick and the mutineers; Meg's story; From Christ's hospital to Surat; The strange white bird; The Boston tea party; Muradhana of Kandy; The emigrants' journey; In the Blackfellows' camp; News in Ujiji.

Booklist 25:326 My '29
Cleveland Open Shelf p134 N '29

"A sequel to 'Boys and Girls of History,' and written in the same admirable vein."

+ Nation and Ath 44:sup394 D 8 '28 80w

"The authors have written a book for children which, in comparison with learned works of its kind, reaches a high standard of constructive writing. We are allowed sixteen all too brief glances into the lives of boys and girls who, for the most part, witnessed the building up of a greater Britain; nor do we find a one-sided record."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p941 N 29 '28 320w

Wis Lib Bul 25:278 Jl '29

POWYS, JOHN COWPER. Meaning of culture. 275p $3 Norton

824 Culture

Culture is defined and placed in relationship to philosophy, religion, the arts, and human relations. Mr Powys attempts to isolate culture in his definition from other achievements of the human mind. The first part of the book is devoted to an analysis of what we call culture; the latter part to the application of culture to the struggle for existence.

"There is need here for a great deal of very subtle treading among controversial perils, and Mr. Powys is as soft-paced and sure-footed as a cat amid the chinaware; no one's fragile, favorite idea is smashed, every one is satisfied. While the elaborately circumlocutory style makes it all a bit stern reading, the savourer of language should enjoy, as I did, many a chuckle, which doubtless the author never intended, over his masterly indirection. . . A very rich mind spins these chapters, and in the pattern the richest glories of human experience and art are caught." Shaemas O'Sheel

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 D 1 '29 750w

"In this book, with a thesis impressively set forth and eloquently championed, Mr. Powys rejects the conventional interpretation of culture as a mastery of knowledge by making it a philosophy of life." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 6 '29 800w
Cleveland Open Shelf p152 D '29

"This book is more of a confession than an argument. It deals much less with culture in general than it does with the culture of Mr. Powys himself in particular. It is interesting in the main because Mr. Powys himself is an interesting writer and an interesting personality. Whatever is rare in his book, then, is rare more in a personal sense than in any other. . . His style is always fertile in comparisons, and so rich in magic phrase, that the most commonplace observation often takes on a fresh garb. Whatever weaknesses exist in the book are weaknesses in personal philosophy and not in error of statement or inadequacy of fact." V. F. Calverton

+ — New Repub 60:303 O 30 '29 850w

"One of his very best chapters is the one entitled 'Culture and Nature.' It is hardly possible to quote any of it without quoting all of it. But his own love for nature and the balm that it can bring to the soul, whether directly of itself or through some of the great poets, such as Homer, Virgil, Wordsworth, these are something that the modern young city person should take to his bosom." H: J. Forman

+ — N Y Times p2 N 10 '29 1300w

"Much as one may admire his frankness, one cannot help but criticise harshly a book which attempts to interpret culture without treating science. . . Mr. Powys is advocating a form of culture, if I understand him, which corresponds to his own interests. It is a literary culture—a tremulous, mystic, emotional love for the contemplative life. . . Mr. Powys fails, in this book, to accomplish his aims. When one has finished reading the book one is left with a vivid impression of a mellow character, Christ-like in its humility and tenderness, sweetly appealing in its naive affection for the beautiful works and thoughts of mankind. It is difficult to quarrel with so lovely and warm a personality." Bernard Smith

POWYS, J: C.—Continued

— + N Y World p11m D 1 '29 1200w

"This is an entirely thoughtful, civilized book, the chief virtue of which, perhaps, is that it comes from a man who has the ear of the younger generation and can talk to them about essentials without trying to make them conform to a standardized pattern. . . If Mr Powys is frequently rhetorical, he also says a good many fresh and significant things. One does not need to agree with all his opinions in order to recognize that he has made a substantial approach to his subject."

+ Springf'd Republican p12 N 15 '29 750w

POWYS, JOHN COWPER. Wolf Solent. 2v 966p $5 Simon & Schuster

29-11649

"Wolf Solent comes back in maturity to the Dorset village which has ostracized his father years before. He finds a typical ingrown community, rotten with vices, common and perverse, malicious, gossipy, useless. And he shows himself ripe for such a community. On the way from London he has wondered what figures from his dead father's past will arise to confront him, what girls he himself will find to make love to. The miserable heritage closes around him: and he finds the girl, not one but two. He loves Gerda's body and Christie's soul. Actually he loves only himself. His altruisms never progress very far. He has the gift of losing himself in an identification with nature beyond time and space and, in common with those who possess that gift, he uses it to preserve himself from all selfless contact with reality."—Outlook

Booklist 26:33 O '29

"Mr. Powys has sharply checked his writing before it could break into melodrama. Passion there is, to be sure, but it arises from the ecstasy of a poet who adores the earth with a Meredith-like fervor and from the madness of the seer who turns his eyes from a pitiful mankind to a destiny that overpowers it—a passion controlled, nevertheless, by a fine intelligence that permits nothing in excess. There are many passages of lyricism that would be grotesque in a novel of narrower scope, but the lofty theme and high seriousness of Wolf Solent are sufficient apologies for them. . . He has made his novel one of the most beautiful and powerful written in our language in this century and has made a name that will live in something more substantial than water." G. C. Knight

+ Bookm 69:557 Jl '29 620w

"In the beauty and freshness of its imagery and the sustained interest of its narrative its power is without question. Its prose often rises to the cadence of poetry. And beyond beauty, it sinks shafts through the unique personalities and provincial setting with which it deals, to a core of truth which is the stuff of human experience, whether in a cottage in Dorset or a furnished room on Manhattan Island." Mary Ross

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 My 19 '29 1450w

"It is certain that of all the novels published in the English language within the past year or two, 'Wolf Solent' is packed with the stuff which defies the maggots of ephemerality, and gives promise of a survival among the treasuries which contain the best imaginative literature." W: S. Braithwaite

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 8 '29 1900w

Cleveland Open Shelf p125 S '29

" 'Wolf Solent strikes me as an intricate and at least superficially interesting tale of somewhat dubious significance. It is precious in style, fanciful in atmosphere, and grandiose in intention." J. W. Krutch

Nation 128:741 Je 19 '29 650w

"Readers who prefer the fringes of the subconscious mind to be explored by intuitive and mystical, rather than by analytic or Proustian, methods are likely to enjoy the book instead of merely perceiving that it is good." Raymond Mortimer

— + Nation and Ath 45:655 Ag 17 '29 240w

New Repub 59:161 Je 26 '29 310w

"As one plunges deeper in the wilderness of this work, it becomes increasingly difficult to keep in mind that it is not the first novel of a very young man indeed. All the usual signs are there: the complete absence of objective grasp; the interminable soul-searchings of the hero; the megalomaniac inconsequence of the plot; the feverish effort to get everything in. To these generic defects Mr. Powys adds a conscience condemned, by the lack of fixed principles, to constant overwork, and a style of such unsophisticated badness as becomes, in the long run, almost endearing."

— New Statesman 33:606 Ag 24 '29 900w

" 'Wolf Solent' is a brilliant book. If now and then Mr. Powys overwrites a little, or tends to become a shade too exclamatory, these minor faults are far more than compensated for by the sharpness of the dialogue, the astonishing vividness which lights scene after scene, the ease and fullness of the story itself. And Mr. Powys's Dorset—with all its sights and sounds and smells and grass blades—is a delight in itself." Conrad Aiken

+ — N Y Evening Post p9m My 18 '29 780w

"Mr. Powys has done a strange, a ponderously powerful, a monumental book, in which the lyrical loveliness of hill and skies and streams forms an ironical background for the hot strivings of human spirits dragged by civilization into discord. We do not think that it is entirely the querulousness of the book-beset critic that makes us consider Mr. Powys's book too long. No tale can be so mighty that it requires nine hundred-odd pages to tell it properly." F: F. Van de Water

+ — N Y Evening Post p8m My 18 '29 300w

"The novel is a momentous piece of work. But we purposely refrain from using the word 'master-piece.' This reviewer's reason for denying this word to 'Wolf Solent' is a very simple one. The novel blurs. And it is not wholly the author's fault; the cause of the novel's blurring is inherent in the nature of the school of fiction to which it belongs. The narrative of a succession of states of mind does not constitute a picture that one can reinvoke at will. At the same time 'Wolf Solent,' as a reading of the human mind, albeit not quite the normal mind, is a work of transcendent interest and great beauty." Percy Hutchison

+ — N Y Times p1 My 19 '29 1700w

"An extremely interesting book, a book very well worth reading, 'Wolf Solent' is yet not a moving one. The characters are, with the exception of Wolf's mother and one or two minor characters which do not take solid shape, vicious or morbid to the point of tedious sameness. Progressive madness marks them all. Mr. Powys writes with beautiful simplicity. A mystic love of nature pervades his book and evokes exquisite sensations of a countryside."

+ — Outlook 152:146 My 22 '29 380w

Pratt p37 autumn '29

"Mr. Powys's intellect is at the mercy of his imagination: it never rests content with the ordinary—it must have everything, especially sin—sensational and over-life size. As against this, it is, in spite of its length, a most readable and beguiling book. Few as are the deliberate efforts made to stimulate the reader's interest, it never loses the quality of suspense: we always want to know what happens next." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 148:220 Ag 24 '29 100w

"Mr. Powys is by turns an Emily Brontë; a subtle, introspective Proust; a nature-enthralled Wordsworth; a Poe, journeying in deliberate search of horror; a Dostoyevsky, shaking with the mystic fever; even, at rare moments, a Shakespeare, hurling the ultimate dramatic word. But just because he is all of these by turn, his synthesis is defective and his book—full though it is to overflowing with poignant passages that cry out to be reread—never rounds to the completed masterpiece it promised to become." E. S. Bates

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:1018 My 18 '29 1050w

"Wolf Solent is a stupendous and rather glorious book. . . Mr. Powys rises to passages of amazing beauty. . . The book is as beautiful and strange as an electric storm, and, like the thunder on Sinai, it is somewhat of a sermon." V. S. Pritchett

+ Spec 143:197 Ag 10 '29 560w

"From the first page to the last, the writing, the story, and the philosophy are free from the least suspicion of didacticism."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p621 Ag 8 '29 920w

POWYS, LLEWELYN. Cradle of God. 302p $3 Harcourt

220.9 Bible—History of Biblical events. Jesus Christ 29-22036

"The story of the Jews from Abraham's grave in 'the cave of Machpelah on the side of a hill at Hebron' to Jesus's grave in a lost sepulchre outside Jerusalem. . . What Llewelyn Powys has done is to take the familiar Biblical material and, without betrayal of the facts of history, make it live again through the creative power of his poetic imagination. . . In the long elaboration of the narrative of Jesus the work achieves its fitting climax. So lofty appears the stature of this man of Nazareth in Mr. Powys's treatment of him, so august his mien, so transcendent his spirit, that one understands why this pagan Englishman, in the passion of his conviction, is swept on to the declaration that this Nazarene peasant was God, and Palestine therefore 'the cradle of God.' "—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

---

"It is a wonderful book. Not to my knowledge has the story of the Jews in Palestine been told like this. All other books of the kind that I have seen are pale beside it—anæmic where this pulses with lusty blood, flabby where this is hard with fibrous tissues, sentimental and didactic with pious glossings of a so-called sacred text where this is epic and therefore heroic with the sublime legend of a people that walked with God. . . Llewelyn Powys has produced, under something like the stimulus of inspiration, what I believe will remain his masterpiece." J: H. Holmes

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 N 10 '29 1400w

"Pagan he is, and pagan he remains; the utmost tribute he can pay even to Jesus is that of one poet to another greater poet. But he sees Jesus, and with him Abraham, Jacob, Samuel, Saul, David, Elijah, Judas Maccabeus, and all the many other captains, kings, prophets, and disciples, as living and very human figures, and forces the reader too to see them so. As for the prose in which it is written, the memorable quality of which sets it aside at once as a book in a thousand, those readers whose interest does not extend to the Bible itself may be recommended to this volume for the sake of Mr. Powys's style alone."

+ Nation and Ath 46:322 N 30 '29 500w

New Statesman 34:302 D 7 '29 650w

"None who has ever read a page by Mr. Powys needs to be told with what a simple imagery, what a relish for the salty words of the common man and gusto for the humbler things and 'sweet sanity of the earth,' what an eloquent (if sometimes overprecious) sense of the mystery of life and sympathy with nympholeptiform phenomena, however misguided, he has recorded his version of these matters. And when he adds, as here he does, a knowing and decent denunciation of our addiction to the idea of blood-sacrifice, or roundly rebukes man's fanatical inhumanity to man, or beautifully expounds his own rich, warm naturalism, our cup runneth over." Clarence Britten

+ N Y Evening Post p13m D 21 '29 900w

"From the ranks of the many authors of the day possessing talent, possessing great talent, and using it greatly, Llewelyn Powys stands out as having little of talent, but as gripped by that rare and indefinable thing we call genius. Granting the unsafeness of prophecy, it is all but safe to say that long after much of what is written today has passed to dust and been forgotten, page after page of this Dorstshire poet who writes in prose will claim literary attention, as many writers of the past claim attention still, for understanding, and for strange beauty of utterance." Percy Hutchison

+ N Y Times p11 N 3 '29 1400w

"It does seem to me that this book by Mr. Powys, remarkable in many ways, would have come much nearer success if he had planned it to be either wholly a record of his personal reactions to Jewish history, contemplated in the scenes in which it was enacted, or else an impersonal criticism of the Jewish genius. Even as it is, Mr. Powys deserves to be widely read, with serious attention." T. E. Welby

+ — Sat R 148:755 D 21 '29 1300w

"This book tells more of the race than of the land which cradled God. The expectant reader, therefore, may get something for which he was not altogether prepared; but he deserves no sympathy if he is disappointed. For Mr. Powys's history is admirable—vivid, sympathetic and dramatic."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p950 N 21 '29 850w

POWYS, THEODORE FRANCIS. Fables. 286p [2] il $2.50 Viking press

828 29-24039

Whimsical tales that embody the philosophy of Mr Theodore Powys. In the Aesop manner, the dishpan speaks to the clout of human ways and foibles; the cuckoo-clock to the sea-weed, the strange bride Hester Gibbs found for him; and the corpse to the flea.

---

"Mr. Powys's latest book, though cast in the form used by Æsop and La Fontaine, is as unusual as his previous work would have us expect. In these short tales and dialogues there are many strange implications of irony and beauty. Death and darkness hover over the whole book and the general effect is that of apathy. The author mingles lust, greed and brutality with the loveliness of his English countryside and the intense awareness of his characters. Mr. Powys's philosophy is debatable, but his subtle and sensitive prose cannot be questioned."

+ Bookm 70:xiv Ja '30 120w

"The smiling melancholy of Mr. Powys' book is safe, simple and unexacting, good fare for a day when one feels that the universe is going to the dogs anyway and that the greatest consolation is that there is nothing one can do about it. The fables themselves are beautifully wrought. But in the light of a clear day, when living is its own reward for being, when it does not seem necessary to bolster up one's ego with the pride that apes humility, they seem not salty and bracing, as the best fables have been, but self-indulgent in their simplicity." Mary Ross

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 D 1 '29 500w

"Theodore Powys has limitations. One need not expect in any new book any great extension of thought over what had gone before. But he discovers endless new ways to give moving and beautiful expression to previously uttered sagacities. . . And for those whose ear is attuned there is a poetic message in his writings."

+ N Y Times p6 N 17 '29 700w

POWYS, THEODORE FRANCIS. Interpretation of Genesis. 100p ltd ed $5 Viking press [15s Chatto & W.]

222.11 Bible. Old Testament. Genesis

This beautifully printed book of 100 pages, issued in limited edition, is more literary than theological. It takes the form of a dialogue between Moses, the lawgiver of Israel, and Zetetes, an imaginary sage and philosopher. In the course of their long conversation each episode in the Book of Genesis is searched by the two interlocutors for the light which it sheds upon the Truth. Both language and style are biblical.

POWYS, T. F.—Continued

"The language is poetic, prophetic and stately, with all the whereofs, thereofs, thereuntos, willests, wouldests, wist nots, perchances and what not which pertain to Biblical imitations. There is a continuous flow of images, quite a number of which are as satisfactory as images can be, and a great fund of allusion. . . Shall we blame Mr. Powys for attempting the impossible? Undoubtedly. There is a shallowness over 'An Interpretation of Genesis' and, to be frank, a charlatanry which must be severely censured. . . All the time you read hoping to be taught everything—for somehow Mr. Powys, or the Bible, or the beautiful print holds you and you cannot skip—but you learn nothing, and finally you say to the author in his own words: 'Thy book is before thee, O man, and darkness is within it.' " Ernest Dimnet
— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 S 15 '29 2600w

"This is an original and beautiful book, intellectually stimulating and full, as all philosophy should be, of 'the emotion of the ideal.' . . Mr. Powys brings to his examination of the well-known stories of 'Genesis' a remarkably alert and sensitive imagination. Here, in passages hardly surpassed in contemporary literature for nobility of thought and language, he offers the reader, in our opinion, the quintessence of Christianity, freed from all conventional alloy."
+ Nation and Ath 45:514 Jl 13 '29 450w
Spec 143:106 Jl 20 '29 100w

PRALL, DAVID WIGHT. Aesthetic judgment. 378p il $4 Crowell

701 Esthetics 29-16088

A survey of esthetics for the use of college students, in which esthetic judgment is treated as the result of esthetic experience. Among the factors of esthetic theory considered are: the development of art in primitive life, the esthetic materials of sound, color, space and rhythm, the difference between art and esthetic surface, esthetic criticism, and the application of esthetics to life.

"Written with a background of wide philosophical knowledge as well as with the equipment of an acute and cultivated artistic sensibility, it is a worthy successor to Santayana's 'Sense of Beauty,' and is, standing beside it, the most important work on aesthetic theory to come out of America. . . There can be little doubt that with this volume Dr. Prall steps into the front rank of American philosophers, past and present. 'Aesthetic Judgment' stands as a great book. It is great because of its clarity, because of its discernment, because of its sound historical background; because of its sanity and avoidance of faddish vagaries; because of its sharp penetrations; because of its intense emphasis on reality, on present joy, on the sensitivity and exhilaration of immediate existence; it is great because of the superior and triumphant adequacy of the original intellectual synthesis at its core." Axton Clarke
+ N Y Times p2 D 22 '29 1500w

"A weighty-looking but entirely readable book on aesthetics for the general reader. Written, probably, for the use of college students, it gives a clear account of aesthetic theory and its fundamentals, the factors which enter into music, poetry and the fine arts. One of the later chapters, on criticism, is unusually clear, perfectly sound and should help as well as interest many readers, lookers and listeners to the formation of standards of judgment."
+ Outlook 152:672 Ag 21 '29 80w

"We think students generally, whether they fully agree or not, will be interested in Dr. Prall's comment on architecture which in his view expresses the inner life of man as well as his success in the practical conquest of nature." W: B. Shaw
+ R of Rs 80:16 S '29 150w

PRATT, EDWARD EWING. International trade in staple commodities. 570p $5 (£1 5s) McGraw

382 Commerce 28-23959

"The commodities discussed in this book comprise four textiles—namely, cotton, wool, silk and jute; four foods, wheat, sugar, tea and coffee; two minerals, coal and petroleum, and the three unclassified articles, rubber, Chilean nitrate and lumber. The thirteen staples chosen for elaboration were picked either because of their value and volume in international trade or because of some peculiar character or complexity in the trade in them. Mr. Pratt traces each of the thirteen commodities from its points of production to its places of consumption."—Am Econ R

Reviewed by Malcolm Keir
Am Econ R 19:121 Mr '29 520w
Booklist 25:194 F '29
Pratt p11 spring '29
St Louis 27:12 Ja '29

PRATT, JAMES BISSETT. Pilgrimage of Buddhism and a Buddhist pilgrimage. 758p $3 (15s) Macmillan

294.3 Buddha and Buddhism 28-24492

The author of many books on the psychology and the philosophy of religion and also of a work on India and its faiths, here gives a long and sympathetic study of the growth and influence of Buddhism in each of the countries to which it was carried on the first great pilgrimage of the Buddha. The great purpose of the book is to enter the heart of Buddhism and by interpreting its external and internal aspects to help the reader understand how it feels to be a Buddhist.

"The lively and clear presentation of the subject matter makes it as readable as it is reliable." W. N. Brown
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 Ap 28 '29 450w

"His first-hand knowledge of Buddhists and Buddhist countries is a thing few real scholars can boast of. Years of study and teaching did their share in equipping him; but of equal importance are his long months spent living in Buddhist lands. All this taken together gives his statements a soundness and plausibility rarely to be found in such works." A. H. Sayre
+ Boston Transcript p3 D 29 '28 1650w

"This large volume of nearly 800 pages, by the well-known professor of philosophy in Williams College, is written in his usual lucid and charming style. It is the result of long years of study, and of much travel and reflection. . . The book will be of great value to the serious student of religion, whether in its psychology, or its philosophy, or its history." F. L. Palmer
+ Churchman 139:28 Ja 12 '29 150w

"This is a book for one's more serious leisure hours. It is not so learned as to be uninteresting, nor yet so superficial as to be unprofitable reading." S. J. Case
+ Nation 129:755 D 18 '29 500w

"This minutely detailed history of Buddhism is heavily freighted with factual investigation. It is a sympathetic, scholarly treatise. Its scholasticism, however, is undeniably cumbersome and robs the main outline of the greater clarity and emphasis that could have been achieved by economy and revision."
+ — N Y Times p18 My 26 '29 560w

"An important book which is a first-hand study of a great religion as it works in Ceylon, Burma, Siam, Cambodia, China, Korea, and Japan. This is a sympathetically written, but balanced study." Herschel Brickell
+ No Am 226:adv D '28 40w

Reviewed by Boyd Carpenter
Outlook 150:1291 D 5 '28 380w
Pratt p9 spring '29

"There are many passages which make this an attractive travel-book for all who desire a general introduction to a vast and intricate subject; and it would certainly help to make a tour in the Orient really fascinating and worthwhile; for its main purpose is to reveal Buddhism as a living religion. . . The reviewer feels that the book would be stronger for being condensed. He cannot help noticing also many unfortunate misprints, and some which are grotesque. . . There is also some bad stuff which from a professor of psychology is less excusable." Kenneth Saunders

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:686 F 16 '29 900w

"We can recommend this volume both as a general description of the various Buddhistic cultures and as a discerning review of a phase of Eastern life which is not as yet dissolving before our eyes, like the customs of the nearer countries of Islam."

+ Spec 142:248 F 16 '29 120w

"While one may encounter inaccuracy of detail here and there, or may question the justification of Prof Pratt's interpretations, neither the one nor the other can be said to mar the quality of this fine achievement of learning. It is as notable a contribution to the history of religions as 'The Religious Consciousness' is to the psychology of religion." J. M.

+ Springf'd Republican p7e My 19 '29 1100w

Springf'd Republican p7f My 26 '28 200w

"Dr. Pratt's claim to our attention is his wide knowledge of Buddhism as it actually exists. He does not pretend to a knowledge of Oriental languages, and his account of the past is admittedly a work of compilation rather than of research. But concerning modern Buddhism in Ceylon, Burma, Siam, Indo-China, China, Korea and Japan he supplies much first-hand information that is of great interest and value."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p46 Ja 17 '29 180w

World Tomorrow 12:44 Ja '29 30w

"A mine of information on the religious life and history of the vast population on the continent of Asia which is of permanent value. . . There is not a single dry page." S. L. Joshi

+ Yale R n s 18:821 summer '29 600w

PRESBREY, FRANK SPENCER. History and development of advertising. 642p il $7.50 Doubleday, Doran

659 Advertising—History 29-13321

"No book of the scope and usefulness of this one has hitherto been written, none that so graphically shows the growth and development of advertising from its earliest beginnings to an industry of two and one-half billions yearly; from the first primitive efforts to announce wares for sale to a social force that is making over the people of a nation."—N Y Times

---

"A rare find for non-fiction readers, an eye-opener for business men, an emotional stimulant for advertising men." J. P. Bowles

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Ag 18 '29 1650w

"Mr. Presbrey's volume is complete, entertaining to both the lay and informed reader, profusely illustrated, and adequately indexed. It is clearly the fruit of prolonged and painstaking research." R. S.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 20 '29 650w

"This is emphatically a worth while book. An advertising man with full knowledge of present-day conditions, with many years in advertising over the period of its greatest growth, with a real gift for writing, and a natural instinct for research, has collected all that is known about its history, made judicious selections from it, and woven it into an entertaining and readable narrative which will long remain the standard reference book upon the subject." E. E. Calkins

+ N Y Times p4 Je 23 '29 1650w

"No one heretofore has had the ambition or the time or the requisite industry to undertake such a work. We don't pretend to know what has become of all the 'epoch-marking' books that we used to hear about, but we doubt if many of them fitted the designation as well as Mr. Presbrey's stout volume does." W: B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 80:10 Ag '29 250w

PRESLAND, JOHN, pseud. See Skelton, G.

PRESTAGE, EDGAR, ed. Chivalry; a series of studies to illustrate its historical significance and civilizing influence, by members of King's college, London. (Hist. of civilization) 231p il $6 Knopf [15s K. Paul]

394.7 Chivalry 28-28773

The historical significance and civilizing influence of the chivalric idea is brought out in this course of public lectures delivered in 1925 by members of King's college, London.

---

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Je 9 '29 300w

"Each lecture gives more than a fair amount of information and is in itself a well-rounded essay. The illustrations are many and interesting."

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 26 '29 200w

New Statesman 32:262 D 1 '28 730w

"This interesting and informing volume will be welcomed alike by students of history and literature. . . In general, the historical chapters are more realistic, the literary more romantic, but the general impression is rather rose-colored. Little is said of the mercenary side of tournaments, nothing of an episode like the blinding of captive knights by Richard Lion-Heart and Philip Augustus in order to satisfy the royal sense of honor. The illustrations, almost all from illuminated manuscripts, might well have been supplemented by some pictures of surviving castles of the military-religious orders."

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:832 Mr 30 '29 250w

"This is a valuable book both for reference and for instruction."

+ Spec 142:873 Je 1 '29 120w

PRESTON, ISABELLA. Garden lilies. (Farm and garden lib.) 126p il $1.25 Judd

716.2 Lilies 29-9737

"Miss Preston believes in gilding the lily, and painting it pink and sometimes orange. One lily is not enough for her, and she ranges the gamut of the species, ardently giving advice from her own experience in lily gardens in Canada. Few gardeners will follow her all the way; but any one who has yearned for more than an old-fashioned tiger lily will find her little book crammed with useful advice."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

---

Booklist 25:350 Je '29

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 My 26 '29 60w

"Put down in plain language so that he who hoes and digs may read. The book seems very practical but also comprehensive."

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 11 '29 50w

Cleveland Open Shelf p89 Je '29

"This book is of value by reason of its conciseness, especially for the amateur gardener, and also because it gives the findings of the author garnered from the painstaking experimental work in lily growing and hybridizing, conducted at the Central Experiment farm, Ottawa."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e D 29 '29 250w

PRESTON, KEITH. Pot shots from Pegasus; with an introd. by Christopher Morley. 243p $2.50 Covici

818 29-8738

Keith Preston was the gifted columnist of the Chicago Daily News. Pot shots from Pegasus contains some of the best of his comment and verse, with an introduction by Christopher Morley.

---

Booklist 25:352 Je '29

PRESTON, KEITH—Continued

"The best of the verse and prose with which Keith Preston enlivened his column in 'The Chicago Daily News' is now happily preserved. Keith Preston was a gifted columnist. With him, at the ago of forty-two, died an abundance of common sense, an educated taste and a flexible, charitable wit." B. R. Redman

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 My 19 '29 500w

"Real scholarship, a sense of historic relations, and a tender understanding of human nature are characteristic of Keith Preston's work. His wit was barbed but never poisoned." E. L.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 11 '29 380w

"This book shows the wide variety of his reading; the nimbleness of his expression. Preston had no program to announce, no set of ideas to commend. But those who read 'Pot Shots From Pegasus' will agree that he belonged at the 'top o' the column.'" Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p10m Ap 14 '29 850w

Sat R of Lit 5:933 Ap 20 '29 250w

PRICE, LUCIEN. Winged sandals. 315p il $3.50 Little

914 Europe—Description and travel 28-22715

"This journey is a voyage upstream in European civilization. It pauses at the garden spots of Europe's most luxuriant creative flowering: France of the Latin genius in letters and of the cathedral builders; Germany of the composers; Italy of the Renaissance; Rome of the Empire; and immortal Hellas. . . England of the poets is not visited, but is a traveling companion."—Preface

---

"The fact that the impressions recorded are those of a man's very first visit to the Continent assures the freshness of these impressions and the absence of the weariness suggested by some writers on like subjects. . . Had this book no other content than the chapters dealing with Greece it would still be noteworthy." J. R. S.

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 26 '28 430w

Reviewed by Arthur Warner

Nation 128:23 Ja 2 '29 50w

"Lucien Price has written a difficult kind of travel book, one that has distinction, intellectual interest, vivid quality. It stands out because of the spirit in which he roamed about Europe, and because of the gift of words which enables him to tell about his garnerings of eye and mind in a way that makes his pages stimulating, provocative, fascinating."

+ N Y Times p24 F 17 '29 300w

"'Winged Sandals' differs from most travel books in that it is written fundamentally from a cultural standpoint. It covers a wide range of European countries but everything is secondary to the cultural aspect. . . It is beautifully written, with an occasional touch of humor." Milton Byron

+ Outlook 150:1171 N 14 '28 130w

"Mr. Price's pages are carried off with a buoyant eloquence and a contagious enthusiasm. One reads his book with profit and with delight."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:767 Mr 9 '29 200w

Wis Lib Bul 24:344 D '28

PRICEMAN, JAMES, pseud. See Kirkland, W. M.

PRIESTLEY, HERBERT INGRAM. Coming of the white man, 1492-1848. (Hist. of Am. life) 411p il $4 Macmillan

917.3 North America—History. United States—History. United States—Civilization. United States—History—Colonial period 29-17105

The first volume of a "History of American life" traces the Spanish, French, and Dutch colonization of North America and the contributions these transplanted cultures made to American life.

"If he had done nothing else the bibliography which forms his closing chapter would make us his grateful debtors, especially that part relating to New Spain." I: J. Cox

+ Am Hist R 35:374 Ja '30 1000w

Booklist 26:64 N '29

"Professor Priestley has done a most valuable piece of work. Because it is full of human happenings it is unfailingly fascinating, even to the layman; because it is an excellent piece of intellectual craftsmanship, it will prove absorbing to the student of early American history." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p3 S 28 '29 620w

"The present volume ought to be especially useful in setting right the misconceptions regarding Spanish and Dutch colonization in America which have been embodied in the school books and popular literature of the lordly Anglo-Saxon. The Anglo-Saxon does not figure in these beginning chapters of the series. More than half of the book is used in telling the story of the Spanish colonies in America. Dr. Priestley tells it in a way that is not only fascinating in itself but suggests a fascinating field for further exploration."

+ N Y Times p4 Ja 5 '30 750w

"We are especially ignorant about the nature of Spanish colonization on this continent and the social and economic life of the Spanish settlements. Professor Priestley takes pains to set us right on some of these matters. . . He does away, once and for all, with the mistaken notion that the Spaniards who came to the Americas in the sixteenth century cared nothing for books. In the last quarter of that century, he finds that at least 30,000 volumes were imported to New Spain." W: B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 80:20 O '29 350w

St Louis 27:313 N '29

"As a much needed complement to existing textbooks, this account of Spanish, French, Dutch and Swedish history in North America is highly welcome. But, better still, the author has fulfilled this task with admirable thoroughness and in a way to hold the imagination of even the laggard student. . . Mr. Priestley has added to the historical chapters a critical essay on his sources which will be of great assistance to the more serious student." Bruno Lasker

+ Survey 63:177 N 1 '29 450w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1066 D 19 '29 500w

PRIESTLEY, JOHN BOYNTON. English humor; [with an introd. by Stanley Baldwin]. (English heritage ser.) 180p $1.40 (3s 6d) Longmans

827 Humor [29-20682]

A discussion of English humor which adds to interpretation of the great humorists—Shakespeare, Sterne, Lamb and Dickens, an appreciation of the less well-known Peacock.

---

New Statesman 34:161 N 9 '29 180w

"As an interpreter of English humour he is equipped at all points." T. E. Welby

+ Sat R 148:513 N 2 '29 300w

"Mr. Priestley has an unfailing instinct for what is genuinely humorous and not merely witty or spiteful. The real humourist takes the whole of life for his study, he takes no pleasure merely in grinning at the follies of others from some imagined lofty standpoint of his own: if he does so, he is not a humorist, but a snob. . . Mr. Priestley's essays on the real humourists of literature—Lamb, Peacock, Dickens, Shakespeare—showing through these writers what humour is, positively, (as against what it is not) are succinct and subtle, giving true balance to what is altogether a most stimulating book." H. M.

+ Spec 143:548 O 19 '29 700w

PRIESTLEY, JOHN BOYNTON. Good companions. 640p $3 Harper [10s 6d Heinemann] 29-16857

The "Good companions" is the name of a group of travelling players, or "pierrots," in England. Their organization and their numerous adventures center about the combination of three strangely assorted but wholly companionable people: a Yorkshire laborer, Mr. Oakroyd, a maiden lady of thirty-seven with a venturesome spirit, Elizabeth Trant, and a young Cambridge school teacher, Inigo Jollifant, who can compose the catchiest of catchy tunes. There are other members of the troupe, too; and among the most talented and most interesting we find Jerry Jerningham, dancer, and Miss Susie Dean, twenty, lovely, and mistress of Inigo's heart from the very first.

---

Booklist 26:121 D '29

"One closes The Good Companions with the conviction that Priestley has written the best book of his career, and written it in happy defiance of all contemporary formulas of novel-manufacture. He has chosen to direct a large number of diverse characters through a sequence of entertaining adventures; he has treated them objectively and told his tale in robust and satisfying manner." Leo Kennedy

\+ Bookm 70:560 Ja '30 280w

"Mr. Priestley offers us something mellow, something ripe, with a taste now sweet and now acrid. He rolls his tongue around the morsels of his book. He finds them toothsome. He sniffs their savor and bites into them with a relish. Life is a fine repast, he seems to say, and, adding a pinch of garlic, he goes at it in slow and hearty earnest. . . This book is indeed a challenge to our mettlesome era. It abandons itself passionately to the slowness of time. You cannot gobble it and hasten away. You must sit down to it in a mood of reverie, in a mood to have your fancy tickled, in a mood to smile the long, wide smile of the philosopher." V. P. Ross

\+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 O 6 '29 950w

Boston Transcript p1 N 9 '29 950w

Cleveland Open Shelf p158 D '29

"Some readers may find the wholesomeness of 'The Good Companions' a little oppressive but, taking it all round, wholesomeness is more tolerable than many other things." L. L. Irvine

\+ — Nation and Ath 45:710 Ag 31 '29 200w

"In 'The Good Companions,' the author fairly exudes sympathy for all his characters, the characters ooze charm at every pore, and friendly smiles, not to say insane guffaws, lurk in every paragraph. Mr. Priestley capitalizes his opportunity to compare persons of varying social strata who are thrown in with one another, but I still prefer 'The Canterbury Tales.' There is nothing more depressing than a sustained atmosphere of jollity. Moreover, a little sentimentality goes a long way; 'The Good Companions' fairly drips with it. The author has consciously written in the tradition of Dickens; but he has outdone himself; compared with him, the Victorians seem positively psychological." G. T. Hellman

— New Repub 60:380 N 20 '29 420w

"This book is full of golden streaks, and it seems almost like ingratitude to complain that it is not as good as it might be." E. S.

\+ — New Statesman 33:554 Ag 10 '29 1200w

"Exceedingly good companions they are, too, people in whose society you rejoice, and over whose adventures you chuckle delightedly. Though a little pruning would have improved the tale, it is so good just as it is that one accepts it with joy and thanksgiving, feeling no more inclined to carp at its overabundance than at the too lavish supply of savory dishes at a Christmas dinner. . . You will miss the very best kind of a time if you fail to make friends with 'The Good Companions.' " L. M. Field

\+ N Y Times p9 O 13 '29 1150w

N Y World p11m O 6 '29 470w

"It is possible to recommend it heartily without calling in any comparisons to Dickens or Thackeray to strengthen one's opinion. It is long enough to have suited either of them, and to suit readers who still like meaty books. . . It suffices to call The Good Companions a robust and diverting tale, told in meandering fashion, lit by rich humor and warm sentiment and centered about a group of perennially engaging characters." F. L. Robbins

\+ Outlook 153:268 O 16 '29 300w

"Mr. Priestley has many qualities as a writer —humour, sympathy, good sense, invention, an excellent ear both for dialect and dialogue. But what impresses the reader immediately is his control over his material; he marshals this tremendous array of scenes and characters as if it were child's play—a kind of golden lucidity shines through the book. Mr. Priestley keeps his scale perfectly, and one's sense of the harmonious relationship of the parts to each other and to the whole work is an unfailing pleasure." L. P. Hartley

\+ Sat R 148:136 Ag 3 '29 1200w

"It is long since we have had a novel so unfettered by psychological faddism as this, so amply and rewardingly unafraid of the romantic, at once so gay, so good-humored, and so robust." Amy Loveman

\+ Sat R of Lit 6:235 O 12 '29 1300w

"Once one has waded through the first 200 pages—and Mr. Priestley, like most hearty men, is sometimes a bore—there are another four hundred of the truest, subtlest and cleverest descriptions of life in a poor touring company that I have ever read. It is a canvas glittering with character and incident. The book has the richness and wisdom of substantial laughter. It sprawls like the map of England or Mrs. Grundy's voluminous skirts. Its chief defect is that with three characters, through whom to watch the story, it is [in effect] like a great mass lying slightly out of focus." V. S. Pritchett

\+ — Spec 143:166 Ag 3 '29 630w

Springf'd Republican p8 O 5 '29 1100w

"An achievement comparable in high spirits to the writings of P. G. Wodehouse, but belonging to a more distinct and more ancient type of novel. It is a narrative of haphazard adventure, possible but not, perhaps, very probable, amid real and crisply drawn scenes. Alike in the characters and incidents there is humorous creation."

\+ Springf'd Republican p7e O 20 '29 500w

Times [London] Lit Sup p606 Ag 1 '29 700w

Yale R n s 19:vi winter '30 80w

PRINCE, HARRY. Half-hours in old London. 224p il $2.50 Dutton [6s Bell]

942.1 London—Historic houses, etc. London —Description [29-1735]

Sketches on old and little-known buildings and traditions of London, illustrated from pencil drawings by F. W. Knight.

---

"This is a book about London for Londoners, but happily you need not be one to enjoy it."

\+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ag 25 '29 100w

"It is the personal touch through the use of much anecdote which makes these wanderings delightful." F. B.

\+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 22 '29 480w

"Not the best or the most complete that we have seen, but it is satisfactory for the somewhat hurried sightseer, and it is pleasantly written."

\+ — Outlook 152:350 Je 26 '29 70w

PRINCE, MORTON. Clinical and experimental studies in personality. 559p il $5 Sci-art pubs., Harvard sq., Cambridge, Mass.

132 Psychology, Pathological. Personality, Disorders of. Subconsciousness. Consciousness 29-4797

A collection of Dr Prince's papers selected from his writings and lectures on abnormal psychology that have been printed in medical and psychological journals during the last forty years.

---

"These papers present a rich collection of contributions to abnormal psychology. Prince is never dull, and these papers present his contributions to abnormal psychology in a man-

PRINCE, MORTON—Continued
ner that at once discloses the artist in the author who does not fail to appreciate the dramatic significance of the material with which he deals." W: A. White
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 Mr 3 '29 650w

Boston Transcript p3 F 16 '29 750w

"Certainly with the present publication Dr Prince has made sure of occupying a substantial space on the psychologists' shelves for a good time to come."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p247 Mr 21 '29 170w

PRITCHARD, FRANCIS HENRY, ed. From Confucius to Mencken; the trend of the world's best thought as expressed by famous writers of all time. 1017p $5 Harper

808.8 Literature—Collections. Essays 29-9780

Essays, or excerpts from essays from the principal literatures of the ancient and modern world, showing the development of this library form and its vitality.

---

Booklist 25:386 Jl '29

"The amount of good reading that is packed into this volume of a thousand-odd large and closely printed pages is enormous; and, having kept it at hand for three months or so, I can testify that its interest is practically inexhaustible." B. R. Redman
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 S 8 '29 480w

Boston Transcript p4 Ag 3 '29 300w

"This vast compilation of prose from hundreds of authors in dozens of countries is manifestly an attempt at the impossible, since there has been so much prose that no one volume, however big, could do more than scratch the surface. Mr. Pritchard has worked carefully, however, within these fatal limits; so far as he goes he goes interestingly, and much that he gives us was worth digging out."
+ — Nation 129:49 Jl 10 '29 60w

"The collection Mr. Pritchard has given us makes a very generous and in many ways a very usable book. The inclusion of such excerpts as Marcel Proust's 'The Death of Bergotte' is original and gratifying." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 27 '29 250w

"The result is a very commendable job. The book is not a haphazard collection of elegant extracts, but really illustrates the evolution of the essay as a literary form."
+ Outlook 152:148 My 22 '29 100w

Wis Lib Bul 25:193 Je '29

PROCHAZKA, GEORGE ANTHONY. Accounting and cost finding for the chemical industries. (Chemical engineering ser.) 242p il $3 McGraw

657 Cost accounting 28-25747

"Mr. Prochazka sets forth the general principles of cost accounting, illustrates their application to an actual set of factory operations and the interrelation of the cost and the general financial records. The illustration includes typical forms filled out with actual figures and depicts clearly the accounting record from raw material to finished product, and from money spent to profits realized."—Chem & Met Eng

---

"The volume is small; the treatment of general principles and of the more important phases of the subject is well-informed, concise, to the point, liberally supplemented by reference to more extended treatises, and pleasantly free from dogmatic statement." A. G. Peterkin, Jr.
+ Chem & Met Eng 36:166 Mr '29 500w

"This is a well-written, concise treatise on cost accounting for the engineer, the accountant, and the student of manufacturing problems. It is sufficiently detailed to suggest practical methods for devising, installing, and operating cost-finding methods which have been found practicable by the author in his own experience, covering a period of some fourteen years." R. N. Mullikin
+ Ind & Eng Chem 21:391 Ap '29 230w

PROCTOR, MARY. Romance of the moon. 262p il $2.50 (7s 6d) Harper

523.3 Moon 28-21546

A popular book on the moon in all its phases. Contents: The magic spell of moonlight; The story of the moon; The work of the tides; The moon, a world of wonder; A ramble on the moon; A glimpse of lunar scenery; Facts and fiction regarding the moon rocket; Lunar weather forecasts and supposed influence of the moon on vegetation; Is the moon inhabited? Lunar folk lore; Ancient moon worship. Index.

---

"Miss Proctor's manner is easy and gracious. Her discussions of the moon, considered scientifically, are neither difficult nor involved. There are no heavy celestial mechanics, and no troublesome mathematics, a matter that is perhaps out of place in a book with scientific pretensions. On the contrary, the romantic story is told with charm and flexibility, and in addition the book contains a very diverting scattering of miscellaneous information." C. H. Payne
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Mr 31 '29 380w

"Miss Proctor's book deals with a wide range of subjects connected with the moon in a pleasantly discursive manner which makes easy reading."

Nature 124:405 S 14 '29 180w

"The title might lead one to anticipate a discussion of the part which our satellite has filled in human imagination, rather than in human knowledge; but the two aspects are given almost equal attention. . . The style of the book, though discursive, rarely wanders beyond the limits of the reader's interest. Quotations, which are numerous, are fully documented." H: N. Russell
+ Sat R of Lit 6:7 Jl 27 '29 600w

Springf'd Republican p7e D 1 '29 100w

Wis Lib Bul 24:341 D '28

PROPPER, MILTON M. Strange disappearance of Mary Young. 326p $2 Harper

29-8546

At the end of the scenic railway the young girl in the front seat does not get out of the car. A guard, investigating, finds her dead, stabbed thru the heart. Under the seat is a cigarette lighter stamped J. N. In the girl's bag is a note signed J., and a handkerchief with the initials M. Y. From these slight clues the detective solves the mystery of Mary Young's strange disappearance.

---

Bookm 69:xxv My '29 60w

"Mr. Propper has invented an ingenious crime and a still more ingenious solution. His sleuthing is scholarly, watertight and credible." Will Cuppy
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p38 Ap 14 '29 130w

"If this is his first novel, as I believe it is, he has succeeded in mastering the secrets of mystery story writing at a bound." E. F. Edgett
+ Boston Transcript p6 Je 15 '29 100w

N Y Times p22 Ap 21 '29 100w

"The story is persistently interesting from first to last."
+ N Y World p11m Ap 14 '29 160w

Wis Lib Bul 25:324 O '29

PROSSER, CHARLES ALLEN, and ALLEN, CHARLES RICKETSON. Have we kept the faith? America at the cross-roads in education. 429p il $2.75 Century

370.973 Education—United States. Education—Curricula 29-9854

Bearing in mind the purposes and ideals of the founders of American education the authors have made this survey to determine how far the schools of today are keeping faith with those ideals. The present book pictures public school conditions as the authors find them; a later book will deal with remedies.

Bookm 69:xxi Ag '29 100w

"Not only a panoramic view of a large part of the educational field but also a very comprehensive and exhaustive study. . . These two very able educators have rendered a valuable service to the cause of school reform and advancement." J. E. Kirkpatrick

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Ag 25 '29 680w

Boston Transcript p2 Je 1 '29 620w

"The book is a cogent argument for a radical reconstruction of our whole educational program."

+ Christian Century 46:810 Je 19 '29 110w

PROTHERO, JOHN KEITH, pseud. See Chesterton, A. E.

PROUST, MARCEL. The captive; tr. by C. K. Scott Moncrieff. (Remembrance of things past) 563p $3 Boni

29-13826

In this sixth part of the monumental novel "Remembrance of things past," Albertine is living with the narrator under his own roof. He has tired of her, yet is held to her by the torturing bonds of suspicion and jealousy of her relations with other women. The long novel is an analysis of the narrator's soul upon the rack of jealousy. At the end comes the anticipated break between the lovers.

"Here, if ever, the technique of Proust vindicates itself, for here everything is based on the connotations of apparently idle speeches, of forgotten phrases dredged up out of the past of memory and compared with new phrases, of past actions taking on a new significance in the light of new actions, of questions asked seasons before being unexpectedly answered in this painful present." Herbert Gorman

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Jl 14 '29 1400w

Reviewed by D. L. Mann

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 6 '29 1650w

"He should be the arch enemy of all who hold any classical conceptions of either personality, art, or morals. Others have struggled to rescue something from the flood; they have cherished at least the delusion that there are certain rocks around which the waves break. But his is a universe in which every molecule is fluid." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 129:327 S 25 '29 850w

"The dethronement of 'Yea' began, it has found its chief master, its consummate and weary apostle in Marcel Proust. Not only does he substitute with a delicate and malicious care the abnormal for the normal, the infertile for the fertile, the agonised and evil delights of jealousy for the pure pleasures of love and fidelity; but he insinuates, declares, prophesies that man is only true to reality, to himself, and to others when he recognises that life is the most hopeless and inveterate of illusions except for its torments, its treacheries, and its less seemly curiosities." R. E. Roberts

— + New Statesman 34:supix D 7 '29 1800w

Reviewed by Edgar Johnson

N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 6 '29 1600w

Reviewed by Rose Lee

N Y Times p2 Jl 21 '29 1050w

"Proust does not want to shock people, nor to parade an infantile complex. He has been an invalid and he has, perhaps, assimilated his way of thinking, his expression, to the practitioners of the clinic for whom it is natural to speak of things hidden below our normal lives. He has the candor, too, of a man at his life's last confession—he is a dying man confessing to himself. His candor and his kindliness prevent our being greatly shocked by the people he presents to us. He does not scold, he does not satirize, he does not deliberately vilify. . . This does not mean that Marcel Proust is always the philosopher in his writing about the men and women of his world. Fortunately he is not. He is a gossip who has been made over into a philosopher, and his gossip about Charlus, Swann, Morel, the Verdurins' set, is incisive and circumstantial." Padraic Colum

Sat R of Lit 6:337 N 2 '29 1800w

" 'The Captive,' marked by an element of suspense and dramatic interest, reveals also a quickening in Proust's style; the long, involved sentences seem less frequent. But if 'The Captive' possesses certain aspects not commonly found in the preceding volumes, it also contains passages of beauty which equal those to be found, for instance, in 'Within a Budding Grove.' There is, too, the profound ability to portray subtleties and complications in the manner which sets Proust apart from other writers of his time." A. J. B.

+ Springf'd Republican p7e S 29 '29 570w

PROUST, MARCEL. Cities of the plain [Sodome et Gomorrhe]; tr. by C. K. Scott Moncrieff. ltd ed 2v 352;384p $15 Boni

28-3977

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

"A book to make you shout with laughter or wriggle with exquisite pain, and Proust is an enthusiasm which one may occasionally criticize but for which there is never need to blush." Francis Birrell

+ Nation and Ath 44:916 Mr 30 '29 800w

"The point for the literary critic is simply whether the author has treated his topic with artistic skill and restraint. And in this regard, though there is something to admire in the psychological analysis of his degenerates, and in the kind of poetry into which he sublimates their malady, the total effect is unprofitable and insipid. As a rule there is but little to reconcile one to the repulsiveness of the theme." E. E. K.

— + New Statesman 32:700 Mr 9 '29 1200w

"Proust's mind has little formative impulse; it burrows like a mole, and its underground meanderings leave us gasping for air. The sense of effort lies heavy over the whole work. That the book has greatness and passages of beauty redeeming its ugliness none will deny. But the mind demands of literature something that it can approve as well as something that it can enjoy; and in 'Cities of the Plain,' so full of dignitaries, so devoid of dignity, this instinct finds little to satisfy its craving."

— + Sat R 147:512 Ap 13 '29 1350w

Times [London] Lit Sup p239 Mr 21 '29 600w

PROWSE, RICHARD ORTON. Prophet's wife. 320p $2.50 Houghton [7s 6d Gollancz]

The character of John Hepworth is slowly and painstakingly unfolded, chiefly from the point of view of his wife, Susan. The greatest thing in life to Hepworth is the church he is building. To Susan the thing of most importance is their relation to each other as human beings and as husband and wife. She understands his point of view. He wakes at last to hers. The situation is on the point of being clarified when Hepworth gives his life to save a little child.

"The Chinese sage Lao-tze said, 'One cannot stand on tiptoe forever,' and half way through 'The Prophet's Wife' one feels one's self too long on tiptoe to hold the thread of the tale. Another novel one might lay down, but Mr. Prowse has the art of writing in his bones and at his finger tips. He may be disappointing, but he will not be dull."

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Ag 11 '29 100w

"Our usual prejudice in favor of English fiction has weakened a trifle since reading this ponderous novel. It may be all the British reviewers claim—subtle, sincere and intellectually exciting. For the American mind it is rather heavy going."

— Boston Transcript p2 Ag 25 '29 500w

PROWSE, R: O.—Continued

"The story proceeds with beautiful ease. Mr. Prowse's method of making a formal introduction of each person as the occasion requires, and pausing then and there to fill out a passport descriptive of his physical and mental characteristics, derives from an old and familiar tradition, yet is somehow saved from being hackneyed." Gertrude Diamant

+ N Y World p11m D 22 '29 380w

"Mr. Prowse has done a very fine piece of work and has made a type which is hard enough to believe, even in fact, both comprehensible and living in fiction."

+ Outlook 152:467 Jl 17 '29 150w

"A wholesome sincerity and fearless honesty mark the interplay of character as well as the author's own treatment of his subjects. The psychological method is not an easy one to follow, becoming at intervals involved, repetitious, and even dull, but nevertheless in the hands of a skilful writer it can be used with telling effect. Much brilliant, even beautiful, writing has gone into the making of 'The Prophet's Wife,' and the handling of this age-old theme is subtle and sympathetic." Douglas Tyacke

+ Sat R of Lit 6:4 Jl 27 '29 400w

"John Hepworth, the founder of a new ethical society, is that rare thing in fiction—a great man whose greatness we are actually made to feel. . . Mr. Prowse demonstrates again that the oldest theme can become new in the hands of a genuine literary artist."

+ Spec 142:247 F 16 '29 70w

Times [London] Lit Sup p96 F 7 '29 480w

PRYDE, ANTHONY, pseud. See Weekes, A. R.

PUSHKIN, ALEKSANDR SERGIEEVICH. Captain's daughter; tr. from the Russian by Natalie Duddington; with an introd. by Edward Garnett. 212p $2 Viking press [6s Dent]

29-17534

An historical novel dealing with the adventures in love and in war of young Grinyov, who is detailed to service in distance Orenburg. This is the first adequate translation of Pushkin's historical romance to appear in English. The novel, written in 1836, shows clearly enough the prevailing enthusiasm for historical fiction of any kind, and of the type of the Waverley Novels, then beginning to enjoy their long popularity in Russia, in particular." (Times [London] Lit Sup)

---

Booklist 26:86 N '29

Reviewed by Dorothy Brewster

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 Jl 14 '29 350w

"It is a story of tender love, not only between the man and the maid, but between the man and his devoted servant, a serf, told with that charity, that tenderness and that vividness which has made Pushkin's name synonymous with the best in modern Russian literature." S. L. R.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Ap 6 '29 480w

"There are few descriptions, and none that are not absolutely necessary; and the plot, though arbitrary and artificial, moves rapidly through battles, murders, and brutal deaths. Although the hero, heroine, and villain are all mere types, there are some delicious minor characters. This highly coloured little book could be amplified into a first-rate film."

Nation and Ath 44:300 N 24 '28 150w

"This little novel is as good as R. L. S. at his best. There is the same economy in characterization, the same forward flow of a rapidly developing plot that has made 'Kidnapped' and 'Treasure Island' deservedly popular. All the elements of a first-rate adventure story are here." H. G.

+ N Y Evening Post p5s Je 8 '29 290w

"Pushkin is one of the first writers to have treated romantic material with a realistic hand. Rather than profusion of background, his method is the sharp detail, the rapid stroke. When he makes use of incident to fill out a character, it is not melodramatic (except in the case of the villain of the piece), but conversational, humorous, matter-of-fact. Even the most conventionally romantic or melodramatic crises are lacking in florid gestures and told without special striving after effect." L: Kronenberger

+ N Y Times p7 Ap 28 '29 620w

Pratt p41 summer '29

"The characters are sketched in sure, bold strokes, but the story, though readable enough, never rises into the first class. The translation is adequate, but of the poetry that one associates with Pushkin's name there is no trace." L. P. Hartley

— + Sat R 146:478 O 13 '28 220w

"No words are wasted in this old tale. Nothing is set down merely for the sake of words. Everything is direct, pithy, and to the point. A good old story, with life, loyalty, and laughter in it, which lives, even after its hundred years, almost as if it were new." Arthur Ruhl

+ Sat R of Lit 6:181 S 28 '29 560w

"This translation of Pushkin's most important piece of fiction is welcome for more than one reason. . . It is without question a gem of a story. If it has not the excitement of, for instance, 'The Queen of Spades,' the most celebrated of Pushkin's shorter stories, it has a larger and warmer humanity."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p754 O 18 '28 520w

PUTERSCHEIN, HERMANN, pseud. See Dwiggins, W: A.

PUTNAM, SAMUEL. François Rabelais; man of the renaissance; a spiritual biography. 530p il $3.50 J. Cape & H. Smith

B or 92 Rabelais, François 29-23766

"That sixteenth-century Frenchman, François Rabelais, trained in theology, law, and medicine, who has given an adjective to the English language, is the subject of this biography. . . Samuel Putnam stresses the erudition of Rabelais. For it was that, in his opinion, and not the obscenities of his age, that was amazing and distinctive in his work."—R of Rs

---

"The work is not without a few errors: there are over a score of misprints in the first volume and half as many mistranslations." L: P. Shanks

Bookm 70:217 O '29 750w

"Mr. Putnam is interested in telling the story of Rabelais's life against the background of his times, a task which he executes marvelously well. . . Working with the completest grasp of present day scholarship he builds up an excellent introduction to the period. To be sure he may be accused of riding his hobby rather hard, for it is impossible to say with positiveness that just because so and so were characteristic intellectual currents of the time Rabelais was affected by them. Yet he usually makes out a convincing case for his points." C. H. Grattan

N Y World p10m N 24 '29 500w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw

R of Rs 80:22 D '29 100w

PYKE, RICHARD. Lives and deaths of Roland Greer. 312p $2.50 Boni

"Freud, one feels, is the villain of this piece—although some might call him the hero. His shadow lurks, at any rate, behind every twisted corner. Roland Greer is the tormented son of a violent and vixenish mother who at one moment fawns on her children, at another lashes them with cruelty. A neurotic weakling, he is the victim of his family's will to power. His soul is torn between masculine and feminine domination, as represented chiefly by his mother and brother, and his final effort to achieve an integral life of his own culminates in a particularly nasty form of suicide."—New Repub

---

"Such emotions do not make pleasant reading, but the motivation for them is painstakingly and convincingly shown. Mr. Pyke's uncompromising, dispassionate, almost scholarly treatment only adds to the effectiveness of his theme, and the result is a remarkably powerful novel."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Ap 21 '29 220w

"Mr. Pyke proves himself an able psychologist and story teller."
+ Boston Transcript p8 Mr 30 '29 130w

"Mr. Pyke juggles pretentiously with psychological theories, but his novel has, nevertheless, a certain diseased vitality. If he can bring himself to hurl his textbooks out the window, the result may be profitable to literature." E. H. W.
— + New Repub 58:315 My 1 '29 120w

"The cleverness and psychological subtlety of this novel make it well worthy of comment, but scarcely compensate for its unrelieved gloom."
+ — New Statesman 31:520 Jl 28 '28 140w

"Another of those studies in morbid psychology which seem to have become the special domain of the first novel."
— N Y Times p9 Je 9 '29 500w
N Y World p11m Ap 7 '29 280w

"There is no disputing its cleverness or its originality. . . Though the style is often clumsy and diffuse, there are few pages which do not show some signal instance of Mr. Pyke's power to think and feel for himself. But he puts more faith in his nerves than in his imagination, more faith in his imagination than in his experience; and he trusts his own lightest word (and Freud's) rather than the voice of all the ages." L. P. Hartley
+ — Sat R 146:217 Ag 18 '28 450w

"In a good cause the reader might suffer reactions and think to have gained some understanding of humanity, to have downed a bitter, yet tonic, dose. But 'The Lives and Deaths of Roland Greer' definitely lacks a width of scope relating its details to humanity."
— Sat R of Lit 5:1006 My 11 '29 230w

"Really, it is all very dismal. The driving intensity of Mr. Pyke's manner is undeniably impressive, but it is to be hoped that the kind sun will be permitted to shine a little in the pages of his next book."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p566 Ag 2 '28 350w

PYLE, WILLIAM HENRY. Training children; principles and practice. 206p $1.75 Century
136.7 Children—Management 29-4876

The first part of the book contains a plain statement of the psychological principles involved in the training and development of children. On these principles are based the answers to the problems of parents which make up the second and briefer portion of the book. The author is Professor of educational psychology at Detroit teachers' college.

Bookm 69:vi Je '29 150w
Boston Transcript p4 Mr 30 '29 400w

"Soundly based in the principles of psychology, this book is nevertheless so lucidly and simply written in its explanations and discussions and is so practical in its applications that any one charged with the care of children could read it with benefit."
+ N Y Times p12 Ap 7 '29 350w
St Louis 27:260 S '29

"In the light of our growing knowledge of the child's emotional needs and strivings, it is hard to justify a training program which relies so strongly on repressions, enforcements, and moral suasion and fails to recognize the value in educating for independent choice. . . In Part II, the author asks and answers questions related to specific handling of problems. Some parents may find this useful, especially as the language is simple and the style direct." A. D. Taggart
— + Survey 62:371 Je 15 '29 190w

Q

QUEEN, ELLERY, pseud. Roman hat mystery. 325p $2 Stokes [7s 6d Gollancz]
29-26789

At the news of a spectacular murder in a large theatre during the second act of a play, Inspector Richard Queen and his son Ellery are on the job. The essential clue is the missing silk top-hat of the victim. Blackmail appears as the motive, and by ingenious methods of deduction, Ellery Queen tracks down the murderer.

"Entertaining and original enough for the most particular crime reader."
+ Bookm 70:xxxiv O '29 70w

"A satisfactory thriller, its chief hazards being unreal dialogue and awkward management of the opening scene." Will Cuppy
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p26 S 15 '29 150w

"The real charm of the story lies in the fact that the characters—and especially the two Queens—are real people, whose plans and difficulties interest us much more because the people themselves are interesting."
+ Boston Transcript p5 O 11 '29 230w
New Statesman 33:654 S 7 '29 70w
N Y Times p38 S 22 '29 180w

"In spite of minor defects—such as a theater-manager who doesn't know whether he has a seat-plan and a motive used not long ago in another theatrical mystery—this is a competent piece of work for those who like their detective stories straight, though shrewd customers will be pretty well along the right track by the time they reach the interpolated note that tells them the evidence is all in."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:262 O 12 '29 150w

"This is a well-planned detective story. The puzzle is kept clearly before the reader's mind from beginning to end, with no love-story or by-plot to distract him, not even sympathy with the victim."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p670 Ag 29 '29 270w

QUIGLEY, HUGH, and CLARK, R. T. Republican Germany; a political and economic study. 318p il $5 Dodd [15s Methuen]
943.085 Germany—Politics and government. Germany—Economic conditions 28-25212
For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

Reviewed by W: K. Stewart
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ja 20 '29 1050w
New Statesman 32:389 D 29 '28 540w
Pratt p29 winter '29

"The new story of the new economic Germany as told by Quigley and Clark offers an intellectual excitement of a rare kind. This book seems the most profound of the list, especially in its analysis of the new industry." Leon Whipple
+ Survey 61:611 F '29 180w

"Nowhere in English have we seen a more thorough and satisfactory analysis of post-war German economic life; occasionally it is too optimistic, and probably would be less so, were the authors writing now instead of more than a year ago." S. B. Fay
+ Yale R n s 18:808 summer '29 320w

QUINN, ARTHUR HOBSON; BAUGH, ALBERT CROLL; and HOWE, WILL DAVID, eds. Literature of America; an anthology of prose and verse; v 1, From the beginning to the civil war. 715,34p $3 Scribner
810.8 American literature—Collections 29-14190

Printed in two columns on good thin paper, the book is the first volume of an anthology of American prose and verse. It covers the period from the beginning of American literature to the Civil war. Contains literary and biographical notes and an index.

QUINN, A. H., and others—*Continued

---

Reviewed by B. R. Redman
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Ja 5 '30 80w

"The real value of the present anthology does not obtain primarily from the great names represented. The real value of the book lies in the endeavor of the editors to represent adequately the development of American literature in all its periods, so that 'while the large figures who established our literature at home and abroad during the first half of the nineteenth century should be properly emphasized, more complete recognition than has hitherto been given should be accorded to their predecessors in the Colonial and Revolutionary periods, to their successors in the later nineteenth century, and to the many original creative artists who, during the twentieth century, have widened the scope of poetry, the short story, the essay and the drama in matter, form and spirit.'" Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p7m Jl 6 '29 450w
St Louis 27:338 D '29

"On the whole, an intelligent plan has been well carried out. The reader will obtain a comprehensive picture of the growth of our literature in its main branches—poetry, the novel, the essay and history—from the earliest American colonization to the Civil war."
+ Springf'd Republican p12 Jl 5 '29 250w

R

RADIGUET, RAYMOND. Count's ball; tr. by Malcolm Cowley. 243p $2.50 Norton
29-23796

A novel by an abnormal, eighteen year old genius, who startled literary Paris with his first book, "Le diable au corps." "The count's ball" is simple in plot, severe in outline, and coldly objective in characterization. Catherine and Count Anne d'Orgel live contentedly enough until the arrival of François de Séryeuse, who falls in love with Catherine, and she with him. Catherine confesses her love for François to her husband, who in modern fashion, receives the news calmly. On this note the story ends.

---

"Intensely modern in its viewpoint, it avoids the mannerisms and strange technic so prevalent in France. Radiguet followed the old tradition in his picture of 'people who can be taken seriously.'"
+ Bookm 70:xv Ja '30 100w

"Radiguet succeeds astonishingly well in making us forget his age. It is extraordinary, not that one so young should feel so deeply the subtlest implications of a situation, nor even that he should understand them, but that he should be able simply and with such consummate skill to recreate his situation to the remotest echo, that is indeed extraordinary." Edwin Seaver
+ N Y Evening Post p12m N 9 '29 270w

Reviewed by F: F. Van de Water
— N Y Evening Post p8m N 30 '29 70w

"There is nothing either immature or precocious about Raymond Radiguet's The Count's Ball, although the author died at twenty. It's an interesting specimen of the 'new classicism' in post-war French literature,—a study of the usual French triangle, but on a highly moral, and at the same time highly sophisticated plane." W. R. Brooks
Outlook 153:548 D 4 '29 60w

RADIO industry; the story of its development, as told by leaders of the industry to the students of the Graduate school of business administration, George F. Baker foundation, Harvard university; with an introd. by David Sarnoff; and a foreword by Dr. Anton de Haas. 330p il $5 Shaw, A.W.

621.384 Radio. Radio broadcasting 28-30614

"One of the most complete and valuable accounts of the radio industry hitherto published, in many respects the only one of its kind, will be found in the lectures given at Harvard University during the academic year of 1927-28. Thirteen experts, headed by David Sarnoff, vice president and general manager of the Radio Corporation of America, tell the story. There are chapters on the development of the radio art and radio industry since 1920, on research and manufacture in the radio field, on the early history of broadcasting in the United States and on such general topics as 'The National Magazine of the Air,' 'Distribution and Merchandising of Radio Equipment,' 'Advertising Radio to the General Public,' and 'Applications of Radio Principles and Devices in Industry,' the book closing with a statement of 'Radio Principles.'"—Boston Transcript

---

Reviewed by Irvin Stewart
Ann Am Acad 143:385 My '29 90w
Booklist 26:107 D '29

"An intensely interesting account of probably the most remarkable single manifestation of the modern spirit. . . It should be said that the Radio Corporation of America dominates this book, although it does not dominate radio to anything like the same extent; but this does not detract much from the historical balance of the presentation, while it does mean that the topics are treated authoritatively by men of the greatest competence." H. M. Parshley
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 Mr 24 '29 550w
Boston Transcript p2 F 2 '29 700w

RAGATZ, LOWELL JOSEPH. Fall of the planter class in the British Caribbean, 1763-1833; a study in social and economic history. ltd ed 520p $5 Century

972.9 West Indies, British 29-908

"The subject dealt with is the decay of an oligarchy which not only ruled these British colonies, but was the most powerful influence in Great Britain during the middle of the eighteenth century. The abolition of slavery has been generally accepted as the cause which brought about the fall of the planter class, but Dr. Ragatz shows it was only one, and not the most important, of the factors."—Boston Transcript

---

"The index is of the sort that the reader gratefully consults, since it serves the purpose for which indexes are supposed to exist: there is no jungle of mere numbers placed under large general headings, but for each page reference a contents item is given. The long critical bibliography indicates that the author ranged far in search of material, and gives the impression that he used all of the important manuscript sources as well as the printed ones." M. W. Williams
+ Am Hist R 35:131 O '29 800w

"Mr. Ragatz has painstakingly combed the sources and traces the story of the decline of the islands with a steady hand."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 My 12 '29 150w
Boston Transcript p2 My 8 '29 350w

"The author's acquaintance with the multifarious sources, primary and secondary, for the history of his subject would be evident even without his excellent critical bibliography, which should prove useful to students of any aspect of British West Indian history within the period covered by this investigation. . . A notable feature of the book is a series of statistical charts relating mainly to British West Indian trade." R. L. Schuyler

+ Pol Sci Q 44:636 D '29 450w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 79:19 Ap '29 180w

RAINE, WILLIAM MACLEOD. Famous sheriffs and western outlaws. 294p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

364 West—Biography. Sheriffs. Outlaws. Crime and criminals

The writer of a long list of Western stories of fiction and fact, sketches in brief the violent careers of some famous outlaws and the sheriffs who hunted them down.

Booklist 26:14 O '29

Bookm 70:xviii O '29 170w

Boston Transcript p3 Je 19 '29 520w

"The fifteen biographies and sketches are tersely and graphically presented and they are an authentic as well as an interesting contribution to the Americana of a vanished frontier." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p9m My 18 '29 120w

N Y Times p20 My 26 '29 420w

"The excellent thing is that he has here swept all the known outlaws into one corral, has placed no absurd or exaggerated estimate on their doings, has been swiftly descriptive and wisely extractive. . . Moreover there is no sickly sentimentality, no cutting out of the unlovely aspects of his hard cases. . . Mr. Raine has played a square game with his readers." C: J. Finger
+ N Y World p7m Je 2 '29 250w

"If you're interested in reading of the Wild West when it was really wild, you won't want to miss this one." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 152:311 Je 19 '29 140w

St Louis 27:306 N '29

"The glamour surrounding Billy the Kid is somewhat dissipated in this book. Mr. Raine's story of the desperado is in serious conflict with current tales concerning this fire-eating, quick-shooting son of a gun; and Mr. Raine would seem to know what he is talking about."
+ Sat R of Lit 5:1079 Je 1 '29 230w

RALEIGH, SIR WALTER. Poems; ed. by A. M. C. Latham. 200p $5 Houghton [16s Constable]

821 [29-24773]

"This obviously definite edition of Raleigh's poems will be welcomed by scholars. Besides the excellent introduction, the volume contains the poems known to us in printed books, poems printed for the first time from manuscripts, poems doubtfully ascribed to Raleigh, and a textual introduction, with notes and index to first lines."—Boston Transcript

"This is an excellent book, a model of good editing. . . The old spelling is strictly adhered to, and the book is nicely printed and tastefully bound."
+ Bookm 70:xviii D '29 110w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 S 15 '29 50w

Boston Transcript p2 S 11 '29 200w

" 'There is and always has been,' said Miss Latham, 'something legendary, something fantastic and not quite credible about him.' 'A lonely and an enigmatic figure,' she calls him. His poems, now for the first time presented as nearly as possible as they were written, may be read for what clues they afford to the enigma, for their deliberate or involuntary confessions. But they are also to be read for the undeniable if fitful gleams of beauty which they contain."
+ Christian Science Monitor p10 Ag 28 '29 480w

"Miss Latham's task has been a very difficult one, and she deserves much credit for the patience and industry with which she has sorted out all the old bones, and reconstructed from a mass of foreign elements bits of the original skeleton. But what of the results? At the most six poems of any value, if we except the long and difficult 'Booke of the Ocean to Scinthia.' . . Miss Latham has chosen to preserve all the awkward and often absurd spellings. When a text is based on the work of a hurried and not always intelligent scribe or compositor, then an editor should have courage enough to change the v's into u's, and the y's into i's; by doing so he will be blessed by ten thousand readers for every pedant he offends."
— Nation and Ath 45:684 Ag 24 '29 620w

"It is a work not likely to be superseded—one, in fact, which we need hardly hesitate to call final. There is but a single omission, and that a wise one. Miss Latham does not attempt to elucidate the terrible obscurities with which many of the poems are crowded. Most of them are probably beyond elucidation; and it is far from certain that the meaning, if found, would be worth the search."
+ New Statesman 33:474 Jl 20 '29 600w

"She precedes the poems with a generous (and illuminating) introduction, and, besides giving notes on the poems themselves, also lists every extant printed or manuscript copy of the poem. Thus the volume is one for the student of Elizabethan literature as well as for the reader who cares to have a textually accurate collection of Raleigh's work."
+ N Y Times p2 O 27 '29 900w

"Miss Latham has done her work painstakingly and as a rule intelligently."
+ — Sat R 147:836 Je 22 '29 1250w

"It is a long time since we have seen so fine and living a piece of scholarship."
+ Spec 143:496 O 12 '29 170w

RALSTON, JACKSON HARVEY. International arbitration, from Athens to Locarno. 417p $5 Stanford univ. press

341.6 Arbitration, International—History. International law and relations—History
29-9590

"Mr. Ralston's well known work on the 'Law and Practice of International Tribunals' aimed to digest the decisions of arbitral courts. The present volume attempts an historical summary of arbitration treaties, and the general movement for the pacific settlement of disputes. After discussing general principles of judicial settlement such as the difference between an arbitral and non-arbitral dispute, Judge Ralston discusses the history of arbitration among the Greeks and in later times. Concluding chapters discuss the Hague Peace Conference and the Permanent Court of International Justice."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Reviewed by J. P. Chamberlain
Am Hist R 35:150 O '29 330w

"No one work has appeared thus far which does full justice to the growing subject of international arbitration. The present study is no exception, although the reviewer feels that it excels all other works on this general subject, specially that of M. Politis." J: G. Hervey
— Ann Am Acad 145:205 S '29 550w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Je 16 '29 200w

"Both abstract and concrete aspects of the subject are taken into account in a volume well calculated to facilitate a better understanding of what should be meant by judicial settlements between the nations than has hitherto prevailed." E. N.
+ Boston Transcript p8 Je 15 '29 680w

Nation 129:528 N 6 '29 200w

Reviewed by J: Carter
Outlook 153:30 S 4 '29 220w

"It is not the usual sketchy history, written for purely ironic purposes, but a solid and distinctly factual work, considering rather briefly theories and history, and more carefully principles, problems and cases. . . It should be of interest to the practicing lawyer, to the idealist in the cause of peace, and to statesmen who have the interests of their states in mind." Clyde Eagleton
+ Pol Sci Q 44:595 D '29 900w

RALSTON, J. H.—Continued
Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 79:10 Je '29 110w

"Where Mr. Ralston allowed his work to get pretty thin in this reviewer's judgment is in the fact that he seldom handles his historic material critically...In his historical section the author is markedly inadequate at points. . . These criticisms may seem captious and unreasonably detailed; but they are offered because Mr. Ralston's work is so very useful and complete that the absence of the little more that is needed to make it almost the last word of its kind is to be regretted." D. A.
+ — World Tomorrow 12:472 N '29 850w

RAMMELKAMP, CHARLES HENRY. Illinois college; a centennial history, 1829-1929. 605p il $7.50 Yale univ. press [35s Milford]
378.73 Illinois college 29-19

"Illinois College is celebrating its centennial this year, and this comprehensive and detailed account of its history, written by the president of the institution, is offered as a part of the celebration. Dr. Rammelkamp portrays interestingly the pioneer background of the time and the events which led to the establishment of the college, in which a band of five young men from Yale bore an important part. He not only tells the full story of its growth as an educational institution and of its relations with educational developments in the Middle West, but he also goes into much detail in the inner history of the college."—N Y Times

---

"There is little embellishment and no attempt at fine writing, but the cause of education and history is rendered an important service by such a study." A. C. Cole
+ Am Hist R 35:184 O '29 400w

"Told with the contagious enthusiasm of one in love with his subject, and with the well-ordered technique of the scientific historian. Since 1905, Dr. Rammelkamp has been President of the College, so that from 1902 on, the narrative is practically autobiographical." F. B.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ja 9 '29 850w
N Y Times p12 Ja 13 '29 200w

"There is much in this six hundred page volume which will interest only the alumni and teachers of the college; but there is much also which will be of value to students of higher education, and particularly of its Middle Western history."
Sat R of Lit 5:976 My 4 '29 400w
Times [London] Lit Sup p187 Mr 7 '29 180w

RAND, EDWARD KENNARD. Founders of the middle ages. 365p $4 Harvard univ. press [18s Oxford]
940.1 Civilization, Medieval. Literature, Medieval. Middle ages 28-21811

"Professor Rand [in his Lowell institute lectures] brings out clearly that the Middle Ages were not a period of barbaric ignorance, but a period of notable achievement on which in many ways modern civilization depends. He portrays the leaders of that period, men like St. Ambrose, the mystic; St. Jerome, the humanist; Boethius, the first of the scholastics, and St. Augustine, as a precursor, in some respects, of Dante. There are chapters on 'The Church and Pagan Culture,' 'The New Poetry,' 'The New Education' in their relationships to both the past and the future."—Boston Transcript

---

"Thoughtful, beautifully written, with a fine mingling of humor and sarcasm, whimsical and urbane, it is a work of popularization by a ripe scholar who has, by long carrying of the burden in the heat of the day, won the right to speak. Dr. Rand has proved once again that even the modern humanist can write a book that the uninitiated layman will enjoy reading, a quality which he ascribes to the 'humanists' of whom he wrote." A. P. Evans
+ Am Hist R 34:797 Jl '29 1100w
Boston Transcript p2 D 8 '28 230w

"Professor Rand's book is written in a popular vein, which does not, however, conceal his distinguished scholarship. It is humanism in its highest sense. The reader is lured from chapter to chapter by an interest surpassing that of fiction." B. M. K.
+ Cath World 129:248 My '29 400w

"Like all that comes from Professor Rand's pen, this work abounds with erudition; but an erudition illuminated by effulgence of imagination and adorned with that happy gift of expression for which he is the object of generous envy by those who know him. But the load of learning is relegated to notes to each chapter in the back of the volume. Not the least pleasurable item in the book is the irony which is sometimes found." J. W. Thompson
+ Class Philol 24:208 Ap '29 720w

"The reader will find little new or novel in presentation in these lectures, but he will pass some delightful hours traveling under the direction of a sympathetic yet critical guide, through a period whose importance and fascination is alas too often now little appreciated." I. W. Raymond
+ Hist Outlook 20:96 F '29 330w
Reviewed by S. J. Case
J Religion 9:135 Ja '29 720w

"For a work of popularization the 'Founders of the Middle Ages' is extraordinarily accurate, and doubtless its end justifies its manner of exposition and its excursions into modern instances." R: McKeon
+ — Nation 128:430 Ap 10 '29 900w

"This is an illuminating and delightful book. Addressing himself, not to specialists, but to a general if superior audience, Professor Rand tempers the wind of his learning by anecdote and humor. But though his touch is light, his substance is weighty." J. B. Fletcher
+ New Repub 57:197 Ja 2 '29 320w
Pratt p31 summer '29
St Louis 27:272 S '29

"The student of the Middle Ages will find much to chew on. But the lover of literature, medievalist or not, will value not less the easy, lucid prose, the vivid illustrations, the sympathetic imagination, the deft byplay of caustic irony and genial wisdom which are in the best tradition of that humanism their author illustrates and serves." Garrett Mattingly
+ Sat R of Lit 5:724 Mr 2 '29 480w
Springf'd Republican p6 My 20 '29 900w

"The book is to be commended to every student of letters: but in mentioning Dr. Rand as one of the finest classical scholars and humanists of our time we may be permitted to add that we expect from him something more substantial than this book or than his charming little introduction to Ovid, which was published a year or two ago."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p200 Mr 14 '29 1000w

"His book is scholarly, readable, and eminently interesting. It deals with a subject about which there is much false information, and it is to be recommended as a work of importance for its additions to our knowledge of a little-known time." L. W. Eshelman
+ Yale R n s 18:819 summer '29 560w

RANDALL, JOHN HERMAN. Our changing civilization; how science and the machine are reconstructing modern life. 362p $3 Stokes
901 Civilization. Science. Machinery 29-8279

The theme of the book is the change that has been wrought in modern life by the developments of science and the machine. "How long can the great traditions that came down to us from the past, our heritage of religion and moral ideals, of economic and political and artistic thought and institutions, continue to survive in a world where the machine has created for us a new environment and science a new universe?"

---

"Contains a most ingenious and absolutely essential historical review of the conditions from which our present form of civilization has emerged. . . Mr. Randall never loses himself and properly assumes that under his confident leadership his readers will easily follow him. He furnishes no references in foot-notes or otherwise, no bibliography or index. Any one somewhat versed in the history of thought will accept the reliability of his information." J. H. Robinson

+ Am Hist R 35:85 O '29 740w

Booklist 26:25 O '29

Bookm 69:x Je '29 180w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ap 21 '29 200w

Boston Transcript p6 Ap 13 '29 550w

"Among the many current evaluations of our civilization, diagnoses of its disorders and estimates of prospects, none is more searching in its analysis or more sanely optimistic with reference to the ultimate outcome." W. E. Garrison

+ Christian Century 46:918 Jl 17 '29 850w

"If Professor Randall's purpose is to reach the average man, I have a feeling that the book must fail. It contains too much of the language of the scholar and not enough that of the street. . . In the latter half of the book he does rather better. His language is not only simpler, but there is more of novelty. In his striving for effect, however, there are occasional lapses into sub-Menckenese." P: H. Odegard

— + Hist Outlook 20:303 O '29 950w

Nation 129:282 S 11 '29 270w

"The book does its job very effectively. The style is clear and lacks the prevalent hysteria; there is a sense of proportion through the whole. . . By dint of repetition this theory de rerum natura will crush every other; and its general acceptance must be counted as another of the characteristics of 'our changing civilization.' " Max Lerner

+ N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 20 '29 750w

"There is scarcely a page in this volume that deserves attention less than every other page, scarcely a sentence that is not full of suggestion and indispensable to a comprehensive grasp of the message as a whole. This is a work to be read, not reviewed." H: P. Fairchild

+ Sat R of Lit 5:1129 Je 22 '29 650w

Wis Lib Bul 25:193 Je '29

"On the whole he states with searching vividness the problem of how we are to live in a world such as ours has become and is becoming. . . The great value of this book is that it points out in clear detail just where the significant scientific discoveries make a revision of our various concepts necessary. The average person knows that things are out of joint, but he needs a study like this to get an accurate diagnosis." Paul Jones

+ World Tomorrow 12:423 O '29 260w

RANDALL, JOHN HERMAN, and RANDALL, JOHN HERMAN, jr. Religion and the modern world. (Religion and the modern age ser.) 249p $1.50 Stokes

204 Religion 29-10523

A provocative discussion of a changing religion in changing civilization, which deals with the problems of religion and science; religion and industrialism; the compromise of liberalism; the intellectual challenge; and other challenges faced by religion in the modern world.

---

Booklist 26:100 D '29

"The authors with a singular honesty, equaled by a rare equipment of information, tell most of what the plain man would wish and need to be told about religion in our day. They tell much too that professors of the subject either ignore or forget." Irwin Edman

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Je 16 '29 1100w

Boston Transcript p3 Je 22 '29 500w

Cleveland Open Shelf p120 S '29

St Louis 27:304 N '29

Wis Lib Bul 25:272 Jl '29

"The book, despite its weaknesses, is a real contribution to the progress of religious transition." Paul Jones

+ World Tomorrow 12:522 D '29 320w

RANDALL-MACIVER, DAVID. Italy before the Romans. 159p il $2 (6s) Oxford

913.37 Italy—Antiquities [29-11743]

"This little volume gives a succinct yet readable account of Italy's pre-Latin civilization. In a hundred and fifty-seven pages of text it tells the modern American enough of the ancient Etruscan definitely to place him on the map of the Italian peninsula, from neolithic days to the advent of the famous twin-suckling wolf. The basis of Dr. MacIver's work is archeological."—N Y Evening Post

---

N Y Evening Post p9m F 2 '29 60w

Reviewed by I: Goldberg

N Y World p11m Mr 24 '29 250w

"Dr. MacIver is sober and reserved in judgment and rightly distrustful of plausible theories. He writes with a full knowledge of the archæological evidence and in a lucid style, sparing the technicalities which obscure some writers."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p100 F 7 '29 200w

RASCOE, BURTON. Bookman's daybook; ed. with an introd. by C. Hartley Grattan. 305p $3 Liveright

814 Literature—History and criticism. Authors 29-7620

Thru the years 1922 to 1924 while literary editor of the New York Herald-Tribune Mr Rascoe wrote the Daybook from which these selections are taken. The present book consists chiefly of candid and always interesting comment on literary celebrities, their personal appearance and conversation, and of critical estimates of their work and its importance in American letters.

---

Booklist 25:386 Jl '29

"His running comment on American writing and writers of his time is one of the best things of its kind that have ever appeared in a newspaper. It isn't merely that there is no stereotype in it; there is intelligence, there is intimacy of the mind, there is vitality and high spirits." W: R. Benét

+ Bookm 69:440 Je '29 600w

"He is, I venture to assert, the most gifted journalist of his generation. He treats every topic as news. Here in the Daybook you will see him discovering Jane Austen and T. S. Eliot with the same happy surprise. Both of them have just happened—to him." Isabel Paterson

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Mr 24 '29 1300w

Boston Transcript p2 My 8 '29 320w

"That something so ephemeral as a newspaper feature could be, after five or six years, as fresh and amusing as if it were written today is what makes 'A Bookman's Day Book' remarkable. It is one of the most delightful experiences of the literary year to open the book, just anywhere. Something amusing and alluring is sure to greet you." Fanny Butcher

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 My 4 '29 260w

"The volume must take its place among the valuable records of twentieth-century American literature and life."

+ Nation 128:513 Ap 24 '29 200w

"He brings to it all his shrewdness, his audacity, his humor, his extraordinary memory and his undiscourageable enthusiasm for literature." Edmund Wilson

+ New Repub 59:49 My 29 '29 1550w

N Y Times p11 Je 23 '29 380w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell

No Am 227:adv My '29 150w

"Full of information and gusto."

+ Outlook 151:556 Ap 3 '29 40w

RASCOE, BURTON—*Continued

St Louis 27:268 S '29

Reviewed by G. T. Hellman

Sat R of Lit 5:910 Ap 20 '29 520w

"Mr. Rascoe is evidently an amiable and intelligent journalist, not exactly a specialist in literature, but a man capable of thinking and of writing sensitively."

Springf'd Republican p10 Mr 23 '29 280w

World Tomorrow 12:426 O '29 120w

RASHLEIGH, RALPH, pseud. Adventures of an outlaw; the memoirs of Ralph Rashleigh, a penal exile in Australia, 1825-1844; with introd. notes by Joseph Wood Krutch and the Earl of Birkenhead. 349p il $3.50 (7s 6d) J. Cape & H. Smith

364 Crime and criminals—Great Britain. Australia—Exiles 29-15465

"The Adventures of Ralph Rashleigh is the story of a convict sentenced to transportation in 1825, of how he served part of his sentence, and the adventures he had before the remainder was remitted. His adventures include a spell in the coal mines at Newcastle, a month or two among the lime-burners, innumerable floggings, some weeks as cook to a gang of bushrangers, four years living among the aborigines, the rescue of two castaways, his pardon and honourable death in a civil career." —Spec

---

"It is well told. The English is simple and direct. There is a wise variety in the narrative. At timely intervals brief interludes of peace are offered to whet the appetite for further cruelty. In his singleness of purpose Rashleigh is a modern. His intention is to shock. By way of heightening the savagery which he is made to witness or endure, his character is represented as never having lost the finer sensibilities of a gentleman and a scholar. This device is effective but it makes the account less credible." C. A. Chapman

+ Bookm 70:223 O '29 600w

"The editor has produced a volume with an authentic style of its own, a flavor obviously not of our days, yet intensely convincing. But whether Giacomo di Rosenberg was as trustworthy as Messrs. Cape and Smith is another question. Or possibly Mr. Rashleigh's memory was as creative as that of Aloysius Horn." L: Gannett

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Jl 21 '29 1200w

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p3 Jl 13 '29 1350w

" 'Ralph Rashleigh' is a real contribution to Australian literature, and Mr. C. H. Bertie, the librarian at Sydney, has done well to discover it, but we are not convinced that the publisher was justified in having the whole manuscript 'rewritten.' "

+ Nation and Ath 45:511 Jl 13 '29 440w

"I wish every hard-boiled penologist and crime-cure quack who wants more laws and more punishment could read this book. . . There's not a line of dalliance or pleasance in it; no sex and not literary coasting for space, and it is the most filling feed of hard-bitten and hard-boiled adventure I ever picked up." Jack Black

+ New Repub 60:79 S 4 '29 400w

"The authenticity of the manuscript itself appears to be beyond dispute. . . It cannot be taken seriously as a historical document, but it is very probably a pretty fair, though intentionally lurid, account of the conditions which existed in 'Botany Bay' and its neighbourhood in the early days of the convict settlement. And consequently, in spite of the indiscretion of its 're-writer,' it remains a very interesting, exciting and in some ways valuable book."

+ New Statesman 33:504 Jl 27 '29 600w

" 'Adventures of an Outlaw,' with its basis of essential truth, may be taken in two ways—as an account of the frightful days when New South Wales was utilized for penal servitude and as a moderately good piece of semi-romantic fiction. In composition, besides suggesting Defoe and Cooper, the yarn in places is not unlike the type of pirate story in which a character of lesser depravity than the others is pressed into service, so that in the account this person gains the sympathy of the reader by reason of his comparative virtue." Percy Hutchison

N Y Times p5 Jl 21 '29 1550w

"The reader is never put off by consciousness of a tale cooked up,—written for effect. It is true that Rashleigh, or his first editor, skilfully put the tale together and painted some pictures, but in so far as this has been done it is excellent art." Mark Barr

+ Sat R of Lit 5:1173 Jl 13 '29 1100w

"Though we are permitted to doubt the authenticity of the personal narrative, the record of convict life at the same time must be taken as literally true."

Spec 142:1026 Je 29 '29 200w

Times [London] Lit Sup p549 Jl 11 '29 1350w

RATHLEF-KEILMANN, FRAU HARRIET VON. Anastasia; tr. from the German by F. S. Flint. 262p il $3.50 Brewer [21s Putnam]

B or 92 Anastasia, grand duchess of Russia 29-8520

Since the tragedy of the Romanoff family at Ekaterinburg there have been frequent stories to the effect that the Princess Anastasia escaped the general slaughter and was being sheltered by friends. It has been stated that a young woman who came recently to America is in truth the Princess Anastasia. This book sets forth the evidence on which her claim is based.

---

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 Ap 7 '29 180w

Reviewed by N. H. Dole

Boston Transcript p4 Ap 13 '29 850w

Cleveland Open Shelf p140 N '29

"On the whole, Mrs. von Rathlef-Keilmann's evidence makes it easier to accept than to refute the arguments. But it must be remembered that she is herself convinced, and although she claims to have presented every counter-argument, it is quite possible that subconsciously her conviction should have influenced her trend."

Nation and Ath 44:422 D 15 '28 450w

N Y Times p15 Ap 7 '29 350w

Outlook 151:515 Mr 27 '29 50w

Times [London] Lit Sup p970 D 6 '28 200w

RAVAGE, MARCUS ELI. Five men of Frankfort; the story of the Rothschilds. 341p il $5 Dial press

920 Rothschild family 29-914

The five men of Frankfort are the five sons of Meyer Rothschild, international bankers who at the height of their power, after the Napoleonic wars, had control of the financial strongholds of Europe. The rise of the family from the Frankfort ghetto, its dazzling eminence and later decline is told by Mr Ravage in a way that brings into relief the drama and the romance of the story.

---

"Mr. Ravage's book is more readable than Count Corti's two volumes in that it subordinates a great deal of wearisome financial detail. It is something of an achievement, in a work of this sort, to have eschewed statistics to such an extent." G. T. Hellman

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 Mr 10 '29 850w

" 'Five Men of Frankfort' makes far more dramatic reading than Count Corti's two volumes. For all that, accuracy has not been sacrificed. One thing remains absent, however, the five men of Frankfort do not appear before us as five 'men.' They seem rather the main pieces in some large game of finance. . . It is with externals that Ravage has concerned himself, and in that lies the weakness of his volume." S. H.

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Ap 17 '29 800w

Cleveland Open Shelf p62 Ap '29

"Mr. Ravage has written, in a style that is almost jauntily colloquial, a story of the Rothschilds that reads like a romance. . . If the story gives us an accurate enough account of the Rothschild's methods as recorded by those with whom they had dealings—the archives of the family still remain a sealed work—it gives us, unless we are shrewd enough to read between the lines, a distorted view of the really beneficent role the five brothers played in the world of their day."

+ — New Statesman 33:284 Je 8 '29 230w

"Though well nigh fictional in style, with its leading characters admirably 'humanized,' the story is dependable in all essentials. The historic and social backgrounds are sketched in with telling effect. It is well written as well as popular." F: H. Martens

+ N Y Evening Post p8m Ja 26 '29 520w

Reviewed by L: Rich

N Y Times p14 Je 16 '29 940w

"Much of the material that made Count Corti's two books so heavy has been successfully eliminated. Mr. Ravage has done a worthwhile and delightful piece of work. It deserves your attention." G: Joel

+ N Y World p11m Mr 24 '29 160w

St Louis 27:205 Je '29

Sat R 147:718 My 25 '29 120w

"In this volume there are a few places where the style and treatment would offend even the least fastidious reader. In spite of these defects, however, there is much virtue in the volume. It is not a dull book, by any means. There is an animation and enthusiasm that carries the reader along to the last page. Mr. Ravage has, as well, been most fortunate in the structure that he has selected." J: M. S. Allison

+ Sat R of Lit 5:802 Mr 23 '29 430w

"It is a lively and interesting book, cordially to be commended to all who wish a briefer account of the great financial and political influence of the Rothschilds."

+ Spec 143:421 S 28 '29 100w

"Its contents are vulgar and trivial. The author, who writes in a tone of impudent intimacy, interprets financial genius as unscrupulous smartness, and has no conception of the significance of the Rothschilds in European finance."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p438 My 30 '29 100w

RAVEN, CHARLES EARLE. Wanderer's way. 220p $1.75 Holt [7s 6d Hopkinson]

B or 92 Spiritual life 29-5192

For the help it may be to others Dr Raven, Canon of Liverpool, tells the deeply, almost painfully, intimate story of his personal experience of religion from the tentative searchings of youth to the strong and living faith of his maturity.

Christian Century 46:871 Jl 3 '29 100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p120 S '29

"His book is a remarkable blend of enthusiasm and broad-visioned common sense. As an outspoken psychological record it should be of very great interest to all for whom the question of religion as a vital force has significance."

+ Nation and Ath 44:184 N 3 '28 480w

"A Wanderer's Way is a characteristic utterance of the time, as good an expression as we have had of what has come to be called the Dick Sheppard school of Anglicanism. Nearly every page invites debate, and all the more because Canon Raven plainly implies that he likes nothing better."

New Statesman 32:474 Ja 19 '29 820w

"Dr. Raven's is a very different kind of book from the usual account of religious seeking and experience. For it breathes a healthy zest in life and service, it has a hearty vitality, it is open-minded to all the winds that blow from modern horizons."

+ N Y Times p21 Mr 3 '29 320w

Pratt p35 spring '29

"There must be many of the Canon's friends who will welcome and derive strength from his experience, even if it is not, and cannot be, the experience of everyone. And we would note that there are many shrewd and wise observations on the normal life of a boy at school."

+ Spec 141:605 O 27 '28 160w

"Uncommonly interesting and outspoken autobiography. . . Dr. Raven has written a book which the unconvinced and the unconvincible will do well to read, and for which those who take delight in honesty will be grateful—a psychological and religious document of real importance, marred only by some extravagant obiter dicta."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p744 O 18 '28 1350w

World Tomorrow 13:42 Ja '30 50w

RAWSON, MARION NICHOLL. Country auction. 261p il $5 Dutton

917.4 New England—Social life and customs. Antiques 29-19511

Records the passing of an old New England homestead. Aunt Marthy Ann is left alone in her old age and determines to sell at auction the accumulated treasures of over a hundred years. Her niece comes to help her in the preliminaries and revels in Aunt Marthy Ann's reminiscences as each piece of furniture, silver or glass comes up for classification.

"The author has told the story in the simple and homely fashion in which Aunt Marthy Ann had lived, but she has made of it a book of beautiful spirit."

+ N Y Times p14 O 6 '29 550w

Springf'd Republican p10 N 13 '29 300w

RAY, PRITHWIS CHANDRA. Life and times of C. R. Das. 313p il $5 (12s 6d) Oxford

B or 92 Das, Chitta Renjan. Bengal—History. India—Politics and government [29-5726]

"This personal memoir deals with a great political leader of modern India. The author describes here C. R. Das, the minor poet, the distinguished advocate, and the fiery apostle of revolt, but above all he deals with the man endowed with keener political sagacity than any of India's leaders. It was due to the efforts of C. R. Das, on whom his countrymen bestowed the title of 'Deshbandu,' friend of his country, that the first well organized political party came into existence."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Reviewed by Savel Zimand

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 S 8 '29 300w

"As a background for the life of Chitta Ranjan Das, the history included of necessity treats principally of the growth of the Swaraj party, the relations between viceroys and native leaders and the various bills which were enacted by the British Parliament regarding self-government. Though written by an Indian active against the government and its policies, British viewpoints and personalities are treated throughout with sincerity and fairness." W. E. M.

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 26 '29 830w

"It cannot be said that the puzzle of C. R. Das is resolved in this book. P. C. Ray, who belonged in turn to all the parties in Bengal, was not much in sympathy with Das's mind or character, and could do little to explain the spiritual change of the last years. . . Nevertheless, the fairminded English reader will not come to the end of this book without recognising in Das a man of exceptional character, whose career was of great importance to India, even though its essential failure left Indian Nationalism in the utmost confusion."

RAY, P. C.—Continued
New Statesman 31:542 Ag 4 '28 900w
Times [London] Lit Sup p403 My 31 '28 500w

RAYNAL, MAURICE. Modern French painters; tr. by Ralph Roeder. 275p il $7.50 Brentano's
759.4 Painting, French. Impressionism (art) 28-25752

"From the confusing mass of modernist painters in France M. Raynal has selected fifty 'who have sought to enrich the technic of their art and realize new conceptions of painting.' An introductory essay subdivides the school minutely, so elaborately indeed that it is evident that there is no coherent school at all, but merely so many diverging types of revolt against the Renaissance dogma of art as imitation of nature. There follows an alphabetical catalogue with biographical notices of the painters and citations from their sayings or writings about their ideals of work. This feature is very convenient for reference and introduces a number of interesting painters who are unknown or nearly so even to the up-to-date American amateur. At the end are about one hundred good half-tone cuts, generally two for each artist, alphabetically presented."—Sat R of Lit

---

Reviewed by Paul Horgan
Bookm 69:213 Ap '29 220w

"The text of the monograph is partly critical and partly biographical. The critical summary of the recent succession of spasmodic cults is set forth with the utmost assurance, but in a technical style that will afford little comfort to the lay reader. The biographies are excellent." T: Craven
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 F 24 '29 630w

"M. Raynal's book is one which automatically will have both an immediate and permanent interest, for it gives something of the lives, the beliefs, and usually the author's opinion, of fifty contemporary painters. To be sure its title is misleading, for it leaves out some of the best-known Frenchmen: Bonnard, Denis, Bernard, André, and even Matisse, and includes numbers of Italians, Spaniards, Poles, and Russians. However one cannot but admire the conscientious criticisms of most of the major names of the present day. The author writes, he says, 'to inform and not to flatter.'" Walter Gutman
+ Nation 127:524 N 14 '28 550w

"For those who are trying to see eye to eye with the artists of today, for those who realize that there has been no decline of the great force called contemporary art, this book is thoroughly deserving of attention. . . Considering the difficulties of selecting among the immense mass of artists in Paris today, the choice is really a better one than it may appear, and we are enabled to form a fairly accurate conception of the course of modern art. The adequate work of the translator permits us to follow the author's analysis of his problems." Walter Pach
+ — New Repub 57:303 Ja 30 '29 520w

"The French author indulges in that redoubtable form of exposition which consists in a hotch-potch of abstractions and generalities, and for some unknown reason is considered the scientific method. How much he has suffered at the hands of his translator it is hard to guess. . . The reader will be well advised to turn straight to the excellent reproductions. They omit Matisse and Rouault, but give a wide and up-to-date panorama of contemporary French art."
— + New Statesman 34:supxviii D 7 '29 250w

"In translation, M. Raynal is hard reading, but the well-made book is so conveniently arranged that the student will want it as a supplement to his Coquiot."
+ — Sat R of Lit 5:591 Ja 12 '29 200w

RAYNAL, PAUL. The unknown warrior; a tragedy in 3 acts; tr. by Cecil Lewis. 289p $2.50 Century [7s 6d Methuen]
842 [28-29797]

This three-act tragedy depicts a French poilu who obtains a four days' leave before an action that he knows involves certain death, only to find on arrival at home a message recalling him to the front in four hours. These four hours with his fiancée and his father are packed with an agonized intensity and conflict of emotions.

---

Booklist 25:278 Ap '29

"A far more significant drama than most of those produced in our village during this extraordinary winter." W. P. Eaton
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 F 10 '29 200w
Boston Transcript p3 D 29 '28 230w
Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p11m D 8 '28 110w
Reviewed by Herschel Brickell
No Am 227:adv Ja '29 80w

"It is a beautiful play and yields much." Jane Dransfield
+ Sat R of Lit 5:1113 Je 15 '29 1100w

"Paul Raynal's The Unknown Warrior, received sensationally abroad and only tepidly in New York, emerges in the printed word as a tremendously moving, poetic indictment, lyric and bitter in its beauty, to which one may return again and again as to any fine prose writing, whether it is essentially dramatic or not."
+ Theatre Arts Mo 13:387 My '29 100w
Wis Lib Bul 25:72 F '29

RAYNER, ROBERT MACEY. Story of trade unionism; from the Combination acts to the general strike. 278p il $2.50 (6s) Longmans
331.88 Trade unions—Great Britain. Labor party (Great Britain). General strike, Great Britain, 1926 [29-671]

A concise survey, written by an impartial observer, of the history, aims and accomplishments of trade unionism in England, with a brief outline of its development in other countries.

---

Reviewed by J: R. Commons
Am Hist R 35:169 O '29 200w

"It is an authentic and conscientious piece of work. It is chiefly descriptive and its attempts at interpretation are modest and unobtrusive. The author is also to be commended for the apt and pithy introductory remarks preceding each chapter which explain the salient ideas discussed therein."
+ Am J Soc 35:522 N '29 150w
Am Pol Sci R 23:518 My '29 20w

"Mr. Rayner's account of the nineteenth century is of the familiar pattern relieved by some well-chosen illustrations of early troubles, but marred by prejudice and occasional inaccuracies. But with the twentieth century the book comes to life. Prejudice gives place to a keen, but critical, attention to the facts. Mr. Rayner's account of events from the rise of the Labour Party to the collapse of the General Strike is excellent, a valuable record for which students will be grateful."
+ — Nation and Ath 44:852 Mr 16 '29 480w

"It tells us, so far as we can see, nothing that has not already been told by others. It may, however, be useful to those who want a short, connected account of the movement, written in a readable style and markedly sympathetic to the Unions. But it contains a good many inaccuracies."
+ — New Statesman 32:702 Mr 9 '29 220w
St Louis 27:262 S '29

"It is not the errors of commission which render the book almost worthless, but the enormous omissions. The author never gives figures to explain the causes of any economic crisis he is dealing with; nor does he explain even in a footnote the condition of the industry concerned. He states the demands of the Union in a general way, and seems always to take it for granted that the position adopted by the union is the economically sound one."

— Sat R 147:410 Mr 23 '29 480w

"The rise and progress of the trade union movement in England are sketched broadly by Mr. Rayner in a little book which is on the whole fair but not unbiassed. The author professes to have been unable to find a dispassionate history, but he himself has not provided one, as his account of the General Strike will show."
— Spec 142:sup387 Mr 9 '29 70w

REA, LORNA (MRS PHILIP RUSSELL REA). Six Mrs. Greenes. 318p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Heinemann]

29-6663

Mrs Rodney Greene, the managing one, is giving a dinner party for the six Mrs Greenes in honor of the newest of the name, the bride of young Hugh Beckett Greene. Each chapter of the story is a character sketch of one of the six, telling how she came into the family, what her position in the group is, and showing her reaction to the anticipated dinner party at Mrs Rodney's. The portraits are cleverly drawn, with many amusing and subtle touches.

---

Booklist 25:361 Je '29

"Mrs. Rea characterizes her half dozen women vividly and neatly, gives one a sense of their place in the family pattern and handles adroitly the difficult structure of her novel. She has insight and dry humor."
Bookm 69:xxiv My '29 100w

" 'Six Mrs. Greenes' is mild in action but rich in observation and its form, though not original, is handled with a deftness seldom displayed in a first novel." Garreta Busey
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 My 19 '29 1100w

"No first novel of recent years has the same claim to merit of a very high order that is found in this story of three generations of an English family." G. R. B. R.
+ Boston Transcript p1 Ap 27 '29 500w
Cleveland Open Shelf p110 Jl '29

"The shape of the book is skilfully original, the style easy and neat, the pathos and the humor are equally apt. But somehow the result just fails to be important; the novel is as easy to forget as it is to read." Raymond Mortimer
+ — Nation and Ath 44:915 Mr 30 '29 80w

"The serious defect of this book lies in its characters, who are too conventional, too stereotyped, to be really interesting. They shriek their titles aloud: the Dictatorial Woman, the Silver Cord Mother, the 'Artistic-Temperamental' Girl, the Modern-But-Sweet-and-Unspoiled, the Gopher Prairie Housewife. They are real, it is true, but one recognizes their traits too easily, one is never surprised. They are excellent snapshots, not portraits." M. S.
— + N Y Evening Post p8m Je 1 '29 380w
N Y Times p6 Ap 14 '29 440w

"The character delineation is remarkably sensitive and concise, the differences of generation and temperament made beautifully clear." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 152:118 My 15 '29 150w
Reviewed by L. P. Hartley
Sat R 147:581 Ap 27 '29 400w
Reviewed by Gladys Graham
Sat R of Lit 5:1160 Jl 6 '29 560w

"So well does Mrs. Rea enter into the feelings of old age that it is almost a shock to discover that she can describe the emotions of youth and the intricate problems of middle age with an equal vividness. She leans entirely on the slender reed of characterization which most admirably supports her delicate art. Six Mrs. Greenes is a first novel, and we shall look forward to its successors." B. E. Todd
+ Spec 142:433 Mr 16 '29 100w

"With excellent and clear characterization to enjoy, the reader gladly foregoes plot and finds his attention constantly engaged."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e My 12 '29 320w

"This is not a promising first novel; it is a first novel of achievement. It has a richness of humour and a tenderness rare in any writer; one might go far before meeting a more gracious piece of work."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p358 My 2 '29 450w
Wis Lib Bul 25:196 Je '29

READ, CHARLES STANFORD. Struggles of male adolescence. 247p $2.75 Dodd [7s 6d Allen & U.]

136.7 Adolescence

"Leaning heavily on Freud, Rank, Thom, McDougal, Oedipus and a battery of slippery technical terms, the author undertakes to present the newer ideas concerning the factors that mold the personalities of boys from birth through adolescence."—Survey

---

"Dr. Read has given a well balanced summary and application of the new psychology to his subject, and his book will be welcomed by those versed in its details who are bent upon following the newer roads of thought." L: Johnson
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Mr 24 '29 400w

"As his illustrations are borrowed, his terminology loosely used, and his ideas qualified and general, one infers that his material was got from books rather than boys. His theories are sound, but they have already been more ably presented. The novice in the field will find little in this book that is vivid or encouraging; the student will find nothing that is original." Ralph Hill
— Survey 61:383 D 15 '28 130w

"Had Dr. Read devoted half the time which he has given to the works of Freud to a careful study of those of William Cobbett he would have given us a more useful and a more readable book. Almost every page illustrates those literary faults examples of which form so entertaining an appendix to Cobbett's 'English Grammar.' "
— Times [London] Lit Sup p370 My 17 '28 700w
Wis Lib Bul 24:299 N '28

READ, HARLAN EUGENE. Thurman Lucas. 418p $2 Macmillan

29-9794

Thurman Lucas is cleared of the first charge against him but is railroaded to the penitentiary on the second. There is no time to be married to Viola. Thurman escapes to the West and under a new identity becomes a wealthy man. Things go badly with Viola, but during the eighteen years of their separation the wronged lovers remain faithful to each other.

---

"Two phases of the book are stronger and more interesting than the outlines of the plot might indicate: first, the devices of a prison escape; second, the technicalities of intelligent gold prospecting. Both are vividly and accurately described and in such passages the force of untrimmed facts compensates for the florid outcroppings so noticeable elsewhere. For Mr. Read, the stark manner is certainly the most promising." M. C. Dawson
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 My 5 '29 480w

" 'Thurman Lucas' is an unkempt novel which manages to rise, by virtue of a blazing sincerity, above the mediocrity to which its gaucherie would seem to condemn it. There are grave technical defects, but by their side a raw, pulsing vigor; hence, 'Thurman Lucas' succeeds in being irritating and compellingly absorbing, a sprawling book with sinew and the salt of tears in it." Leonard Ehrlich
+ — N Y Evening Post p8m My 18 '29 480w

READ, H. E.—Continued

"When a book has as much vitality as this one the rococo style in which it is written may be condoned if not forgiven."

+ — N Y Times p8 My 12 '29 600w

"The first part of the book is written with appalling force and the reader accepts it as truth. But the roseate finale is Algerized melodrama, and mutilates what might have been a very good story."

+ — Outlook 152:78 My 8 '29 70w

" 'Thurman Lucas' is an unusually striking novel, abounding in infelicities and serious faults, but somehow essentially significant. Once read, it will not be forgotten." R. B. Macdougall

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:1050 My 25 '29 400w

READ, HERBERT EDWARD. English prose style. 229p $2.50 Holt [9s Bell]

808 Style, Literary. English language—Rhetoric 28-30357

In a beautiful prose style of his own Herbert Read analyses the prose style of others, illuminating his exposition with quotations from the good and bad in English prose.

Booklist 25:314 My '29

"Mr. Herbert Read is a sound and reliable critic, of the painstaking sort, and his book on style is, if not brilliant, at any rate an extremely useful and careful survey of a difficult subject." Conrad Aiken

+ Bookm 69:211 Ap '29 400w

"For those skilled as well as for those serving their novitiate in the art of writing English prose this book will prove an invaluable guide, philosopher and friend, one to be consulted in all times of lingual perplexity, one whose critical analyses and estimates are authoritative." F. B.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 9 '29 380w

"It is only the bare truth to say that there is not a dull or even a commonplace paragraph in the whole of Mr. Read's book and no reader with the least modicum of sensibility can find it other than fascinating reading throughout. There is positive magic in the variety and aptness of the illustrative passages scattered through the chapters." G. D. M.

+ Cath World 130:374 D '29 320w

Reviewed by E. J. Cleveland

Churchman 139:30 My 4 '29 60w

"A brave, rather confused theorist, an admirable literary critic, Mr Read is also an anthologist, and a very good one." Philip Littell

+ — Dial 85:524 D '28 780w

"One of those rare books of literary criticism which give the mind something really substantial to chew. . . Books which pursue truth are not often easy reading, and Mr. Read does not let us off lightly. He writes clearly, and he has taken a great deal of trouble to discover his own meaning and to explain it to other people, but the nature of prose style is a difficult subject." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 43:395 Je 23 '28 1200w

Reviewed by R. E. Roberts

New Statesman 31:640 S 1 '28 1600w

"He writes as a metaphysician, much more concerned with the definition of literary terms as a self-justifying philosophic exercise than as a means of illuminating the craft of prose. No wary reader should be fooled by the samples of English prose that are scattered so liberally throughout 'English Prose Style.' They are trotted out not as touchstones of English prose genius but as grindstones for the sharpening of Mr. Read's acute but arbitrary metaphysical blade." C: M. Prager

N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 2 '29 620w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:13 F '29

Pratt p24 winter '29

St Louis 27:165 My '29

"Mr. Read's book is a disappointment long before one has come to the end of it, all the more because it is exceedingly interesting while it keeps within its own proper province. But, ambitiously looking outside its own bounds, it does not sufficiently cultivate what lies inside them and is throughout rather scrappy and rambling. . . On the whole, I should say that this book has been published without having been sufficiently pondered." E: Shanks

— + Sat R 146:80 Jl 21 '28 1100w

"Mr. Herbert Read has written a temperate book and a scholar's book. Perhaps he takes modern fashions with a disproportionate seriousness; but in his advice, especially his advice what to avoid, he is excellent. In the limits set by his critical design he has produced a most valuable book. He is careful in definition and profuse in illustration." Alan Porter

+ — Spec 141:108 Jl 21 '28 1000w

"It would have been far better if Mr. Read had never set before his eyes or ours the will-o'-the-wisp of a distinction between essential prose and poetry. It hovers over all his argument, and is incessantly distracting; the perplexities it induces are innumerable, for the simple reason that all Mr. Read's examples are specimens of formal prose."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p637 S 13 '28 1300w

"His strength consists mainly in the taste which picks out the excellent in literature, and comments sanely on its faults and virtues. His reading is presumably large and certainly diversified. He values our older, even our mediaeval, literature. With contemporaries, very pardonably, his judgment is a little less conclusive." O. W. Firkins

+ Yale R n s 18:811 summer '29 460w

READ, HERBERT EDWARD. Phases of English poetry. (Hogarth lectures on literature) 158p $1.25 Harcourt

821 Poetry. English-poetry 29-2949

The author is concerned not with the forms of poetry but with its aspects in different ages and its relation to a social background. His thesis is that English poetry has developed thru various phases from the widest possible appeal —that of communal or ballad poetry—to the narrowest possible appeal—that of modern subjective poetry where the poet appeals to himself alone. This circle has been completed in the last generation or two, and the modern poet must find a new way of reconciling his world and his art.

Booklist 25:352 Je '29

"Mr. Herbert Read is well known in England as a critic of soundness and sobriety. If he is not among the more colorful of contemporary critics of literature, whether psychological or sensational, he is at any rate to be counted on for good sense and moderation; and if one were to pick out a chief fault in him, it would probably be his proneness to what might be called an over-intellectualism." Conrad Aiken

+ — Bookm 69:104 Mr '29 500w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 Mr 10 '29 120w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

Nation 128:165 F 6 '29 400w

"No one who has been braced by the clean power, the economy, and the hard thought compacted in this little book will deny that it is a first-rate essay in criticism." Barrington Gates

+ Nation and Ath 44:558 Ja 19 '28 300w

"Mr. Herbert Read's Phases of English Poetry, in the Hogarth Lecture Series, enjoys the unusual distinction, not only of constituting in itself an extremely interesting and valuable essay, but also—and this is surely uncommon—of conforming perfectly to the requirements of the editor's general design. Mr. Read's study provides a 'student of English literature' with an admirably solid groundwork which he can afterwards, if he pleases, elaborate and build upon."

+ New Statesman 32:198 N 17 '28 350w

"This whole theory I believe nonsense. In the first place, Professor Gummere's suggestion of the communal origin of poetry, on which Mr. Read leans so heavily, has been very much riddled. In the second place, no such neat schematization of English poetry as Mr. Read attempts is possible without an egregious amount of simplification and omission. And, finally, it seems to me that the contemporary poet is neither more nor less at odds with the world than poets have ever been." Edgar Johnson

— N Y Evening Post p9m Ja 26 '29 300w
N Y Times p2 Ja 20 '29 400w
Sat R 146:611 N 10 '28 300w

Reviewed by F. V. Morley
Sat R of Lit 5:826 Mr 30 '29 150w

Reviewed by V. F. Calverton
Sat R of Lit 5:910 Ap 20 '29 850w

"It would not be true to say that the only virtue of Mr. Read's book is that it lets us know what a modern poet feels about his own time, about his art, and about those to whom this art is addressed; but this is probably its chief virtue. Certainly it has all the characteristics of a poet's criticism, of which the most noticeable is a complete neglect of poetry in which the poet can find nothing which bears or might bear upon his own work and have reference to his own sensibility."
Times [London] Lit Sup p1022 D 27 '28 820w

Reviewed by O. W. Firkins
Yale R n s 18:812 summer '29 480w

READ, HERBERT EDWARD. Sense of glory; essays in criticism. 228p $3 Harcourt [10s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

804 Literature—History and criticism

Critical essays on the following French and English writers: Froissart, Malory, Descartes, Swift, Vauvenargues, Sterne, Hawthorne, Bagehot, Henry James. Originally published in the London Times literary supplement.

"Mr. Read's two outstanding virtues as a literary critic are his power of abstract analysis and his intellectual integrity. He has, however, the defects of these qualities. By keeping his exposition too strictly to the abstract plane and abjuring easy illustration, he courts obscurity, and by refusing ever to say more than is necessary to establish a point in a complex argument, he sometimes misses it. The studies of English and French prose writers which he now collects from the Times Literary Supplement are disappointingly unequal. These are necessarily cut to a pattern, and it is observable that the more Mr. Read endeavours to compass in a small space the less is he successful." Barrington Gates
— + Nation and Ath 46:174 N 2 '29 250w

"Of quite exceptional merit. There is nothing of the dull pedagogue, or the glib journalist, or the smart young undergraduate (whether aged fifty or twenty) in Mr. Herbert Read's acute, well-informed, virile criticism, which has a biting actuality that can only come from an original and penetrating mind informed by real experience. He has the gift of sympathy, and his criticism, like all the best criticism, is appreciative and illuminating."
+ New Statesman 34:369 D 21 '29 1000w

"This highly miscellaneous assembly he treats, not with persistent reference to the sense of glory, but in much the same way as would be adopted by a critic concerned to arrive at the broad truth about each of them considered as an independent figure. With his reading, his intelligence, his lucidity, he could not fail to say just things about each of them, and sometimes he has done much more than that." T. E. Welby
+ Sat R 148:384 O 5 '29 1400w

"It will be seen that Mr. Read, in his method of criticism, has some relationship to Wordsworth, who worked by the same method in the creative sphere. Both have an infinite patience that by its slow-motion reveals beauty hitherto unsuspected; beauty which impels its discoverers to a sort of mystic joy developing from quietism to a more assured and demonstrative worship which we can describe only as glory." R: Church
+ Spec 143:sup679 N 9 '29 750w

"Since glory is the theme, let us not hesitate to claim for this journal the glory of having first published these essays; and merely to make the claim is to admit that there is a sense of the word glory which the events of certain notorious years have not turned sour on the tongue. Mr. Read would reanimate the sense of glory; to do which he must, in these days, rehabilitate glory; and to rehabilitate it he must explain it. Even in martial glory, he writes, 'we must still distinguish glory with grace—as in Wolfe and Nelson—from glory with pride—as in Alexander and Napoleon.' The phrase would have been invaluable in the discussion about the statue. It redeems glory from suspicion. And it may serve those who do not know Mr. Read's way of writing as an example of the sort of lamp which steadily, without epigrammatic explosion or sputterings of cleverness, lights his every page."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p786 O 10 '29 1000w

READ, HERBERT EDWARD. Staffordshire pottery figures. ltd ed 24p pl $15 Houghton [21s Duckworth]

738 Staffordshire pottery

"This monograph covers the essential features of the production of pottery figures in Staffordshire, which flourished from toward the end of the seventeenth century through into the second quarter of the nineteenth century. The most famous potters are considered, as are also the different glaze processes."—N Y Times

"Some of the plates are extraordinary." E. A. Jewell
+ N Y Times p22 O 6 '29 70w

"Mr. Read has expert knowledge and an agreeable style. He gives a compact history of this popular branch of English pottery and does not exaggerate its artistic importance. . . The illustrations, some of them in colour, are very numerous and admirably chosen."
+ Spec 143:106 Jl 20 '29 150w
Times [London] Lit Sup p837 O 24 '29 550w

RECK-MALLECZEWEN, FRITZ PERCY. Sven discovers paradise; tr. from the German by Jenny Covan. 336p $2.50 Liveright

29-16164

The exotic adventures of the Nordic engineer Sven who came under the spell of Egypt and learned in a short space of time to know both Paradise and its opposite.

Booklist 26:121 D '29

"As unusual in its oddly mannered style as in its exotic content—and worth your attention on either score—'Sven Discovers Paradise' is a most effective novelty." Will Cuppy
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Jl 14 '29 150w

"While maintaining the same thesis as that of the author of 'All Quiet Along the Western Front,' Mr. Reck-Malleczewen tends to expand the philosophy by creating new allegories, and by injecting elements of irony, satire and sarcasm into his narrative, which decry no particular creed so much as the basic rottenness of all creeds. And to it he adds a brilliant imagery, a forceful modern literary style, and a zest for psycho-analytical probing that lays bare the torn and bleeding soul of Sven." R. M. W.
+ Boston Transcript p2 Jl 31 '29 400w
Cleveland Open Shelf p125 S '29

"Now that I recall the plot, I suspect it to be a little silly. What makes the book so charming is the fact that the author evidently suspected the same thing and made no effort to disguise it. It is not a comic book, but its sly comments on English snobbery, English imperialism, English women, and English manners are certainly amusing. Perhaps not altogether willingly, the author's cleverness converted a tale of 'romance and adventure' into a satire. The original flavor is retained in Miss Covan's admirable translation." Bernard Smith

RECK-MALLECZEWEN, F. P.—Continued
+ N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 20 '29 430w

"The book is written with a strange blending of realism and almost delirious expressionism. The portrayal of the British colony in Alexandria carries conviction. Many of the descriptions are excellent. Yet it loses much of its effect by the endless repetition of mannered phrases by apostrophe and by its air of extreme condescension."
+ — N Y Times p6 Je 16 '29 320w

"Though the book may not be numbered in that group of remarkable novels which this year have come to us from Germany, it is still a forceful, brilliantly written story, and of an artistry fully equal to that of the author's widely acclaimed 'Woman in Flight.' "
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:27 Ag 3 '29 200w

RECKNAGEL, ARTHUR BERNARD, and SPRING, SAMUEL NEWTON. Forestry; a study of its origin, application and significance in the United States. 255p il $3 Knopf
634.9 Forests and forestry—United States
29-20261

"The authors of this book, both of whom are members of the faculty of Cornell University, tell the story of the birth of forestry here in the early nineties, describe the development of the forest industries, show how the necessity of applying forestry methods to these industries led to important developments, and how various forces, historical, social and economic, finally inspired and shaped a public policy in forestry. Afterward they describe the practical operation of that policy as it is applied to actual forests in the United States, Federal, State and private."—N Y Times

Booklist 26:107 D '29

"Two well known experts in forestry here put their study and practice of it for a quarter of a century past into a narrative which, both historically and economically significant, lacks nothing in the direction of popular appeal."
+ Boston Transcript p5 O 19 '29 400w
N Y Times p30 N 3 '29 200w

RECOULY, RAYMOND. Foch; my conversations with the marshal; tr. by Joyce Davis. 320p $3 Appleton [12s 6d T. Butterworth]
B or 92 Foch, Ferdinand. European war, 1914-1918 29-20232

The opinions of Foch upon matters pertaining to the war, the Peace treaty, etc. told in a direct recording of his conversation by his personal friend, M. Recouly. Foch's views on several of the great military figures of the war are revealed, and much space is given to his controversies with Clemenceau.

"How much of what appears in these pages is absolutely new, we are unable to say. It is certain, however, that many doubtful points will be cleared up which have for long bothered certain individuals, such as the relations between Foch and Pershing. . . When we can get as close to the individual as to be able to quote him fairly, directly and accurately, we have made so much of a stride forward. Such a step has been taken by M. Recouly."
+ Boston Transcript p7 N 13 '29 180w

Reviewed by L. V. Updegraff
N Y Times p5 D 8 '29 300w

"One can only conclude that Foch had very little time to devote to his interlocutor, for the conversations recorded are hardly more than hasty snatches of talk, at best extremely superficial and at times hardly more than random fragments. They cover more than fifty topics, and even so more than one topic is made up by lumping together brief comments on widely different matters."
Sat R of Lit 6:607 D 28 '29 320w

"M. Récouly was a personal friend of the Marshal's, and records his conversations with him 'with almost photographic exactitude.' The abrupt, picturesque language, the shrewd common-sense, make most refreshing reading. Marshal Foch was a realist, as all mystics are at heart. Nothing annoyed him more than to be called a mystic, but he was one, none the less, both in the sustaining fortitude of his convictions, and in his power of silence."
+ Spec 143:723 N 16 '29 220w

"The conversations recorded by M. Recouly are extremely interesting. They contain short summaries of all the great problems with which Foch was faced, short accounts of certain critical situations, as the Battle of the Marne, and the views of the Marshal on Joffre and Ludendorff in the late War and on Napoleon and Gambetta in former wars. One of the most important chapters concerns the granting of the Armistice. . . The chapters concerning the discussions prior to the Peace Treaty, which give information not before published upon the attitude of Foch and his differences with Clemenceau, are also well worth reading."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p886 N 7 '29 620w

RECOULY, RAYMOND. Third republic; tr. from the French by E. F. Buckley. (Nat. hist. of France) 384p $4.50 Putnam [12s 6d Heinemann]
944.08 France—History—Third republic, 1870- [28-23849]

History of France which covers the period between the fall of the Second Empire in 1870 and the present day.

"In this book I am afraid the scholar is taking a back seat, while the newspaper man steps to the fore. The treatment of the period between 1870 and 1900 is lucid, in an amiable, chatty way, but commonplace beyond the average, if that were possible." Albert Guerard
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Mr 3 '29 1150w
Boston Transcript p7 Mr 23 '29 300w

"The chapters on the Commune, the Boulanger episode, the Panama and the Dreyfus scandals, the entente cordiale, the Morocco incident, the Balkan War, and French colonial expansion are particularly well done, while scattered through the narrative are a number of clever sketches of such men as Thiers, Ferry, Briand, Caillaux, Poincaré, and Joffre." W: MacDonald
+ — Nation 129:634 N 27 '29 300w

"This book is neither philosophical nor informing. It would mean little to persons at present unacquainted with the history of the Republic. The book is in fact a series of leading articles by the editor of the Figaro, who delights in those vague analogies that look so well in a newspaper, and break down so badly in a book." Francis Birrell
— Nation and Ath 43:770 S 15 '28 700w
New Statesman 31:702 S 15 '28 600w
N Y Evening Post p8m Je 1 '29 140w

"This book is interestingly written. It is not a profound and even within its limits not a wholly satisfactory work. Its framework and standpoint are to a considerable extent conventional and it hardly aims at impartiality."
+ — Sat R 146:330 S 15 '28 920w
Times [London] Lit Sup p695 O 4 '28 950w

REDLICH, JOSEF. Emperor Francis Joseph of Austria; a biography. 547p $5 Macmillan
B or 92 Francis Joseph I, emperor of Austria 29-4574

A sympathetic and revealing study of the "last monarch of the 'Old School' of European sovereigns," who himself said of the repeated tragedies of his life, "nothing in this world has been spared me."

"It is only to be regretted that this biography is not more extensive, of the same scope, let us say, as Morley's Gladstone or Ronaldshay's Curzon, so that the information, experience, and penetrating judgments of Redlich could give us in greater detail, particularly of the diplomatic crises, a fuller study of this eventful and portentous life." L. B. Packard

+ Am Hist R 34:877 Jl '29 650w

Reviewed by M. W. Graham
Am Pol Sci R 23:1018 N '29 550w
Booklist 25:284 Ap '29

"Hampered by insufficient data concerning the intimate life of the Emperor, Mr. Redlich has nevertheless succeeded in drawing a credible portrait of him. His force, his vigor are clearly shown." R. E. Larsson
+ Bookm 68:704 F '29 200w

"A great theme and a competent writer. The personal parts suffer a trifle from scholarly restraint; the chapters on general history are good; those on constitutional history excellent. There the author is in his element, and he lets himself go with delightful gusto. The book, which is not advertised as a translation, is written in solid, serviceable Austrian English; unidiomatic, but neither incorrect nor dull; ponderous, but not crushingly so." Albert Guerard
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 F 17 '29 1800w
Boston Transcript p2 My 15 '29 760w

"This biography is a scholarly and competent piece of work and, at the end, gives a full statement of the relations between Austria and the Balkan states in the years immediately preceding the tragedy of Sarajevo."
+ Christian Century 46:426 Mr 28 '29 130w

Reviewed by C: L: Slattery
Churchman 139:17 My 4 '29 190w
Cleveland Open Shelf p123 S '29

"Joseph Redlich is peculiarly well qualified to write the story of Francis Joseph. He has written an exceptionally well-informed book on Francis Joseph, in which he has ably interwoven the life of the Emperor with the foreign and domestic politics of his country. It is a book which every serious student of European history will wish to have in his library." J. F. Scott
+ Current Hist 31:227 N '29 1100w

"While the book falls short of meeting all the expectations that might have been hoped for it, it nevertheless bears up quite nobly under the enormous burdens of its enormous subject. It is certainly superior to preceding trashy accounts of the last Hapsburg monarch and may, perhaps, have the added distinction of aiding in the foundation for new and more important undertakings in the field of Austro-Hungarian history. And in addition it seems to contain those solid, if sometimes prosaic, elements that make for permanency." L. W. Eshelman
+ — Hist Outlook 20:349 N '29 750w

"Professor Redlich has succeeded remarkably well in writing a life of Francis Joseph without turning the narrative into a history of Austria or of the Europe in which Austria long played a great part. . . He gives enough of the historical setting to enable the reader to keep the place." W: MacDonald
+ Nation 129:147 Ag 7 '29 650w

"Hardly any praise would be excessive as far as the first part of his book is concerned; in a most interesting and readable form he has rendered accessible the results of his important and original researches. But he has failed to carry through his work on the same impressive scale."
+ — Nation and Ath 44:883 Mr 23 '29 760w

"It is not too much to say that this biography of Francis Joseph is the first well informed, well balanced and well written book in English on the decline of the Hapsburg monarchy." W: L. Langer
+ New Repub 58:233 Ap 10 '29 1200w

"The charm and the usefulness of Professor Redlich's book lie in the clearness with which it brings out the personal factor in Francis Joseph's chequered reign. The real Francis Joseph is sketched, not painted as a full-length portrait, in this 'biography.' He is sketched, moreover, with a hand both friendly and discriminating." Wickham Steed
+ New Statesman 32:699 Mr 9 '29 1500w

"Clear, precise and illuminating biography." Eugene Lohrke
+ N Y Evening Post p9m F 2 '29 720w

"Professor Redlich had the advantage of being free from bias, and he engaged in his work with the dispassionate curiosity of the analytical historian. The result of his labors is a well-balanced volume in which the absence of dramatic tension is more than compensated by the dynamic power of a living personality." Emil Lengyel
+ N Y Times p3 F 24 '29 1750w

"Joseph Redlich, writing well and with serious intentions, after exhaustive study of the political and social conditions under which the 'last real emperor of Austria-Hungary' lived, has given us a book as valuable as it is interesting."
+ Outlook 151:188 Ja 30 '29 420w

"This is no Strachey-Maurois-Ludwig biography. This is good solid meat, soporifically dull in spots, and unenlivened by scintillating brilliance anywhere. But if one wants a convincing picture of Mittel-Europa as it centered around this autocratic monarch, one will find it in this book." E. C. Marriner
+ — Portland Evening News p5 Mr 26 '29 580w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 79:19 Ap '29 100w
St Louis 27:137 Ap '29
Sat R 147:395 Mr 23 '29 1200w
Spec 142:sup381 Mr 9 '29 650w
Times [London] Lit Sup p217 Mr 21 '29 1300w

REESE, LIZETTE WOODWORTH. Victorian village; reminiscences of other days. 285p il $3 Farrar & Rinehart

B or 92 29-20040

"A yellow-haired little girl, starched and pressed for a tiresome visit, leaps from the top of a fence to land on her knees in a Maryland meadow, and scrambles to her feet delighted to find her hat askew and herself smelling of mullein, yarrow and mint. The same little girl, her skirts just lengthened and her blond hair up, walks through blowing autumn leaves to St. John's Parish School in the village of Waverly to teach her class, and composes her first poem as she walks. There follows a life of teaching and writing, trips to New York and abroad, conversations and correspondence with editors and writers. And now Lizette Woodworth Reese, [seventy-three] and sparkling, has written her reminiscences."—N Y Evening Post

---

Booklist 26:67 N '29

Reviewed by Margaret Wallace
Bookm 70:334 N '29 160w

"Here is no bleak gentility. The tide of life runs full and strong. . . The book has the flavor of tart apples warmed by the autumn sun." H. F. Whicher
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 O 27 '29 800w

"A book as individual and as revealing as one would have expected from one who uses language to such fine ends. The larger number of books of reminiscences are written by persons whose lives have been filled with action. The greatest delight of this book comes from the fact that it reflects a life lived so quietly that the author has been able to see and understand more than comes the way of persons whose time is filled with adventures." D. L. M.
+ Boston Transcript p2 O 11 '29 850w
Cleveland Open Shelf p123 S '29

Reviewed by Louise Bogan
New Repub 60:327 N 6 '29 850w

"The memories of a long and full life are not a continuous record, but a series of sharp pictures etched against a haze of things half-remembered, half-forgotten. . . The author of 'A

REESE, L. W.—Continued
Branch of May' writes a simple and modest chapter on her career as a poet. An equally brief account disposes of her forty-five years of devoted teaching. A tender tribute to her mother and father closes this rich record of a vanished day and a life vigorously lived." Ruth Seinfel

+ N Y Evening Post p7m S 21 '29 850w

"It is a pleasure to find that books like this can still be written and published and that therefore, presumably, there still are readers who like them. For it resurrects the leisure, the restfulness, the peaceful dignity, the inherent beauty of life half a century ago and makes it live again in so vital a way that even the youngest and hardest-boiled generation of the present day cannot help realizing that, after all, those times have their allurement. Not that Miss Reese paints as ideal or unfavorably compares with the present the life she knew as a child and young woman. She is too modern in her outlook on life and her realization of how life evolves to be thus bound in the net of outlived time." F. F. Kelly

+ N Y Times p14 O 6 '29 1100w

"No matter what the count of the years, she still keeps that April spirit, which she tells us her mother had. Beauty attends her yet, and out of her remembrances she offers a full and refreshing cup, the waters of which constantly sparkle over with the silver splash of poetry." M. P. Montague

+ Sat R of Lit 6:234 O 12 '29 1300w

REEVE, CHRISTOPHER. Ginger cat. 298p $2 Morrow [7s 6d Collins]

29-19253

"All the necessary ingredients of real melodrama are here—a thrilling murder, the theft of famous jewels, an attempted poisoning, passion and a charming heroine. The scene is laid in an English cathedral town and the action centers around the lovely Ginger Cat, a unique heroine."—Springf'd Republican

"You would swear that a thriller beginning at the breakneck speed of 'The Ginger Cat' would peter out in mid-career, and you would be wrong. Interest is maintained by means of complications, new material and other devices known to skillful melodramatists, among whom Mr. Reeve is surely not the least." Will Cuppy

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 S 22 '29 200w

Boston Transcript p4 N 16 '29 270w

"Running over Mr. Reeve's bag of tricks, one experiences all the delight of easy familiarity in the recognition of old landmarks. Everything is there. Everything is in its place. The reader is systematically shocked, thrilled, encouraged, charmed, frightened, relieved, terrified, and eventually reassured. Stereotyped, transparent, manufactured from almost exclusively pre-Wallace materials, 'The Ginger Cat' nevertheless possesses considerable dash and vigor and enough authority and style to make it worth your while."

— + N Y Times p18 Ja 5 '30 240w

"The story is engrossing, swiftly moving and written with finesse."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e O 13 '29 120w

Times [London] Lit Sup p385 My 9 '29 180w

REEVE, J. STANLEY. Foxhunting recollections; a journal of the Radnor hounds and other packs; with an introd. by Henry G. Vaughan. 320p il $5 (21s) Lippincott

799.2 Fox-hunting 28-27553

An informal journal of the Radnor Hunt and other packs from the season of 1921 to 1928 with photographs of members of the Hunt and their mounts, and several reproductions of paintings by Charles Morris Young of the scenes of the Radnor meets in Delaware and Chester counties, Pennsylvania.

"Mr. Reeve's book is compiled from a hunting diary which covers some seven seasons of sport, and the author's chatty and intimate style is admirably adapted to the recording of unusual runs and other events which go to make fox-hunting history. His descriptions are graphic and full of humor."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:496 D 8 '28 200w

"Setting aside the inevitable and often refreshing variations in phraseology, there is surprisingly little difference in the contents of this and the many volumes of hunting reminiscences published in England."

Spec 141:971 D 22 '28 130w

"Mr. Reeve's accounts are in the best spirit of this class of writing. He is a good story-teller, and has plenty of good stories to tell."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p38 Ja 17 '29 920w

REGNIER, HENRI FRANÇOIS JOSEPH DE. The libertines; tr. from the French by Slater Brown. (Transatlantic lib.) 296p $2.50 Macaulay

29-7721

" 'Les Rencontres de M. de Bréot,' which has been translated as 'The Libertines' by Slater Brown is an easy-going narrative of the adventures, mostly amorous, of a young man from the provinces in Paris for the first time. His vision of Mme. de Blionne during a fête and his final conquest of the lady are the first and last chapters of a book made up in part of incidental stories told by the other characters."—Sat R of Lit

"There is no depth of character portrayal; everything is on a superficial, worldly, frivolously sensual plane; a few ideas of the Libertines are exposed, but the author's chief concern is with the carnal activities of his characters rather than with their dubious philosophy."

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ap 21 '29 280w

"Neither a great book nor a witty one. It does not provide opportunities for thoughtful laughter or hearty guffaws; only an occasional physical excitement is aroused. In short, it is an admirable example of the talent for painting appetizing pictures of vulgar misdemeanors." T. S. L.

Boston Transcript p4 My 18 '29 380w

"Entirely apart from the seriousness of the introduction, this is a very amusing book. That it will shock a certain percentage of readers, is, of course, taken for granted." Eugene Lohrke

+ N Y Evening Post p10m My 4 '29 630w

"This sort of toy novel needs all the magic fancy of the Cloud-cuckoo land—all the saving grace of lightness and humor—to succeed in its artfulness. Mr. Brown has had a difficult task in translating such cobweb wit and romantic material. He would greatly have improved his English version if he had been able to sustain a lighter touch." Edwin Clark

N Y Times p10 Je 2 '29 580w

"M. de Regnier's century is the seventeenth, and when we have finished this novel we have not only been delighted and entertained but, unknown even to ourselves, instructed with unantiquarian images of the past." Harry Salpeter

+ N Y World p7m Je 16 '29 210w

"One of the lightest and most amusing of these typically Gallic pastiches. . . The book as a whole is never particularly important, but it will serve as an introduction to one of the most distinguished stylists of his day, and it is modishly lacking in a moral or morals."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:1117 Je 15 '29 230w

REID, ANN. We are the dead. 213p $2.50 Harper [6s Constable]

Gentle Ella Burns is ravished by a loutish miner and forced by her mother into marriage with him. The mental conflict with her mother and her husband and the physical anguish of bearing her child nearly wreck Ella's mind. She comes out of it, however, with the strength to leave her husband, and with a dull sense of victory over her mother for the future,

"'We Are the Dead' is a book that might start a literary discussion as to the merits of realism. There are precedents enough to justify its abundance of cruel detail, and it is, moreover, sincere and unflinching. It will be compared with the Russians; but falsely, because of a self-conscious use of words and a greed for strong emotional situations whether or not they are inevitable. There may be those who will wring from it an emotional catharsis, but to me it seems an earnest and repulsive story, that fails to win through into tragedy." M. C. Dawson

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ag 18 '29 400w

"Miss Reid has undoubtedly created an original and powerful tragedy. Indeed, were it not for the emotion of pity which runs through every page, like a silver thread binding event to event, the book might very easily be considered a satire, so stark, so harsh, so perfect is its realism."

+ Boston Transcript p3 S 4 '29 230w

"We are the Dead is the gloomiest little book that has appeared this year. It is so unfailingly sordid that the author must be very young. It is well-written too, and rather moving." Cyril Connolly

New Statesman 32:637 F 23 '29 100w

"One may object to the plan of this novel, but once the plan is accepted on its own terms, one cannot object to its execution. In 'We Are the Dead' a psychological situation is stripped of all its unessentials and presented starkly and compellingly. It is a not very pleasant novel, certainly, but whether one likes it or not it is a very memorable one." Margaret Wallace

N Y Evening Post p6m Ag 3 '29 390w

"Miss Reid has written a first novel of considerable power."

+ N Y Times p8 Ag 25 '29 650w

"Very strong stuff, vigourously written, sincerely felt." L. P. Hartley

Sat R 147:151 F 2 '29 180w

"The best bit in the book is the sketch of the girl's mother; she is utterly loathsome, a truly vivid character. Miss Reid writes powerfully rather than effectively. Her plot is not disciplined and guided so that it shall affect us most deeply. But this is only her first novel."

+ — Sat of Lit 6:140 S 14 '29 180w

"This ugly little tragedy of a girl, sweet enough and only bewildered, is very competently stated. The minor characters are vigorously drawn, while the portrait of the mother is vindictively etched in, with dozens of mean, telling little lines. The birth-scene has a Hogarthian zest about it. It is a cruel story, but it displays remarkable technical skill."

+ Spec 142:397 Mr 9 '29 170w

"This is a depressing but an extremely ably-written book; Miss Reid has, beyond her talent, a kind of ruthlessness."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p208 Mr 14 '29 150w

REID, FORREST. Walter De La Mare; a critical study. 256p $3 Holt [10s 6d Faber & Faber]

821 De La Mare, Walter John [29-20330]

A critical interpretation of the works of Walter de la Mare from his first publications to the present time. There is a very short biographical preface.

---

Booklist 26:67 N '29

"It is admittedly written by a friend of the author, but what marks the critique is rather sensitive appreciation than personal loyalty, and this, expressed in a fluent and softly-textured style, should recommend the book to all lovers of good writing."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 S 22 '29 170w

"There are certain writers, of whom Mr. de la Mare is one, who demand from their readers a certain temperamental bias in their favour—an appreciative sympathy depending on an inborn quality of mind. It is obvious that any critic of Mr. de la Mare's must have this special sympathy. Mr. Reid accepts and lives so easily in Mr. de la Mare's twilit world, that he makes no attempt to drag it clumsily into dusty noonday by explaining it in terms of symbols or solidity. He illumines and interprets, but the illumination is by moonlight, and the interpretation is in the same language as the dream. It is the only possible treatment of the subject; argument and theory have no mesh fine enough to hold the work of Mr. de la Mare."

+ Nation and Ath 45:402 Je 22 '29 720w

"Forrest Reid is admirably qualified for the task of criticisms he has undertaken. He has a cool and sober and yet penetrating literary judgment; he has the faculty of expressing himself with lucidity and charm; he is able to analyze without becoming hypercritical and without subordinating the spirit of what he criticizes to mere detail; best of all, for the purposes of the present task, he is filled with an affectionate and glowing appreciation of de la Mare's work and is therefore not only able to do justice to his author but to measure his shortcomings in the light of his attainments." S. A. Coblentz

+ N Y Times p10 S 29 '29 920w

"The reader of Mr. de la Mare who is not devoted to him already will not acquire devotion from these pages and the devoted reader will find in them nothing newly illuminating. The complete stranger may find in their well-chosen quotations an inducement to go further. . . Mr. Forrest Reid has given us no more than a bundle of notes which would have been as useful at much less length." E: Shanks

— + Sat R 147:678 My 18 '29 1400w

"His book is no affair of critical vivisection. It would be better described as friendship's offering. And, none the less, it does not lapse into loose panegyric. . . Mr. Reid has sketched the majority of Mr. De la Mare's literary purposes, experiments and effects, often with considerable minuteness, often with his own beautiful transposition of the luminous significances of the original works. He has the air—perhaps a little too rare in these days—of being a contented reader."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p433 My 30 '29 1100w

REIGHARD, CATHERINE F. Plays for people and puppets. 390p il $2.50 Dutton

792 Puppet-plays. Children's plays 28-17805

A group of five plays for children—Jack and the beanstalk, King of the Golden river, Rumpelstiltskin, Pierre Patelin, and Aladdin, written for representation either by marionettes or by human actors. They have been presented professionally with marionettes.

---

Booklist 25:217 F '29

Christian Century 45:1027 Ag 23 '28 80w

Cleveland Open Shelf p29 F '29

"Making no strained or hackneyed efforts at originality [some] fine phantasies and fairy tales have been dramatized in such a way that they are invested with additional vitality and artistic worth. Details of scenery, properties, lighting, and bibliography have been worked out by an experienced and careful hand."

+ Nation 127:552 N 21 '28 70w

Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:11 F '29

St Louis 26:361 N '28

"Any one who has struggled to find suitable and presentable plays for children knows how difficult a problem this is. Masterpieces in this particular literary field are even more difficult to find. . . Catherine Reighard in her 'Plays for People and Puppets' takes stories that children have liked time out of mind and puts them on her puppet stage. There the children may meet in a new and vivid form their old friends Jack and the Beanstalk, Rumpelstiltskin, Aladdin, and the to them less familiar Pierre Patelin." Jack Crawford

+ Sat R of Lit 5:667 F 9 '29 250w

REILLY, HENRY JOSEPH. America's part. 326p $3.50 Cosmopolitan bk.

940.373 European war, 1914-1918—United States 28-24619

A history of America's part in the war tersely written from facts and figures gathered during General Reilly's services as press correspondent and as combatant in the war and from authoritative allied and German sources since the war.

"In a terse and well-informed book General Reilly is able to dispel much of the mist which has risen about our wartime work, not with heroics but with cold figures: How many men did we have in action at this battle or that? How far did they advance, what were their losses and how many were their prisoners? He tells us and compares the effort with similar efforts on the part of British or French. The result is there for all to read and it is one of which we may well be proud." Larry Barretto

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 D 16 '28 480w

"A few years ago we would have devoured these pages with relish. Perhaps we are surfeited by now."

Boston Transcript p8 N 17 '28 180w

REIMER, EDWARD F. Matching mountains with the Boy scout uniform; the official Boy scout uniform, badges, insignia and awards. 197p il $2 Dutton

369.43 Boy scouts 29-17032

A handbook for Boy Scouts on the origin of their uniform, the differences in the uniform in foreign lands, and the various insignia which go with it.

Boston Transcript p4 Jl 17 '29 80w

"The two hundred pages give much interesting and curious information, and are enriched with 135 illustrations. The presentation is succinct and thorough, and even the outsider may learn now what the well-dressed scout must wear, and how. The Scouts themselves will treasure this result of official but loving research."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:1100 Je 8 '29 80w

"While the book is primarily a manual of uniforms, it is more than that, going into the history of scouting, with digressions on chivalry, general history, and to some extent hunting and Indian lore. One is surprised at the amount of detail in connection with Boy Scout organization."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Jl 21 '29 150w

REINHARD, EDWARD G. Witchery of wasps; foreword by L. O. Howard. 291p il $2.50 Century

595.79 Wasps 29-6659

Mr Reinhard has found pleasure and no little excitement in watching the solitary wasp. In this informal record of his observations and the photographs that illustrate them, he transmits much of his interest and enjoyment to the reader.

Booklist 25:349 Je '29

"Years of observation must lie behind such a book as this. There is the rare, outdoor, human quality of Jean Henri Fabre in these pages—his patience of observation, his sense of awe."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 Ap 21 '29 130w

"In spite of its title this is a delightful book."

+ Outlook 151:557 Ap 3 '29 110w

World Tomorrow 12:346 Ag '29 50w

REINTHALER, FRANZ. Artificial silk; rev and enl ed., tr. from the German by F. M. Rowe. 276p il $7.50 Van Nostrand [21s Chapman & H.]

677.4 Silk, Artificial

"The present book is a considerably enlarged and revised English edition of a monograph, 'Die Kunstseide und andere seidenglanzende Fasern,' published in 1926. The author's preface states that, although the scientific basis of the work has been strictly preserved, the subject has been presented in such a manner as to be comprehensible also to readers without special scientific training. Following a chapter on the properties of cellulose, the various processes for the manufacture of artificial silk are described—the cellulose nitrate, cuprammonium, and viscose processes. A description of the manufacture of cellulose acetate is included in a chapter dealing with rayon made from various cellulose esters and ethers. The properties of artificial silks, their examination and testing, dyeing, uses, and the economic situation of the industry are then considered. The manufacture and dyeing of staple fibre also receives attention. Other products manufactured from spinning solutions and other fibers with a silky luster are briefly discussed." —Ind & Eng Chem

"All of it is presented with commendable but not overwhelming thoroughness. Treatment of the viscose process is particularly apt. An additional attraction lies in the inclusion of the best collection of photomicrographs that, to the reviewer's knowledge, have yet been published on rayon. The book is not notably strong, however, from a standpoint of pure chemical engineering, while the treatment of economics of the industry lags considerably behind such older books as that by Avram." T. R. Olive

+ — Chem & Met Eng 36:622 O '29 420w

Ind & Eng Chem 21:710 Jl '29 300w

"Prof. Rowe's translation represents a thorough revision and considerable extension of the original German work by Dr. Reinthaler, and is undoubtedly one of the best books on the subject."

+ Nature 124:476 S 28 '29 230w

REMARQUE, ERICH MARIA. All quiet on the western front; tr. from the German by A. W. Wheen. 291p $2.50 Little [7s 6d Putnam]

29-12059

The narrator of this apparently autobiographical story is a young German private who with three of his classmates is snatched away from school at the age of nineteen to serve in the trenches. Tho the author is a German, the book transcends nationality. A simply written life of the common soldier, told without anger or passion, and with an almost unendurable realism and pathos, the book is a powerful indictment of war. When the Armistice comes Paul is the sole survivor of his group of comrades, but it is his flesh only that has escaped. His spirit is destroyed.

For biographical sketch of the author see Boston Transcript p1 S 21 '29

Booklist 25:396 Jl '29

"It might be claimed as a fault that this book is sharply and bitterly concentrated, that the action is single and exclusive and that there is room in it for neither synthesis nor conclusion. But what it sacrifices in scope, it gains a thousandfold in strength and direction. All Quiet on the Western Front is, if not a great book, certainly a book nearly perfect of its kind. One can only regret the stupid necessity which resulted in the suppressing or deleting of material which was included in the English edition."

+ Bookm 69:552 Jl '29 820w

" 'All Quiet on the Western Front' will give any sensitive reader a terrific impact. It is a book that strikes a succession of hard, inescapable blows. In this sense it is a work of art. For only because of its economy of design, its compactness of episode and its trenchancy of utterance has it managed to fuse the almost unmanageable minutiæ of war material into a narrative that has the lean savagery of an Ibsen tragedy. It pays in loss of color and sense of greatness for this concentration of utterance, yet the price is perhaps not too big." F. E. Hill

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Je 2 '29 1800w

"A great and powerful book, a Locarno in prose, the end of all war's glamor in one volume. The book is starkly simple, thoroughly lacking in all bugle calls, all flag waving, all false patriotism. It is just War. The nightmare that was the slaughter on European battlefields is set down for all time in 'All Quiet on the Western Front.' Here in two hundred ninety pages is The War." K: Schriftgiesser

+ Boston Transcript p2 Je 1 '29 1350w

Reviewed by E. F. Edgett

Boston Transcript p6 Je 15 '29 250w

"The author's style is unfurbished, unapologetic, unemotional. In its masterful directness, it transmits with almost equal force the whole range of the war's reverberating hell-tones of agony and horror; the dreadful intimacy of the men with fiendish reality; their gleeless, death-dodging humor; their ominous, half-courageous, half-indifferent comradeship. Theme, style, mood, and the unstated, unescapable moral of this book are so nearly right that its claim to greatness must not be dismissed." C. M.

+ Cath World 130:246 N '29 420w

"Remarque tells his plain tale with a sort of naivete which is the result, not of too little experience, but of too much. He has given up rhetoric because it is inadequate and given up analysis because he has gone through more than can ever be analyzed. He must be content to record with a simplicity which is terrible because it could never have been arrived at except through an experience so long as to make the unspeakable commonplace." J. W. Krutch

+ Nation 129:43 Jl 10 '29 870w

"This book is the Bible of the common soldier, the Tommy in the front-line who month after month endured the mess and stink of death, and all the loud riot of killing, the testament of the only man who is competent and worthy to speak of the war. When this kind of experience is presented in anger and without art, it only arouses resentment and pity. But this book wins our sympathy by its detachment and by its æsthetic merits." Herbert Read

+ Nation and Ath 45:116 Ap 27 '29 780w

"It is written with simplicity and candor, and reads as if it had been well translated. There is nothing mawkish about it, and nothing 'literary'—it is not the artful construction of fancy, but the sincere record of a man's suffering. Unlike the experimental artist, the author has nothing new to say; but he says it so honestly and so well that it is like news to us, though it is bad news." T. S. Matthews

+ New Repub 59:130 Je 19 '29 1000w

"Anyone who was sufficiently in the thick of it for a long period, on one side or the other, might have written this grim, monotonous record, if he had the gift, which the author has, of remembering clearly, and setting down his memoirs truly, in naked and violent words."

+ New Statesman 33:218 My 25 '29 700w

"The author of 'All Quiet on the Western Front' writes vividly. There are moments in this volume almost insupportably tragic and pitiful. You find yourself wanting to skip, not from boredom but from apprehension. The narrative has power and weight and a flaring vividness of description." F: F. Van de Water

N Y Evening Post p5s Je 8 '29 900w

Reviewed by F: F. Van de Water

N Y Evening Post p6m Ag 17 '29 140w

"There is one further quality about 'All Quiet' in addition to its magnificent physical picture of war and its burden of a lost generation, and that is its humanity. It is an objective book, an ironic book, but it is never callous, never hard-boiled, never unfeeling. There is almost no stock pathos, but there is a warmth, a youthful sadness, a release of natural emotions unburdened by that sentimental restraint common to the men in 'Journey's End.'" L: Kronenberger

+ N Y Times p5 Je 2 '29 1300w

"No one can argue that this work was written purely to shock readers, or to sell on the strength of the sensational. Its very character refutes any such suspicions. The book is able, solid work; it comes from the heart of a man who suffered, and it is free from trickery." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p7m Je 9 '29 950w

"It is a superlatively sensitive creation, but it need not be compared to the Book of Job. It can stand on its own merits." E. M. Benson

+ Outlook 152:229 Je 5 '29 400w

"To the best of my knowledge, nothing written about the War while it was still being fought or since the armistice, in any one of the countries that were engaged in it or in any neutral land, has done to readers what this book has done." T. R. Ybarra

+ Outlook 152:545 Jl 31 '29 1500w

R of Rs 80:90 Ag '29 410w

"Although the book is hysterical it is not insincere, not written to make the flesh creep, and perhaps it is best for mankind that such facts should not be softened. The only mitigating circumstance in this welter of horror is to be found in the characters of the hero and his friends, who are, to a man, affectionate, unselfish and courageous. So that though the book is a strain on the flesh of the reader his spirit is not outraged." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 147:544 Ap 20 '29 100w

Reviewed by H: S. Canby

Sat R of Lit 5:1088 Je 8 '29 1300w

"The translation is a model of English prose; simple, dignified, and rising at times to a poetic power worthy of the Old Testament. It has been done by one of the men who lived and suffered in the trenches, one who fought against the fellow-artist whose book he has now so graciously introduced to the English-speaking world." R: Church

+ Spec 142:624 Ap 20 '29 1050w

"To read this crude, terrible, though beautiful book is an experience which leaves its mark."

+ Spec 142:1015 Je 29 '29 60w

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 30 '29 900w

"The greatness of the book is in its pathos unmixed with sentimentality, in its brooding sense of wasted youth, in the sharp realism of all detail, and in the supreme realization of what the war meant back home. The return to the scenes of youth is too painful almost to be endured. But easier endured in a book than in life. The hunger, the fear, the dirt, the wounds, the death after death of comrades—these are portrayed with a grave sincerity." Leon Whipple

+ Survey 62:574 S 1 '29 680w

Times [London] Lit Sup p314 Ap 18 '29 550w

Wis Lib Bul 25:196 Je '29

"A very fine, distinguished book. It is simply and beautifully written, and presents the horror, dullness, and bestiality of the trenches as experienced by the private soldier, in the mud and filth and blood of four years. It is not too much to say that it ranks with Barbusse's 'Under Fire' in its profound and moving simplicity in dealing with the realities of the front line atrocities." Coley Taylor

+ World Tomorrow 12:377 S '29 90w

RENARD, GEORGES FRANCOIS. Life and work in prehistoric times; [tr. by R. T. Clark]. (Hist. of civilization. Pre-history and antiquity). 228p il $5 Knopf [12s 6d K. Paul]

571 Man, Prehistoric [29-16936]

"The author endeavors to re-create in graphic description the life of earliest man, to show how he satisfied his need for food and drink and security of sleep; how he defended himself against heat, cold, beasts, other men; how he clothed and decorated himself and contrived a place to live in; how he came to engage in primitive industries and how finally out of his needs and his evolving mental faculties were born domestication of animals, means of trans-

RENARD, G. F.—Continued
port, unwritten laws, division of labor, war and commerce."—N Y Times

---

New Statesman 33:584 Ag 17 '29 450w
N Y Times p13 N 17 '29 350w

"He has reconstructed prehistoric life and into bare bones has breathed his vitalizing magic. It is an entrancing story of struggle, discovery, and invention: gradually chaos gives place to coherence, and the art of living supersedes the art of keeping alive. Fancy rarely gets out of hand and the few slips which we have noticed are small blemishes in what the author modestly calls 'a provisional essay.' "
+ Spec 143:308 S 7 '29 200w

"The conjunction of style and matter is so fortunate that it gives the whole volume the individuality that marks a contribution to literature as contrasted with a mere text-book."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p617 Ag 8 '29 1300w

RENARD, MAURICE. Hands of Orlac; tr. and adapted by Florence Crewe-Jones. 337p $2 Dutton
29-27927

When the hands of Stephen Orlac, French pianist, were crushed in a railway accident, Professor Cerral, the famous surgeon, performed a successful grafting operation by which Orlac was given the hands of Vasseur, a man executed for murder the same day that the operation took place. Orlac cannot recover his pianist's skill; instead, he becomes obsessed with the idea that his murderer's hands seek to ply their old trade. How a clever black-mailer builds upon his knowledge of Orlac's case and operates as a spiritualistic medium in his father's house, murders the wealthy elder Orlac, and leaves the faked Vasseur finger-prints as clues, are threads in the unravelling of this story of the fantastic and macabre pitted against reality and common-sense investigation.

---

Bookm 70:xxx D '29 100w

"The tale should appeal to lovers of the exotic, macabre, ghastly and that sort of thing." Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 N 3 '29 120w

"Mystery, horror, spiritualistic phenomena and futuristic surgery combine to make this book one that nervous and highly imaginative people should avoid. . . The book is sure-fire goose-flesh to those who can believe it for the time being; to others it is sheer nonsense."
N Y Times p48 D 1 '29 140w

RENN, LUDWIG. War; [tr. by Willa and Edwin Muir]. 342p $2.50 Dodd [7s 6d Secker]
29-15288

A German private who was promoted to the rank of corporal tells his story of the war. It is an unemotional recital impressive because of the detachment and realism with which Herr Renn records his experiences from the beginning of the war to the end.

---

Booklist 26:72 N '29

"Without heroics, without frills, without even unifying his experiences into some sort of a philosophy, the author has set down the story of fighting, disease, misery and death, lit up here and there by flashes of grim humor which intensify, without alleviating, the tragedy. The style of writing is stark, with a tendency to bareness."
Bookm 70:xxix O '29 120w

"It is a remarkable document, and a contribution to the real history of the World War of prime importance. It is an exact and carefully detailed account of actual operations from the point of view of a small unit. . . 'War' succeeds in stripping away every trace of glamour from modern war, if there was any left. Renn has not preached a pacifist sermon, but he has told us exactly what the last war must have been like to hundreds of thousands of the soldiers in it, and for this service we can hardly be too grateful." Herschel Brickell
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Jl 21 '29 1100w

Boston Transcript p2 Ag 25 '29 200w

"'War' lacks the philosophic perspective of Remarque's 'All Quiet on the Western Front.' It is perhaps not so great a book, although no one can yet judge with any certainty of that quality between the two. Renn's story strikes me, however, as more authentic than Remarque's. Renn's descriptions of actual combat, and of the front, are truer, more real and accurate. As I read 'War' I did not have a feeling, as I did with 'All Quiet on the Western Front,' that it was occasionally unreal. As a transcript of war Renn's book has the greater value. It is, too, the braver of the two volumes." J. B. Wharton
+ Nation 129:172 Ag 14 '29 600w

Reviewed by Edmund Blunden
Nation and Ath 45:369 Je 15 '29 230w

"Here is a book more complete, no less graphic, than that enormous seller, 'All Quiet on the Western Front.' But whereas 'All Quiet' takes in only a section of the War's last years, Herr Renn begins with the day of mobilization, and ends with the end of the War. It is true that a panorama cannot give as intense an effect as a narrower canvas. But the difference between these two truthful accounts is more than a difference of scope. We believe in both; both (if we are wise), have made us stop and think; but Herr Renn has not, as his predecessor has done, pierced through our minds and shaken our hearts."
+ — New Repub 59:349 Ag 14 '29 160w

"It is candid, brutal, and written almost without any kind of literary grace. For the reader who can survive the barrage of words, the book contains many details of trench life, and there is a passage near the end describing a hospital behind the lines which is vivid and interesting. 'War' is an eye-witness account, and it has most of the faults of this type of writing except exaggeration."
+ — New Statesman 33:382 Je 29 '29 90w

"A clumsy, occasionally powerful, frequently stupid volume. As a picture of the agony and bloody sweat of little men, caught in the omnipotence of a military machine, it is noteworthy. As literature, it seems to us something less." F: F. Van de Water
— + N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 20 '29 500w

"Artistically Renn has sacrificed larger effects to obtain the one he wants. His book lacks the sense of continuity, and of proportion and emphasis that give to 'All Quiet' memorable vividness, an integrated strength. It is episodic, impressionistic (less often in style than in pattern); it passes from one thing to another, expressively indicating the disordered speed that is true of movements of war. 'War' is an excellent record. But 'All Quiet' is a terrifying and moving document." L: Kronenberger
+ — N Y Times p4 Ag 4 '29 520w

R of Rs 80:90 Ag '29 410w

"The abrupt, staccato note is employed with striking effect. In the end we are almost numbed, like the suffering troops themselves. The book's simple truth will give it permanence."
+ Sat R 148:105 Jl 27 '29 100w

"I cannot predict that this book will be a tremendous success. It is too sincere, too naked. But I think the soldiers will like it. And reading between the lines, I imagine they are the ones Sergeant Renn wrote it for." L. H. Nason
+ Sat R of Lit 6:88 Ag 31 '29 820w

Spec 142:974 Je 22 '29 80w

"He records his impressions with that extreme simplicity which is one of the highest forms of literary art."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p485 Je 20 '29 660w

REPPLIER, AGNES. Père Marquette, priest, pioneer and adventurer. 298p $3 Doubleday, Doran

B or 92 Marquette, Jackues. Mississippi river—Discovery and exploration 29-3290

A biography of the French Jesuit missionary to the American Indians, who with Joliet first explored the headwaters of the Mississippi, and died from hardships before he was forty.

---

Booklist 25:246 Mr '29

"With an eye always open to the 'singularly picturesque surroundings and accessories' of primitive America, Miss Repplier has conjured up from such authentic sources as The Jesuit Relations, as well as romantic legends, a very human likeness of one of its most romantic figures. Through a scene that bristles with poisoned arrows, she has caused Père Marquette to move clearly and with dignity." R. E. Larsson

+ Bookm 69:101 Mr '29 60w

"Everything that discriminating mankind most cherishes in its best reading is to be found in this extraordinary book—a great story, greatly told; great human characters, moving and suffering; great deeds for great ends; great perils bravely withstood; great difficulties vanquished." C: E: Russell

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Ja 13 '29 1000w

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 19 '29 1000w

"This book is history written by an artist." J. J. F.

+ Cath World 129:116 Ap '29 250w

Cleveland Open Shelf p124 S '29

"Miss Repplier's biography is smoothly, charmingly written, a little too much so, in fact. Her literary glibness has embalmed Marquette's life in amber, making an ornament out of its reality. As decoration, one must admit, it is charming." Dwight Macdonald

+ — New Repub 58:76 Mr 6 '29 200w

"The lucidity of Miss Repplier's style is again illustrated and her familiar ardor finds its best object in so serious a theme." Harriet Sampson

+ N Y Evening Post p9m Ja 12 '29 550w

"Little enough is known of Pere Marquette, but that little his latest biographer has told with sympathy and tenderness. The great-hearted, fragile co-explorer of the Mississippi emerges clear and lovable from Miss Repplier's pages." F: F. Van de Water

+ N Y Evening Post p9m Ja 19 '29 360w

"Admirably fitted by descent and by Church affiliation to understand Father Marquette, Miss Repplier has gone about her self-appointed task with a high sense of its humanizing importance. Those not of her persuasion should see in the dedicated life of this explorer-priest a spiritual value for present-day American no less important than the heritage which New England bequeathed."

N Y Times p7 Ja 20 '29 1600w

"Her book makes no addition to historical knowledge, but it is an estimable contribution to the almost equally important task of popularizing knowledge already ascertained." Allan Nevins

+ N Y World p10m Ja 27 '29 880w

"It was a fortunate chance which led Agnes Repplier into the study and retelling of Père Marquette's story. She brings to it an easy narrative style and much sympathetic reflection. She has caught the rhythm of the life she celebrates."

+ Outlook 151:109 Ja 16 '29 380w

Pratt p37 summer '29

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw

R of Rs 79:28 Mr '29 60w

"Although not a professional historian, Miss Repplier conforms with the best traditions of the craft. She uses her material with rare judgment and restraint, and the critical chapter on the authenticity of the Marquette journal or chronicle might well have been produced in a graduate seminary. Few historians have a keener understanding of human nature than she, and fewer still can write about it so well." R. V. Harlow

+ Yale R n s 18:597 spring '29 250w

REVERE, PAUL. Paul Revere's own story; an account of his ride as told in a letter to a friend, together with a brief sketch of his versatile career; comp. by Harriet E. O'Brien. ltd ed 47p il $15 P. Walton, 88 Broad st., Boston

B or 92 29-9413

"In 1775, shortly after his famous ride, Paul Revere made a deposition giving his version of the incident. Some seventy years later, at the request of his friend, the Rev. Jeremy Belknap, historian of New Hampshire, he wrote a letter giving further details and particularly his own part in the event. This letter Miss O'Brien has reproduced, both in facsimile and in an exact typographical text, and has added some explanatory notes, the text of Longfellow's poem, a chapter pointing out the poet's variants, an account of the engagements at Lexington and Concord, and an admirable brief biography of Revere."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

---

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Je 30 '29 130w

"Particularly important to the student." F. P. H.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 17 '29 830w

"The illustrations are particularly interesting. They number among them reproductions of some of his cartoons—for Revere is entitled to no small measure of fame as the first American cartoonist—which helped to stir up and keep alive the anti-British feeling among the colonists; and they include some of the bookplates he made, his plates for the printing of Continental currency, and a page of specimens of his silverware."

+ N Y Times p3 My 5 '29 280w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 19 '29 560w

Times [London] Lit Sup p497 Je 20 '29 90w

REYLES, CARLOS. Castanets; tr. by Jacques LeClercq. 297p $2.50 Longmans

29-18266

The love of a famous Andalusian bull fighter for an equally famous Spanish dancer ends in tragedy for them, but in happiness for two of their friends.

---

"Even Moorish fatalism will not account for such note-book observations. The descriptions of the dance at the Tronio, the bullfight, the holy week procession, are vividly done. When left to themselves the characters speak vitally with an occasional folk tang that is refreshing."

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 O 13 '29 200w

"It is as primitive, as gayly colored, as frankly emotional as are the bowls and linens one sees everywhere in shop windows, and like them it caters to a foreign approval somewhat worth gratifying. It is a rather extravagant tale of a bull fighter and his two loves."

Boston Transcript p2 O 16 '29 400w

"The material in the book does not show to advantage through the haze of a bad translation. The unusually long-winded dialogue never rings true. The three principal characters are charming puppets, but they move through a slow melodrama beneath a heavy freight of speech. The bullfight stands out as a good episode, however, and the scene is attractive. Spain has lent the book an atmosphere, that, like a strong perfume, appeals in spite of the slender quality of the work."

+ — N Y Times p6 D 22 '29 280w

Outlook 153:193 O 2 '29 100w

Springf'd Republican p7e D 29 '29 100w

REYNOLDS, GEORGE GREENWOOD. Distribution of power to regulate interstate carriers between the nation and the states. (Studies in history, economics and public law) 434p $6.50 Columbia univ. press

385 Interstate commerce. Railroad law—United States. Transportation—United States. Carriers 28-8480

"This is perhaps the most comprehensive study of the relative powers of the nation and the states in the regulation of interstate commerce which has ever been published. It deals with the historical development of the law relating to government regulation of carriers. But it is more than that; it is in reality a most interesting study of the development of national consciousness."—Am Econ R

---

"This is not a law textbook, and the practicing lawyer in the hurried work of his profession in drawing a brief will probably not find the help which he desires. On the other hand no lawyer dealing with the subject of federal and state power over interstate commerce can find anywhere such a philosophical discussion of fundamental principles, as developed by the courts, as in this book. It is apparently almost the last word in historical research on this subject." E. J. Rich

+ Am Econ R 18:745 D '28 700w

"This volume makes a distinct contribution in its discussion of federal legislation and in its clear statement of present problems. It should prove of value both to the student and to the practicing lawyer." W. F. Dodd

+ Am Pol Sci R 22:770 Ag '28 820w

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 21 '28 160w

REYNOLDS, GERTRUDE M. (ROBINS) (MRS LOUIS BAILLIE REYNOLDS). Affair at the château. 322p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

29-19248

When Vere went to visit her great-aunt, the Baronne d'Almier, at Geneva, she had no idea that she would become enmeshed in a maze of ruthless international intrigue. Gilles Raumont, psychoanalyst and hypnotist, is able to use Vere as an unconscious spy in the camp of her English friends, who are protecting the king of a small Balkan state from his enemies. The Baronne, her husband, and Raumont have hidden a bombing-machine gun in the secret caverns of the château. But Ned Caverley suspects the intrigue, falls in love with Vere, and, aided by their English friends, and Vere's cooperation, foils the malicious plot just in time.

---

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 D 15 '29 120w

"Mrs. Baillie Reynolds has produced a clever study of the heroine's rapid development from the exceedingly self-centred girl who is introduced on the first page, into the young woman, who has learned to think for others, of the last. . . Mrs. Reynolds manages her finale with rare restraint."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p653 Ag 22 '29 350w

REYNOLDS, GERTRUDE M. (ROBINS) (MRS LOUIS BAILLIE REYNOLDS). Innocent accomplice (Eng title Accessory after the fact). 310p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.]

28-29727

"Gilda Franklin, a well-bred English girl who spends her affluent leisure sojourning at Continental resorts, learns, too late to prevent the marriage, that her dear best friend has been wedded to Cuthbert Lane, a man of doubtful character and calling. Not long after, while Gilda is guest at an Alpine inn, a man is found murdered, and evidence which is significant to Gilda alone points strongly to Lane, though he is far distant from the scene, as somehow involved in the crime. The problem which then naturally confronts Gilda is: Should she share her information with the police, and perhaps thereby bring grief and disgrace to her beloved friend or remain silent? She decides on the latter course with the result that she is herself soon regarded with suspicion. The solution of her difficulties furnishes the context of the rest of the story."—Sat R of Lit

---

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Ja 27 '29 100w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 151:114 Ja 16 '29 100w

"A fair thriller."

Sat R of Lit 5:760 Mr 9 '29 150w

Times [London] Lit Sup p940 N 29 '28 120w

RHEES, HARRIET CHAPIN (SEELYE) (MRS RUSH RHEES). Laurenus Clark Seelye, first president of Smith college; with a foreword by William Allan Neilson. 342p il $5 Houghton

B or 92 Seelye, Laurenus Clark. Smith college 29-5015

This biography of the first president of Smith college is the moving story of a man whose life, apart from the interest attaching to his long administration of the college, has a compelling power and charm.

---

Reviewed by H. F. Whicher

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 Ap 7 '29 1000w

"Everyone will be interested in this volume, from the gay little portrait on the front cover, to Professor Neilson's tribute at the end." I. W. L.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 24 '29 430w

"A delightful biography of the first president of Smith College. It not only throws some new light on the beginnings of what was then known as 'female education' and the prejudices which its supporters had to overcome, and shows the daily life of a high type of New England gentleman and scholar, but it also gives an intimate picture of the New England family at its best."

+ J Home Econ 21:452 Je '29 60w

"Mrs. Rhees writes with literary charm and grace that are enhanced by the simplicity and gentle dignity of the style. The book is of value because it preserves the account of the life and labors of one of the great educators of the nineteenth century and of the part he played in making possible the higher education of women. But it is most worth while, perhaps, because of the clear and vital picture it makes of a gallant and gracious soul giving forth an inspiring influence."

+ N Y Times p10 F 24 '29 400w

Wis Lib Bul 25:322 O '29

RHEINBABEN, ROCHUS ALBRECHT KREUZ-WENDEDICH, freiherr von. Stresemann, the man and the statesman; tr. from the German by Cyrus Brooks and Hans Herzl. 322p $3 Appleton

B or 92 Stresemann, Gustav. Germany—Politics and government 29-13411

A friendly study, by one of his political associates, of the German chancellor and foreign minister whose constructive statesmanship in the new Germany and in international affairs, at Locarno and Geneva, made him a world figure.

---

"The author not only gives us an intensely interesting and human picture of the man himself, but he sets forth clearly the ideals and aims which have guided his actions and the part which he has played in restoring confidence in Germany and in furthering the cause of international peace. There is not a dull page in the book."

+ Am Pol Sci R 23:789 Ag '29 100w

Booklist 26:29 O '29

"The worthy Baron who wrote the book may be an accurate recorder of facts, but he is neither a born storyteller nor a very skilled portrayer of character. He writes with portentous earnestness and with hardly a glimmer of that sense of humor which he correctly attributes to his hero. In short, this book should be read chiefly for the information which it yields, and not at all for its manner of offering it, nor even in certain cases for its interpretation of that information. The translators have done a respectable job and have provided a useful index." W: K. Stewart

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 My 26 '29 1050w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 31 '29 950w

"Another mediocre biography has been added to the ever increasing list. This life of Stresemann, Foreign Minister of Germany, will create no sensation of any kind. It is inadequate and uninteresting. . . Mr. von Rheinbaben's book will undoubtedly have a certain place in the current books on modern Germany, and will be of some service to students of recent German politics, but it is deplorable that a real piece of work—historical and literary—should not be made of Mr. Stresemann's extremely interesting life. This book is in no way big enough to fit its subject."

— Current Hist 31:230 N '29 200w

"The volume fails to illuminate Stresemann's personality. It does not even give an impartial, comprehensive survey of the facts in his rise as a statesman. Instead of an analysis we are given a lesson in patriotism. In other words, the book is written down to the voters. A more discreet selection of the reprinted material, greater objectivity, and less verbosity would have made more fascinating reading." Walter Kien

— Nation 129:470 O 23 '29 300w

"His book is singularly disappointing. To some extent the blame must attach to the translators who, without making definite mistakes of grammar or idiom, constantly use words and phrases which are obscure in English. But the main objections to the book from the point of view of the ordinary English reader are, first, that instead of attempting to give an impartial estimate of Stresemann's career and gifts, it is designed solely to magnify a hero: and, second, that the standpoint from which it is written is so much that of a man deeply immersed in German party politics, that the larger issues of European statecraft are overshadowed and the narrative tends to lose itself in details of electioneering devices which only those engaged in them can properly appreciate." Basil Murray

— Nation and Ath 45:683 Ag 24 '29 870w

"Although the German original has obvious defects as a biography—defects which are accentuated in the English translation—there is an abundance of fresh material about Stresemann himself, who is revealed not only in a very sympathetic light, but as one of the most attractive personalities in Europe."

+ — New Statesman 33:440 Jl 13 '29 1100w

"That Dr. Stresemann has had remarkable success in his guidance of Germany's foreign policy is, of course, quite evident to any intelligent observer who has followed the course of events in Europe. Herr von Rheinbaben's book seems to have been written mainly, however, for home consumption, and as a result it suffers from a certain measure of political idealization and overstatement which may, perhaps, be excused on grounds of legitimate party expediency." Joseph Shaplen

+ — N Y Times p3 My 19 '29 2000w

R of Rs 80:14 Jl '29 340w

St Louis 27:314 N '29

"It is perhaps inevitable that the portrait of the statesman which emerges from these pages should completely overshadow our glimpse of the man. . . One gathers that there is a distinctly human side to Stresemann from Baron Rheinbaben's pages; but there is little actual evidence to support the assumption." Stewart Beach

— + Sat R of Lit 6:7 Jl 27 '29 400w

Times [London] Lit Sup p583 Jl 25 '29 670w

Wis Lib Bul 25:322 O '29

RHEINSTROM, CARROLL. Psyching the ads; the case book of advertising; the methods and results of 180 advertisements. 362p il $5 Covici

659 Advertising 29-12203

"The author subtitles this work 'The Case Book of Advertising.' In it he advances no theories and states no rules. He presents simply a systematic analysis, with reference to method and result, of 180 advertisements published in magazines and newspapers. A narrative statement of the purpose, circumstances and results of the announcement, together with a brief copy analysis and a catalogue summary of the facts and figures involved, accompanies the actual reproduction of each advertisement in full. Fifty-seven different types of merchandising, representing the methods of eighty well-known advertising agencies, are 'studied.' "—N Y Times

Booklist 26:58 N '29

"It is a discouragingly huge task to measure advertising results. But exact measurements must at times have seemed futile to the alchemist. Modern advertising (1875—) still is highly experimental. In this light 'Psyching the Ads,' a record of experience and not an exposition of theory, is an important compilation." J. P. Bowles

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Ag 4 '29 400w

"Not for general consumption, but a mine of valuable ideas for the copy-writer and the merchant." R. S.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 20 '29 300w

"The book will unquestionably be of interest and practical value to the advertising fraternity as a ready-reference book on ideas and as a guide to advertising procedure and probable results." Frances Atwater

+ N Y Times p3 Jl 28 '29 400w

St Louis 27:284 O '29

RHODE, JOHN, pseud. See Street, C. J: C:

RHYS, ERNEST, and SCOTT, MRS CATHERINE AMY (DAWSON), eds. 26 adventure stories, old and new, by twenty and six authors. 352p $2.50 Appleton

Short stories—Collections 29-2250

These stories by well-known authors are tales of the adventure of high romance, of love, war, and weird experience. The authors range from E. M. Delafield to Johan Bojer.

For biographical sketch of Ernest Rhys see Boston Transcript p1 Mr 2 '29

Booklist 25:287 Ap '29

"Although the present anthology is satisfactory for a journey through space, it will not endure very long for a journey through time."

N Y Evening Post p8m F 9 '29 330w

"The collection of adventure stories edited by Ernest Rhys and C. A. Dawson Scott is singularly uneven. From the heights of Hazlitt and Pushkin it falls to the depths of a magazine 'thriller.' But for an idle half-hour one is sure to find satisfactory diversion in some one of the twenty-six tales." Bernard Smith

+ — N Y World p11m F 10 '29 50w

Wis Lib Bul 25:162 My '29

RHYS, JEAN. Quartet (Eng title Postures). 228p $2.50 Simon & Schuster

29-14910

"The ingredients: an English girl in Paris, married to a Polish adventurer, who is imprisoned for theft and leaves her penniless, a stranger except for casual acquaintances in the foreign colony, to become the guest of an

RHYS, JEAN—Continued
English couple, a man who desires her and can arouse her passion, and his wife, who keeps the girl in the home where she has her always under observation, always at a disadvantage, until she can finally crush her. The attitudes of the three are exposed with pitiless precision—the utter helplessness of the victim, the diabolic ingenuity of the wife, the social cowardice of the husband which makes a peculiarly disgusting setting for his lust. The background of Paris, in its cold hostility, with its tedious round of mechanical pleasures, throws the episode into harsh relief."—Bookm

"Quartet is a draft of concentrated bitterness. The tense, literal narration, almost ironic in its monotone, is a further reenforcement. Manner is perfectly adapted to matter. We shall have to go far to find another novel so powerfully wrought out of weakness, futility, betrayal, lust, and fear." R. M. Lovett
Bookm 69:193 Ap '29 150w

"There is no doubt about the power of Miss Rhys's characterizations. She knows these characters with that peculiar intimacy that always suggests prototypes, and, because of this surprising verisimilitude, the painful reality of the situation is raised to a higher plane than that of mere story telling. Her prose is staccato and purposeful and calculated to bring out clearly the essential note of her theme." Herbert Gorman
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 F 10 '29 850w
Boston Transcript p2 Mr 20 '29 110w
Nation and Ath 44:26 O 6 '28 200w

Reviewed by T. S. Matthews
New Repub 58:258 Ap 17 '29 300w

"There is stripped, bleak power to 'Quartet' and no single grain of lightness or humor. It is an impressively depressing book." F: F. Van de Water
+ N Y Evening Post p9m F 2 '29 80w

"If difficulty of subject is to be considered in judging the merit of a novel, Miss Rhys must be accredited with high achievement. Not only does she deal with the most complex personalities, exploring the most intimate recesses of their psychology, but she does so with the directness and certitude of the fine artist. The style, especially of the dialogue, belongs to the new tradition in prose, which shuns elaboration for sharpness and intensity of effect."
+ N Y Times p8 F 10 '29 730w

"This is far from a jolly book. It is also far from a great book. But once it gets its stride it is interesting, which is the first thing any book should be; and it really deserves the attention of serious readers who can bring a compassion to match the author's own to the unanswerable problem of what a woman like Maryan, caught as Maryan was between the millstones, can do with her body and her soul."
+ — N Y World p11m F 10 '29 280w
Sat R of Lit 5:936 Ap 20 '29 230w
Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 24 '29 70w
Times [London] Lit Sup p706 O 4 '28 300w

RHYS, MIMPSY. Mr. Hermit Crab; a tale for children by a child; introd. by Mary Elizabeth Barnicle. 190p il $2.25 Macmillan
29-22917

The delightful story of two little girls, Lucia and Louisa, and their adventures with troublesome relatives, friends, and particularly, governesses. It all happened in Victorian England and the illustrations are in keeping with the subject. The manuscript is supposed to have been found in a country rectory in Dorsetshire, England; it is claimed to be the work of a child of fourteen.

Reviewed by M. L. Becker
Bookm 70:444 D '29 150w

"Mr. Hermit Crab" is the sort of book you know is grand the minute you look at it, if you're any kind of a critic at all. I am rather glad that, for a change, Mimpsy doesn't write in the least like Daisy Ashford. The psychology of 'Mr. Hermit Crab,' if one may say so without offense, is juvenile, and the style is strangely—almost miraculously—mature, in the way of grammar and spelling and narrative skill and all that." Will Cuppy
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 N 17 '29 1650w

"Once we open the pages, this convulsing presentation of the genus governess and the really astonishing interest of the narrative of Victorian England and of two quarrelsome chums completely captivate us."
+ Nation 129:599 N 20 '29 120w

" 'mr. hermit crab' may or may not be a hoax. Either way, it is a work of art, with fine, high-stepping words and subtle humor, braving comparison with 'Alice' for extravagant fancy and treasure between the lines. . . Literary, sophisticated, commenting with hard, satiric, youthful glitter, on a thousand English customs and turns of manners, here is a tale that could but please both Jane Austen and the Count of Monte Cristo." Ernestine Evans
+ N Y Times p37 O 27 '29 230w

"I do not in general care for books by children, and can in every case tell precisely why I do not care. But this one is different; the story dances with energy and the savor is that of a child's bubbling interest in romance and adventure as it affects the incomprehensible conduct of grown-ups." M. L. Becker
+ Outlook 153:590 D 11 '29 170w

" 'Mr. Hermit Crab' was, to be sure, written by Mimpsy Rhys when she was fourteen, but does that prove that girls of fourteen will read it? I fancy they will hardly be up to its caustic analysis, its wise and humorous appraisal of human frailties. . . The book is, no doubt, a literary curiosity, and worth anybody's reading. Moreover, as a piece of ironic, near-burlesque narrative, it is amazing." Elizabeth Woodbridge
+ Sat R of Lit 6:424 N 16 '29 130w

RICE, ALICE CALDWELL (HEGAN) (MRS CAIL YOUNG RICE). The buffer. 332p $2.50 Century 29-7503

Cynthia had the most exasperating family, but she bore their ineffectualness and stupidities with charming grace. There were her bedridden aunt, her sentimental mother, her brother who was always in trouble, her sister who wanted to elope, and countless aunts and uncles and cousins full of advice and vacuities. Thru all this welter Cynthia moved serenely and even found time for a life of her own.

Booklist 25:361 Je '29

"The story has a quiet appeal and gentle charm, with enough incident to make it agreeably interesting."
+ Bookm 70:xx S '29 100w
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p30 Ap 14 '29 750w

"Her latest story lacks the verisimilitude that characterizes any work based on accurate knowledge of place and people. . . The outstanding merit of the story is the author's charming style, which never varies in excellence."
— + Boston Transcript p10 My 25 '29 220w
Cleveland Open Shelf p111 Jl '29

"The first part of the book is quite amusing, with some deft comedy and no small amount of verisimilitude. It is toward the end, when the author decides the time has come to settle everything neatly for all her characters, that the reader feels that he is attending a puppet-show."
— + N Y Times p8 Ap 21 '29 450w

"The story is pleasantly and humorously written and Cynthia was a nice girl." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 151:596 Ap 10 '29 120w
Sat R of Lit 5:1117 Je 15 '29 160w

"A sentimental best seller with a substantial element of thoughtfulness."
Springf'd Republican p5e Je 2 '29 330w

Times [London] Lit Sup p497 Je 20 '29 170w

Wis Lib Bul 25:277 Jl '29

RICE, ELMER L. Street scene; a play in three acts. 239p il $2 French

812 29-7657

The play, which has been for two years one of the outstanding theatrical successes in New York, has but one setting—a brownstone-front house which has deteriorated into a tenement. The story is concerned with the lives of the people who live therein.

Booklist 25:386 Jl '29

Cleveland Open Shelf p139 N '29

"It must be admitted that the whole of this ugly picture with its one lyrical movement, is brilliantly alive." Edgar Johnson

+ N Y Evening Post p11m My 11 '29 130w

Wis Lib Bul 25:158 My '29

RICE, THURMAN BROOKS. Racial hygiene; a practical discussion of eugenics and race culture. 376p il $4.50 (18s) Macmillan

613.94 Eugenics 29-1233

"The plan of this book is to present the fundamentals of genetics—the science of heredity—in the earlier chapters, in order that the biological foundation may be laid for the sociological application to be made in the following chapters."—Preface

"The biological chapters are clearly written, but in their application to eugenic problems the book is weak. . . The chapters on other social questions are more satisfactory, the measures that the author suggests are in the main worth while, and the book will serve a useful purpose in agitating a subject which needs to be brought prominently to the social consciousness." H. S. Jennings

+ Survey 62:143 Ap 15 '29 200w

"Professor Rice does not say much that has not been said before; but he has arranged the available facts in such admirable order, and drawn his conclusions therefrom so justly and soundly that his book may be recommended as a concise account of the laws of genetics, so far as these are at present unravelled, and of their sociological implications. Unlike most writers on eugenics, Professor Rice is modest and undogmatic in assertion, and his book is therefore the more readable and convincing."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p674 S 5 '29 950w

RICH, MARGARET E., ed. Family life to-day. 244p $2.50 Houghton

173 Family. United States—Social conditions 28-23308

A collection of fourteen papers presented at a conference held under the auspices of the American association for organizing family social work. Among the authors are W. F. Ogburn, Dorothy Canfield Fisher, Ernest R. Groves, Mary E. Richmond, Paul H. Douglas, Karl de Schweinitz, Rufus M. Jones, and Mary W. Glenn.

"Some of the papers have the earmarks of genuine scientific contributions. For the most part, the discussions, while interesting, were largely retrospective and can hardly be said to have broken any new ground either for social work itself or for research study of the family." A. J. Todd

Am J Soc 35:158 Jl '29 150w

Boston Transcript p8 O 6 '28 150w

J Home Econ 20:907 D '28 60w

Reviewed by Kenneth Macgowan

Nation 128:621 My 22 '29 130w

St Louis 27:155 My '29

"It is a good book for the lay reader in social work and a good reference book for mothers' clubs and college classes. It is well indexed, well assembled, and well printed, and is as good or better than most proceedings." M. G. Blanton

+ Sat R of Lit 5:688 F 16 '29 150w

"This is altogether an interesting and valuable collection, making as it does a many-sided survey. It is as if 14 searchlights had been focused upon this fundamental unit of society."

+ Springf'd Republican p10 Mr 6 '29 400w

"This was a unique anniversary celebration, in that it looked forward as well as backward, and all round, calling in experts from many other fields, biology, sociology, industry, the church, education, and so on, to share in giving a cross section of scientific thinking on the most intimate, puzzling and fundamental institution of humankind."

+ Survey 61:387 D 15 '28 170w

Wis Lib Bul 25:69 F '29

RICHARDS, IVOR ARMSTRONG. Practical criticism; a study of literary judgment. 375p $4 Harcourt

808.1 Literary criticism. Poetry—History and criticism [29-27523]

During a course of lectures at Oxford Mr Richards submitted to students, graduates and undergraduates, a group of poems without naming the authors, and asked for written comments on the poems. The bulk of the present book consists of an analysis of the responses he received and a summary of the conclusions to be drawn from them regarding the literary judgment of the average reader of poetry.

Booklist 26:112 D '29

"Mr. Richards is that rare combination, a learned, keen, and sensitive critic of poetry, and an acute psychologist and logician. Instead of the cloudy generalities which so often serve for criticism of poetry we have fundamental brain-work, detailed analysis, precise expression." Douglas Bush

+ Bookm 70:325 N '29 550w

Reviewed by Pierre Loving

Nation 129:724 D 11 '29 700w

"The great interest of Mr. Richards's book is that, assuming his pupils to possess a normal amount of wits, he shows that their amazing use of them throws important light upon literature and the reading and judging of it, and still more upon education. His book shows certainly how it is that so many people find great artistic merits in the most shoddy and meretricious of bad writers, and are absolutely blind to the merits of good or great writers." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 45:538 Jl 20 '29 1350w

"Not Puttenham, nor Daniel, nor Sidney, nor Webbe could have written so astute an analysis of poetry as Mr. Richards himself has written in this volume. And yet—with all respect for Mr. Richards—he is not a great critic. He is a master of laboratory technique, and his plea for the adoption of a method like his own, of learning to read poetry towards the ordering of our minds, is really a plea for the reading of poetry towards the ordering of laboratory technique. Mr. Richards has succumbed to the prevailing belief that you get education when you get ingenious educational methods. . . However, the value of the book is great—for its practical advice in reading and for its exhibit of critical errors traced to their source; for these merits, it should be read by every critic and teacher." Allen Tate

+ New Repub 61:111 D 18 '29 1900w

" 'Poetry as an exercise in sincerity' is the main theme of Mr. Richards's constructive chapters, and he states, with lucidity and passion, a thesis in which the critical reading of poetry holds the place of the more ancient disciplines which have collapsed under the dissolvent influences of democracy and science. . . His principles are of wide application, and, apart from their pertinence to poetic criticism, compel one to overhaul the whole fabric of society's intellectual structure."

+ New Statesman 33:683 S 14 '29 1100w

RICHARDS, I. A.—Continued

"In 'Practical Criticism' Mr. I. A. Richards has devised so valuable a tool for the improvement of ourselves as readers that professional critics ought to make a concerted effort to see that educators and the more cultivated portion of our reading public become thoroughly aware of its availability." G. B. Munson

+ N Y Evening Post p7m S 21 '29 860w

Reviewed by E: Shanks

Sat R 147:865 Je 29 '29 1400w

"We are less impressed by Mr. Richards' argument that the attainment of a really scientific criticism is ultimately possible than we are by his simple plea that we should cultivate humility and concentration, and that the honesty of the individual response to poetry is what really matters."

Spec 142:1026 Je 29 '29 250w

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p588 Jl 25 '29 1500w

RICHARDS, MRS LAURA ELIZABETH (HOWE). Laura Bridgman; the story of an opened door; prefatory note by William H. Burnham. 154p il $2 (6s) Appleton

B or 92 Bridgman, Laura Dewey 28-24593

Laura Bridgman's chief memorial, written by two of Dr Howe's daughters, Florence Howe Hall and Maud Howe Elliott, has long been out of print. Another daughter, Laura E. Richards, has supplemented this biography with a brief rehearsal of the main facts of Laura Bridgman's life and of Dr Howe's part in her awakening.

---

"Now that the original accounts are out of print, psychologists and educators will welcome this well-written story of the development of one who was blind, deaf, dumb and virtually wanting in taste or smell." S. P. Hayes

+ Am J Psychol 41:677 O '29 150w

Booklist 25:257 Mr '29

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 D 30 '28 100w

"Since the biography written by Dr. Howe's two daughters, Florence Howe Hall and Maud Howe Elliott has for a long time been unavailable, Dr. Howe's third daughter has written this brief story of Laura Bridgman's remarkable life and of the marvelous patience and skill with which the door of her mind was opened to normalities of existence." Halsey Raines

+ N Y Times p26 N 25 '28 420w

Survey 61:699 F 15 '29 60w

Times [London] Lit Sup p67 Ja 10 '29 50w

RICHARDS, LEYTON PRICE. Christian's alternative to war; an examination of Christian pacifism. 159p $1.50 Macmillan [4s S.C.M.]

172.4 War. Peace 29-25343

"The author is a leading English pacifist well known in America. His discussion is in deadly earnest. He shows how war leads to moral collapse on the field and at home; how it puts public opinion at the mercy of confessedly false propaganda; how peoples are compelled by it to submit to the dictates of governments; how Christians caught in its tide discard their Master's principles. He holds that a nation ought to be ready to suffer on a national Calvary and that in such non-resistance heroism is as genuine as in war."—Publisher's note

---

Times [London] Lit Sup p191 Mr 7 '29 210w

"It is a great satisfaction to have this book, The Christian's Alternative to War, from the pen of Leyton Richards, minister of Carrs Lane Church, Birmingham, and one of the most brilliant defenders of the faith in England. Mr. Richards' own war-time experiences as a conscientious objector add interest to the statement of his faith, and in not a few instances they furnish him telling points for his argument." R. N.

+ World Tomorrow 12:234 My '29 530w

RICHARDSON, FRANK HOWARD. Doctor's letters to expectant parents. 118p il $1.75 Children, the parents' magazine, 251 4th av., N.Y.; Norton

618.2 Pregnancy. Obstetrics 29-2933

"Sensible advice regarding the psychological as well as the physical needs of the pregnant woman and the preparations for and attitude of both parents toward the expected infant, by a well-known writer on child care."—J Home Econ

---

"This series of letters is well written with an eye to answering the questions, spoken and unspoken, which trouble most prospective parents, fathers as well as mothers." M. E. Champion

Am J Pub Health 19:577 My '29 330w

J Home Econ 21:369 My '29 40w

"It should be an extremely interesting and helpful book to be put in the hands of parents." J. A. Harrar, M.D.

+ Survey 62:259 My 15 '29 180w

Wis Lib Bul 25:274 Jl '29

RICHARDSON, HENRY HANDEL, pseud. Ultima Thule. 314p $2.50 Norton [7s 6d Heinemann]

29-18422

This last volume in the trilogy known as "The fortunes of Richard Mahony," the first two installments of which have not yet (1929) been published in America, shows Richard back in Australia, faced by the loss of nearly all his money; forced to take up his practice and begin all over again for the sake of Mary and the children. From the first it is a losing battle; Richard sinks from one level to another and ends in insanity and death, leaving Mary to struggle on as a village postmistress.

---

Booklist 26:72 N '29

"Meritorious book, quite in line with the best traditions of English prose fiction. . . A moving and unforgettable story—a naturalistic story in which the Universe appears as a concatenation of vaguely hostile accidents, and Man as the helpless and bewildered victim."

+ Bookm 70:202 O '29 380w

Reviewed by Alice Henry

Bookm 70:355 D '29 3100w

"There is here no trick to catch the taste of a publishing season, but candor as unassuming as it is wise. 'Ultima Thule' is a moving and saddening book, but it never descends to the sentimentality of mere dreariness; its horizons, however bare, are spacious and noble." Mary Ross

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 S 8 '29 700w

"This novel is not merely an academic study; it lives and possesses an unusual amount of vividness, because it primarily affords a sweeping view of a man's utter and complete disintegration. . . Great literature is always passionate yet restrained in its will to express; complete yet but a fragment setting the mind and imagination of the reader on a fresh, a powerfully emotional, or lightly humorous train of undeveloped thought. These qualities are the very fiber of Henry Handel Richardson's straightforward story of a doctor who was cursed because he was a fool." W: E. Harris

+ Boston Transcript p2 S 7 '29 1300w

"Henry Handel Richardson has made of extremely difficult material a book which is patently great. It moves with an almost majestic stride through phase after phase of the hero's life. Its majesty is innate and not superimposed by fine writing. The author is not in any sense a stylist. Nor is she a creator of moods—like Conrad, for instance, or like, in a much less degree, young Julian Green. The tragedy of the book is inherent in the material, not in the manner of its use. It is a devastating tragedy almost scientifically considered." Fanny Butcher

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p11 S 7 '29 480w

"The story is morbid, but it compels us, as long as we are reading, to consider the morbidity excusable. For artistic success the book lacks elasticity. The final impression is relief that it is over—a compliment and yet no compliment to the novelist." L. L. Irvine

— Nation and Ath 44:556 Ja 19 '29 240w

"There is no novel in Australian literature that so cuttingly analyzes the society of that country, for though it depicts conditions in the 1870's, in all essentials the same conditions obtain today. Nor is there any better presentation of the terrible heat and drought that curses life in the back country. . . But most remarkable is the presentation of the character of Richard Mahony. It is the analysis of it that gives the novel force." C. H. Grattan

+ New Repub 30:278 O 23 '29 750w

"A fine book it is, relentlessly and uncompromisingly real, full of the tragedy of human suffering and the self-imposed fate of human character." L. Kronenberger

+ N Y Times p2 S 15 '29 1150w

"This is one of the truest and most poignant books written by a contemporary writer. Ultima Thule is a great novel in the best traditions. Its selection does honor to the Book-of-the-Month Club."

+ Outlook 153:67 S 11 '29 400w

"Mahony is a phenomenon rare in modern fiction—a character fully realized, completely 'round.' The details of Mahony's mental collapse may be valuable to the psychiatrist, but they are surely outside the scope of fiction, and a blemish on what is otherwise a splendid piece of work." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 147:82 Ja 19 '29 480w

" 'Ultima Thule' will seem a great novel to all whose emotions can stand the strain. The only excellence about which there can be debate is this quality of distressful, haunting melancholy. In every other way the novel is undeniably of the first rank—in method, material, and manner." R. B. Macdougall

+ Sat R of Lit 6:130 S 14 '29 900w

"Composed, deliberate, a little otiose as is the manner of this writer, a relentless sincerity harrows the record of life fairly begun, honourably continued, and lost in the everyday misery of false friends, the death of children, crushing debt, intimate altercation, and gradual insanity. It may need a patient reader to appreciate the patient method of Henry Handel Richardson—to realize the large scale of the picture, the come and go of minor characters, the minute psychology with its flashes of illumination." R. A. Taylor

+ — Spec 142:58 Ja 12 '29 480w

Springf'd Republican p7e O 27 '29 700w

"No work is greater than its author, and for twenty-one years 'Henry Handel Richardson' has been an 'author's author,' known to the initiate who sensed the quality of her greatness, aware of the depth and range of her vision. Now a genius comes into her own, and a profound spirit finds recognition." Halle Schaffner

+ Survey 63:171 N 1 '29 500w

"It is all told with remorseless particularity and with that air of almost uninterested detachment which is the author's strongest grip on the reader. It is that which convinces us that all these dreadful things were real. The three volumes, together called 'The Fortunes of Richard Mahony,' are apt to recur to the mind less as a novel than as the history of some people we knew, and liked, and still grieve over."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p42 Ja 17 '29 480w

"The stark truthfulness of the book is enough to insure it a place among the classics."

+ World Tomorrow 13:43 Ja '30 100w

Yale R n s 19:vi winter '30 500w

RICHARDSON, LESLIE. Things seen in Provence; a description of the land of troubadours & romance from Valence in the north to the sunbathed lands on the shores of the Mediterranean. (Things seen ser.) 154p il $1.50 Dutton [3s 6d Seeley, S.]

914.49 Provence—Description and travel

29-26173

The author of the volumes on the Pyrenees and the Riviera in this same series now provides from his first hand knowledge of his subject a guide to the cities and thru the countryside of Provence.

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice

Bookm 69:xviii My '29 280w

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 10 '29 180w

"He is the more successful because he does not confine himself to the tourist-haunted towns, but displays a wide acquaintance with the countryside."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p971 D 6 '28 180w

RICHARDSON, NORVAL. Dream boat. 323p $2 Little 29-922

Young Francis Bruce goes to Marseilles to hunt for the yacht "Mon Rêve d'Amour," mentioned in his father's will. He loses a ring, finds a villa and its beautiful occupant who wears the mate to the lost ring, and before he is thru, discovers with her romance and mystery and the secret of the missing dream boat.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 F 3 '29 180w

"The story is well told. It has a swing and charm out of the ordinary, although the end falls into prosaic melodrama."

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Ja 26 '29 280w

Cleveland Open Shelf p31 F '29

"A combination of romance and mystery which uses all the familiar ingredients. The best part of the book is its background—the ancient city of Aix-en-Provence."

N Y Times p8 Ja 20 '29 400w

"However ephemeral the book may be as a piece of entertaining fiction, the author is to be seriously commended for the lovely background against which he frames his story."

+ — N Y World p11m Mr 10 '29 100w

"The events of this novel of adventure are either implausible or conventional. . . Mr. Richardson does better with his backgrounds than with character or plot. But those pleasant backgrounds are not enough to save the novel."

— Sat R of Lit 5:889 Ap 13 '29 80w

"Between the loss of the ring and the discovery and exploration of the yacht the reader is treated to much trivial detail. . . Treated either as a straight romance or mystery, the plot would have more interest."

— Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 28 '29 150w

Wis Lib Bul 25:103 Mr '29

RICHARDSON, SAMUEL. Familiar letters on important occasions; with an introd. by Brian W. Downs. (English lib.) 252p $4 Dodd [10s 6d Routledge]

826 Letters

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

Reviewed by Frances Bartlett

+ Boston Transcript p4 D 29 '28 900w

New Statesman 32:194 N 17 '28 630w

RICHET, CHARLES ROBERT. Impotence of man (L'homme impuissant); tr. by Lloyd Harvey. 150p $2 Stratford [7s 6d T. W. Laurie]

194 Life. Philosophy

Let us accept our impotence, or limitations, and be happy. This is the philosophy of the author, his conclusion after discussing man's individual, intellectual, social, physiological, and moral impotence. Our pleasures and achievements in small things, he states, are as much to be desired as the attainment of fame or success.

RICHET, C: R.—Continued

"A truly stimulating book."
+ Bookm 70:x N '29 150w

Reviewed by Alexander Goldenweiser
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 O 6 '29 460w
Boston Transcript p6 S 28 '29 380w
Cleveland Open Shelf p137 N '29
Spec 141:601 O 27 '28 1000w

RICHMOND, MRS GRACE LOUISE (SMITH). Listening post. 331p $2 Doubleday, Doran
29-16662

The three members of the listening post were William, the chauffeur; Martha, the cook; and Molly, the pretty Irish maid. They listened because they wondered why Rawley Kent, whom they all admired, had left his wife Judith, whom they all adored. It took a devoted brother to explain things to Judith before she saw the error of her ways. And the members at the listening post were delighted with the results.

"The author writes whimsically and her style makes light reading. One looks upon rather than shares the defeats and victories of the characters, who are introduced in a frivolous manner before the curtain rises on the first chapter."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ag 11 '29 200w

" 'The Listening Post' is similar in characterization and atmosphere to Mrs. Richmond's former novels and will delight her admirers quite as much as its predecessors."
+ Boston Transcript p2 S 4 '29 380w
N Y Times p27 O 13 '29 230w
Pratt p38 autumn '29

"Grace S. Richmond's gift of handling with pleasant ease people and situations in which the good always eventually predominates has won for her a large circle of readers who will be very well pleased with her latest novel."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:164 S 21 '29 230w

RICHMOND, MARY ELLEN, and HALL, FREDERICK SMITH. Marriage and the state; based upon field studies of the present day administration of marriage laws in the United States. 395p $2.50 Russell Sage foundation
347.6 Marriage. Marriage law 29-5006

A discussion of the present legal status of the marriage institution in the United States and "what can be done to prevent the life tragedies that now are caused by inadequate laws and their more inadequate administration."

Am Econ R 19:326 Je '29 130w

"This work represents the best monograph on the official aspect of American matrimonial law." A. J. Todd
+ Am J Soc 35:317 S '29 640w
Booklist 25:346 Je '29

Reviewed by A. G. Hays
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Je 2 '29 520w

"Here is an excellent compilation of relevant data, together with sufficient documentation for further research."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 27 '29 180w

Reviewed by Margaret Ernst
Churchman p16 Je 1 '29 300w
J Home Econ 21:284 Ap '29 60w

Reviewed by F. F. Kelly
N Y Times p7 Ap 21 '29 130w
Pratt p12 autumn '29

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 79:14 My '29 180w

"The book contains a vast amount of the available information on marriage laws and their social significance and continues the splendid series which the Russell Sage Foundation started back in 1919 with the Hall and Brooke pamphlet on the subject." J. P. Guild
+ Survey 62:370 Je 15 '29 220w

Reviewed by Harry Bone
World Tomorrow 12:376 S '29 250w

RICKARD, JESSIE LOUISA (MRS VICTOR RICKARD). Baccarat club. 298p $2 Liveright 29-11286

At the first important dinner of their married life Felise disgraces Rodney, and heartbroken at his reproaches, disappears: Rodney's friend Maverton finds out that the sinister Baccarat club is back of the whole affair, and patiently tracks Sir Ulick Lawson to the place where he has hidden Felise.

Bookm 69:xxvi Jl '29 40w

"A bit lurid and violent in spots, this thriller will do nicely in a hammock or elsewhere." Will Cuppy
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 Je 9 '29 150w

"The plot provides some thrilling adventures, and the outcome of the story is perfectly satisfactory except for the escape of the chief villain whom the author has thriftily saved for possible further use."
+ N Y Times p19 Je 16 '29 160w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 152:311 Je 19 '29 80w

RICKERT, EDITH. Greedy goroo. 42p il 75c Doubleday, Doran
29-18030

The greedy goroo lived in a house by himself and spent all his time eating and eating. But the worst of it was that while he always ate everything which other people gave him, he never gave anything to other people. Finally he grew so greedy that a big round cheese chased him and gobbled him up and sprang up into the sky. And now sometimes when you look at the moon you can see traces of the greedy goroo.

" 'The Greedy Goroo' is a funny book, but I do wish the Goroo wasn't quite so ugly. I suppose he had to be. And I rather wish, too, there weren't quite so many CAPITAL LETTERS in the text. They lose their effectiveness in the end. But the finish of the Greedy Goroo is delightful." Rose Fyleman
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 N 10 '29 120w
Cleveland Open Shelf p133 N '29

Reviewed by Ernestine Evans
N Y Times p37 O 27 '29 80w

Reviewed by M. L. Becker
Outlook 152:391 Jl 3 '29 80w

RIDDELL, FLORENCE. Can women forget? 312p $2 Lippincott [7s 6d Bles]
29-20109

Elisabeth's first husband had been killed in the war. So when Jack Kinnaird, her second husband, works to perfect the invention of a dangerous poison gas, she feels that she cannot suffer the possibility of its bringing destruction to untold future generations, and destroys the formula for it. Separation follows; Elizabeth spends her inherited fortune in travel and at Monte Carlo, while Jack goes on with his work at his laboratory. The introduction of another woman threatens complete separation between the couple till an accident at the laboratory gives Jack a taste of the poison gas he is inventing. He recovers, however, but this time destroys the formula himself, and he and Elizabeth are reunited.

"It is an inspiring theme, but the latter half of the story drops to the plane of a conventional society intrigue. Cynthia Clifford and Count Vanoski are definitely stock characters and, like the picture of Monte Carlo, lower the tone of some otherwise vivid writing."
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Ag 4 '29 300w
N Y Times p24 Ag 25 '29 200w

"The theme is admirable, but Mrs. Florence Riddell handles the idea awkwardly and hastens to abandon it for more conventional romance."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p164 F 28 '29 180w

RIDDELL, FLORENCE. Castles in Kenya. 304p $2 Lippincott [7s 6d G. Bles]
29-8989

With a recent legacy in hand Glenison Kenworthy follows her erstwhile lover out to India. He has long since forgotten her, and is now involved with a married woman. But Glen and her money arrive opportunely and Phil annexes both, legally by way of marriage, with far from happy results.

"Pleasant enough novel of sentiment."
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p34 Ap 14 '29 130w

"In spite of a possibly melodramatic plot, Miss Riddell has written a moving story of a determined woman's fight against the weakness of her man."
+ Boston Transcript p2 Mr 6 '29 300w
N Y Times p22 Je 9 '29 520w

RIDDELL, JOHN, pseud. See Ford, C.

RIDDLE, DONALD WAYNE. Jesus and the Pharisees; a study in Christian tradition. 193p $2 Univ. of Chicago press [10s Cambridge univ. press]
296 Pharisees. Jesus Christ 28-23814

"New Testament students are aware that among Jewish authorities on the first century of Christian history there has been strong protest against the picture of Judaism presented in the Gospels; particularly the disapproving references to the Pharisees. Professor Riddle of the University of Chicago traces the subject through the entire New Testament, and believes he finds an increasing tone of severity and hostility from the Gospel of Mark on to the Johannine writings."—Christian Century

"The argument is deeply interesting. The testimony of the New Testament is presented in great fulness. . . Professor Riddle's book is a stimulating discussion of an important phase of early Christian experience. It deserves full consideration in any competent study of the period. And if it overstates its thesis somewhat, the correctives are at hand in the sources themselves." H. L. Willett
+ Christian Century 45:1292 O 25 '28 480w
Reviewed by M. S. Enslin
Crozer Q 5:494 O '28 400w
J Religion 9:157 Ja '29 60w
Reviewed by H: J. Cadbury
J Religion 9:299 Ap '29 1200w
St Louis 27:7 Ja '29

"This book is perhaps the first serious attempt to grapple with a problem that is the inevitable outcome of recent New Testament studies."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p787 O 25 '28 300w

RIDGE, C. HAROLD. Stage lighting; with a preface by Norman Marshall. enl & rev ed 201p il $4 Houghton [12s 6d Heffer]
792 Theaters—Lighting 29-26259

"The author is closely associated with the Festival Theatre at Cambridge—a theatre possessing an extremely elaborate lighting plant, and in which many interesting experiments in the technical business of play-production have been made. Mr. Ridge begins with the definition of the technical terms relating to the construction and use of the stage, and at once passes on to electrical considerations—dimmers, wiring systems, switchboards, &c. The book reviews, towards the end, the general principles of lighting, and discusses the general relation of lighting to presentation methods from a rather 'advanced' point of view. It is helped out by careful and ingenious diagrams, and by sets of statistics. There are also many excellent photographs of designs used in productions at the Festival Theatre."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 25:274 Ap '29

"This generously illustrated and carefully printed volume will be interesting, first of all, to the stage electrician, but only slightly less so to the director of plays and others who have a practical interest in the modern theatre."
+ Bookm 69:xv Jl '29 150w

"The book is very useful to anyone who is interested in stage lighting, and should be especially valuable to managers and producers who need a general knowledge of how the effects they desire are to be obtained. . . The apparatus itself is described rather fully, as are the useful combinations of color, of light and of shade. The practical ways of employing apparatus are, however, treated only very sketchily, and accordingly the book leaves a considerable gap in the information it proffers."
+ — Boston Transcript p2 D 22 '28 300w
St Louis 27:286 O '29

"For amateurs who are thinking of constructing little theatres of their own his advice on structure and design is clear and cogent; he knows the difficulties and talks in terms of cost as well as of perfection in equipment. His own experience at the Festival Theatre, Cambridge, has been amply used, and the photographs are well chosen to illustrate his theories of expression through the lighting and architecture of the stage."
+ Sat R 146:300 S 8 '28 360w

"It is an excellent book, intended for the amateur, with many useful plans and diagrams, and beautifully illustrated with photographs of many productions of the Festival Theatre in Cambridge, England."
+ Sat R of Lit 5:629 Ja 26 '29 100w
Theatre Arts Mo 13:632 Ag '29 90w

"An extraordinarily thorough and careful manual on the subject."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p739 O 11 '28 200w

RIDGE, LOLA. Firehead. 218p $2.50 Brewer
811 30-1145

A narrative poem, the scene and time of which are the day of the crucifixion of Christ. The poem is divided into nine parts, eight of them presenting a specific character associated with the event of crucifixion: Christ, John, Judas, the two Marys, Peter, the Merchant of Babylon, Thaddeus the Unborn, and the Bondman. Part nine describes the resurrection.

"In the writing of this poem Lola Ridge definitely places herself among the best of our contemporary poets. Like Robinson Jeffers, she has found her medium in the long narrative poem. But, unlike many of her contemporaries, she has successfully carried forward the progress of her story in a great variety of movements and rhythms. . . Once the poem is in your hands you cannot put it aside; you read on and the godlike creatures in the familiar story are brought to life again with fresh and original meaning." Horace Gregory
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 D 8 '29 830w

"In this long narrative poem of the crucifixion, her mature gift has come to unique fruition. It is a strange flowering—as if almond blossom should bloom on the wind resisting boughs of a mountain pine. All the ripeness of Canaan is in it—and all the heat and stench of the dusty roads through Palestine. Where beauty and agony grow from the same shoot, we have tragedy. And 'Firehead' is true tragedy —such tragedy as has hardly been written in our time." S. V. Benet
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 D 14 '29 600w

"This magnificent poem does not represent the first occasion on which Lola Ridge has chosen crucifixion for her theme. Indeed, one might almost say that the enduring Golgotha of humanity has been the matrix of most of her poetry. 'Firehead' differs from her previous work in this, that her subject here is not man in torment, but Christ crucified, and the fire that is the leaping motif of the book is not the flame of rebel manhood, but the candescent spirit of the Savior. For want of a fresh interpretation of the chief characters in the story, and of a considered philosophy to integrate it, Miss Ridge's poem misses the impact of Robinson Jeffers' recently published 'Dear Judas,' with which one inevitably compares it. Her imagery, too, is somewhat diffuse and over-elaborated. These flaws, however, can lessen but can certainly not destroy the impressiveness of Miss Ridge's high achievement." Babette Deutsch

RIDGE, LOLA—Continued

+ — New Repub 61:150 D 25 '29 450w

"Among religious poems, especially among religious poems of today, 'Firehead' must be given a very high place. It is forceful and beautiful, a work in which imagination and intelligence fuse in a white flame." Percy Hutchison

+ N Y Times p7 D 8 '29 950w

"Miss Ridge approaches the event on Calvary in a highly religious attitude, but interprets it anew through a psychological study of the chief actors, whose emotions are described with unusual insight in lines that have no resemblance to those of conventional religious poetry." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p14 D 11 '29 250w

"It is a hard, exhaustive work of consecrated, noble striving, but the vision is not cleared, the great poem does not quite appear. The whole book is strung on high tension wires of strain. Frustration, or the fear of it, works through its veins. Victory is not realized, the Light not comprehended. And the result, to some readers, will be, for a time, only the formless black spots which follow a determined focusing upon the sun." L. T. Nicholl

+ — Outlook 154:28 Ja 1 '30 600w

"If all of 'Firehead' attained the level of its second half, Lola Ridge's new work would be one of the most impressive creations of any American poet. In conception it is huge, in composition daring, in imagination rich as a Florentine fresco. It is only in execution that critical reservation voices its objectionable note. The background is Golgotha; the soliloquies are human, mystical, super-terrestrial; the characters range from John to Judas, from the unborn Thaddeus to the undying Christ. Thus where Miss Ridge fails, she fails on a level far higher than most accomplished successes and her difficult triumphs are to be applauded far more than the quick victories of a facile theme." L. Untermeyer

+ Sat R of Lit 6:599 D 28 '29 1200w

RIDING, LAURA. Anarchism is not enough. 224p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d J. Cape]

824 29-6497

Essays in which Miss Riding discusses literature and art, society and the individual, Spengler and Wyndham Lewis, science and sex, Rebecca West, Katherine Mansfield, Virginia Woolf, T. S. Eliot and others.

"To read her book is like listening to a man who is passionately anxious to be heard, but who has such an impediment in his speech that he cannot be understood."

— Bookm 70:106 S '29 480w

"Miss Riding's style is epigrammatic, often antagonizing and bursting over with assurance, her ideas, sincerely anti-social, will be found stimulating by those who, when they come to occasional examples of a conceit which is not only silly but vulgar, do not, in a pet, drop 'Anarchy Is Not Enough' into the nearest waste-paper basket." G. T. Hellman

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 Mr 31 '29 720w

"If individualism is the keynote of modernism, then here is a little volume which is the quintessence of modernism, for it is individual to the nth power. It is a collection of essay-forms abounding in cold and concentrated acid from a personality which refuses to be absorbed. In fact, it is a powerful and disturbing defense of the individualistic attitude towards society. . . Bitterness of tone, pungency of flavor and eccentricity of treatment distinguish the author's style."

Boston Transcript p3 Mr 23 '29 200w

"What is certain is that Miss Riding has found a point of view which, whatever else may be said about it, is, considered pragmatically, of some value, since it enables her to see authors in a new way and to say things about them that have not been said. It is this fact which encourages us to struggle with her obscurities and to pardon her eccentricities."

+ Nation 128:380 Mr 27 '29 200w

New Statesman 31:268 Je 2 '28 250w

"Miss Riding has the equipment of a major critic: violent prejudices, a critical apparatus to direct these prejudices and a sharp mind to manipulate that apparatus. The essay entitled 'Jocasta' has much that is good." Gertrude Diamant

N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 2 '29 630w

Reviewed by Archibald MacLeish

Sat R of Lit 5:901 Ap 20 '29 1650w

"The author's fluent and garrulous self-satisfaction is perhaps the most abiding memory that one gets from reading it. It is a book of fragments, some short, some long, some intelligible, some difficult."

Times [London] Lit Sup p590 Ag 16 '28 550w

RIDING, LAURA, and GRAVES, ROBERT. Pamphlet against anthologies. 192p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d J. Cape]

808.1 Anthologies. English poetry 29-3515

So wittily and so logically do the authors argue against anthologies as to make the arbitrary practice of thrusting poems into this or that category, seem both futile and ridiculous.

"A deliciously-concocted diatribe against the Couch-Untermeyer-Rittenhouse school of editors. As a whole the argument of Riding-Graves is logical and almost convincing." Herbert Gorman

+ Bookm 69:105 Mr '29 250w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 Mr 3 '29 200w

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ap 13 '29 320w

"Even if it were wrong in its main contention this little volume would be a joy to read. Nothing could be more vigorous and welcome than the authors' scathing criticism of Palgrave and Quiller-Couch or the utterly annihilating re-examination of 'perfect modern lyrics.'"

+ Nation 128:sup492 Ap 17 '29 120w

"Miss Riding and Mr. Graves have a remarkable dislike of anthologies, and out of this they have made a clever, malicious, and often outrageously funny book. In their view, a little poetry is a disgusting thing; you must read a poet whole or not at all. They attack the standard anthologies by a series of arguments just plausible enough to be entertaining." Barrington Gates

Nation and Ath 43:796 S 22 '28 320w

Reviewed by Horace Gregory

N Y Evening Post p8m Ja 26 '29 530w

Reviewed by Percy Hutchison

N Y Times p2 Je 23 '29 750w

"With the general indictment of anthologies I entirely agree, though I think Miss Riding and Mr. Graves have been conspicuously unfair to some editors and to some poets." Granville Hicks

+ — N Y World p11m Mr 10 '29 250w

"Much of what they say is perfectly sound. They dislike the multiplication of such anthologies as one they quote called 'The Kiss in Poetry,' and here most intelligent readers will be with them. The reason for the existence of these brainless compilations is one of the mysteries of modern publishers. . . Miss Riding and Mr. Graves, in so far as they have anything sensible to say, have been wasting their time in beating a horse of which it does not matter whether it is dead or alive." E: Shanks

Sat R 146:17 Jl 7 '28 1400w

"Mr. Graves and Miss Riding fall a little flat in their jibes. This 'Pamphlet against Anthologies' is perfectly sound in intention, yet singularly offensive in execution. The result is smart and trivial and unimportant. We, for one, would rather read the despised anthologies."

— Sat R of Lit 6:63 Ag 17 '29 130w

"The joint authors have as much to do in their pamphlet as can well be done in the space, and they accomplish their purpose neatly, precisely, and wittily, and so convincingly that one is certain they are right, and also one feels a certain despair to reflect that the course which they suggest will scarcely be followed in any short space of time, if at all."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p564 Ag 2 '28 930w

RIDING, LAURA, and GRAVES, ROBERT. Survey of modernist poetry. 295p $2 Doubleday, Doran

821 Poetry. English poetry [28-14310]

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

Reviewed by Herbert Gorman

Bookm 69:104 Mr '29 400w

"This is an excellent book, in spite of axes to grind, rivers to cross and hobbyhorses to be elegantly ridden. The book seems to me to have been planned in the worst possible way to attract the plain reader—but why pretend that it is written for him?" Genevieve Taggard

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 Ja 6 '29 500w

"The esthetic idealism of Miss Riding and Mr. Graves unfortunately exceeds the actual limitations of the human mind. But their doctrinaire ardor, which expresses itself in a wholesale holocaust of contemporary reputations, does not prevent them from saying a number of fresh and pertinent things about poetry." W: Troy

+ — New Repub 57:328 F 6 '29 120w

St Louis 27:79 Mr '29

Reviewed by H. M. Kallen

Sat R of Lit 6:85 Ag 31 '29 1600w

RIEGEL, EMIL RAYMOND. Industrial chemistry, an introduction; an elementary treatise for the student and general reader. 649p il $9 Chemical catalog co.

660 Chemistry, Technical 28-23438

"Dr. Riegel, who is Professor of Physical and Industrial Chemistry in the university of Buffalo, presents thirty-nine chapters dealing with the manufacture of chemical products of commercial importance, including those used in chemical warfare. Additional chapters discuss the nature of patents, the appliances, instruments, and materials used by the chemical engineer, and the application of some of the more important metals. Problems and references at the chapter endings."—N Y New Tech Bks

"We are indebted to the author for giving us a more up-to-date text book on industrial chemistry than most of those to be had. Professor Riegel has treated the subject in an interesting manner and in the limited space of one volume has included much information of value to the student. On the other hand he has used many references that are now out of date and has not included many of the most interesting recent developments in this branch of science." J. A. Lee

+ — Chem & Met Eng 36:99 F '29 330w

"The author has prepared a concise and very readable volume describing the more important chemical industries. It should not only prove of value as a general textbook for colleges and engineering schools, but serve as an outline to the engineer and technical man who wants to familiarize himself with modern developments in industries that are outside of his own specialty. It should also serve the layman who has had very little chemical background, but who wishes to know more about these fascinating subjects, for it is written, in greater part, in plain, non-technical language with frequently an explanation of those technical terms that are used." C: W. Cuno

+ Ind & Eng Chem 20:1276 N '28 450w

N Y New Tech Bks 13:44 O '28

RIESEMANN, OSKAR VON. Moussorgsky; tr. from the German by Paul England. 429p $5 Knopf

B or 92 Musorgskiĭ, Modest Petrovich 29-1924

This study by a competent German critic, the first adequate life of the composer of "Boris Godounov" to appear in English, while emphasizing the biographical element, reviews all the great Russian's compositions. A chapter is given to his comparatively little known songs and another to the history of Moussorgsky's works after his death, especially the revision and orchestration of his compositions by Rimsky-Korsakov.

Booklist 25:246 Mr '29

"Mr. England's translation is admirable. The last chapter deals with 'The Subsequent History of the Works,' which are chronologically listed in an appendix. There are, also, a bibliography and a full index." Paul Horgan

+ Bookm 69:206 Ap '29 200w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 My 5 '29 180w

"All his compositions are ably reviewed and commented upon by Oskar von Riesemann, whose judgment of the musician is as sound as that of the man. Moussorgsky could not himself have chosen a more sympathetic and understanding biographer than this keen and all-seeing German critic." C. K. H.

+ Boston Transcript p4 F 9 '29 480w

Nation and Ath 45:244 My 18 '29 30w

"In tracing the tragic aspects of the composer's life, the early death of his mother and of his first love, his financial collapse, his years of drudgery as a government clerk, his alcoholism, the desertion of his friends, the rejection of his music, his loneliness and premature end, Mr. von Riesemann has created an epic—in the modern German historical sense. This is not a passing biograpny, but the summary of the art-philosophy of a revolutionary era, tracing the rise and fall of a rugged genius in terms of the forces of society, and giving evidence of that criticism of life called perspective." R. W. Marks

+ New Repub 58:102 Mr 13 '29 480w

"A good life of Moussorgsky was badly needed, and the present one is as comprehensive a biography of the great Russian composer as we are likely to have for many years."

+ New Statesman 33:84 Ap 27 '29 1350w

"The first full-length study of the composer available to English readers. . . This very competent volume will be indispensable to all those who have felt the magic of Moussorgsky's genius and wish to penetrate a little further into the recesses of his music. To others the book will prove a fascinating introduction to one of the giants of musical history." Hiram Motherwell

+ N Y Times p5 F 3 '29 1800w

"Von Riesemann's enthusiasm makes for the finest reading in the book. Those who admire Moussorgsky's music are commended to von Riesemann's excellent study, those who find his music 'interesting' are especially urged to its perusal. It is regrettable von Riesemann has not measured the man more to his music." Douglas Gilbert

+ — N Y World p10m F 10 '29 780w

RIGGS, ARTHUR STANLEY. Spanish pageant. 416p il $5 Bobbs

914.6 Spain—Description and travel 28-28380

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

Booklist 25:208 F '29

RIGGS, A. S.—Continued

"A near-perfect book of travel. It combines observation, interpretation, style—and romance." W. E. G.

+ Christian Century 45:1494 D 6 '28 180w

Cleveland Open Shelf p45 Mr '29

"'The Spanish Pageant' is at best a good piece of journalistic stock-taking. It treats of the Spain of today, is easy to read, and for one interested in where to go, what to see, or in acquiring a hint of what the Spanish people of today are thinking (politically and otherwise), Mr. Riggs's book is a sound enough guide." W: Spratling

N Y Times p11 Mr 24 '29 200w

Pratt p29 summer '29

"An excellent book to read before visiting the most unspoiled country left in Europe."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:499 D 8 '28 300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p857 O 31 '29 600w

RIGGS, AUSTEN FOX. Intelligent living; with an introd. by Dr Frederick Tilney. 230p $2 Doubleday, Doran

170 Conduct of life. Education of children. Mental physiology and hygiene 29-7825

It is Dr Riggs's belief that nervous and emotional disorders spring from badly adjusted human relationships. Intelligent living consists in right relations in friendship, marriage and family life, and it is these relations that Dr Riggs discusses.

Booklist 25:344 Je '29

Boston Transcript p7 Je 29 '29 580w

Boston Transcript p4 Jl 24 '29 240w

Cleveland Open Shelf p137 N '29

"He has written a notable book; it is notable and valuable because, on this basis of authoritative knowledge, the author builds up a structure of sane human helpfulness which is simple, easily understood, practical, and with an appeal frankly ethical, without ever showing any effort at 'popularization,' falling into the phraseology which is popularly associated with 'popular psychology,' or sentimentalizing in any way. It is difficult to imagine a volume better suited to be of assistance to the not-absolutely-unintelligent general reader in the living of a really intelligent life."

+ N Y Times p12 Mr 24 '29 600w

"The basis and standpoint of the book is ethical throughout and thereby far better than his rather misleading title. The book might well have been called Ethical Living instead of Intelligent Living. . . On the whole, the book may be unhesitatingly recommended. Its unscientific science will easily be forgotten in view of its splendid common sense and the first-hand acquaintance with human nature as expressed in the central chapters." R: C. Cabot, M.D.

+ Survey 62:454 Jl 15 '29 550w

RILEY, ISAAC WOODBRIDGE. Men and morals; the story of ethics. (Ways to modern thinking) 425p il $5 Doubleday, Doran

170.9 Ethics—History 29-23504

An outline of ethics which makes an historical survey of moral codes. After a discussion of the writings of philosophers belonging to the Greek schools, the Asiatic systems, the Renaissance, etc., the author summarizes the ethical teachings of modern thinkers and evolves a modern moral code.

"It is a thorough, well-organized, unobscured account of the great moral codes of the past. Men and Morals is a book for him who reads that he may think."

+ Bookm 70:xii D '29 180w

Boston Transcript p3 N 16 '29 620w

"Professor Riley was, of course, under the necessity of choosing only the most significant of the stages of his pageant and the most important of its actors. But he has succeeded in the difficult task of showing the vitality and the continuity of this long evolution of ethics and of making out of it a readable and stimulating book."

+ N Y Times p27 N 10 '29 450w

Springf'd Republican p12 O 11 '29 570w

RINDGE, AGNES MILLICENT. Sculpture. 186p pl $6 Brewer

730 Sculpture 29-19617

An attempt to evolve a standard by which one may select good sculpture from mediocre. The book discusses the nature, requirements, function, origin and purpose of sculpture, analyzes the grand periods of sculpture, and discusses the contemporary creed. With illustrative plates.

"Although the later sections are much more readable than the introductory chapters, which are weighted down by theories, the entire book evinces honesty, tolerance and sound criticism. Some two hundred well-chosen illustrations point up Miss Rindge's arguments."

+ Bookm 70:vi Ja '30 150w

"Miss Rindge presents her views with a certain hard sense that is rare in books on art—much rarer than erudition. And more, she is not offering propaganda for any cult or movement and she has not been taken in by the catch-penny wares of the boudoir-modernists." T: Craven

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 N 10 '29 900w

"It can hardly be felt that the promised touchstone saliently emerges; a result possibly due in part to the rather forbiddingly comprehensive scope attempted, resulting in an effect of confusion; in part to a style that does not always convey the message, itself so diffuse, clearly. There are passages sound in wisdom, if in large part it is not wisdom new-minted, and the book was obviously written with enthusiasm." E. A. Jewell

+ — N Y Times p18 O 20 '29 230w

RINEHART, MARY (ROBERTS) (MRS STANLEY MARSHALL RINEHART). The romantics. 310p $2 Farrar & Rinehart

29-22420

"The stories in Mrs. Rinehart's new collection, gleaned from the popular magazines of a period covering a number of years, she has classified to show how romance blooms persistently in hearts of all ages, from eighteen to eighty. If we read them as they are arranged we find ourselves speeding in reverse along the high road of Romance, going from old age youthward, a much more cheerful direction than the realistic one Nature stubbornly insists upon."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Booklist 26:121 D '29

"That there is humorous observation in these stories goes without saying. They cover a wide range of mood and matter and are written in a style which varies to fit each one of them snugly but unobtrusively." Garreta Busey

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 S 15 '29 530w

"Warm, human tales all of these. In one and all her characters are strongly etched, easily recognizable, yet never drawn in so circumscribed a manner as to catch the first glance of the reader's unthoughtful approval. Even when she writes an out-and-out popular tale Mrs. Rinehart writes as she herself wishes, not as her public would have her." W: E. Harris

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 5 '29 1450w

"Though only one of the tales is especially notable or unusual, this is an agreeable collection of short stories of the popular type well told and with plenty of variety, ranging from grave to gay and back again with a pleasant facility."

+ — N Y Times p7 S 1 '29 620w

Springf'd Republican p7e N 10 '29 350w

RINEHART, MARY (ROBERTS) (MRS STANLEY MARSHALL RINEHART). This strange adventure. 333p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

29-26271

There is nothing of Mrs Rinehart's accustomed gayety and humor in the tale of Missie Colfax from shabby childhood, thru a loveless marriage, to her futile attempt at suicide. Missie lived vicariously many lives, but never her own. Her great capacity for loving and giving found no opportunity, only frustration.

Booklist 25:287 Ap '29

"Mrs. Rinehart obviously wished to depict the sufferings of a sensitive, spirituelle girl in sordid, though comfortable and superficially respectable, surroundings. But Missie refuses to come to life as an authentic martyr, and one is more inclined to love her relatives, if only for their sins." Norah Meade

— Bookm 69:663 Ag '29 310w

"Mrs. Rinehart describes the parlors and costumes of another day in all their ugliness, more strikingly even than she describes any save the ugliest of her characters. The past as it comes to us in these pages is without glamour and without mirth." Garetta Busey

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 Ap 7 '29 850w

"It is hardly a pretty story. And it is seldom exciting. Mrs. Rinehart even makes no effort after drama. She becomes almost a chronicler, absorbed in the vital details of a feminine being. . . . Her actual description is somewhat subtler than is usual with her." C. B. Palmer

Boston Transcript p5 F 23 '29 1650w

Cleveland Open Shelf p95 Je '29

"The book has all the qualities of a Victorian drawing-room. It is full of knick-knacks and what-nots, and the furniture is plush. Those who like plush can sink in it comfortably."

— Nation 128:125 Jl 31 '29 110w

"Mrs Rinehart handles her theme with greater depth than usual, and makes an interesting but far from cheerful narrative."

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 16 '29 250w

"In this competently written book, scene follows scene with rapid ease; the people behave and talk like human beings; and the author is never at a loss for a situation or an incident of an illuminating kind. But, for all her skill and accomplishment, this story seems just to miss the vitality that would make it a really moving piece of work."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p593 Jl 25 '29 240w

RIORDAN, JOHN. On the make. 297p $2.50 Farrar & Rinehart

29-20970

Some more or less connected stories of collegiate life and city life involving a group of hard-boiled young people, written in the Hemingway manner.

" 'On the Make' is like a photograph album. A series of pictures taken from the same milieu, pasted in one after another with a meaningless sequence. You feel that the man behind the camera has a scientific interest in photography. He lacks a sense of the picturesque. He lacks a personal interest in those who pose for him. He simply enjoys collecting facsimiles."

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 O 27 '29 220w

"Mr. Riordan has a fresh clear view of the field he happens to have chosen to write about. This book gives an adequate indication that he will write more books and that they will be worth reading."

+ N Y Times p7 O 27 '29 550w

"Dance halls, speakeasies, cheap motor cars figure in these stories. Riordan is a good reporter of behavior who tries to keep himself out of the episodes. He is not interested in plots, which gives his tales much more the appearance of being slices of life than do those of Vina Delmar." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p18 O 17 '29 400w

"The stories in this book are so dull, flat, and insipid that one wonders why the author took the trouble to write them or the publisher to print them. Mr. Riordan seems to have attempted the Hemingway formula: his conversations ramble disconnectedly, he writes childishly simple sentences, and he declines to explain, or even fully describe, the actions of his puppets. His one innovation is an unhappy one: he has omitted even the modicum of 'point' that Hemingway allows to his tales."

— Sat R of Lit 6:490 N 30 '29 200w

RIPLEY, CLEMENTS. Dust and sun. 410p $2 Brewer

29-16080

Pat Standish was sent by his uncle, president of the Pan-American asphalt company, to a post in Mexico. But someone robbed him of his papers and applied for the job in his name, while Pat was thrown in jail. There he met Jerry Maxton, soldier of fortune, and the two carried out a plot to escape. Then adventure came fast and furiously: revolution, capture, prison, escape, warfare and a beautiful girl are integral parts of it. But Standish came thru safely, established his identity with the P. A., and won the girl.

Booklist 26:121 D '29

"Mr. Ripley admirably sustains the speed of his yarn and finishes on high with a couple of unexpected twists." Will Cuppy

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 O 6 '29 150w

"This seems to us the best adventure story we have read since Masefield's 'Sard Harker.' Mr. Ripley writes with a competence that flares up frequently into brilliance." F: F. Van de Water

+ N Y Evening Post p6m Ag 17 '29 100w

"In 'Dust and Sun' Clements Ripley has done a book which holds the attention and appeals to the imagination and one which will stand rereading—which, after all, is a fair test of merit in a tale of adventure." F: H. Martens

+ N Y Evening Post p7m Ag 17 '29 200w

"Clement Ripley's book is first-class adventure of the best type, intelligently written for readers intelligent enough to forget reality for a few hours."

+ N Y Times p39 N 17 '29 220w

"A satisfactory adventure story. The battle scenes are excellent, and if the narratives occasionally achieve something less than credibility, we are in no mood to complain."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:348 N 2 '29 100w

RIPLEY, ROBERT L. Believe it or not! A modern book of wonders, miracles, freaks, monstrosities and almost-impossibilities. 172p il $2.50 Simon & Schuster

Curiosities 29-3254

"Mr. Ripley gives us page after page of facts which the average reader will receive with a gasp of disbelief. He tells of Mulai Ismail, who was the father of 888 children; of the German woman who was the mother of sixty-nine; of Neils Paulsen, of Upsala, Sweden, who died in 1907 at the age of 160 and left two sons, one of them nine years old and the other 103 years of age; and of Jean Baptiste Mouron of Toulon, whom the French courts sentenced to serve one hundred years and a day in the galleys, and who served out the sentence—dying six years later."

—Sat R of Lit

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 My 5 '29 530w

Nation 128:123 Ja 30 '29 880w

Reviewed by Heywood Broun

Nation 129:653 D 4 '29 100w

"Mr. Ripley has been running for several years a newspaper column of text and pictures bearing the same title as this volume, from which he has selected the material here put into book form. He gathers his material from travel in foreign lands—he has visited sixty-four countries—and from books, newspapers, conversation and all manner of sources."

RIPLEY, R. L.—Continued
N Y Times p5 F 3 '29 300w

Reviewed by Harry Hansen
N Y World p10m Ja 20 '29 480w
St Louis 27:191 Je '29

"To those who wish to learn how queer, amusing, horrible, and incredible is the world we live in, his book is to be commended; it opens up new vistas in the realm of accident and a new conception of what man can accomplish and endure." Allan Nevins
+ Sat R of Lit 5:659 F 9 '29 1080w
Times [London] Lit Sup p982 N 21 '29 220w

RIPPY, JAMES FRED. Rivalry of the United States and Great Britain over Latin America (1808-1830). (Albert Shaw lectures on diplomatic hist., 1928) 322p $2.75 Johns Hopkins

973.5 United States—Foreign relations—Great Britain. Great Britain—Foreign relations—United States. United States—Foreign relations—Spanish America. Spanish America—Foreign relations—United States. Great Britain—Foreign relations—Spanish America. Spanish America—Foreign relations—Great Britain 29-5260

"Professor Rippy places under his microscope twenty-two years of British-American rivalry in trade, politics and territorial aggrandizement. On other occasions a severe critic of our government's present policy in Latin America, he believes that, for the period under review, Yankee diplomacy championed the cause of democracy; its 'record had in it something of the heroic.' "—New Repub

Reviewed by W: S. Robertson
Am Hist R 35:427 Ja '30 420w

Reviewed by C. K. Webster
Am Pol Sci R 23:753 Ag '29 690w

Reviewed by H. W. Dodds
New Repub 59:185 Jl 3 '29 500w

"The Albert Shaw Lectures on Diplomatic History have furnished us with some fourteen monographs in the field of diplomatic history. Of these, five have been devoted to some phase of Latin-American relations, and the last—by J. Fred Rippy—maintains the high standard of scholarship set by the previous volumes. . . The author is to be congratulated upon his clear, unbiased and accurate survey of the period treated." G. H. Stuart
+ Pol Sci Q 44:470 S '29 330w

"The present volume will take its place with 'The United States and Mexico' and 'Latin America in World Politics' as a standard work of reference in its field."
+ Sat R of Lit 5:1006 My 11 '29 380w

RIPPY, JAMES FRED; VASCONCELOS, JOSE; and STEVENS, GUY. Mexico. (Am. policies abroad) 253p $1.50 Univ. of Chicago press [7s 6d Cambridge univ. press]

972 Mexico. United States—Foreign relations—Mexico. Mexico—Foreign relations—United States 28-26854

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

"An admirable presentation from three different viewpoints of the relations between Mexico and the United States since the downfall of the Diaz regime. The Chicago Council on Foreign Relations has done a very real service in the education of public opinion in the United States in publishing this little volume."
+ Am Hist R 34:400 Ja '29 200w

"A compact, yet satisfying, presentation of the many issues that have arisen in twenty years' turbulent relationship between the nations facing each other across the Rio Grande." Ernest Gruening
+ Nation 128:538 My 1 '29 350w
St Louis 26:376 D '28

RISING, LAWRENCE. False youth. 334p $2.50 Liveright
29-29432

Lulu was getting along toward a certain age. She conceived a sudden and desperate love for a young life guard. Dennis was a handsome, but not an admirable sort; Louisa squandered her wealth on him, only to find that he utilized her gifts to make love to a young girl.

Reviewed by A. B. Parsons
— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 N 24 '29 750w
Boston Transcript p5 N 2 '29 250w

" 'False Youth' is not lacking in interesting material, but it deals with a delicate subject which requires subtle and understanding handling, and here the author has fallen short. The book is written in a superficial, trite manner, and in spite of dramatic incidents, the characters are puppets who go through gestures obviously manipulated from behind the scenes."
— + N Y Times p30 N 10 '29 300w

RISTER, CARL COKE. Southwestern frontier—1865-1881; a history of the coming of the settlers, Indian depredations and massacres, ranching activities, operations of white desperadoes and thieves, government protection, building of railways, and the disappearance of the frontier. 336p il $6 Clark, A.H.

976 Southwest, New—History. Texas—History. Frontier and pioneer life. Indians of North America—Wars 28-16221

"As used in this book, the term 'Southwestern Frontier' connotes, roughly, southwestern Kansas, the old Indian Territory, central and western Texas, and New Mexico east of the Rio Grande. More strictly speaking, however, it is the Texas frontier, the Indian wilderness stretching westward from a line connecting Dallas and Austin in that state. The theme of the work is the evolution of this vast area from a state of barbarism, through the buffalo-hunting and cattle-ranching stages, to the coming of the permanent settler. A brief consideration of the various Indian tribes living in the region is followed by a detailed account of the occupation of it by federal troops and the establishment of the numerous military posts there prior to the Civil War."—Am Hist R

"In the preparation of this volume Professor Rister has made use only of original sources; and thus, if in some respect the account is what we might have expected from our general knowledge of the American frontier, this work comes to us with the illustration of new experiences and fresh narrative." I. Lippincott
+ Am Econ R 19:436 S '29 320w

"Beyond doubt, Professor Rister has given us our most satisfactory unified account of the Southwestern frontier during the period in question. The most original, but least interesting, portion of the book is the description of the military advance and the subsequent Indian compaigns." J. B. Hedges
+ — Am Hist R 34:625 Ap '29 780w

"The style, often infelicitous, is that of the 'typical' doctoral dissertation. The book is attractively printed." D. L. McMurray
Ann Am Acad 142:461 Mr '29 140w
Boston Transcript p4 S 1 '28 280w

"At once readable and reliable, it gives a vivid idea of development from the days of the frontier posts, Indian massacres and white desperadoes to the establishment of the cattle barons." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p5 S 1 '29 70w
R of Rs 78:38 O '28 80w

RITCHIE, ALICE. The molehill (Eng title The peacemakers). 260p $2 Putnam [7s 6d Hogarth press]
29-14807

"Not a book for those who crave plot and action. It is a day by day chronicle of rather dreary lives lived in the Office of the League of Nations at Geneva, especially of Caroline Bailey, an English typist, and the rest of the group at the dull little pension where she lives. Caroline has been deserted by her lover and is falling in love with Humphrey Hume, a promising youth, who in turn loves Flora Fraser, a lady of many lovers. The reader gets the atmosphere of bureaucracy and sees Geneva at the off-season."—Cleveland Staff Notes

---

"Miss Ritchie's technique is strongly reminiscent of Virginia Woolf's. There is the same obliquity, the same attempt to achieve dramatic intensity through association grounded upon trivialities. But sometimes here, the littlenesses are illumined and the larger significance lost."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 Mr 17 '29 200w

Boston Transcript p2 Ap 10 '29 300w

+ Christian Century 46:364 Mr 14 '29 110w

"If this is a first novel, it is a noticeably good one. . . It is in her malicious, often bitter presentation of the indecisiveness and futility of these people that Miss Ritchie secures her most interesting effects."
+ Nation 128:406 Ap 3 '29 100w

"A distinguished first novel." Raymond Mortimer
+ Nation and Ath 43:257 My 26 '28 130w

"We are in the backwash of tragedy, and Miss Ritchie has succeeded admirably in suggesting it. The description of life in a Geneva pension, of the jealousies of the office and the peculiarities of the clerks are genuine and witty, while the emotions of the heroine and her rare daydreams are beautifully described. The subject is tricky but no trace of self-pity or rhetoric spoils the treatment. The prose is sometimes rather wan, but full of passages of restrained emotional beauty. This is a promising novel." Cyril Connolly.
+ New Statesman 31:484 Jl 21 '28 350w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p8m F 2 '29 200w

"We recommend 'The Molehill' as an intimate, competent, mordant novel." F: F. Van de Water
+ N Y Evening Post p9m F 9 '29 180w

"Miss Ritchie has made a vivid and breathing unity out of a plot which would have been, in almost any other hands, glaringly inadequate. The style of the book is its principal charm. In its sharp, illuminating descriptions, its unexpected yet apposite metaphors, it attains something of the suggestive quality of verse."
N Y Times p6 F 17 '29 480w

"There is a flagrant lack of unity and coherence; but then it is not a story. It is Life, and life is like that. Things happen; nobody knows why. There are moments of real beauty in this book, but it is beauty chiefly of the intellectual variety." Milton Byron
+ Outlook 151:150 Ja 23 '29 80w

"A delightful book, and Miss Ritchie deserves a word of special praise for Caroline, so perceptive, intelligent and ironical, so little tiresome or superior. But Miss Ritchie should not have made her beautiful as well: that is too much." L. P. Hartley
+ — Sat R 145:670 My 26 '28 460w

"Miss Ritchie with restrained irony pictures a diplomatic circle which, far from being cosmopolitan and stimulating as one might reasonably expect it to be, appears provincial, even dull. The gradual disillusionment of the idealists . . . gives Miss Ritchie an opportunity for subtle handling of the emotional possibilities."
Sat R of Lit 5:760 Mr 9 '29 230w

"Readers who like a plain narrative may find Miss Ritchie's style a little too subtle and elusive. But there is no denying the cleverness of her characterization or the fine quality of her writing."
+ — Spec 140:885 Je 9 '28 120w

Times [London] Lit Sup p397 My 24 '28 300w

RITTELMEYER, FRIEDRICH. Behold the man, a picture in four aspects; auth. tr. by Erich Hofacker and George Bennett Hatfield; according to the 2d ed., 1920. 167p $1.75 Macmillan

232 Jesus Christ 29-18756

A translation from the German of four lectures by one of the foremost religious leaders of central Europe. These lectures, entitled the Life, the Personality, the Message, and the Significance of Jesus for our own time, are the result of careful historical investigation and study.

---

Reviewed by J: H. Holmes
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 D 29 '29 230w

"A curious mingling of scholarship and mysticism is here. No theological ties trammel the author. He is seeking even more than bare truth, the personality and spirit of Jesus. It is no mere psychology that he is following but psychology plus and that plus is largely spiritual insight. It is not so much an argument as a vision." T. C. R.
Boston Transcript p4 O 11 '29 400w

"A glowing and inspirational tribute to the Man of Nazareth though it frankly offers nothing new to the student of that life. Translated from the German by Erich Hofacker and George Bennett Hatfield, of the University of Pittsburgh, it appeals at times to the American reader as somewhat rhetorical if not effusive." R. E. E. Harkness
— Crozer Q 6:520 O '29 80w

ROBACK, ABRAHAM AARON. Jewish influence in modern thought. 506p il $3.75 Sci-art pub., Harvard sq., Cambridge, Mass.

296 Jews—Biography. Philosophy, Jewish

A compilation of Jewish achievement in the arts and sciences. The author believes that the three most prominent men in the world are Henri Bergson, philosopher, Sigmund Freud, psychoanalyst, and Albert Einstein, scientist—all Jews. He has made a study of Jewish genius, and devotes some time to treatment accorded the Jews by non-Jewish peoples.

---

"Dr. Roback's book is forceful and convincing; it is certainly worth reading."
+ Bookm 70:xvi D '29 200w

"His book is a really powerful answer to certain anti-Semitic attacks and a potent parade and propaganda of Jewish influence and power."
+ Boston Transcript p2 N 16 '29 320w

"Dr. Roback can hardly expect any wide interest in the problems which have absorbed his attention. The book is more acceptable as a record than as propaganda in behalf of a complex social problem, which must be approached and considered with far broader perspective and a more objective tolerance than he displays."
— + Sat R of Lit 6:448 N 23 '29 330w

ROBBINS, WILLIAM JACOB, and others. Growth. 189p il $3 Yale univ. press

591.134 Growth 29-4886

Five popular lectures, by as many contributors, dealing with various aspects of growth. Contents: Introduction, by W. J. Robbins; An analysis of the course of growth and senescence, by S. Brody; Some relations between growth and nutrition, by A. G. Hogan; Some aspects of form and growth, by C. M. Jackson; Physiological factors regulating normal and pathological growth, by C: W. Greene. Bibliography. Index.

---

Boston Transcript p2 F 20 '29 80w

"The necessity of speaking to audiences of mixed occupations and interests has led the authors to produce a book in which no term is left undefined and no illustration left unexplained. And the fact that with the exception of Dr. Jackson all are members of the faculty of the University of Missouri has enabled them to escape unnecessary repetition of statement." W. H. Wolff
+ N Y Evening Post p8m Ja 19 '29 420w

ROBERTS, CECIL. Goose fair. 343p $2 Stokes [7s 6d Hodder & S.]
29-1671

The story of a vicar's daughter and a playwright who fall in love at a Nottingham carnival and meet again in London, where they love, suffer, and separate once more for a time.

Booklist 25:361 Je '29

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 F 17 '29 180w

"Romance will never be banished from present-day fiction while Cecil Roberts goes on writing tales of whimsy and poetical loveliness. He possesses the ability to make the light novel a thing of beauty. . . His story is English in manner and character and development, but when he comes to its close he takes delight in a surprise ending such as O. Henry might have joyed in. Incidentally it is the ending of the story which gives it its zest and point. Diana is the best woman character Mr. Roberts has yet given us." D. L. Mann

Boston Transcript p6 Mr 23 '29 1550w

Cleveland Open Shelf p78 My '29

N Y World p11m Mr 17 '29 120w

"There are touches of gay humor in the book which might have been put to a better use. The characterization is adequate to the demands of the plot."

+ — Outlook 151:268 F 13 '29 80w

"Though the tone is of quite ordinary romance the unexpected situations and human characters move the story along at an interesting pace, with no dull spots and no forced moments."

Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 31 '29 300w

"The book runs its course with a gaiety and zest made the more appealing by its passages of pathos; but somehow, after Mr. Cecil Roberts's earlier books, one had expected a deeper piece of writing."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p618 Ag 30 '28 220w

Wis Lib Bul 25:128 Ap '29

ROBERTS, EDITH ADELAIDE, and REHMANN, ELSA. American plants for American gardens; plant ecology—the study of plants in relation to their environment. 131p il $2 Macmillan

716 Gardens. Landscape gardening. Trees —United States. Botany—United States. Botany—Ecology 29-6549

This attractive handbook with its charming photographs, describes the plants indigenous to the United States, tells where they grow and how to transplant them to new and appropriate settings.

Booklist 25:312 My '29

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Ap 21 '29 120w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 29 '29 290w

Pratt p21 summer '29

"This branch of plant study, apart from its purely scientific value, which is large, may have a practical outcome of real significance." W: B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 79:10 My '29 150w

Wis Lib Bul 25:124 Ap '29

ROBERTS, KENNETH LEWIS. Antiquamania; the collected papers of Professor Milton Kilgallen [pseud.] of Ugsworth college, elucidating the difficulties in the path of the antique dealer and collector, and presenting various methods of meeting and overcoming them. 260p il $3 Doubleday, Doran

817 Collectors and collecting—Anecdotes, facetiae, satire, etc. 28-25873

"Shrinking from no discomfort or danger in his quest for knowledge, Professor Kilgallen accompanied Mr. Joseph Hergesheimer, Mr. George Horace Lorimer and Mr. W. L. Blumenthal on antique raids, on one of which Mr. Edwin Le Fevre was also a member of the party; from these experiences he learned how antique collectors talk and act when on the hunt. He wrote it all down in his papers."—N Y Times

Booklist 25:274 Ap '29

Reviewed by D. L. Mann

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 F 24 '29 550w

Cleveland Open Shelf p57 Ap '29

N Y Times p18 N 25 '28 380w

St Louis 27:58 F '29

"Surprising as it may seem, even to the point of incredibility, Mr. Roberts has produced a funnier book and a cleverer satire than 'The Collector's Whatnot.' " J: Spargo

+ Sat R of Lit 5:640 F 2 '29 700w

ROBERTS, PHILIP ILOTT (A. CHESTER MANN, pseud.). F. B. Meyer, preacher, teacher, man of God; introd. by F. A. Robinson. 221p $2 Revell [5s Allen & U.]

B or 92 Meyer, Frederick Brotherton 29-19203

"Meyer began his career under the influence of Moody revivalism. He remained strictly evangelical to the end of his eighty-odd years. Yet in action he was more catholic than were his beliefs. If he regarded as his main task the saving of souls for a future life, he was unstinting of his time, energy, and money in good works of every kind, and he often showed a fine initiative. He combined gentleness with militancy to a rare degree, and no one who ever met him could doubt his sterling character or deny his charm."—Nation and Ath

"This is not a technical biography having to do with unpublished letters and documents, but rather a popular resume and interpretation of a preacher and a man who served God and the people for more than sixty years. It is more than a tribute, it is an inspiration to every preacher, whatever the brand of his theology, to go and do likewise." T. C. R.

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 19 '29 530w

"This biography deserves reading for many reasons. It gives a faithful picture of Dr. Meyer's career. It wisely lets Dr. Meyer speak for himself at many points in that career. And, we cannot help adding, it shows a stalwart conservative leader of very different spirit and method from many who in these days would claim to be the heirs of the group of which F. B. Meyer was a part."

+ Christian Century 46:1380 N 6 '29 200w

"An interestingly anecdotal book."

+ Nation and Ath 46:sup230 N 9 '29 120w

"Without attempting to provide an authoritative biography of the late Dr. F. B. Meyer, the author draws a vivid and attractive sketch of this well-known preacher, so long associated in the minds of Londoners with Christ Church, Westminster Bridgeroad. . . Mr. Mann writes with the enthusiasm of a deep respect for his subject, and his estimate of Dr. Meyer, who died in the spring of this year at the age of eighty-one, will be endorsed by his friends."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p823 O 17 '29 220w

ROBERTS, RICHARD. Christian God. (Merrick lectures for 1928) 154p $1.50 Macmillan

231 God 29-18755

Reconciling modern scientific attitudes with older Christian faith, the author presents a liberal interpretation of God. The major part of the book is devoted to a discussion of sin and atonement.

"Roberts is one of the most original Christian thinkers of our day. He has no fear of modern thought. He welcomes science and its evolutionism and in the process of nature he finds God. But in Jesus on the Cross he finds Him far more. Here is a book for those to whom religion is vital, who feel its call and are not afraid to face its problems." E. B. Chaffee

+ Outlook 153:271 O 16 '29 150w

Springf'd Republican p12 O 8 '29 400w

"Dr. Roberts handles his materials with a rather light touch, earnestness, with much literary charm and in a style that is a model for ease and grace."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p778 O 10 '29 400w

ROBERTS, WALTER ADOLPHE. Pan and peacocks. 80p $2.50 Four seas

811

Eleven examples of the villanelle, a group of other poems, and a humorous fantasy called "The Queen's Tent" make up this volume of verse.

---

"Walter Adolphe Roberts writes unusual and distinguished verse. He handles that difficult form, the villanelle, with no little skill. He also proves his ability with the sonnet in a series which are well and meticulously wrought. His verse is at once colorful and correct, two qualities which often are not found together." C. K. H.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Mr 9 '29 400w

"By the serene imperturbability with which he has devoted himself to the making of poems which are like carved jade, Walter Adolphe Roberts has really achieved a highly original book. At the center of it stand eleven villanelles, and most of the remaining pieces are sonnets of classic mold. But Mr. Roberts has done more than display an almost scornful disregard of current fashions. Any sophomore can turn out formally correct examples of those cunning forms beloved by troubadours of old. Mr. Roberts has poured into these graceful contours the substance of robust and real poetry."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:841 Mr 30 '29 300w

ROBERTSON, ARCHIBALD THOMAS. Paul and the intellectuals. (Stone lectures for 1926) 217p $2 Baptist S.S. bd.; Doubleday, Doran [6s Hodder & S.]

227.7 Bible.New Testament.Colossians

28-24388

The Stone lectures delivered at Princeton theological seminary in 1926 consist of a commentary by chapter and verse on Paul's Epistle to the Colossians. The first lecture describes the cities in the Lycus valley and the nature of the Gnostic heresy which the Epistle condemns.

---

J Religion 9:327 Ap '29 120w

"The Epistle is expounded in a series of lectures in which accurate scholarship is allied with care to emphasize all that makes for spiritual edification in the Epistle. The general reader will have no difficulty in following the exposition, as Dr. Robertson has relegated his notes on the Greek text with any discussions of technical points to footnotes."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p211 Mr 14 '29 90w

ROBERTSON, JOHN CHARLES, and ROBERTSON, HARTLEY GRANT. Story of Greece and Rome; their growth and their legacy to our western world. 352p il $1.55 Dutton [4s 6d Dent]

938 Greece—History. Rome—History

[28-20369]

An outline of the political history of Greece and Rome for the general reader, stressing the influence of these countries upon the later history and civilization of the rest of Europe.

---

"This short but vivid Story of Greece and Rome is easily and charmingly written, and the authors know how to make the most of such historical climaxes as the battle of Marathon. The part devoted to Rome, being painfully compressed, is perhaps the less successful, but should send many readers in search of a fuller account."

+ New Statesman 30:636 F 25 '28 180w

N Y Times p10 F 24 '29 330w

"The experiment of writing a school book in which more space than is usual should be devoted to such topics as our debt to the Greeks in science and mathematics, the personality and influence of Socrates, and Greek art was well worth making, and the present well-produced and well-illustrated volume should meet a real need."

+ Sat R 145:234 F 25 '28 150w

ROBIDA, ALBERT. Treasure of Carcassonne; tr. from the French by Frederic Taber Cooper. 213p il $2 Longmans

28-24510

There were four boys and four girls in the Cassagnol family. At the time of Francis I they moved to the city of Carcassonne and lived near the Great Well where the treasure of the Visigoths was said to be buried. Many and lively are the family adventures as the Cassagnols seek for the treasure. Gay illustrations to match, by Dorothy Lathrop.

---

Booklist 25:129 D '28

"After seeing the French edition one cannot help wishing that there had been a closer adherence to it in the present English edition. But one is glad despite the shortcomings that the book has been translated, for it is a good tale and deserves the wider public that translation will bring." Mary Palache

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Mr 10 '29 450w

Nation 127:553 N 21 '28 20w

"The story is especially interesting for its vivacious and richly colored portrayal of the times in which its scene is laid."

+ N Y Times p10 S 23 '28 100w

St Louis 26:391 D '28

"This is a story of very particular charm. Cassagnol and Colombe, with their eight children who sleep on shelves or over the bread box in the tiny hut near the ramparts of Carcassonne, have the guilelessly endearing qualities of characters in an old fairy tale. They are at once human and universal. The illustrations of Dorothy P. Lathrop form a delightful and important part of the story." Lorine Pruette

+ Sat R of Lit 5:595 Ja 12 '29 500w

"An entertaining story for young people in their teens."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e D 16 '28 100w

"There are charming, lively pictures to illustrate the simple lives of the delightful Cassagnol family and the delightful town they lived in."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p120 F 14 '29 120w

Wis Lib Bul 24:309 N '28

ROBIN, LEON. Greek thought and the origins of the scientific spirit; [tr. from the new rev. and corr. French ed. by M. R. Dobie]. (Hist. of civilization: pre-hist. and antiquity) 409p $6.50 Knopf [21s K. Paul]

180 Philosophy, Greek [29-4655]

The history of Greek philosophy and of the scientific spirit to which it gave rise is written in this exposition of successive schools of thought from Thales of Miletos to Plotinus and the end of Neo-Platonism. The author is professor at the Faculty of letters of the University of Paris.

---

Reviewed by G: M. Whicher

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Je 23 '29 620w

Boston Transcript p8 Mr 9 '29 530w

"With French clarity and precision Professor Robin guides us in this volume, from Thales to the Neo-Platonists. What lifts his work above ordinary academic treatises is a leaping underwave of very lively personal feeling."

+ Dial 86:530 Je '29 150w

Nature 124:612 O 19 '29 230w

Pratt p7 autumn '29

ROBIN, LEON—Continued

"Professor Robin's work is characterized throughout by an exceptional sense of proportion. Occasionally, it is true, one meets with an emphasis which seems slightly misplaced. However, no better guide could be found than Professor Robin through the intricate mazes of the deeper philosophic issues of his subject."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p858 O 31 '29 700w

ROBINSON, CYRIL EDWARD. England. 892p il $5 Crowell

942 Great Britain—History 28-16945

"A history of British progress from the early ages to the present day." (Subtitle) Stresses the economic and political development of England, and brings the narration down to the general strike of 1925. The appendix contains a chronological outline of English historical events from 1000 B.C. to 1914.

---

"Nearly every page of his book bears witness to the fact that it has been written by an Englishman who is also a teacher of young Englishmen. . . Mr. Robinson writes with zest and his book is full of color. Both persons and events are at times vividly portrayed—the type of pictures boys especially enjoy. When he condemns it is without hesitation, when he praises he does not stint." Paul Knaplund

+ Am Hist R 34:311 Ja '29 280w

"The book is an excellent comprehensive history of England. Its special charm is in its style." C. L. King

+ Ann Am Acad 141:282 Ja '29 100w

"Nothing better in the way of English history could well have been devised, whether for students or for general readers, than the work which, issued recently on the other side of the Atlantic in four volumes, is now offered in a single volume of nearly a thousand pages by its American publishers." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p2 Ag 18 '28 550w

"It is a simple, straight-forward account up to 1928, with chief emphasis on the political and economic history and a rather large space given to wars. There are 63 maps and 24 plates of excellently chosen illustrations, chiefly good portraits and fine architectural subjects. The style is interesting and stimulating, and the factual material is used in discussion rather than merely chronologically arranged. The book would probably be most useful for good senior high school students who were especially interested in English history or for junior colleges. It is naturally English in flavor, but that does not prevent it from being a good introduction to historic England."

+ Hist Outlook 19:348 N '28 210w

"From the first page to the last the book moves, the story unfolds, the scene changes, the drama is alive. Those of us who have labored long and conscientiously over drab and joyless textbooks purporting to be histories of England appreciate this fact the more. . . Unfortunately, as an historian Mr. Robinson has several serious faults, not the least of which is a certain overstressing of the patriotic motif." W. P. Hall

+ — New Repub 58:77 Mr 6 '29 530w

"The selection of material, the well-placed emphasis and the author's attractive style make this a work of real achievement. No new facts are revealed in the book but a new and fresh presentation of the old facts give it life and color and vitality." T: M. Griffiths

+ Portland Evening News p5 Ja 3 '29 1100w

St Louis 26:390 D '28

"On the whole the book presents an interesting, unbiased account of British progress from the early ages to the present day."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:282 O 20 '28 280w

"Dealing with every aspect of life, his book is too comprehensive to plumb very deep. But it supplies a sound, lucid, and exceptionally readable survey of the broader lines of national development, visualized as movement rather than as detail."

+ Spec 143:106 Jl 20 '29 140w

"As an attempt to tell the story of England in relation to world history, with an economy of non-essential detail and a generous treatment of large issues, the book, as a whole, is eminently successful. In the later period Mr. Robinson's method involves a considerable amount of controversial statement, but he puts his case clearly and often persuasively, and his book is a suggestive, and occasionally brilliant, survey, written with a freshness which compels admiration even when it does not command assent."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p594 Jl 25 '29 300w

ROBINSON, CYRIL EDWARD. History of Greece. 480p il $3.50 Crowell [7s 6d Methuen]

938 Greece—History

A history of ancient Greece in which is reflected the light which has been shed in Greek history by the excavations and scholarship of the last thirty years. The book is divided into two parts, part one covering the period from the prehistoric age to the Peloponnesian war, part two to the death of Alexander, with an added chapter, The Hellenistic age and after.

---

Boston Transcript p7 D 4 '29 250w

"Mr. Robinson tells the story of Greece vividly and economically. From the prehistoric age to the 'Hellenistic Age and After' he compresses it all into less then five hundred pages of not too small print, and yet avoids being dry or writing a mere catalogue of events. His chronological tables and summaries, at the end of the book, should be invaluable to students, and there is an index."

New Statesman 33:692 S 14 '29 180w

"Wherever this book is read it should do much to inspire the reader to regard history as it should be regarded, not as a mummification but as a revitalizing of the past."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p550 Jl 11 '29 820w

ROBINSON, DANIEL SOMMER, comp. Anthology of recent philosophy. 674p $4 Crowell

190 Philosophy, Modern 29-788

A book of selected readings, for beginners, from recent philosophic literature. The excerpts are arranged in groups according to the chief types and problems of philosophy. Each selection is preceded by an analysis and followed by suggestions and questions.

---

"This book is to be recommended to those who wish to gain a brief, yet adequate picture of recent philosophy."

+ Am J Soc 35:524 N '29 100w

"The book is an extremely useful compilation for a beginner who wishes to have some idea of what contemporary philosophers are writing about and of the problems in which they are interested, as stated in their own words." I: Husik

+ Ann Am Acad 144:152 Jl '29 500w

Booklist 25:231 Mr '29

"The foremost contemporary thinkers and the most notable tendencies of contemporary thought are represented in this volume of almost 700 pages. Primarily designed for use in college courses, it will also prove valuable to any one who wishes to acquaint himself with the recent arguments of the 'idealists,' the 'realists,' the pragmatists, the 'vitalists,' the agnostics, etc. Each selection is preceded by a lucid analysis and followed by 'suggestions and questions for discussion.'" B. R. Redman

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Mr 10 '29 150w

"These essays are well calculated to carry out the compiler's purpose of aiding beginners in philosophy, and are of decided value for the lay reader in stimulating to that exercise so rare in these days, the use of the mind."

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 2 '29 400w

Christian Century 46:589 My 1 '29 30w
Int J Ethics 39:373 Ap '29 130w
Reviewed by Herschel Brickell
No Am 227:adv Mr '29 70w
Pratt p7 autumn '29
Wis Lib Bul 25:157 My '29

ROBINSON, DONALD FAY, ed. Harvard dramatic club miracle plays; ten plays tr. and adapted by various hands; ed. with notes on production and music; preface by George Pierce Baker. 247p $3 French

808.82 Mysteries and miracle-plays 29-28

Ten medieval miracle plays translated from the cycles of various nations. Contents: The pageant of the shearmen and the tailors: the Coventry play; The Towneley play; The nativity: The Chantilly play; The Benediktbeuren play; The wisemen: the Spanish play; The Provençal play; The Hessian Christmas play; The Maastricht play; The star: the Bilsen play; The Umbrian play. The first six have been produced recently; the remaining four are unproduced plays.

Booklist 25:242 Mr '29
Boston Transcript p2 Ja 23 '29 240w
N Y Evening Post p9m F 9 '29 110w

"A very worthwhile volume. To the scripts Mr. Robinson has added useful notes on the best methods of production—setting, lighting and costume—for these special plays, even including the music of the chants."
+ Theatre Arts Mo 13:632 Ag '29 240w
Wis Lib Bul 25:99 Mr '29

ROBINSON, EDWIN ARLINGTON. Cavender's house. 103p $2 Macmillan

811 29-8332

A long narrative poem in blank verse, powerful and starkly tragic. In a moment of unreasoning jealousy Cavender had thrown his wife over a cliff. After twelve years of tormented wandering he returns to his dark house—to find the ghost of his wife sitting in her room, beautiful and serene as in life. In the dramatic dialogue that follows between the two their characters and past stand revealed, the voice of Cavender's conscience speaking thru the woman.

Booklist 25:386 Jl '29

"It is a little bit thin; there is too much mere dialogue and too little scene; and while the poem as a whole is skillfully managed, one comes away from it feeling a little empty-handed." Conrad Aiken
— Bookm 69:322 My '29 900w

"His poem exhibits not only Robinson the poet, with his shrewd drawing of men and women, his power to evoke atmosphere, his gift of music, but also Robinson, the man, with his dry humor, his essential seriousness, his philosophy of resigned if sorrowful agnosticism." Babette Deutsch
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Ap 21 '29 2000w

"The chill wind which blows through 'Cavender's House' is somewhat disappointing after the white fire and red fire of 'Tristram.' . . It is an ingenious conception, but there is less poetry in 'Cavender's House' than we have a right to expect from a great poet." B. R. Redman
— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 S 8 '29 710w

"Judged by any standard, 'Cavender's House' is a remarkable achievement. If it were the work of a new poet, for instance, it would be hailed by all the critics as a masterpiece. Its story is told with the clear-cut distinction that is to be found in all of Mr. Robinson's poetic work." Carty Ranck
+ Boston Transcript p2 Ap 27 '29 1700w

"If the theme is somber, the poem itself is luminous with insight, imagery and terse felicity of phrase." W. E. G.
+ Christian Century 46:618 My 8 '29 280w

" 'Cavender's House' is not as good as Mr. Robinson has been before, not as rich or interesting."
— Nation 128:567 My 8 '29 200w

"As the narrative progresses the woman becomes more and more the inexorable voice of Cavender's conscience. It is a subtle, and an immensely powerful, objectification of Cavender's accusing inner voice that Robinson has wrought, dramatic in intensity, and actually dramatic (though more in the closet than the stage sense) as developed in the poem. . . 'Cavender's House' is a work of starkly tragic import, done with an austerity of manner possible only to a truly great poet, a poet who has mastered every problem of his art." Percy Hutchison
+ N Y Times p4 Ap 21 '29 2000w

"To 'Cavender's House' Mr. Robinson has brought all the characteristic elements of his art, and has built with them an excellent narrative poem." J. D. Tasker
+ Outlook 151:668 Ap 24 '29 480w
Pratt p27 autumn '29
Reviewed by L: Untermeyer
Sat R of Lit 5:995 My 11 '29 850w
Springf'd Republican p7e O 27 '29 350w
Reviewed by Helen MacAfee
Yale R n s 18:813 summer '29 380w

ROBINSON, HENRY CRABB. Crabb Robinson in Germany, 1800-1805; extracts from his correspondence; ed. by Edith J. Morley. 194p $3.50 (10s 6d) Oxford

B or 92 Germany—Social life and customs. Germany—Intellectual life [29-15668]

Letters written by Henry Crabb Robinson to his brother Thomas, during the former's first visit to Germany, from 1800-1805. These letters are excerpted to show the political, social, and intellectual state of Germany and England during the Napoleonic wars.

"Professor Morley here continues her gleanings among the Crabb Robinson manuscripts in Dr. Williams's Library. The present selection is not equal in general interest to her two volumes of Robinson's correspondence with the Wordsworth (1927), but it is a valuable work for any one interested in either the Robinson or the Germany of 1800-1805."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p45 D 1 '29 350w

"To describe a book as important is not the way to recommend it, but this book is both important and interesting, and may accordingly be safely recommended to all real readers." Augustine Birrell
+ Nation and Ath 45:272 My 25 '29 320w

"This work shows careful and accurate editing, and a sufficiency—as good as a feast—of learning."
+ New Statesman 32:820 Ap 6 '29 850w
Times [London] Lit Sup p269 Ap 4 '29 1200w

ROBINSON, HENRY MORTON. Buck fever. 65p $1.50 Duffield

811 29-4346

The collection contains two narrative poems, and lyrics of love and of nature. Certain of the poems have been previously published in anthologies, others are reprinted from various sources.

"Mr. Robinson has a definite and individual charm and a real gift for phrase. His galloping and vivid tale of 'Blow-them-cuckoo, Bugling Pete,' is very good entertainment, for the most part skillfully managed; though he falls, like Masefield, into a false sentimentality which mars the crisis of his story." Conrad Aiken
+ — Bookm 69:215 Ap '29 220w
Reviewed by C: Divine
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 My 26 '29 130w

ROBINSON, H: M.—Continued

"Mr. Robinson has a quiet visual power which presents with freshness and precision, the moods and images in the stock of his poetic material." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 23 '29 480w

"Even the ironical pathos that Mr. Robinson employs, even the jazz-rhythms to intensify the pathos, the fulsome language and the Masefieldian bravado of the diction, cannot prevent even a closely critical reader, unwilling to be taken in, from a certain sympathy. This is something of a triumph." Lionel Trilling

— + N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 2 '29 480w

N Y Times p18 Je 2 '29 300w

ROBINSON, RALPH M. Penn country and the Chilterns. 212p il $5 Dodd [15s Lane]

914.215 England—Description and travel. Chiltern Hills. Penn, William. Buckinghamshire, England [29-28540]

Thirty miles or more northwest of London, in the midst of the Chiltern Hills, lie Jordans and other quaint little villages, once the stronghold of the Lollards and later the home of William Penn and other well-known Quakers. Mr Robinson has explored this country on foot and has given an account of its unspoiled charm.

Boston Transcript p4 N 2 '29 480w

"Mr. Robinson knows the history of his chosen country well. He has studied its records, and exhibits them without parade. His writing is excellent. In Mr. Charles Bathurst's twenty-five drawings, which accurately illustrate Mr. Robinson's text, poetry, using the word to connote the something in any art which escapes precise definition, is everywhere manifest."

+ New Statesman 33:448 Jl 13 '29 520w

"For those who like to travel historically 'The Penn Country and the Chilterns' may be recommended as pleasant reading."

N Y Times p2 D 29 '29 300w

Spec 142:902 Je 8 '29 180w

"Mr. Robinson does not rely for the interest of his book on the details of natural history—yet he is alive to the constituents of scenery. Only a pleasant taste for the humours of his fellows can enable a writer to rely so little on the stock subjects of the rambling topographer and yet to write so good and human a book."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p489 Je 20 '29 1350w

ROBINSON, WILLIAM MORRISON. Confederate privateers. 372p il $4 Yale univ. press [18 Milford]

973.759 Privateering. United States—History—Civil war—Naval operations. Confederate States of America—Navy 28-28397

A chronicle of the confederate privateers, the Jefferson Davis, the Savannah, the jaunty little Dixie, the Sallie, the Petrel, the Beauregard, the Rattlesnake, St Nicholas and the J. M. Chapman, during the Civil war. Told from the Southern point of view.

"It is not too much to say that this volume by Mr. Robinson takes its place among the indispensable works on the Civil War." E: Breck

+ Am Hist R 34:623 Ap '29 720w

"Here is solid historical stuff fully documented and excellently indexed. The volume contains many interesting reproductions of prints, paintings and letters of marque."

+ Bookm 68:xxiv F '29 40w

"It is a tribute to Mr. Robinson's skill that so much information of so limited a phase of the Civil War has been collected and arranged in so interesting and instructive a form."

+ Boston Transcript p8 Ja 26 '29 200w

"Mr. Robinson writes from the Confederate viewpoint, but his history is, on the whole, unprejudiced and his method judicial."

+ N Y Times p10 Ja 20 '29 320w

"For the lover of adventure and high emprise, there is a collection of stories full of action such as is hardly to be found outside of the finest of sea fiction. And for the historian, there is a genuine contribution to the record of America—the first complete account of an important phase of the war which was all its own." D. M.

+ Outlook 150:1333 D 12 '28 230w

Pratt p34 summer '29

"The author shows a wide acquaintance with marine lore, and his writing is well flavored with the vernacular of the sea. It is unfortunate, however, that expressions of Southern prejudice occasionally mar the monograph."

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:767 Mr 9 '29 200w

Springf'd Republican p10 Ag 1 '29 350w

"Mr. Robinson must be given all the credit that is due to a writer who turns what is ordinarily a dull, but instructive, subject into a really interesting one by close and scholarly research into its intimate details."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p19 Ja 10 '29 880w

"Mr. Robinson is not restrained within the strict limits of his theme, but ranges freely, telling what he finds of interest in much out-of-the-way substance. His vivid narratives are convincingly documented; and the value of the book is enhanced by good print, happy illustration, and a copious index." U. B. Phillips

+ Yale R n s 18:379 winter '29 580w

ROBSON, EDGAR ILIFF. Wayfarer in the Pyrenees. 216p il $3 Houghton [7s 6d Methuen]

914.6 Pyrenees mountains [29-14987]

"Mr. Robson reveals a careful knowledge of his subject and emphasizes the less known. While he starts with the Basque country and goes on to the centre of the range, he gives more space and detail to the less familiar eastern side of the country below it."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 26:27 O '29

Reviewed by A. B. Maurice

Bookm 69:xx Jl '29 380w

"The present volume must rank among the competent but uninspired."

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 Je 2 '29 100w

Boston Transcript p4 Je 1 '29 380w

Reviewed by Sylva Norman

Nation and Ath 45:sup137 Ap 27 '29 90w

"For the ordinary tourist we recommend Mr. Robson's book, which is entertaining, full of good sense, and well written. Its chief fault is that the map contains only a tenth of the names mentioned in the text."

+ — New Statesman 32:supxii Mr 16 '29 280w

"Most surely does the book furnish everything in the way of close-packed and fine-sifted information that the ordinary wayfaring man ought to ask, but it is an uncommonly dyspeptic mass."

Spec 142:434 Mr 16 '29 100w

"Apart from some repetitions which can hardly be helped, one's only criticism of the author is that he is inclined to cut matters short where one would like to hear more. But that, again, is almost inevitable when so many places are mentioned; and the point of his useful and well-informed book is that it does mention so many of the less known, and is helpful about walks and routes of travel."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p197 Mr 14 '29 580w

Wis Lib Bul 25:275 Jl '29

ROBSON, WILLIAM ALEXANDER. Justice and administrative law; a study of the British constitution. 346p $5 (12s 6d) Macmillan

342.42 Great Britain—Constitutional law. Courts—Great Britain 28-16563

Dealing primarily with constitutional law, Mr Robson surveys a large number of judicial institutions of all kinds, including not only formal courts of law, but also administrative tribunals and the judicial organs of voluntary associations and professional organizations. He also discusses the advantages and disadvantages of these administrative tribunals and makes some recommendations for the future development of administrative law in England.

"This is a most valuable and important treatise on 'real politics.' The most important feature in the book is its candid analysis of facts. The whole book is full of important ethical problems and suggestive ideas." C. D. B.

+ Int J Ethics 39:122 O '28 180w

"Mr. Robson's critical and sensible examination is welcome. By repeated investigations of this sort, we may be saved the graver errors involved in our inherited habit of denying development until the result is full-grown and partially decayed." Max Radin

+ Nation 128:sup489 Ap 17 '29 160w

"From the expert point of view it is an extremely valuable book, a learned and original investigation in a field which has hitherto been hardly touched." Leonard Woolf

+ Nation and Ath 42:782 F 25 '28 1100w

"For lawyers and laymen alike this is a book of first-rate importance. Its subject is a comparatively new constitutional development, which has so far received but little notice, and Mr. Robson is to be congratulated on his full and bold and lucid treatment of it. . . The arguments of this very able book deserve the closest study and discussion."

+ New Statesman 31:90 Ap 28 '28 780w

Reviewed by R. L. Schuyler

Pol Sci Q 44:135 Mr '29 530w

Sat R 145:394 Mr 31 '28 1000w

Times [London] Lit Sup p231 Mr 29 '28 1600w

ROCHE, ARTHUR SOMERS. Woman hunters. 337p $2 Century

29-7502

Allen Gorham, who tells the story, has been a professional gambler and a woman hunter. But he loves little Vonny Candace in spite of her millions and in spite of the scandalous charges made against him by a dishonorable man and a jealous woman, he wins her.

Bookm 69:xxvi My '29 30w

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 Ap 21 '29 120w

"The tale is exciting, rapid in action, and contains so many thrills that the reader is constantly wondering whether after all, the right man will triumph. . . Sam Candace, Vonny's father, is one of the best features of the story, and with the other characterizations, redeems it from mediocrity."

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Je 5 '29 230w

N Y Times p22 My 19 '29 160w

"The story, of its kind, is a first-rate performance."

+ N Y World p7m Je 23 '29 120w

Springf'd Republican p7e Jl 21 '29 200w

ROCHEMONT, RUTH DE. Evolution of art. 635p il $6 Macmillan

709 Art—History 29-8039

Chapters on the arts of painting, sculpture and print-making. The purpose of the book stated by the author is "to create, by a study of the outstanding artists of all the ages, a just perspective on the aims and accomplishments of painting, sculpture and print-making." The study of painting begins with the Italian Renaissance; the study of sculpture with Egypt.

Booklist 25:313 My '29

"This history of art has a remarkably good treatment of the media of painting, sculpture and print-making and will be very illuminating to those not fully aware of the artist's difficulty in transcribing his inspiration into material."

+ Bookm 68:vii F '29 70w

"The purpose is more than admirable, it is noble; but the fulfillment of it is another matter. The first part of the history is far superior to the ordinary run of art books. It is hard to believe that any one who has expounded the earlier painters with so much patience, sympathy and insight could have written of more recent developments in so biased and uncritical a spirit." T: Craven

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ap 7 '29 1000w

J Home Econ 21:452 Je '29 60w

"It is too tedious to hold the interest of the reader who knows little of art but wishes vaguely to be conversant with art matters. For the person who is actually interested in art it is totally inadequate." Margaret Breuning

— N Y Evening Post p10m My 4 '29 500w

Reviewed by E: A. Jewell

N Y Times p11 My 12 '29 450w

"A superficial and practically useless history of painting. In dealing with the old masters, the writer accepts the commonly shared judgments of time, tends to confirm mass taste, good or bad; and in treating modern painting, she uses 'ugly' and 'unimportant' pretty freely to dismiss anything that she does not like or does not understand."

— Outlook 151:467 Mr 20 '29 90w

"Vague generalizations, art jargon, feeble sentimentalism, and a handy literary background are the elements employed throughout the book. Loose thinking and loose construction prevail. Here is found a limited collection of emotional reactions, unrestrained by any sense of historical or esthetic criticism."

— Sat R of Lit 6:95 Ag 31 '29 280w

"The writing of Ruth de Rochemont's 'Evolution of Art' must have been a labor of love. For it is clear that the author knows and appreciates great paintings of the various schools which make up the European tradition, down to the end of the 19th century. She has evidently spent a great part of her life among masterpieces and responded to them with emotions authentically her own."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 14 '29 180w

ROCKWELL, FREDERICK FRYE. Dahlias. (Home garden handbooks) 85p il $1 Macmillan

716.2 Dahlias 29-2569

A well-known writer of garden books contributing to a well-known series, writes of the different varieties of dahlias, and how to plant and grow them. Illustrated with drawings of the flowers and diagrams for planting.

Booklist 25:274 Ap '29

"Mr. Rockwell is more than a dahlia enthusiast; he is a dahlia patriot. A dahlia is vastly more than a dahlia to him; it is 'the great American flower.' . . To any one who will listen and toil he offers advice, with boundless enthusiasm, on forms, types, planting, fertilizing, storing and hybridizing."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 F 17 '29 130w

"Mr. Rockwell has presented a well-balanced handbook, with many new suggestions."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 27 '29 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p89 Je '29

N Y Times p7 Mr 3 '29 60w

ROCKWELL, FREDERICK FRYE. Irises. (Home garden handbooks) 84p il $1 Macmillan

716.2 Iris (plant) 28-25337

A well-known garden authority has prepared this useful little handbook on the varieties of iris and the care and cultivation of each variety. The drawings and diagrams are in black and white.

Booklist 25:200 F '29

Cleveland Open Shelf p89 Je '29

N Y Times p7 Mr 3 '29 60w

Wis Lib Bul 25:27 Ja '29

ROCKWELL, FREDERICK FRYE. Lawns. (Home garden handbooks) 87p il $1 Macmillan

712 Lawns 29-9736

A handbook on the planning, making and maintenance of lawns. There are chapters on lawn tools and their care, weeds and pests, and lawns for special conditions.

Booklist 25:384 Jl '29

"An excellent addition to Macmillan's series of Home Garden Handbooks. It covers its subject fully in a practical, unwordy manner."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Je 2 '29 80w

"The book is full of useful information and is so compact that it requires very little study for a working knowledge."
+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 3 '29 150w

Wis Lib Bul 25:319 O '29

RODICK, BURLEIGH CUSHING. Doctrine of necessity in international law. 195p $4 Columbia univ. press [20s Oxford]

341 International law and relations. Necessity (international law) 28-21951

A discussion of breaches of international law which have been justified on the grounds of political or legal necessity or of so-called natural rights. Taken together these constitute the "doctrine of necessity."

Reviewed by J. S. Reeves
Am Hist R 34:636 Ap '29 450w

"This is a well-organized, carefully documented, clearly written analysis of the subject named in the title." W. B. Bodenhafer
+ Am J Soc 35:156 Jl '29 150w

"The author has succeeded, if his aim is that of merely indicating the tremendous extra-legal force wielded today by states under the guise of necessity. But merely touching, as it does, on such broad fields as national jurisdiction, pacific intercourse of states, and military necessity, the work contains serious gaps."
Am Pol Sci R 23:230 F '29 230w

"While in the course of his analysis Mr. Rodick brings out some interesting points, no definite discernible line of reasoning leads to his conclusions. The work lacks congruity and the reader is frequently left to his own devices to find out what point is under discussion and what thesis is maintained by the author." Francis Deák
Columbia Law R 29:687 My '29 140w

"As a doctoral thesis it merits praise."
+ Hist Outlook 19:404 D '28 220w

"The author has done a careful piece of work; and that he is a scholar is evidenced by the fact that there are two pages of notes or index for each three pages of text." C. M. Perry
+ Int J Ethics 39:375 Ap '29 130w

"The book is well documented by notes, a bibliography, and a table of cases. The index is exhaustive. The work is done in a very scholarly manner and is an excellent guide to certain borderline cases in international law." P. W. Ward
+ J Philos 26:473 Ag 15 '29 410w

Reviewed by W: MacDonald
Nation 128:376 Mr 27 '29 450w

RODMAN, HUGH. Yarns of a Kentucky admiral. 320p il $5 Bobbs

B or 92 United States—Navy 28-11180

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

"There is something in the book for a wide range of tastes."
New Statesman 32:706 Mr 9 '29 170w

Sat R 148:458 O 19 '29 230w

"Lively and pleasant reading. But the chief, though undesigned, value of the book is its contribution towards promoting and continuing an understanding between England and America."
+ Spec 142:sup377 Mr 9 '29 220w

"A book in which good humour, wit, shrewd observation and comment—sometimes pungent—are blended in such proportions as to make it both informing and amusing; while the generous and friendly appreciation of the British Navy makes pleasant reading to an Englishman."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p197 Mr 14 '29 350w

RODO, JOSE ENRIQUE. Motives of Proteus; tr. from the Spanish by Angel Flores; with an introd. by Havelock Ellis. 378p $4 Brentano's

864 29-386

"In substance this essay is a leisurely meditation on the art of living. Its elaborate convolutions are closely packed with illustrations suggested by a wide acquaintance with classical and modern European biography, and starred here and there with fables delicately imagined as the Platonic myths. The charm of these little stories is enhanced by the long, unhurried undulations of Rodó's prose, which even in the rather unidiomatic translation of Señor Angel Flores preserves its grave and supple movement."—Bookm

Booklist 26:24 O '29

Reviewed by G: F. Whicher
Bookm 69:210 Ap '29 480w

"As one reads this book one feels the stimulation of a dynamic mind."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Ap 21 '29 200w

"For a long time I have had a suspicion that Rodo, in his more ambitious essays, does not satisfy Latin-American taste. Honeyed words will in the end cloy, nor is there anything more tiresome than tramping through soft sand. His prose, in this book especially has both effects upon the reader. It cloys him and exhausts him. Here are parables in profusion, to illustrate platitudes; beautiful paragraphs, to convey obvious thoughts; rhetoric woven into heavy brocades to cover vacuity. To the American reader, curious about his Southern neighbors, this book—if he has the courage to read it through—will be of interest in a documentary sense as expression of a psychological type rare in the United States, but to be met with in South America; a type marked by a tendency to dream quixotic impossibilities in lyrical language, irrespective of hard facts." Eliseo Vivas
— Nation 128:429 Ap 10 '29 730w

"The charm of the book lies rather in its revelation of the author's spirit than in the ideas it contains. There is something infectiously gracious and sympathetic about Rodó. He beguiles the reader into his own tolerant and sensitive attitude." Denver Lindley
+ New Repub 58:286 Ap 24 '29 430w

"Often on the brink of repetitiousness, of a facile optimism, of a grand futile gesture, Rodo just escapes the ridiculous or the boring by his sheer, precise courtliness. A descendant of Montaigne, he lacks the Frenchman's irony and humor, but compensates for his shortcoming by elegance and poetry." Paul Eldridge
+ N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 2 '29 350w

Reviewed by L. V. Updegraff
N Y Times p9 Ag 4 '29 700w

Outlook 151:429 Mr 13 '29 90w

"The range of his knowledge and the intricacy of its sympathies are like deep calling unto deep. Unfortunately Rodó, who has been described as one of the masters of Castillian style, suffers here from a very poor and pompous translation which at times almost brings his noble manner into ridicule; but in spite of this defect, The Motives of Proteus inspires one with a deep enthusiasm."
+ — Spec 143:642 N 2 '29 230w

Times [London] Lit Sup p736 S 26 '29 1200w

World Tomorrow 12:236 My '29 30w

ROEMER, JOSEPH, and ALLEN, CHARLES FORREST. Readings in extra-curricular activities. (Johnson's educ. ser.) 844p $3 Johnson pub.

371.8 Extra-curricular activities 29-12370

These readings in extra-curricular activities have been selected from various periodical sources,—the School review, School and society, the Journal of the National education association, and others. The topics discussed cover a wide range, including underlying principles, social and moral outcomes, organization and administration, home-room, assembly, and club activities, athletics, school papers, dramatics, libraries, and fraternities and sororities.

"Many good references have been omitted. On the whole, however, the Readings makes many more helpful sources available to large numbers than does any earlier publication. The book constitutes a valuable addition to the facilities for teaching in the field of extra-curriculum activities." P. W. Terry

+ El School J 30:231 N '29 430w

"Most of the chapters in which controversial matters are considered include articles on both sides of the question at issue. However, the earnest student is left with a one-sided view of pupil participation in school control, fraternities and sororities, and high-school honor societies. Such a student should go far beyond this book in his search for enlightenment. Many excellent ideas are contained in the readings, however, and the book should be a part of the professional library of every high-school teacher and principal. Its chief value lies in the fact that it assembles into one volume material that is scattered far and wide." H. E. Dewey

+ — School R 37:628 O '29 650w

ROERICH, NIKOLAI KONSTANTINOVICH. Altai-Himalaya; a travel diary. 407p il $5 Stokes

915 Asia, Central—Description and travel. Himalaya mountains. Altai mountains 29-11922

This also is the travel diary of a philosopher. In brief sentences or in long descriptive paragraphs the Russian artist-author has recorded not merely the outward appearance of things seen but the moods and reflections roused by his journeyings in India and the Himalayas. The illustrations are reproductions from Roerich's paintings.

"For one who will enjoy and appreciate a depiction of the spirit of a people, an ability unfortunately undeveloped among newer sociologists, this book is to be recommended."

Am J Soc 35:525 N '29 100w

Bookm 70:xviii S '29 340w

"It is more true of this than of most books that the reader will get from it exactly what he brings to it. The explorer and adventurer will enjoy the accounts of dangers and hardships, sudden death from bandits, and sore trials by heat and cold; the anthropologist will rejoice in the hints of strange traits and habits of little known peoples; the student of religions will find food for thought on every page. Finally, the lover of beauty, of unaffected, impersonal observation and of lucid prose will need no commendation of mine." W: Beebe

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 My 19 '29 1100w

Boston Transcript p2 My 4 '29 400w

"The book is an extraordinary record of the impressions and reactions of an extraordinary personality. The words are simple but the images stand forth boldly. Always Roerich sees with the eye of the artist, sees color and form and masses, so that Asia grows around us in the very same pictures that the artist has set down on his canvases." Lillian Rogers

+ N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 30 '29 1100w

St Louis 27:204 Je '29

"Those who are influenced by his original personality will welcome the opportunity of studying its revelation in these flashes of thought and inspiration written in moments of 'first, fine careless rapture.' The pictures are the product of Russian modernism, and many of them are replete with the mysticism and symbolism which also often appear in the text."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:28 Ag 3 '29 330w

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 23 '29 70w

ROGERS, CAMERON. Cyrano. 308p il $3.50 Doubleday, Doran

B or 92 Cyrano de Bergerac, Savinien 29-19470

The biography of Cyrano de Bergerac, that great-nosed swordsman, lover, and writer of the days of Louis XIII and Louis XIV of France.

Booklist 26:116 D '29

Reviewed by F. B. Haley

Bookm 70:461 D '29 300w

"Now we can look at the real Cyrano and not Rostand's tinsel fool. . . Mr. Rogers has done accurate and painstaking research; and even if he writes his tale in the manner of the new fictional biography he has exact evidence for his most delicate conclusions. Best of all he never wields a heavy moral battle-axe and he uses none of the hideous terms and the more hideous methods of psycho-analysis to explain his hero." Donald Douglas

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 O 20 '29 700w

"Cameron Rogers has gone far afield for his material, and from the great amount of detail culled from diaries, chronicles, histories and legends he has constructed a picture of the man and his times which, while it may seem to the meticulous historian unwarrantably over-drawn in spots, is nevertheless full of life, of color, of high-hearted adventure in that most roystering of centuries." G. R. B. R.

+ Boston Transcript p1 O 11 '29 600w

"It is based on fact, its dicta may be accepted as correct. But the charm with which the author reconstructs in its three vivid stages this fantastic life is rare. Mr. Rogers writes with a psychic insight, a picturesqueness of phrase, a talent for the living evocation of the dead past that are out of the ordinary. In fact, his life story of this gay and gallant fighter, lover, dreamer, satirist and infidel bubbles and pricks the literary palate like champagne." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p11m O 12 '29 150w

"This is a biography which puts to shame many more pretentious works devoted to more imposing personalities. It is this reader's opinion that the short prologue of less than ten pages in which Cyrano is introduced and the atmosphere of early seventeenth century Paris evoked is as fine a piece of work of its kind as any biographer has attempted. It is therefore no little praise to declare that the book to its very end is worthy of its superlative prologue." Arthur Strawn

+ N Y World p11m O 13 '29 700w

Theatre Arts Mo 14:89 Ja '30 150w

ROGERS, HENRY MUNROE. Memories of ninety years; one man and many friends. 409p il $5 Houghton

B or 92 28-29150

A Bostonian born and bred looks back upon the scenes, events and friendships of a long life which has been singularly rich and full.

"This is one of the most interesting and delightful books that has been published in Boston within the present generation." T: G. Frothingham

+ Boston Transcript p3 N 24 '28 1550w

"These 'Memories of Ninety Years' that Mr. Rogers presents to us contain records and views of great worth to everyone, and especially to the Bostonian." E. F. Edgett

+ Boston Transcript p8 D 15 '28 150w

"Perhaps the most interesting feature of Mr. Rogers's 'Memories' is that wherein he tells of his many friendships and of his clubs and club meetings at which he and other choice spirits foregathered. It is, in short, a vivid, entertaining book that mirrors the life and character of a very vital sort of man, who has loved laughter and loved life and has written about it all in an engaging spirit."

ROGERS, H: M.—Continued
+ N Y Times p24 D 16 '29 530w

"His memories, though not professing to be of importance, abound in humor and zest."
+ Springf'd Republican p10 Mr 30 '29 680w

Times [London] Lit Sup p119 F 14 '29 120w

ROGERS, JAMES HARVEY; MAFFRY, AUGUST; and LANDMAN, ROBERT E. Process of inflation in France 1914-1927. (Columbia univ. Council for research in the social sciences. Social and economic studies of post-war France) 378p $5 Columbia univ. press

336.44 Currency question—France. Prices. Exchange. Finance—France. Banks and banking—France. France—Economic conditions 29-9592

An account of the various financial institutions in France and a study of the process of inflation. There is also a statistical study of the relations of exchange rates, prices, quantities of bank notes and amounts of deposits. "The reader is asked to bear in mind that this study, made during a period of rapidly changing conditions, cannot but be out-of-date before it is published. Purely historical in character, it purports to do nothing more than to trace and interpret as nearly accurately as possible some of the happenings of an era filled alike with financial disaster and financial recovery, but above all else with financial experiment. Written in the late months of 1927, the final chapters attempt to depict conditions then existing." (Preface)

---

"Even though Dr. Rogers is not exactly happy in his definitions of inflation, his book constitutes an acute and discriminating study of the subject as illustrated by the course of events in France since 1914. The author gives a clear analysis of the French banking system and of its intimate relations with the government. This is well done. There is an excellent analysis of the public debt of France." H. E. Fisk
+ Am Econ R 19:494 S '29 850w

"The work is well done and care is taken to indicate the degree of reliability of the figures and processes used." J. D. Magee
Ann Am Acad 144:156 Jl '29 110w

"An authoritative record and a clear exposition." W: MacDonald
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 S 8 '29 410w

"This monetary history of the war and post-war period in France is fascinating to the student of economics and banking to whom tabular and graphic representations of facts are enjoyable. The layman will not be interested unless he has a penchant for the romance of financial struggle." W. M. T.
Boston Transcript p2 Jl 6 '29 400w

Reviewed by F. D. Graham
J Pol Econ 37:738 D '29 220w

ROGERS, LILLIAN. The shadow. 341p $2 Washburn [7s 6d G. Bles]

28-22961

"Professor Whitmore's daughter Anne grows up in the presence of a 'shadow' which mysteriously exists in the professor's mind. The nature of the shadow is unknown to Anne, but it chills her youth and greatly retards her emotional development. When Anne courageously breaks away to live alone in New York it becomes tragically clear that her spirit is still in bondage to the obscure shadow which pervaded her early life. Her behavior, even to a man with whom she is in love, is stilted and Puritanical; her physical reactions are those of a twelve-year-old girl. . . In the last pages the 'shadow' is revealed by a sensational confession of the professor's and a few incoherent words of an old servant."—N Y Evening Post

---

"The novel is written with much feeling and sensitively interprets the inner life of a somewhat thwarted heroine."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 N 18 '28 150w

"There is power as well as delicacy of perception and an appreciation of subtle values in the portrayal of Anne and her father." D. L. M.
+ Boston Transcript p3 N 3 '28 360w

"Although it is set in a dramatic, rather artificial pattern, which robs it of conviction, Lillian Rogers's 'The Shadow' is a novel of psychological significance." Tess Slesinger
+ — N Y Evening Post p8m D 29 '28 430w

"The author writes fluently, but her exposition of psychological relationships and motives completely fails to convince. The shadow under which Anne grows up is made real enough, but the reasons therefore attributed to her father, are so absurd that it is childish to assume that any intelligent adult could be permanently governed by them."
— + N Y Times p6 D 16 '28 480w

Times [London] Lit Sup p968 D 6 '28 200w

ROGERS, STANLEY REGINALD HARRY. Sea-lore. 262p il $2.75 Crowell [7s 6d Harrap]

910.4 Seafaring life. Ships [29-29113]

A miscellany of ships and sea lore, beginning with a history of ships from the earliest times. There are chapters on navigators, early and late; the language of the sea; sea ways and superstitions; whaling; famous ships and mystery ships; and sea adventure.

---

"His pages are a lucky tub, into which you cannot dip without fishing up some jolly yarn about exploration, or whaling, or lost ships and lost treasure; some interesting bit of information about sea-customs and superstitions; or some out-of-the-way technicality."
+ Nation and Ath 46:438 D 21 '29 130w

"Great variety of information and entertainment is set forth in popular but dignified style. It is a lively, fascinating book and owes no small part of its interest to the charming illustrations which the author has drawn for it."
+ N Y Times p14 S 8 '29 480w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks
Outlook 153:312 O 23 '29 50w

"To say that Mr. Rogers has done what he set out to do is sufficiently strong recommendation of his book. It is a commonplace book of the sea, discussing ships, sailors, sea-language, sea-superstitions, famous voyages, all in a style swift and informal. Perhaps at times Mr. Rogers has little more than skimmed the surface of a subject; he could not have done otherwise and kept his story within the limits of a single volume." F: G. Fassett, Jr.
+ Portland Evening News p5 D 31 '29 340w

" 'It informs a little (to those who wish to be informed), and diverts a little (for those who seek an entertainment)'—which really describes the book very well; except that the second 'little' should read 'a lot.' "
+ Sat R 148:55 Jl 13 '29 130w

ROGERS, WILL. Ether and me; or, "Just relax." 77p il $1 Putnam

817 29-13433

"Speaking of operations," Will Rogers had one, and this is his uproarious account of how an actor suffers.

---

"A highly amusing pocket volume running rather unexpectedly to burlesque in spots, a choice item for Rogers fans and others who could do with a bit of rough and ready humor."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 S 8 '29 130w

"Perhaps they would go very well indeed as paragraphs in Mr. Rogers' daily syndicate newspaper series. But here, in book form (and costing a whole dollar) they lack the necessary spark. One can't say why—one never can tell quite why satire and humor fail—but one knows that Will Rogers has been more pungent and penetrating and diverting in the past."
— + N Y Times p8 Jl 14 '29 300w

"Amusing little trifle."
Sat R of Lit 5:1181 Jl 13 '29 90w

ROGERS, WILLIAM GARLAND. Life goes on. 227p $2 Liveright
29-20884

Mary Faulkner decided to give a polite party for her clumsy, well-meaning husband. She invited the dentist, her young daughter's teacher, a life-long woman friend of her husband's, and a pal of hers. The party nearly wrecked their married life.

"As the author has over-developed a usual, conventional form of telling a story, so he has intensified conventional character types into grotesque caricatures of inanity. Let realism never again be called dull. It is, in comparison, glowing romance." Thayer Hobson
— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ag 25 '29 430w

"It is not a pleasant book, nor a particularly funny one, but it would seem to have its place in the literature of post-war cynicism." H. C. C.
New Repub 60:251 O 16 '29 170w

"The form [in which] Mr. Rogers has chosen to tell his story is pretty successful. It leads occasionally into confusion and descends now and then into incredible burlesque, but he has drawn a picture of the yawping, ungainly, unbeautiful existence of a sub-Babbitt household with strokes that have power and savagery. It is gossip literature of a high order." F: F. Van de Water
+ — N Y Evening Post p6m S 7 '29 90w

"This is a very amusing little book. Not only is the material itself amusing but the form in which it is clothed is ingenious and novel."
+ N Y Times p8 Ag 18 '29 450w

"The story is told entirely in conversation, without a word of description or even any indication of who is speaking, but there is no confusion and the method is extraordinarily effective."
Outlook 153:69 S 11 '29 160w

"It is not a pretty picture, and the idiom of the day in which this book is couched does nothing to relieve the sordidness of the spectacle. The dialog, however, is cleverly worked out, and the characters are well delineated."
— + Springf'd Republican p7e S 1 '29 180w

ROHMER, SAX, pseud. (ARTHUR SARSFIELD WARD). Emperor of America. 310p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Cassell]
29-28788

The man who called himself Emperor of America sat, yellow-masked, in a hidden, black-draped room, and controlled a complex organization of criminals by means of a "zone" map. Commander Drake Roscoe leads a dangerous game of hide and seek with group masters and zone officers, climaxed by a face to face encounter with the beautiful Duchesse de Greuze at her headquarters deep in the underground caverns of Manhattan.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 D 8 '29 120w

"This is thrilling and ingenious nonsense. . . Mr. Rohmer is skillful. He can work a situation out progressively from two or three different points with all the effect of simultaneousness. Unfortunately the story peters out at the end."
+ Nation and Ath 46:24 O 5 '29 130w

"The administration and activities of the Zones are vividly imagined, and Great Head Centre's bitter struggle with Commander Roscoe never lacks excitement. The story is written in a series of short breathless scenes, in the manner of a film scenario."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p825 O 17 '29 170w

ROHMER, SAX, pseud. (ARTHUR SARSFIELD WARD). She who sleeps; a romance of New York and the Nile. 322p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Cassell]
28-28681

Mysterious case of an Egyptain princess who had slept three thousand years, or had she slept?

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 N 18 '28 90w

Boston Transcript p4 D 22 '28 200w

"Howard Carter and his discovery of the hidden tomb of King Tut-ankh-amen must have unconsciously provided the inspiration for this story of Egyptian adventure. . . But let not the reader be alarmed. Here is no archaeological treatise, but a peppery chronicle of love and its exciting sequences."
+ N Y Times p13 D 23 '28 400w

ROLLAND, ROMAIN. Beethoven the creator; the great creative epochs: 1, From the Eroica to the Appassionata; tr. by Ernest Newman. 432p $5 Harper [30s Gollancz]

B or 92 Beethoven, Ludwig van 29-18764

The author of Jean Christophe begins his first volume of a series of studies of Beethoven with a portrait of the composer in his thirtieth year and follows the unfolding of his genius thru the Eroica and the Appassionata. In a note to the reader the author explains that it is no part of his plan to write a complete biography to Beethoven, but to limit himself to his great creative epochs.

Reviewed by Grenville Vernon
Bookm 70:208 O '29 1000w

"The great value of the book lies, not at all in rhapsodic passages, in which it abounds, but in its masterly analysis of the structure of the works, and in the complete success with which it makes contagious Rolland's love of Beethoven's music, and his emotional comprehension of it. Indeed, so high and sustained is the emotional key of the book, one marvels that the author should have troubled to pepper it so thoroughly with footnotes. There are 391 of them, and most of them are completely unimportant. To make matters worse, they are tucked away in the back of the book. The illustrations, too, are a triumph of inconvenient handling." Deems Taylor
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 S 22 '29 1900w

"In reading the masterful biography 'Beethoven' by Romain Rolland one is struck with three outstanding factors—the magnetic power of the author's style, his profound knowledge of music, and the marvelous translation from the French by Ernest Newman, himself a writer of great erudition and an authority on Beethoven. M. Rolland has brought into this biography the same masterful style that characterizes his other works, especially, the story of that musical genius 'Jean Christophe.' It is written in a style that is both gripping and beautiful—so fluent and fascinating that the reader's interest never lags." F: A. Stock
+ Chicago Daily Tribune p13 D 14 '29 360w

Cleveland Open Shelf p153 D '29

"If there is a better study of Beethoven in the entire centenary crop of such, I have not had the good luck to see it. The author is a man of sixty-three. Ostracized by his refusal to share in the passions of the war period, virtually a proscript by the whole of belligerent Europe, he has been through enough to have killed an ordinary mortal. Yet his sufferings, like Beethoven's deafness, seem to have intensified his creative power. One might suppose this book to be the work of a fiery youngster in his twenties. It boils and bubbles with vitality. And it is only one of a dozen such—novels, dramas, and bio-

ROLLAND, ROMAIN—Continued
graphies—which have flowed from that fertile brain in the dozen years since the war. Such a spirit has a right to speak of the creative process, even of Beethoven's." Lucien Price
+ Nation 129:441 O 16 '29 1500w

Nation and Ath 45:244 My 18 '29 80w

"He soars in the empyrean; he becomes epic and lyric, philosophical and poetic, rhapsodical and prophetic by turns. If this present volume were signed by any less distinguished name, there might be danger—and great danger—that it would be charged with being 'fine writing.' No doubt eloquence is kindled by the persistent contemplation of Beethoven's most eloquent pages; but it is a pity to see judgment and discrimination quite so entirely thrown overboard." R: Aldrich
— N Y Times p11 S 22 '29 1250w

R of Rs 81:15 Ja '30 140w

"Some of M. Rolland's imaginative flights must have caused the translator to blush as he set down the words in English. But it does not appear that he has gone out of his way to pale the author's highly coloured style; and for this we may be grateful, for the English version is very readable, and Mr. Newman continually makes us aware of the fact that in the French language these transports ring more truly. M. Rolland pours scorn upon biographers who set out to read their hero a lesson. Certainly he himself is guilty of no such insolence. His purpose is, rather, to derive some spiritual significance from the smallest of Beethoven's actions and from the slightest incidents in his life, but the motive is always so sincere and the attitude so genuinely humble that one is willing to condone some of the exaggerated figures of speech." Basil Maine
Spec 142:711 My 4 '29 720w

Springf'd Republican p12 O 4 '29 700w

"In spite of many attractive qualities, in spite of the high literary virtuosity of its author and the good fortune which has given him a translator with a pen as trenchant as his own, 'Beethoven the Creator' is a difficult book to read and becomes at times even exasperating."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p398 My 16 '29 1500w

Reviewed by Douglas Moore
Yale R n s 19:402 winter '30 350w

ROLLINS, WILLIAM, jr. Midnight treasure. 339p $2 Coward-McCann

29-6671

The boy hero of this adventure tells excitedly of his visit to Pop Olesen's lonely cabin, and of his share in the train of events that leads from the cabin to a treasure hunt in the desert, with murder and other viliainies on the way.

---

N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 27 '29 70w

"Mr. Rollins has chosen an unfortunate method of telling this story of mystery and adventure. He tells it through the medium of its principal character, Jack Gaylor, a neglected orphan boy who mangles the English language most atrociously. The story Jack tells is exciting enough, but the author might just as well have let Jack tell the story in language less monotonously ungrammatical."
— + N Y Times p26 Mr 17 '29 130w

"His hard-boiled insights delivered in slang or descriptions of unconscious poetry, give the narrative its humorous warmth and make the action irresistible. Gaylor has a tough hide but a tolerant heart. His eyes see everything, his tongue gives it a rare twist, and the chapters dealing with the commonplace are real achievement. Certainly here is an author to look forward to for further treasure." T. M. Longstreth
+ Sat R of Lit 5:928 Ap 20 '29 350w

"Mr Rollins shows himself adept in the art of telling a mystery story and reveals literary ability above the average displayed in mystery yarns."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e F 10 '29 110w

RØLVAAG, OLE EDVART. Peder Victorious; tr. from the Norwegian English text by Nora O. Solum and the author. 350p $2.50 Harper

29-1081

Peder Victorious is of the second generation of Norwegians in the Middle West, a son of Per Hansa and Beret, the pioneer settlers of "Giants in the earth" (Book Review Digest, 1927). In Peder the Americanization process goes forward, to his mother's great pain, for she remains intensely loyal to her mother country and her mother tongue. Peder's schooling, his friends, and his love for a bright young Irish girl alter for a time the relations between himself and Beret, but their mutual love and faith is strong, and Beret grows reconciled to his Americanization.

---

For biographical sketch of the author see Wilson bulletin 3:472 F '29

---

+ Booklist 25:248 Mr '29

"A sequel which stands the test of comparison beautifully and fulfills some if not all of the promise of the earlier work. . . The characters, with the exception of Per Hansa, are the same, the feeling and treatment are part of the broad and humane simplicity that links Rolvaag to the great writers of his own native land and to its greatest literary tradition." Eugene Lohrke
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Ja 6 '29 1050w

"All the vitality and character drawing that one found so delightful in Professor Rolvaag's first book are lacking. He is now concerned with community problems, not with individuals. The slow moving tale has moments of morbidity and there is a terrible mood of depression hanging over it." D. F. G.
— Boston Transcript p2 Ja 26 '29 500w

"The thing that gives significance to these novels is the method and the skill which they exhibit, the thoroughness of character analysis and delineation, the patient marshaling of details, the perfect integration of all these details to make the closely woven texture of the final product." W. E. G.
+ Christian Century 46:393 Mr 21 '29 230w

Cleveland Open Shelf p157 D '29

"Although 'Peder Victorious' is a good book, in fact the best American novel I have seen this winter, it is only a good book: it is not, like its predecessor, a magical, a beguiling, an enchanting book. . . We are faced with the fact that the second generation, which built our Western towns is far less interesting than the first, which drove its rickety covered wagons through the pathless grass of the prairies." A. B. Parsons
+ — Nation 128:317 Mr 13 '29 360w

"There is no plot to novels like 'Peder Victorious' no invention, no resolution; consequently there is no real growth. There is only accretion." Edwin Seaver
New Repub 57:330 F 6 '29 260w

" 'Peder Victorious' is a loose and sprawling book, as untamed as the turbulent, passionate characters with which it deals. . . The strength of the novel lies in its treatment of the friction, all but intangible yet as powerful as the law of gravity, in the Holm household . . . the book is really Beret's, and a marvelous creation she is." J: Crawford
+ N Y Evening Post p9m Ja 5 '29 880w

"The book seems to us to have its faults—a scanty plot structure, a certain disheveled ment in its telling, and yet these are inconsiderable against the counterweight of its authenticity." F: F. Van de Water
+ — N Y Evening Post p9m Ja 19 '29 200w

"This Norwegian-American author is no dramatist. He does not perceive the full value of a scene, of surprise and suspense; and he cannot build with these to produce singleness of effect. On the other hand, the reality, the truth of his work, is beyond question."
+ — N Y Times p2 Ja 6 '29 1600w

"It has the reality of its predecessor, although it is hardly so big a book, and the translation is often inept. There are anachronisms in slang and other details that will trouble the careful reader. . . However it offers reward enough for the time spent upon it." Herschel Brickell
+ — No Am 227:adv Mr '29 150w
Pratt p41 summer '29

"A friendly, agreeable, an interesting set of people are seen here carrying on in ways quite comprehensible though at times a bit amusing to us less naive and more knowledgeable natives."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 3 '29 230w

"The primitive puritanism of these Norwegians invests the book with a rather depressing atmosphere, though the story is extremely well told and the central conflict brought out. The very colloquial American into which it is rendered is for the most part effective, though, in a story which turns so much upon a conflict between the two languages, some modification of style where a remark is pointedly said to have been made in Norwegian might to some extent have improved the effect."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1047 D 12 '29 600w
Wis Lib Bul 25:76 F '29

ROMIER, LUCIEN. Who will be master, Europe or America? tr. from the French by Matthew Josephson. 299p $2.50 Macaulay

917.3 United States—Civilization. Europe—Civilization 28-22707

A French historian and economist analyses, primarily for French readers, American civilization and the American character, touching upon politics, business methods, social and moral conditions. M. Romier concludes that in the ultimate contest for mastery the issue will lie between American supremacy of the machine and European supremacy of mind.

Reviewed by R. A. Wade
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 D 23 '28 400w
Boston Transcript p5 D 8 '28 380w

Reviewed by W: MacDonald
Nation 129:362 O 2 '29 390w
Nation and Ath 45:404 Je 22 '29 460w

"It is a thoughtfully critical book, and one that may be read with profit and interest by the open-minded." Herschel Brickell
+ No Am 226:adv D '28 120w
St Louis 27:28 Ja '29

"He is far from being an easy writer to read. The obstacle is not to be found in any want of lucidity, but rather in the fact that he attains lucidity by incessant and eventually wearisome generalizations. . . The demand is the severer in that these ideas are of an unfamiliar cast and are expressed in a terminology which does not at once make itself comprehensible." E: Shanks
+ — Sat R 147:538 Ap 20 '29 1400w

"M. Romier is always interesting; and in this valuable and entertaining book he makes an important contribution to the deeper study of modern tendencies."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p643 Ag 22 '29 730w

Reviewed by F: M. Hollister
World Tomorrow 12:185 Ap '29 350w

ROMIG, EDGAR FRANKLIN. Tercentenary year; a record of the celebration of the three hundredth anniversary of the founding of the first church in New Netherlands, now New York, and the beginning of organized religious life under the Reformed (Dutch) church in America. 542p il $3 Bd. of publication & Bible-school work, Reformed church in Am., 25 E 22d st., N.Y.

285.7 Reformed church in America 29-18347

"In 1628 Jonas Michaelius, a graduate of Leyden and a minister of the Church of the Netherlands, came to Manhattan Island to serve the spiritual needs of the little Dutch community of New Amsterdam. The church he founded, today known as the [Marble] Collegiate Church, is the oldest ecclesiastical body in New York and the oldest fully organized church with a continuous and unbroken existence in the United States. Last year its tercentenary was appropriately observed in a long series of celebrations, of which this volume provides a complete account. . . Not the least interesting feature of the book is the full text, occupying 70 pages, of a tercentenary pageant, which represented dramatically various scenes in the history of the Reformed Church."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"The beginnings of New York are inextricably mingled with the founding of the first Dutch Church on Manhattan. Hence the importance of this record of the celebration of the founding of the First Church in New Netherlands and the beginning of organized religious life under the Dutch Reformed Church in America." T. C. R.
+ Boston Transcript p3 O 16 '29 400w

"This volume is of primary value to the members of that Communion; but there are things in it of general interest both to those interested in religion and to those who are desirous of informative material about early New York history."
+ Sat R of Lit 6:174 S 21 '29 280w

"The history of the Reformed Church is a significant part of the history of the Church Universal, and this elaborate account of its tercentenary celebrations may justly claim the attention of readers outside its own borders."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p797 O 10 '29 400w

ROMMEL, GEORGE MCCULLOUGH. Farm products in industry. 318p il $3.50 Henkle

677 Agriculture—Economic aspects. Farm produce. Waste products. Chemistry, Technical. Cellulose 29-224

"Mr. Rommel's survey of the problem of farm waste was undertaken at the request of Secretary of Agriculture Jardine, and he had in the course of it the cooperation of some seventy-five organized and expert varieties of assistance. His aim throughout has been to discuss the waste products of the farm of every sort, to find out whether or not they can be turned to industrial uses, and to give a detailed exposition of just what, if anything, has been done in that way, with full information as to values and costs, methods and possibilities."—N Y Times

"A splendid survey of the use of farm products in industry present and prospective."
+ Ann Am Acad 143:386 My '29 60w
Boston Transcript p5 Ap 6 '29 250w

"The scope of interest for this book should extend from the technical man, as a matter of pleasure and education, to the lay reader with a live curiosity."
+ Chem & Met Eng 36:299 My '29 230w

"The book is printed on paper made partially from cornstalks, which adds to the sentimental value, even though the sheet needs improving in softness, opacity, and color to compare favorably with a good grade of book paper. The volume is so literally crammed with facts that it would be enhanced by placing more data in the appendix. We can recommend the book heartily as an able, interesting, and authoritative exposition of one of the nation's greatest assets—the farm." Allen Abrams
+ Ind & Eng Chem 21:292 Mr '29 350w

Reviewed by F: F. Van de Water
N Y Evening Post p10m F 16 '29 210w

"Mr. Rommel has made a thorough-going investigation of his subject. . . In the interlocking of industry with agriculture Mr. Rommel, who is an authority on modern farm methods, sees the solution of the farm problem and the means by which the farmer can retrieve prosperity and content."
+ N Y Times p10 F 3 '29 500w

RONALDSHAY, LAWRENCE JOHN LUMLEY DUNDAS, 1st earl of. Life of Lord Curzon; being the auth. biography of George Nathaniel, marquess Curzon of Kedleston. 3v v 3 457p il per set $15 Liveright [ea 21s Benn]

B or 92 Curzon of Kedleston, George Nathaniel Curzon, 1st marquis. India—Politics and government. Great Britain—Politics and government 29-27796

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

Boston Transcript p8 N 17 '28 200w

"With the publication of this third volume, Lord Ronaldshay has completed his authoritative work on the late Lord Curzon—a work which deserves to rank high in the list of standard English biographies. In recording the last and in some ways the most poignant phase of Lord Curzon's life, Lord Ronaldshay has inevitably been hampered by the proximity of the events which he describes, by the fact that most of the protagonists in this unhappy drama are still alive. He has been unable, also, to quote the full text of those angered and indeed anguished memoranda and letters through which Lord Curzon would vent his disappointment and scorn. It is a proof of Lord Ronaldshay's high capacity as a biographer that in spite of these and other enforced omissions he has been able to produce a convincing picture of the last two decades of Lord Curzon's life, and to paint, although with watered colours, the lurid sorrows and radiant happiness of that thunder-stricken sunset." Harold Nicolson

\+ Nation and Ath 44:52 O 13 '28 1400w

"Despite the defects of this work as a biography, it is emphatically readable." Joseph Collins

\+ — N Y Evening Post p9m D 29 '28 620w

"If, then, Lord Ronaldshay is interesting, it is because he is himself interested. On his material he lavishes not only toil but enthusiasm, and over his narrative there is shed a glow which reveals the real significance of Lord Curzon's later career." P. W. Wilson

\+ — N Y Times p4 Ja 6 '29 2000w

"Never does Lord Ronaldshay allow general historical considerations to divert him from his main theme. Similarly, in his handling of the character of his subject, the manner in which its main tendencies are emphasized, and in which the gradual influence of the years upon them is portrayed, is beyond praise." H. K.

\+ Springf'd Republican p7e F 10 '29 1750w

ROOF, KATHARINE METCALF. Colonel William Smith and lady. 347p il $5 Houghton

B or 92 Smith, William Stephens. Smith, Mrs Amelia Abigail (Adams) 29-12431

The romance and life of that Colonel William Stephens Smith, who was aide to Washington during the Revolution, and who married Amelia Abigail Adams, daughter of the first John Adams. There are some hitherto unpublished letters from Jefferson, Washington, Lafayette and the Adamses.

Booklist 26:30 O '29

"Miss Roof has a plentiful supply of material from which to draw, and on the whole she has built an impressive and touching structure." Dorothy Van Doren

\+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Jl 7 '29 780w

"This is no mere volume of letters. It is a skilful, delightful, illuminating narrative, the work of an historically minded writer who knows how to banish dullness." S. L. Cook

\+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 8 '29 1250w

"Miss Roof's book is a very skilful blend of biography, history and correspondence, and it is especially noteworthy for its accounts of life in the early days of the republic. The entire book is a very unusual work of its kind, containing much that is new to our present day and generation despite the fact that it covers a copiously written about period of our history." E. F. Edgett

\+ Boston Transcript p5 Jl 13 '29 500w

Cleveland Open Shelf p124 S '29

"This biography belongs to what might be called the sugar-coated school of history. History it certainly is, completely documented and tirelessly accurate. But Katharine Metcalf Roof has brought to its writing a sprightliness of manner and a lively dramatic sense calculated to interest the unspecialized reader as well as the student." Margaret Wallace

\+ N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 6 '29 500w

"The material of the book is the family letter chest. The quality of the book is in the taste, skill, humor and acumen applied by the author to the selection and arrangement of the material and in the ample background of acquaintance with the period which has put the Adams and Smith family papers in illuminating historic perspective." H. I. Brock

\+ N Y Times p6 Je 9 '29 2500w

"Colonel Smith and Lady is a delightful example of the Life and Letters type of biography. Katharine Roof has had access to the letters and journals of the Adams family, published and unpublished; and the Adamses were superb letter-writers and diarists with talent for lively description and discriminating as to detail. Adams letters, Smith letters, the letters of illustrious friends, everything that goes to make a picture clear, intimate and engaging has been used with great skill."

\+ Outlook 152:309 Je 19 '29 380w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw

R of Rs 80:16 S '29 190w

St Louis 27:341 D '29

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 16 '29 80w

Springf'd Republican p10 Jl 2 '29 720w

Wis Lib Bul 25:322 O '29

ROOSEVELT, EDITH KERMIT (CAROW) (MRS THEODORE ROOSEVELT), and ROOSEVELT, KERMIT, comps. American backlogs; the story of Gertrude Tyler and her family, 1660-1860. 236p il $5 Scribner

B or 92 Carow, Mrs Gertrude Elizabeth (Tyler). Tyler family. Lee, Benjamin. Carow family 28-25527

"While 'American Backlogs' runs quickly over a period of two centuries and presents much interesting American background and incident in the history of both the Tyler and the Carow (originally spelled Quereau) families, the heart of the volume lies in the letters of Gertrude Tyler herself, written from Paris in the years 1852-4, when she was a schoolgirl there. They are letters full of individuality, ingenuousness, observation and charm, and they paint a delightful portrait of an eighteen-year-old American girl whose education is being 'finished' in the Paris of the beginning of the Second Empire."—N Y Times

Reviewed by W: MacDonald

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ap 21 '29 300w

Boston Transcript p5 N 21 '28 700w

"Besides making charming reading from the vantage point of the individuals whose word-portraits the book gives, 'American Backlogs' is interesting, as its title implies, in its broader aspects, as social history."

\+ N Y Times p9 D 30 '28 320w

ROOSEVELT, THEODORE. All in the family. 189p il $2.50 Putnam

B or 92 29-18407

A new chronicle of the sayings and doings of the Roosevelt family, written by the present Colonel Roosevelt.

Booklist 26:116 D '29

"The brisk, energetic blaze of family ideals which Roosevelt kindled on the American hearth is not to be allowed to die down for lack of family fuel. The author of this volume of family reminiscences (the present Colonel, as he is carefully identified beneath the illustrations) repeats the shibboleths and spreads the doctrine. 'It is the family that is epoch-

making', he announces, and adds: 'There is no such thing as a family without children.' "
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p31 O 20 '29 180w

"It is all interesting and informing—much of it intensely mirth-provoking." Bradley Gilman
+ Boston Transcript p5 O 19 '29 1100w

"He has written a charming narrative and he tells all his hundreds of anecdotes skillfully, with color and point, and so simply that their inherent humor stands out engagingly. There is a smile or a chuckle on almost every page. The book is really very much more than another collection of tales of the Roosevelt household, and there are few parents of young children who could not read it with benefit as well as with amusement."
+ N Y Times p24 S 29 '29 500w
Times [London] Lit Sup p872 O 31 '29 450w

ROSCOE, EDWARD STANLEY. Aspects of Doctor Johnson. 148p $2.25 Macmillan [6s Cambridge univ. press]

B or 92 Johnson, Samuel

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

"There is no reason why something of interest and value should not emerge from his dissection. There are papers on Johnson's attitude to religion, to the country, to the law; comparisons with other talkers and literary men. But the general result is disappointing. So many of them are only expositions—mere detachments of a strand of Johnson's life—which, as essays, are too limited and attenuated in substance to be as stimulating as they might have been." Sylva Norman
— + Nation and Ath 43:502 Jl 14 '28 420w

Reviewed by Edwin Clark
N Y Times p4 Ap 14 '29 270w

"We found some old stories well retold, and some interesting and original observations; yet the book is something of a disappointment, it is difficult to say why."
+ — Spec 141:219 Ag 18 '28 70w
Times [London] Lit Sup p46 Ja 17 '29 220w

ROSE, ARTHUR. Stage effects; how to make and work them. 60p il $1.60 Dutton [3s 6d Routledge]

792 Theaters—Stage-setting and scenery [28-26930]

"A small book of detailed directions for the production of a variety of stage effects without heavy machinery, including snow effects, thunder, conflagrations and others."—Pratt

Booklist 25:152 Ja '29
Pratt p26 autumn '29

ROSE, DWIGHT CHAPPELL. Scientific approach to investment management. 440p $5 Harper

332 Investments 29-909

"Mr. Rose's book swings through a wide arc, touching on the economic theory of pure rent, analyzing the investment experience of insurance companies, and giving some broad advice for investors in general. No doubt a volume of this sort is designed to a considerable extent for readers outside the banking business and therefore a good deal of rather elementary and laborious explanation is permissible. From the purely practical standpoint, the great value of this book lies in the collection of extensive records concerning insurance company investments and the analysis of their operations."—Sat R of Lit

"The book is, on the whole, exceptionally well done. All important charts and summary statements made in the text are adequately supported by original data which is set forth in several appendices. The book should have a particular appeal to those who are responsible for directing investment policies in respect to the funds, either of institutions or individuals." R. E. Badger
+ Am Econ R 19:691 D '29 1500w
Booklist 25:270 Ap '29
N Y Times p10 My 26 '29 400w

Reviewed by W. B. Brown
Sat R of Lit 5:771 Mr 16 '29 1150w

ROSE, HERBERT JENNINGS. Handbook of Greek mythology; including its extension to Rome. 363p $4.50 Dutton [16s Methuen]

292 Mythology, Greek 28-26034

This account of Greek mythology, written in accordance with the results of modern research, is conveniently arranged for three classes of readers: for the student wanting an outline of the subject who will be served by the matter set in large type; for those needing more detail who will find in the paragraphs in smaller type a number of obscure, late, or purely local stories; and for the still more thorough student, notes at the ends of chapters.

"On the whole, this handbook may be recommended as one of the clearest, most comprehensive and yet concise manuals on the subject, and ought to find a wide usefulness." G: M. Whicher
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 F 10 '29 500w

"Professor Rose is known as the author of two very good books on primitive culture in Greece and Italy, and he has now done a service to classical students by the publication of this handbook. He does not make any claim to originality; he has compiled from various standard works. But the arrangement is his own, and it is made in such a way as to meet the convenience both of the beginner and of the more advanced student."
+ New Statesman 32:268 D 1 '28 150w

"The work is detailed, authoritative and thoroughly documented."
+ N Y Times p24 D 9 '28 400w
St Louis 27:157 My '29

"Not only a useful compendium of the myths themselves, but a guide-post to accepted methods of interpretation in a field which is still awaiting the inspired psychologist, equipped not only with his own special knowledge, but with that of the philosopher, anthropologist, and classical schoiar as well." Hetty Goldman
+ Sat R of Lit 5:912 Ap 20 '29 550w

ROSE, WALTER. My stars! Be your own astrologer. 148p il $1.50 Stokes

133.5 Astrology 28-24264

A simple book of astrology for the amateur which gives year charts from 1875 to 1928. Provided the user born within these years knows the hour, day, month and year of his birth he may cast his own horoscope.

"The results are amusing, if not too much to be relied upon."
Boston Transcript p6 D 1 '28 100w

"The book is so ingeniously simple, that astrology seems much more obvious than it really is."
+ Sat R of Lit 5:962 Ap 27 '29 300w

ROSE, WILLIAM, and ISAACS, JACOB, eds. Contemporary movements in European literature. 290p $4 Dial press [10s 6d Routledge]

809 Literature—History and criticism. Europe—Literature [29-9438]

Nine essays by as many writers, originally delivered as lectures at King's college, London. Contents: England, by J. Isaacs; France, by Denis Saurat; Germany, by W: Rose; Spain, by A. R. Pastor; Italy, by Arundell del Re; Russia, by D. S. Mirsky; Scandinavia, by J. G. Robertson; Czechoslovakia, by Paul Selver; Holland, by J. Haantjes.

Booklist 25:352 Je '29

ROSE, W:, and ISAACS, J:, eds.—Continued

"This survey has clear, articulate premises, and seriously attempts to measure the influence of the war upon literature." E: Dahlberg

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Je 23 '29 850w

Boston Transcript p2 My 11 '29 600w

"None of these essays is conclusive; all have their value as reports, and as such the majority are most adequate within their limitations of space. M. Denis Saurat is particularly successful in dealing with France in selecting writers who are genuinely representative of authentic tendencies. Mr. Isaacs (England) is comprehensive but uneven. The German field is well surveyed by Mr. Rose, and the living Spanish writers are made the subject of a clear, engaging exposition by Mr. Pastor, descriptive rather than critical. The bibliographies which conclude the volume are useful but incomplete; a little additional trouble might have made them really valuable."

+ — Nation and Ath 44:626 F 2 '29 750w

"This collection of essays is of very mixed merit. Prince Mirsky's essay on Russian literature and Mr. Pastor's on Spanish are perhaps the best, while M. Saurat's on French is certainly the most amusing."

New Statesman 32:294 D 8 '28 900w

Reviewed by J: Chamberlain

N Y Times p2 Je 16 '29 1200w

St Louis 27:286 O '29

Sat R 146:611 N 10 '28 300w

"It is extremely valuable to have such a survey. Of course, many of the papers in it have the air of being a little premature; there has been a shifting of standards and an uneasy desire to start on new tracks since the War; there is still no clear drift. . . The most notable lack is an account of the modern literature of the Balkan countries."

+ — Spec 142:53 Ja 12 '29 160w

ROSENFELD, PAUL. By way of art. 309p $2.50 Coward-McCann

704 Art—Addresses, essays, lectures. Music—Addresses, essays, lectures 28-25564

Essays on the arts—music, literature, painting, sculpture, and the dance—by a distinguished critic who is author of several books of criticism and a recent novel.

Booklist 25:200 F '29

"This new volume is as pleasingly varied in its subjects as that still satisfying Port of New York. It includes, among many other papers, the essay on the sculptures of Lachaise, originally published in The Dial, which, to my mind, is as fine as anything Rosenfeld has done and, in itself, a splendid achievement. At least two other essays in this book of nineteen are of major importance: that on the writings of Gertrude Stein and one on a self-portrait by Greco. These three seem to me to be as fine criticism as any written by an American." R. E. Larsson

+ Bookm 68:599 Ja '29 800w

"In spite of Mr. Rosenfeld's excessive enthusiasm for what is strange and new, he deserves an outstanding place for his skill in seizing what is salient and for his vivid, compelling style." G. E. M.

+ — Boston Transcript p2 D 5 '28 380w

Cleveland Open Shelf p6 Ja '29

"The quality of Mr. Rosenfeld's criticism which places it in a class by itself is his emotional sincerity. He writes always with a warmth, a verve, a gusto which is kindling and persuasive." R. M. Lovett

+ Dial 86:332 Ap '29 1100w

"It would be difficult for anyone not to profit by reading this kind of criticism. To begin with, there is much information about a number of highbrow, esoteric, and ultra-modern artists, authors, and composers whose works are the brightest foci of contemporary curiosity, and a good deal more about others who are perhaps the incipient foci of attention that will accrue tomorrow. . . Mr. Rosenfeld's importance to our time rests in the fact that his criticism arises from a curiosity that is active, current and personal." H: Ladd

+ Nation 128:22 Ja 2 '29 750w

"The essays are informative, witty, thought-provoking and, at their best, or even second-best, beautiful. Like those of Poe or Huneker, they may be read pleasurably without specific reference to, or knowledge of, their subject, for their philosophy and their colorful, intricate presentation." M. P. Levy

+ New Repub 57:252 Ja 16 '29 550w

"Mr. Rosenfeld is a modernist but with distinctions. His enthusiasms are well under control. He writes of music with perhaps better knowledge and significance than of the other arts, but one of his best essays is on the corn dance of the New Mexican Indians." Arthur Colton

+ Sat R of Lit 6:149 S 21 '29 500w

ROSENFELD, PAUL. Hour with American music. (One hour ser.) 179p $1 Lippincott

780.9 Music—United States. Musicians, American 29-24162

Eliminating jazz by defining it as entertainment, not music, Mr Rosenfeld finds the chief characteristic of modern music to be an experimental and revolutionary attitude, as an expression of mass rather than the individual. Most American composers, the author finds, are of foreign origin, and the only three who are American in a strict sense are Roger Sessions, Carl Ruggles and Roy Harris. Mr Rosenfeld does not rank very highly two of America's best-known composers, Gershwin and Deems Taylor.

"There are not many people besides Mr. Rosenfeld who are qualified to write so intimately about the diverse and elusive subject of American music. He has made a gallant attempt to assemble phenomena and facts, but he often obscures the issue by an unnecessary luxuriance of language and persistently high-flown way of thinking about things. . . Mr. Rosenfeld deserves the utmost credit for writing the first book on American music. He has given a boundary of some sort to a subject which is positively bewildering in its ramifications, and has made an attempt at an assessment." Jeffrey Mark

+ — New Repub 61:22 N 27 '29 1550w

"To musicians this book will be a challenging bugle. To the layman with even a slight interest in concerts and perhaps a mounting dismay at the complexity of sounds issuing from them, it should be stimulating, instructive and amusing." Hubbard Hutchinson

+ — N Y Evening Post p12m D 7 '29 700w

"Mr. Rosenfeld approaches his task with proper seriousness of mood and with no intention to be smart, flippant or curt. As an account of American music this work, if exceedingly commonplace, is at least intelligent in intention. But what can one make of the style that Mr Rosenfeld employs? Let it be granted that he is trying to convey impressions of music by means of words. But it is not alone or even mainly in the mazes of sought-for impressionism that Mr Rosenfeld bewilders us. It is in dealing with quite matter-of-fact things."

+ — Springf'd Republican p8 N 19 '29 950w

ROSMAN, ALICE GRANT. Visitors to Hugo. 296p $2 Minton [7s 6d Mills & B.] 29-16774

Hugo was desperately injured in an automobile accident. When he wakes to consciousness he finds himself a permanent invalid; his best friend is in jail and Hugo's father, whom he adores, never comes near the sick-room. Things are as dark as possible. But little Bunny Molyneux becomes Hugo's frequent visitor and the two cook up a scheme that brightens the horizon for everybody.

Booklist 26:34 O '29

"Refraining from a sentimental use of sweetness and light devices, Miss Rosman raises to a plane of humor and sympathy a situation that might be a harrowing success as a subject for a naturalistic novel." R. C. B. Brown

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Jl 7 '29 480w

"The tale is amusing; the philosophy sound, although the ceaseless warfare between the young and the less young is tiring after a time, yet on the whole this is an exceedingly good story for summer time when one is vacationing or otherwise resting."

+ — Boston Transcript p2 Jl 3 '29 230w

Cleveland Open Shelf p127 S '29

"Even though Miss Rosman's second novel has not quite the verve and charm of the first, it will recommend itself to those who like to read of attractive people, behaving rather decently and doing rather nice things to and for each other, without a trace of self-conscious virtue but simply because decency is an integral part of their code of life."

+ N Y Times p6 Je 16 '29 530w

"An engaging tale of young people in London. The plot is simple but original and ingeniously handled. The characters are attractive, the dialogue, natural and amusing, and there is a nice balance of tenderness and mirth in the story; actual chuckles, unless you are blasé, sniffles, unless you are hard-boiled." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 152:391 Jl 3 '29 90w

"There is a constant stream of bright dialogue flowing over the made-to-order pathos of the novel. The book is obviously intended for a dull hour and is really better written than its subject deserves."

Sat R of Lit 5:1198 Jl 20 '29 100w

"Psychiatry and humor are rather interestingly blended. Moreover, the story should be an eyeopener to misguided parents who try to control the minds and actions of children after they have reached years when some responsibility should be given them."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Jl 28 '29 300w

Times [London] Lit Sup p496 Je 20 '29 150w

Wis Lib Bul 25:277 Jl '29

ROSS, FRANK ALEXANDER; FRY, CHARLES LUTHER; and SIBLEY, ELBRIDGE. Near East and American philanthropy; a survey conducted under the guidance of the General com. of the Near East survey. 308p $3.50 Columbia univ. press

361 Near East relief

A survey of educational, social and economic conditions in the near East. After a general chapter on the Near East, there are separate chapters devoted to Armenia, Albania, Bulgaria, Greece, Turkey, 'Iraq, Palestine and Syria. The appendices deal with the agricultural situation, cooperative undertakings, and proposed plans for American agencies in the Near East.

"A careful presentation of the problems of American philanthropy in the Near East."

+ J Home Econ 21:684 S '29 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p851 O 24 '29 80w

ROSS, MALCOLM HARRISON. Penny dreadful. 283p $2 Coward-McCann 29-10178

A newspaper story in which a sob writer for the tabloids stirs up a pretty mess for her ex-husband and the girl he loves, both of whom are working for a conservative paper. Ruth North's vindictiveness reacts as a boomerang, injuring only herself. The tabloid stories are made a laughing stock, the scandal is cleared up, and the lovers are married.

Bookm 69:xxiii Ag '29 130w

"As a piece of work, the book is marred by an amateurish failure to keep to a fixed viewpoint: at one time the story appears to be disclosed from the eyes and mind of Tim North, and then Tim fades out and evidence piles up in the actions of other characters. This scattering of the fire, particularly in the highly artistic realm of the novel, bespeaks the lazy reporter." Stanley Walker

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 My 26 '29 830w

"Towards the end of his longish novel Mr. Ross rather allows the straight course of his thought to waver uncertainly. It is no longer straight or persuasive. Yet he has held up the mirror faithfully to the world he himself has evidently lived in. Best of all, he has chosen a healthy point of view; he does not portray erotic or vulgar scenes merely for their surface baseness. Here is one young author who has the courage to hold a standard in behalf of decency and to hold it honestly." W. E. H.

+ — Boston Transcript p10 My 25 '29 650w

" 'Penny Dreadful' is worth reading. It is fast-moving and pleasant, but it isn't a great newspaper novel. If you ask me, there never will be one. Novels shouldn't be about newspapers, anyway; they should be about people. I can well imagine a great novel some day that will concern a newspaper man—but his trade will be only the dim background against which he works out his own peculiar destiny." Milton MacKaye

+ N Y Evening Post p10m My 11 '29 600w

"The author has been a newspaper man, we are told, but the skin-deep impressions his story leaves do not give us an adequate picture of that life or of those who lead it. Unfortunately, the story is slow in starting, and even at the close is rendered sluggish by the cataloguing of reactions to the business of gathering news."

— N Y Times p24 My 12 '29 180w

"As a whole, 'Penny Dreadful' is heavy-footed and dull, expounding a pretty obvious doctrine and not getting much of anywhere in the process."

— + Sat R of Lit 5:1080 Je 1 '29 250w

" 'Penny Dreadful,' while not offering any real solution of the tabloid problem, is fairly readable and has some bearing on actual life."

— + Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 28 '29 230w

ROSSELL, LEONARD. Tracks & trails. 137p il $1.25 Macmillan

591.5 Animals—Habits and behavior. Photography of animals 29-26045

Two boys explore the mysteries of bird and animal life on the Isle of Palms. This story of their discoveries is attractively illustrated from photographs and sketches of wild life, and includes a chapter on how to photograph animals and birds.

Booklist 25:252 Mr '29

"Profuse illustration is the principal attraction of this book. Interesting photographs are well reproduced, marginal pen-and-ink sketches of animal and bird tracks and their makers give the pages a familiar but agreeable Thompson-Seton look. The sketches are Mr. Rossell's. He draws, at times, much better than he writes for real boys."

— + Sat R of Lit 5:737 Mr 2 '29 120w

Wis Lib Bul 25:104 Mr '29

ROTH, LEON. Spinoza. (Leaders of philosophy) 250p $3 Little [12s 6d Benn]

193 Spinoza, Benedictus de 29-26348

"Professor Leon Roth's admirable monograph on the philosopher forms one of the opening volumes of the new 'Leaders of Philosophy' series. Designing his work primarily as an estimate of the influence and 'survival-value' of Spinozism, and addressing the general reader as well as the professional student, Professor Roth is naturally less polemical than Dr. McKeon [Book Review Digest, April, 1929]. . . Possibly the most valuable portion of Professor Roth's work is to be found towards the close, where the results and influence of Spinoza's doctrines are discussed with a breadth of out-

ROTH, LEON—Continued.
look that derives particular force from its use of the philosopher's private letters."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Booklist 25:320 My '29

"An excellent general account of the famous Dutch-Jewish philosopher and his system of thought will be found in this book." E. N.

+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 9 '29 750w

"Professor Roth's method is objective. As far as possible he lets Spinoza speak for himself, giving numerous quotations from his works strung together with a running commentary. The commentary is always lucid and to the point, while such criticisms as are offered are mainly those which were made in Spinoza's own lifetime, and to which replies can be found in his writings." C. E. M. Joad

+ Nation and Ath 44:694 F 16 '29 450w

"It is much to Professor Roth's credit that he has succeeded in making Spinoza more accessible and has given a clear conception of the kind of magic that emanated from this Dutch Jew who left a challenge to all subsequent western thought." Denver Lindley

New Repub 58:260 Ap 17 '29 260w

"To allow Spinoza to appear as big as he is, without vagueness or over-emphasis, requires real skill and sympathy. A man grinding a lens knows the lens is perfect when he cannot detect its presence and objects appear through it in their true proportions. This book is a lens after Spinoza's own heart." J. D. M.

New Statesman 32:538 F 2 '29 280w

Reviewed by Alan Porter

Spec 142:92 Ja 19 '29 500w

"The book as a whole is all that it sets out to be; for a detailed exposition and commentary was beyond its purpose. It is free from the prejudice of too rigid philosophical preconceptions on the author's part, as some previous expositions were not, and clear in its expression." G. B.

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Ag 6 '29 700w

"Professor Roth furnishes us with a wealth of acute philosophic criticism which is remarkable in a work of such a scope."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p54 Ja 24 '29 600w

ROTHENSTEIN, JOHN KNEWSTUB MAURICE. Pot of paint; the artists of the 1890's. 215p il $3.50 Covici

927.5 Artists 29-14512

"Mr. John Rothenstein's suggestive introductory chapters are succeeded by a series of papers upon such figures as Whistler, Greaves, Steer, Sickert, Conder, Beardsley, Ricketts and Shannon, Rothenstein and Max."—Sat R of Lit

Reviewed by T: Craven

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 My 12 '29 780w

Boston Transcript p4 Mr 23 '29 450w

"The book is well turned out, and the print is pleasant, but the illustrations, photographic reproductions of works mostly in the Tate Gallery, are of only fair quality."

+ — Nation and Ath 43:566 Jl 28 '28 800w

"The book contains much new material and many very entertaining anecdotes. The chapter on Whistler is excellent; that on Beardsley perhaps not quite adequate." H: Furst

— + New Repub 59:159 Je 26 '29 400w

New Statesman 31:704 S 15 '28 250w

N Y Times p20 O 20 '29 500w

"Intimate biographical sketches of some artists of the nineties are prefaced by a brilliant discussion of the social background which produced them. There is a keen analysis of the breakdown of aristocratic society in the Nineteenth Century and the rise of the wealthy commoner, which resulted in the popular artist who pandered to commonplace taste, and the individualist who refused to do so and became isolated and rebellious."

+ Outlook 151:467 Mr 20 '29 110w

St Louis 27:309 N '29

Sat R 145:838 Je 30 '28 950w

"Mr. John Rothenstein approaches his theme in commendable spirit. He sets the stage for a stirring conflict between the creative impulse and the crushing industrial machinization of the day. And yet, the promised battle does not quite come off. . . Mr. Rothenstein, who knows with a fair degree of intimacy all the subjects of these sketches, is too close to his material to enjoy the advantage of perspective, also he is too diffident, or too chary, to be frankly intimate and personal. We are none the less indebted to him for throwing into relief the decidedly self-conscious period of the eighteen-nineties, for indicating, though casually, its true physiognomy." Christian Brinton

— + Sat R of Lit 5:916 Ap 20 '29 450w

Times [London] Lit Sup p729 O 11 '28 650w

ROTHERY, AGNES EDWARDS (MRS HARRY ROGERS PRATT). Central America and the Spanish Main. 222p il $3 Houghton

917.28 Central America—Description and travel. Spanish Main. California, Lower—Description and travel 29-19181

Beginning with San Francisco, the author of this travel book goes on to tell the story of California and the missions, following it with a few chapters on cities and countries of Central America, Panama, and the Colombian ports of South America. The book concludes with a chapter on the Spanish Main.

Booklist 26:114 D '29

Boston Transcript p2 N 6 '29 300w

"This is a pleasingly written book of travel impressions, attractive because the author is able to evoke with skill and grace the past life and backgrounds of her present scenes." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p10m O 12 '29 60w

N Y Times p20 O 13 '29 250w

ROTHERY, AGNES EDWARDS (MRS HARRY ROGERS PRATT). New roads in old Virginia. 223p il $2.50 Houghton

975.5 Virginia—Description and travel. Virginia—History 29-7737

An historical chronicle of the Old Dominion in which the trail leads from Tidewater Virginia, Alexandria, Fredericksburg and Richmond, thru the Piedmont section, along the Spotswood trail to Lexington, and up the Shenandoah Valley to Winchester.

Booklist 25:356 Je '29

"Mrs. Rothery writes less with vividness than with a certain mellow charm; but her text is always precisely instructive. The book contains a number of linoleum cuts by Alice Acheson and a charming map of the region." Sara Haardt

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 Ap 28 '29 380w

"In her attempt to write of a section comparatively unknown to her she fails to grasp the inner spirit of either people or place. What she sets forth are the impressions of a tourist who has informed herself carefully as to the facts, who can record her observations in a manner truly charming, but who fails entirely to understand that the civilization on which she comments so entertainingly is the outward expression of a standard of life and of ideals inherently different from that found elsewhere in America." G. R. B. R.

— + Boston Transcript p2 Ap 10 '29 700w

Cleveland Open Shelf p70 My '29

"Nothing could be more delightful than the way she handles her theme in this new volume, with its richly colored but mellow atmosphere, its alluring glimpses of old towns and the pageants of historic years, and its friendly, informed narrative of the regions through which the reader is led."

+ N Y Times p14 Je 2 '29 380w

"This is a new Virginia, enlarged, illuminated. Miss Rothery has not contented herself with making visible the local habitations of Jefferson, Poe, Lee; she has built roads to birthplaces of other great ones, whom it should be a disgrace not to know, Matthew Fontaine Maury, McCormick, and Jack Jouett, who out-Revered the famous Paul. She tells the extraordinary story of a name, the Old Dominion. She explains the real reasons for Patrick Henry's power. . . Enthusiasm clothes the fact with charm. The book is a tour of understanding."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:938 Ap 20 '29 200w
Wis Lib Bul 25:193 Je '29

ROUGHEAD, WILLIAM. Malice domestic. 285p il $2 Doubleday, Doran [10s 6d Green]

343 Crime and criminals—Great Britain. Murder 29-13992

Writing with his usual humor and verve Mr Roughead rehearses several famous cases of murder in the home which occurred in England during the nineteenth century.

"The reader is afforded a glimpse of remarkably fascinating and cold-blooded stranger-than-fiction crimes."

+ Bookm 69:xxvi Ag '29 40w
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 O 6 '29 180w

"Mr. Roughead is very skillful in the marshaling of all the facts of a case, frequently traveling far afield and doing much investigation in order to collect them, and he is also both skillful and interesting in his presentation."

+ N Y Times p15 Jl 14 '29 450w

Reviewed by E: H. Bierstadt
Outlook 151:388 Mr 6 '29 100w

"Mr. Roughead is here again at his best—his unvarying best, which we get from him every time."

+ Sat R 147:149 F 2 '29 720w

"The six stories of crimes are veritable little gems; absorbing studies of the vagaries of human conduct, conveyed through a medium of ripe wisdom and humor."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:194 S 28 '29 350w
Times [London] Lit Sup p367 My 2 '29 150w

ROURKE, CONSTANCE MAYFIELD. Troupers of the Gold Coast; or, The rise of Lotta Crabtree. 262p il $3.50 Harcourt

B or 92 Crabtree, Lotta. Theater—California 28-22487

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

Booklist 25:212 F '29

"Miss Rourke makes no exclamations about Lotta, points to no special virtues due to her sex, treats her continuously as a human being who lived with other human beings. It happens that to me she does not make Lotta attractive. But I feel enormously in sympathy with Miss Rourke's story of Lotta. The precision of her words, the cadence of her prose, the justice and vividness of her observation, all seem to me remarkable even in an age of superior biographical and historical style. She cannot write a paragraph without distinction; and she seems incapable of copying the mannerisms of anyone, so that everything is fresh and personal." Gilbert Seldes

+ Bookm 68:582 Ja '29 440w

"In the pages of this detailed and entertaining story of her life, Lotta speaks scarcely at all. She is elusive, as a kitten is elusive. It is Mary Ann Crabtree who emerges a notable figure." Florence Haxton

New Repub 58:23 F 20 '29 520w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 33:639 D '28
St Louis 27:169 My '29
Springf'd Republican p8 F 22 '29 400w
Wis Lib Bul 25:75 F '29

ROWAN, RICHARD WILMER. Spy and counter-spy; the development of modern espionage. 322p $3.50 Viking press

355.34 Spies. Secret service 28-22680

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

"The ingenuity of a few tricks and the courage of a few men and women are remarkable; but the whole story fails to fascinate. Is it possible that even this romance has been mechanized and organized out of existence?"

Dial 86:77 Ja '29 70w

"A contribution to political science of real importance, Mr. Rowan has taken the stories of individual spies and made them into a well-ordered treatise on the work of the spy. We are presented with a lucid exposition of the various sides of the spy's activities rather than mere history. This double aspect of the book gives it at once meaning and quality." W: Seagle

+ Nation 127:691 D 19 '28 280w

Reviewed by Clarence Britten
New Repub 57:304 Ja 30 '29 1000w
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 33:618 D '28
Spec 143:161 Ag 3 '29 170w

ROWE, DOROTHY. Traveling shops; stories of Chinese children. 109p il $2 Macmillan

29-21676

Stories of the everyday ways of life in China told for boys and girls.

Cath World 130:379 D '29 200w

"Lynd Ward has infused a definite charm into the pictures, and his color work is beautifully done." O. M. Fuller

+ N Y World p11m N 17 '29 100w

"The book succeeds in making some aspects of Chinese life extremely vivid: the cries of the fruit vendor, the candy-maker, the seller of silk threads; the birds taking their daily airing with their masters; the bargain well driven." A. T. Hobart

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:394 N 16 '29 320w

ROYDE-SMITH, NAOMI GWLADYS (MRS ERNEST MILTON). Give me my sin again (Eng title Summer holiday or Gibraltar). 324p $2.50 Harper [7s 6d Constable]

29-20111

It was at the Hotel Metropole, where she was staying with her father and mother, that Winnie, a girl of sixteen, fell in love with George Esdaile, the first violinist. Secret meetings led to eventual discovery; she found that Esdaile already had a wife and children and could not marry her. The story ends with tragedy and death for the lovers.

"Those who saw in 'The Lover,' last spring, the promise of something finer in prose writing than had appeared for many years, will be keenly disappointed in this new novel by the same author. Verily she is trailing her wings in the dust this time—truckling to popular demand for something dealing with irregular and abnormal living; and the worst of it is that she has not done even this lesser task well. Whether or not one has read 'The Lover,' one cannot be satisfied with this novel of commonplace English people of the middle class. There is hardly plot enough to call it a novel."

— Boston Transcript p2 D 7 '29 350w

"Reading this book and remembering its predecessors, one is tempted to throw discretion to the winds and boldly declare Miss Royde-Smith the most versatile of living English novelists. . . [Her] art is so delicate, her vision so just, that there is not an incident, hardly a phrase that has not a direct bearing on the story." A. G. Rosman

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p6 D 28 '29 700w

ROYDE-SMITH, N. G.—Continued

"Though less delicate and charming a proof of Miss Royde-Smith's genius than 'The Children in the Wood,' 'Summer Holiday' shows an increase in power. But the nightmare of the ending seems wanton: we are distressed enough as it is." L. L. Irvine

+ — Nation and Ath 45:436 Je 29 '29 150w

"Miss Royde-Smith has carried out a task of enormous difficulty with a combination of strength and discretion that finally gives her her own place among living novelists. Throughout the significant parts of the book, there is hardly one false note, one touch fumbled." E. S.

+ New Statesman 33:372 Je 29 '29 430w

"It is not Winnie alone who is well drawn. Though each character lives, he serves only as support in a tragedy that is completely Winnie's. It is cruel that such a situation had to develop for one so ill equipped in every way; yet, having developed, it is good to be able to read of it in a book that does not flinch at any exposition of its progress."

+ N Y Times p28 N 17 '29 320w

"Miss Royde-Smith has approached her subject with courage and tenderness. Her characterizations are finished, and the virtuosity of her style has never been better displayed than in this excellent novel."

+ Outlook 153:311 O 23 '29 150w

"The book as a whole is certainly one of the best Miss Royde-Smith has done, which is saying a lot." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 148:52 Jl 13 '29 580w

"Accuracy to the smallest detail, ingenuity of plot and situation and a caustic comic sense are the characteristics of this rich and excellent piece of work, and it contains some episodes, such as Winnie's pursuit of the violinist as he makes a princely exit from the concert room, which are packed with some remarkable observation. . . . The melodramatic accident which concludes the book is, however, most unconvincing, possibly because it is an accident which is attempting to be arbitrary and inevitable at the same time." B. S. P.

+ — Spec 143:27 Jl 6 '29 280w

"Miss Royde-Smith's readers can ignore the few false notes, where so much is excellent, wise and sincere."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p534 Jl 4 '29 520w

ROYDE-SMITH, NAOMI GWLADYS (MRS ERNEST MILTON). The lover. 89p $2.50 Harper [5s Constable]

29-26342

A charmingly written long short story of the meeting in near old-age of two English artists who in the heyday of their youth had been rarely devoted lovers.

---

Booklist 25:323 My '29

"It fails to be convincing, because the style of the book, intended to be exquisite and remote, succeeds only in being vague and obscure. The book lives up in every respect to the ideals of an obsolete romantic era."

— + Bookm 69:xxiv Ap '29 130w

"So faultless are the beads that Miss Royde-Smith has strung together to make this brief story that one almost forgets its continuity in their individual perfection." Mary Ross

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Mr 10 '29 800w

"The very dimness of the romance—suggested, not revealed—gives a sense of sincerity, a sense of proportion and a perfection of completeness."

+ Boston Transcript p10 My 11 '29 300w

"Miss Naomi Royde-Smith gives us a long short story of considerable charm, notable for having only about two lines of conversation. The method is extremely up to date. There is something to be said for dressing in the latest fashion and certainly Miss Royde-Smith's smart clothes suit her perfectly." Francis Birrell

+ Nation and Ath 44:19 O 6 '28 130w

"Delightful in its melancholy is 'The Lover.' The author is the perfect pastelist."

+ N Y Times p6 Ap 7 '29 450w

"Virtuosity is not all there is to 'The Lover.' There is sympathy and emotion in it, nicely blended with craftsmanship."

+ Outlook 151:320 F 20 '29 100w

Pratt p38 spring '29

" 'The Lover' is an experiment in a literary mode, deliberate, finished, self-conscious, condensed. . . . Miss Naomi Royde-Smith never writes a novel without breaking fresh ground and, unlike most experimentalists, she is able to identify herself with her experiment." L. P. Hartley

+ Sat R 146:438 O 6 '28 180w

Sat R of Lit 5:1147 Je 29 '29 320w

"It is all an intangible web of music, golden light, regret, and the transmission of dreamy, suprasensual emotion. Deliberately but exquisitely written, it makes a lovely nocturne." R. A. Taylor

+ Spec 141:501 O 13 '28 100w

"A beautifully produced miniature of a novel. The writing is of high quality, but, short as the story is, the theme is almost too tenuous for its length."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p986 D 13 '28 330w

Wis Lib Bul 25:128 Ap '29

ROYSE, MORTON WILLIAM. Aerial bombardment and the international regulation of warfare. 256p $3 Vinal

341.3 Aeronautics—Laws and regulations. Aeronautics, Military. Bombardment. War (international law) 28-24594

"Dr. Royse has brought together a vast amount of material in support of the thesis that legal restrictions on the use of weapons of war have never been enacted or applied where they would hamper military effectiveness in destruction. Where a restriction has been adopted . . . it was due to the fact that no useful military purpose was thought of as served by those practices. After 1907, when it was realized that airships and airplanes were effective military weapons, restrictions were no longer agreed on, or at least ratified by governments. And even if new weapons are at first resisted or denounced by the humanitarian, the objection is never long effective."—Nation

---

Reviewed by H. J. Knerr

Am Pol Sci R 23:1044 N '29 340w

"The thesis is supported by a wealth of documentation drawn from French, British, German, and American sources, from data extracted from professional air service instructional manuals, by pertinent records of facts of the World War. . . Useful as the volume is, and astounding as a collection of material, it cannot receive unqualified approval. It touches but slightly upon the most pressing problem in international regulation of warfare in connection with aviation. It fails to give any reasoned or extended thought to the problem of the vanishing or persisting distinction between combatant and non-combatant, a vital problem in the subject under discussion. . . His references are, indeed, culled from a broad field, but their muddled method of citation and the curious selections displayed in some cases lead to a suspicion that however great and extensive a compiler, however simple and clear his single main thesis, this is not the careful scholar of practiced hand." Elbridge Colby

— + Columbia Law R 29:688 My '29 950w

"Dr. Royse has had practical experience in flying. He has studied the materials used in conferences on the rules of war, the positions taken by military advisers and by governments both before and after conferences, the rules of war manuals and the comments of military and legal authorities, the state of the art in aircraft at various periods—all designed to show that the views of governments regarding the restriction of air warfare have always been purely utilitarian, depending on the efficiency of the particular government in air warfare." E. M. Borchard

+ Nation 129:556 N 13 '29 550w
St Louis 27:46 F '29

ROZANOV, MIKHAIL GRIGORYEVITCH (N. OGNYOV, pseud.). Diary of a communist undergraduate; tr. from the Russian with an introd. by Alexander Werth. 288p $2.50 Brewer
29-26786

A continuation of the "Diary of a communist schoolboy" (Book Review Digest, 1928). "Mikhail Rozanov was a comrade of Lenin in prerevolutionary struggles and is today one of Russia's most popular satirists. Out of his own experience he created Kostya Riabtsov, the provincial schoolboy; now he has taken Kostya to the university in Moscow."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Bookm 69:xiv Je '29 40w

"Here is adolescent Russia—chaotic, sprangly, awkward and dogmatic—yet fiercely alive. This is not a book about Soviet Russia; it is Soviet Russia. I know nothing which gives a more vivid and accurate picture of the contradictions which are Russia today than this volume and its predecessor, 'The Diary of a Communist Schoolboy.'" L: Gannett
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 My 12 '29 680w
Boston Transcript p10 My 11 '29 630w

"Like his 'Diary of a Communist Schoolboy,' Ognyov's present 'Diary' offers a fascinating and vividly authentic picture of the bewildering social psychological changes in the student life of Soviet Russia." Joshua Kunitz
+ Nation 129:172 Ag 14 '29 950w

"Those who read that remarkable document, 'The Diary of a Communist Schoolboy,' will be interested in this sequel, though it is neither as revealing nor as good a job as the first volume. . . In a sense, it is a document, and a document—this is truer of the 'Schoolboy' than of the 'Undergraduate' volume—which tells us more of the things one really wants to know about contemporary Russian life in Moscow than any other book I have seen." Robert Littell
+ New Repub 58:366 My 15 '29 380w

"Probably most of the detail is true, but M. Ognyov fails to convince us that he is writing about human beings; he has noted the current slang and topics of students' debating clubs, and a few types, and left it at that. The diary is shapeless and consists chiefly of fragments of conversation. For those who read the previous book, it contains few revelations; it is worth reading only because there are so few accounts of life in Soviet Russia which can be regarded as at all genuine. The translation by Mr. Werth is good."
— + New Statesman 32:798 Mr 30 '29 220w

"It is almost a reporter's notebook, so true and simple are its observations and so much above mere probability are the incidents it depicts. . . Kostya is now somewhat more serious, a bit more sophisticated, has experienced more, but is nevertheless the same boy who made the 'Schoolboy' so charming." Bernard Smith
+ N Y Evening Post p6m Je 22 '29 500w

"The present work and its companion volume are by all odds the most illuminating documents one may read on the greatest social experiment of this century." Howard Barnes
+ N Y Times p2 My 19 '29 880w

"There is very little in this book that is either startling or new. The handbook on undergraduate life in the United States of Soviet Russia is still to be written."
— Outlook 152:551 Jl 31 '29 180w

"The sequel to the 'Diary of a Communist Schoolboy' is interesting, but like many such second efforts, not quite so good as the first fresh story." Arthur Ruhl
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:20 Ag 3 '29 1100w
Times [London] Lit Sup p234 Mr 21 '29 420w

RUBENSTEIN, HAROLD FREDERICK, ed. Great English plays; twenty-three masterpieces from the mysteries to Sheridan (excluding Shakespeare) with three representative plays of the nineteenth century; with a running commentary. 1136p $3.50 Harper [8s 6d Gollancz]

822.08 English drama—Collections 29-6266

From the whole range of English drama from the 14th to the 19th centuries the editor has chosen these twenty-six plays, the earliest a mystery play, the latest, a comedy by Oscar Wilde.

Booklist 25:352 Je '29

"We have many collections that hold and reveal the glories of the English drama, but most of these collections run to expensive sets and series, and few single volumes contain as many notable and various specimens of English dramatic art as are to be found in the book that H. F. Rubenstein has simply but boldly entitled Great English Plays." B. R. Redman
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 Mr 24 '29 800w

"Mr. Rubenstein recognised, of course, that his selection of twenty-six plays to represent the English drama would be challenged by every reader: there could be no escape from that. . . It is possible that for half the plays belonging to the half-century before 1630 alternatives might be proposed and defended, while others, such as Doctor Faustus and The Shoemaker's Holiday may be regarded as inevitable. The omission of The Duchess of Malfi will be remarked by almost everybody. . . Mr. Rubenstein's 'running commentary,' as he calls it, consists of an introductory paragraph to each writer. These are not particularly good, and the editor's short preface is altogether unworthy of his wide knowledge and the purpose of his selection."
— New Statesman 32:60 O 20 '28 250w
N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 2 '29 40w

"To print twenty-six full-length plays for eight shillings and sixpence must be a feat unparalled in the modern publishing of theatre-books. Naturally the print cannot be large, but a clear type is used to ease the strain. Mr. Rubenstein has made a just selection beginning with 'A Wakefield Nativity' and ending with 'Lady Windermere's Fan' . . . Mr. Rubenstein's running commentary is fresh and engaging and a great improvement on the dreary pedagogic prefaces which usually rob any vital play of its allure for the student. Mr. Rubenstein invites to pleasure, not to a holiday-task."
+ Sat R 146:336 S 15 '28 120w
Wis Lib Bul 25:99 Mr '29

RUEFF, JACQUES. From the physical to the social sciences; introd. to a study of economic and ethical theory; tr. by Herman Green; with an introd. by Herman Oliphant and Abram Hewitt. 159p $2 Johns Hopkins

301 Social sciences. Economics. Ethics. Science—Methodology 29-13172

A study by a professor of the École polytechnique, with an introduction by two professors at Johns Hopkins University. The essay deals with the application of physical science methods to the study of social sciences—psychology, ethics and economics.

Bookm 69:xii Ag '29 130w

"A beautiful work of great importance. It is beautiful and important because, in a style notable for neatness, clarity, penetration and wit, it answers and answers rightly a question that, especially in these days, must have challenged the curiosity of every magnanimous student. The question is: What, if any, are the cardinal respects in which all the various sciences are identical?" C. J. Keyser
+ New Repub 60:23 Ag 21 '29 850w

RUGG, HAROLD ORDWAY, and SHUMAKER, ANN. Child-centered school; an appraisal of the new education. 359p il $2.40 World bk.

370.1 Education of children. Education--Experimental methods 28-29908

"The outcome of ten years of study and observation of and participation in the modern scientific theory and practice of education, their book offers a thoroughgoing exposition, analysis and evaluation of the principles, purposes and methods of the new, progressive schools whose fundamental distinction is that their activities are centred about the child and the development of his personality, instead of about his adjustment to society. The authors, who are of the Faculty of Lincoln School, Teachers College, are sympathetic with the revolutionary movement in education, but they estimate it and its activities judicially and do not spare criticism when they think it has faults which should be pointed out."—N Y Times

---

Booklist 25:234 Mr '29

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Jl 21 '29 220w

Boston Transcript p3 D 15 '28 330w

"Perhaps the greatest service of the book will be to provoke thinking in advanced classes in education." Ernest Horn

+ El School J 29:547 Mr '29 2000w

J Home Econ 21:369 My '29 60w

"Increasingly there is developing a consciousness that the central problem of the educational process is one of an adequate esthetic. Of this consciousness no clearer articulation has been made than that of this book." J. B. Temple

+ New Repub 57:199 Ja 2 '29 380w

"Of enthusiastic description of individual experimental schools and accounts of their work there has been much in various books during the last two decades. But this is the first to discuss the development as a whole, bring out its philosophic and psychologic bases and give succinct statement to its principles, with fearless though friendly criticism all along the line." F. F. Kelly

+ N Y Times p6 F 10 '29 440w

"This book aims at a critique of the new education; it accomplishes its aim by showing its readers the actual operation of several outstanding new schools, from the Lincoln School of Teachers' College to the Ojai Valley School in California. It shows, by specific instances of the work of these schools, exactly how 'drawing-out environments' replace the old 'pouring-in environments.' An abundance of illustrations, helpful footnotes, a classified bibliography, and an index add their practical values to this thorough appraisal of the new education." A. L. Bass

+ Survey 61:816 Mr 15 '29 300w

RUHLE, OTTO. Karl Marx, his life and work; tr. by Eden and Cedar Paul. 419p il $5 Viking press

B or 92 Marx, Karl 29-9839

An exhaustive biography, by a German Social Democrat, which offers the most thoro analysis thus far made of the character and personality of Karl Marx and the development of his theory. The book quotes liberally from the writings of Marx.

---

"The present volume is a clear, scholarly and fascinating exposition of Marx, the man, and of the main tenets of the Marxian theory." H. W. Laidler

+ Am Econ R 19:737 D '29 400w

"This is an excellent biography. The style is lucid; the narrative moves with quick tempo; and the translators have done a superb job. Marx's journalistic adventures, the persecutions by the various governments and his repeated exiles, the evolution of his thought-process, his multifarious activities as a leader in revolutionary organization and propaganda, his devotion to father, wife, and children, Engels' beautiful friendship toward him, the tragedy of his career —all this stands in vivid detail, because all is handled with skill, sympathy, and a sense of balance." M. M. Bober

+. Am Pol Sci R 23:1047 N '29 500w

Booklist 25:393 Jl '29

"It is a good book in spite of the usual Marxian absurdities plus a number of new ones; it is a good book because Marx, the man, in all his harshness, pertinacity and courage stands stark and clear before the gloomy social background of the mid-Nineteenth Century; it is a good book because the writer, saturated in the history of socialism, is within narrow limits, a good historian." W. P. Hall

+ Bookm 69:549 Jl '29 1400w

"Although it cannot be regarded as definitive, although it may soon be followed by an equally thorough work written from a somewhat different point of view and on a somewhat different plan, it goes far toward supplying a real need. . . It is an important work, and at least nine-tenths of it is admirably well done." Algernon Lee

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 My 12 '29 1400w

"Altogether apart from its resort to psychology for the elucidation of Karl Marx's life and work, the book furnishes an account of them more detailed than any previously attempted, displays a masterly grasp of the economic issues involved and excels especially in the field of personal portraiture." Edmund Noble

+ Boston Transcript p5 My 4 '29 2400w

"Like every other biographer of Marx, Rühle manages somehow to bring out the world-shaking importance of the man. . . We get a clear picture of the tragic and abject economic poverty of the Marx household. And we get even a clearer picture of Marx the egotist, vindictively self-righteous, a bitter, cantankerous, often unfair and usually nasty genius, but withal an authentically tragic and great figure. Yet this is far from being a great biography." B: Stolberg

+ — Nation 128:619 My 22 '29 1300w

"Otto Rühle's life is likely to become the standard brief biography of the real founder of Communism. It is lucid, objective, dispassionate. It is the work neither of a blind admirer nor a hostile critic. It shows a profound grasp of the history of the Socialist movement and of the development and nature of Marx's own thinking. If it has a defect it is that, perhaps, excessive weight has been given to a psychological explanation of Marx's own career and of the rise of the proletarian movement itself." Philip Kerr

+ — Nation and Ath 45:710 Ag 31 '29 300w

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett

New Repub 59:265 Jl 24 '29 900w

"The book is altogether the most informative, truthful, comprehensive and enticing life of Marx available in English." H. L. Laidler

+ N Y Evening Post p11m My 11 '29 1250w

"Herr Rühle's book contains some very interesting and original pages on the psychologic aspects of his subject, pages in which he seeks to apply the methods of modern psychoanalysis to a dissection of Marx's thought and character." Joseph Shaplen

+ N Y Times p5 My 12 '29 1550w

"This book is brilliant, absorbing and deeply honest."

+ Outlook 152:108 My 15 '29 120w

Pratt p35 autumn '29

"Rühle's book is an important contribution to its subject. Possibly his psychograph of the man is too stark and harsh, just as mine and others of a generation ago were too sentimental and saccharine. It is, however, an unforgettable portrait. The book is copiously illustrated." J: Spargo

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:1069 Je 1 '29 1650w

"We think that the world could have done without this book."

— Spec 143:229 Ag 17 '29 230w

Times [London] Lit Sup p631 Ag 15 '29 1000w

Wis Lib Bul 25:322 O '29

World Tomorrow 12:378 S '29 20w

"Any brief summary of such an interpretation unfortunately savors of parody and does much less than justice to a serious portrayal of the character of one who is coming more and more to be recognized as among the greatest leaders of nineteenth-century thought. It is, nevertheless, a matter for regret that so excellent a biography should be couched in the terminology of a psychology that necessarily distorts the portrait, and that may, perhaps, be of only current acceptance." W. J. Couper

+ — Yale R n s 19:429 winter '30 750w

RUNBECK, MARGARET LEE. People will talk. 334p $2.50 Reilly & Lee

29-16664

"The story, which opens with the purchase of a house, thru the help of a building association, is a chronicle of the life of the average working man, his simple joys and sorrows, his financial difficulties and small temptations, but most of all his stern integrity and faithful service. Peter is a worker in a machine shop, Sally is the home maker and mother, and it is Sally who gives the story life and color. A clean and wholesome novel giving a picture of average people anywhere in the United States."—Wis Lib Bul

"It is an exhilarating story, these commonplace victories by commonplace little Sally and Peter, yet a touching one, too." Gwendoline Keene

+ Boston Transcript p3 O 5 '29 1200w

"If the last third of the book were as true and understanding as the earlier chapters, 'People Will Talk' would be a striking piece of work. As it stands, it is too like an excellent dinner with an uninteresting dessert."

+ — N Y Times p32 O 27 '29 430w

Wis Lib Bul 25:323 O '29

RUSSELL, BERTRAND ARTHUR WILLIAM. Marriage and morals. 320p $3 Liveright

176 Sexual ethics. Marriage 29-21696

Beginning with an historical and ethical survey of sexual morality, Mr Russell discusses the moral standard as it existed among savage tribes and during the Christian era as a background to a consideration of the modern problem, with emphasis upon sexual ethics in relation to modern marriage. Suggestions for certain modifications of the conventional code, making for greater happiness in the whole realm of sex and marriage, are given.

"Bertrand Russell has certainly produced the most humane and persuasive volume in the recent flood of books on marriage. None of it is unfamiliar—which is quite as it should be—and the book will reach a great many people who would have said at the outset that they were hostile to his conclusions. He is convinced of two facts: that marriage is for the sake of the children born in it, and that love is one of the first values of existence." Ruth Benedict

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 O 20 '29 1600w

Reviewed by Francis Snow

Current Hist 31:630 Ja '30 280w

"In the last analysis Mr. Russell, like Judge Lindsey, is proposing nothing new; he is only suggesting a candid facing of a new fact. An old morality is bankrupt; a new morality will have to be created. In fact, a new morality is already in the process of being created blindly by the very people who have never heard of Mr. Russell or of the new theories of morality that many of this generation have proposed. The economic and psychological forces in our civilization are at work achieving this change. Mr. Russell's book attempts only to give clarity to this change, but in trying to do this he is attempting in a fine, courageous manner an extremely grave task. Too much praise can scarcely be given to those who, like Mr. Russell, see this change as part of a greater revolution in the very structure of social life." V. F. Calverton

+ Nation 129:677 D 4 '29 850w

"If Mr. Russell had more charity towards the world in which he lives he would write a less entertaining book, but he might make a more effective contribution to the discussion of his subject." Ray Strachey

— + Nation and Ath 46:255 N 16 '29 750w

New Statesman 34:162 N 9 '29 850w

"Mr. Russell's trumpet blast is not going to bring down the walls of Jericho, but 'Marriage and Morals' is a civilizing book by one of the two great civilizers of the current age—the other is Havelock Ellis—and even the person whose blood pressure mounts rapidly while turning its pages will be better off for having read it." F. F. Van de Water

+ N Y Evening Post p11m O 12 '29 280w

"Permeating the book is his delicious dry wit, his tentative, half-humorous way of saying things which he means in deadly earnest. There is a good deal in the book with which traditional moralists would take issue. His whole position on individual freedom, the legal aspect of marriage, and family life is very advanced. . . Whether or not one agrees with [his] conclusions—and he makes them very easy to accept in argument—the importance of such a book and such a writer as Russell is immense. This importance lies in giving us perspective, more of a birdseye view of problems that lie all too close to everyday life and experience." Isabel Proudfit

+ N Y Times p2 N 17 '29 1300w

"Pity the unsuspecting reader who artlessly opens Bertrand Russell's new book without any premonition of where this astute philosopher will lead him. In that easy, informal manner which discounts all the airs of scholarship Russell puts himself on a footing with the average man, and presto!—he is discussing the fundamentals of his beliefs and practices, his faith, his family, his national loyalty, and the very existence of his stock on this earth. Moreover, Russell stirs up these subjects, each of which is fraught with controversy, in the most amiable manner, discussing them as common sense dictates, giving both sides, forcing no conclusions on the reader." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p17 O 15 '29 1100w

"Liberal minded readers will find much to interest and nothing to shock them in Bertrand Russell's new book. He writes with perfect frankness and transparent purity of motive, and the charge of sentimentality often made against such highminded idealists can scarcely be advanced against this volume." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 153:310 O 23 '29 1000w

"Mr. Russell's book sets the problem in its historical perspective, and states it as fairly as is possible for one who is a natural partisan. Whatever we may think of his proposals it is evident that such a book, written by a man whose good faith is above question, was long overdue."

+ Spec 143:sup679 N 9 '29 800w

Springf'd Republican p7e N 3 '29 400w

"Marriage and Morals is interesting insofar as it, (1) traces the history of conventional ethics back to their source conditions, and (2) shows that those conditions no longer exist. Mr. Russell fails to prove that assurance of paternity is the only factor that stands in the way of extra-marital relationships." E. M. Allen

+ — Survey 63:358 D 15 '29 350w

Times [London] Lit Sup p860 O 31 '29 850w

RUSSELL, BERTRAND ARTHUR WILLIAM. Mysticism and logic. 234p $3 Norton

104 Philosophy. Science. Mathematics 29-19713

A series of ten formal, philosophical essays: Mysticism and logic; The place of science in a liberal education; A free man's worship; The study of mathematics; Mathematics and the metaphysicians; On scientific method in philosophy; The ultimate constituents of matter; The relation of sense-data to physics; On the notion of cause; Knowledge by acquaintance and knowledge by description.

RUSSELL, B. A. W.—Continued

Boston Transcript p2 O 23 '29 350w

"Another book setting forth the spirit of Humanism. No nobler statement of this position has been made than that found within these pages—particularly in the essay, 'A Free Man's Worship.' Not all of the essays making up this book are new, but even the old ones are a delight to any one who appreciates a lucid style and takes pleasure in clear and cogent reasoning." E. B. Chaffee

\+ Outlook 153:430 N 13 '29 100w

Reviewed by P. A. Schilpp
World Tomorrow 13:40 Ja '30 370w

RUSSELL, BERTRAND ARTHUR WILLIAM. Sceptical essays. 256p $2.50 Norton [7s 6d Allen & U.]

104 Skepticism. Social ethics. Intellect
28-22467

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

Reviewed by G: E. G. Catlin
Nation 128:318 Mr 13 '29 700w

"These seventeen essays once again give evidence of Mr. Russell's incisive mind, freedom of outlook, and splendid lucidity of style." E: Sapir

\+ New Repub 52:196 Ja 2 '29 750w

Pratt p7 winter '29

"Some of the essays are worth reading especially for their lucid and thought-provoking style. In short, this collection will be a delight to discriminating readers who do not feel strong enough to climb those technical barriers to knowledge and truth in Russell's more important volumes, yet wish to know more or less what those learned dissertations are about and what relation, if any, they have to the everyday problems of thoughtful citizens." Bruno Lasker

\+ Survey 62:316 Je 1 '29 300w

"His popular writings have all the charm and lucidity of a William James. In 'Sceptical Essays' . . . we have a major prophet of keen insight and aesthetic sensitivity surveying the human scene and finding, of course, all sorts of things wrong with the world." C: L. Snider

\+ Yale R n s 18:818 summer '29 350w

RUSSELL, CHARLES EDWARD. From Sandy Hook to 62°; being some account of the adventures, exploits and services of the old New York pilot-boat. 400p il $3.50 Century

656 Pilots and pilotage. Seamanship 29-24755

An account of the last hundred years in the annals of the Sandy Hook pilot boats, beginning with their work as privateers during the War of 1812. The author has been a guest on some of these boats and adds his own experiences and the stories their seamen told him. One of the last chapters gives an account of a little-known incident of the recent war.

"Despite some padding here and there, they make superb reading and a claim upon the excited gratitude of every reader whose pulse has ever quickened to the heroic tradition of sail." Wilson Follett

\+ Bookm 70:459 D '29 420w

Cleveland Open Shelf p150 D '29

"Mr. Russell writes with charm and anecdotal gusto and humor and gives us a book of good yarns on a good subject." Edwin Seaver

\+ N Y Evening Post p12m N 9 '29 70w

"Mr. Russell often writes carelessly, and sometimes one feels that his presentation of history is not wholly judicial, but he has written a gusty, salty book of sea adventure that very much needed to be written, a book for which he deserves the gratitude of all Americans who are proud of their country's history."

\+ — N Y Times p18 O 27 '29 500w

"A fine human tale of brave men who fight nature." Harry Hansen

\+ N Y World p20 O 11 '29 1100w

Reviewed by R. L. Roe
Sat R of Lit 6:403 N 16 '29 130w

RUSSELL, CHARLES EDWARD. Hour of American poetry. (One hour ser.) 165p $1 Lippincott

811.09 American poetry—History and criticism 29-20550

This little book offers a rapid survey of groups and movements within American poetry from Freneau of the Revolution to a very brief chapter on modern tendencies.

"Mr. Russell's vision is not broad enough to detect and illuminate currents of feeling, his philosophy of criticism is conservative. Even a genuine understanding of the genius of Sidney Lanier does not raise the book above the level of uninspired text." H. R. Hays

— Bookm 70:220 O '29 280w

"As a competent critical survey, Mr. Russell's book is disappointing. Its chief positive value lies in its concise resurrection of the past spirit of American poetry, where Mr Russell's turn of speech is always expeditious." Parker Tyler

— + N Y Evening Post p7m Ag 3 '29 380w

" 'An Hour of American Poetry' is pretty dull. On reading it we found nothing to change our belief that Mr. Russell has not the proper qualifications for writing briefly, clearly, intelligently or entertainingly of American poetry. The biographical and bibliographical data is accurate enough and the analyses of metrical structure. But the book shows the lack of that expert knowledge, selective judgment and poetic sensitivity which it would need if it were to tempt readers to the poetry shelves."

— + Outlook 152:348 Je 26 '29 120w

Springf'd Republican p8 Je 29 '29 1120w

RUSSELL, JOHN. Far wandering men. 265p $2.50 Norton

29-26571

Stories of life and adventure in the Far East. Contents: The knife; The yellow flinger; Gun metal; A son of the hand-maid; The primitive; The bright reversion; Angel face; "No evil"; The fire-walker; Powers of darkness.

Booklist 25:396 Jl '29

"These ten stories are bound together by what Mr. Russell calls the queerness of the Pacific. They are competent. They are well made. Some of them are too well made, relying on an unexpected dénouement which is not always unexpected. But behind the facile style can be felt a certain truth. It is the verity of actual experience, the truth of the living model." C. A. Chapman

\+ Bookm 69:312 My '29 400w

"The collection is uneven in power and artistry, but even in some of the weaker stories there are a few memorable scenes." Frank Streight

\+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 Je 2 '29 480w

Reviewed by L: Sherwin
N Y Evening Post p9m My 25 '29 820w

"In mass, Mr. Russell's stories vary from fair to excellent and one at least, 'The Bright Reversion,' seems to us to have just claim to greatness. His scene is, as usual, the Pacific and the Far East; his themes, prodigious happenings in strange climes." F: F. Van de Water

\+ N Y Evening Post p9m Je 1 '29 150w

"It is difficult not to speak extravagantly of the stories of the islands of the South Seas which make up the contents of 'Far Wandering Men.' . . It is uneven of achievement. The opening story, for an example, 'The Knife,' is pretty much the adventure of a Boy Scout in the South Seas. It may be passed by. The second piece, 'The Yellow Finger,' is only a little higher in the scale. And then the reader comes to the third tale, 'Gun Metal,' and is brought up short." Percy Hutchison

+ — N Y Times p7 My 5 '29 1050w

"Russell is no experimenter with new or resurrected forms, no verbal colorist, no psychological character sketcher, although his stories are full of color and his psychology seems sound. He writes of Eastern archipelagos as an experienced white man, not as an imitation native. He has a gift for the creation of suspense, a fondness for trick endings, no literary mannerisms, the right amount of sentiment and a sound dramatic sense."
+ Outlook 151:587 Ap 10 '29 230w

" 'Far Wandering Men' is so readable a book that one tends to overlook its very considerable literary merit." L. P. Hartley
+ Sat R 148:760 D 21 '29 120w

RUSSELL, JOHN ANDREW. Joseph Warren Fordney; an American legislator. 246p $3 Stratford

B or 92 Fordney, Joseph Warren 28-23036

The book is not a personal sketch of Mr Fordney but an account of his legislative career as chairman of the Committee on ways and means of the House of representatives and his work in connection with the Tariff act of 1922.

---

"The account which Mr. Russell gives of Mr. Fordney's early life is an interesting record of pioneering in the central West and Northwest, replete with incidents in the everyday experiences of a man who tramped the forests as surveyor and prospector and learned wood and the woods at first hand. Mr. Fordney adds a chapter of agreeable reminiscence, and Congressman Madden, of Illinois, contributes a friendly appraisal. A good third of the book is padding, but what is said about its subject is worth while."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 F 10 '29 450w

"An index would have added greatly to the value of this excellent political biography." A. S. R.
+ — Boston Transcript p2 D 12 '28 480w

RUSSELL, MARY ANNETTE (BEAUCHAMP) RUSSELL, countess (ELIZABETH, pseud.). Expiation. 362p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran 29-3495

Ernest, dying, deals his plump and kindly Milly a cruel blow. For he leaves his fortune to a home for fallen women with the sinister comment, "My wife will know why." Milly does know why; twenty years earlier she had Sinned, but it was long since over and done with and she never dreamed that Ernest had guessed. After the reading of the will, Ernest's relatives gather like harpies to pick poor Milly to pieces. Wistful and frightened, she tries to make expiation for her Sin. Her efforts make a tempest in the family teapot, and only the wise old grandmother remains her friend.

---

Booklist 25:287 Ap '29

"Here is admirable material for comedy, and Elizabeth has made the most of it. Because she is so finished a craftsman, her climaxes are never fumbled. Each scene is better than one anticipates, funnier, more delectable. There is never, however, any hint of burlesque. Expiation is a shrewd commentary on middle class manners and morals. It is also, incidentally, one of the best of Elizabeth's novels." E. H. Walton
+ Bookm 69:195 Ap '29 220w

"From this collection of lusterless people and passions intentionally muted 'Elizabeth' has built her story tightly, neatly, faultlessly. The sentences are beautifully finished, delicately joined. Little passages of irony, bits of sarcasm, paragraphs of tremendous pathos are so cleverly welded that the passage from one to the other is imperceptible." M. C. Dawson
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 F 3 '29 680w

" 'Expiation' seems to us one of the wisest, most satiric and funniest of books. What little we have learned of the technique of novel writing—which extends no further than the recognition thereof in others—tells us that, mechanically, Elizabeth's story is delicately and beautifully adjusted. She not only has blended with perfect smoothness the past and present of her tale, but she has accomplished this so deftly that it seems simple and easy until you try it yourself. High craftsmanship is to us, however, only one of the minor beauties of 'Expiation.' The book has an almost godlike quality of sympathy. It is a story of men and women that one of the more tender-hearted dwellers on Olympus might have written. It is funny—amazingly, persistently funny—because of its depth." F. F. Van de Water
+ N Y Evening Post p9m F 2 '29 300w

Reviewed by Vincent McHugh
N Y Evening Post p10m F 23 '29 480w

"It is a very clever book, written in 'Elizabeth's' own delightful style, full of delicate irony, and with many capitally done scenes."
+ N Y Times p8 F 3 '29 700w

"Elizabeth has written with all of her usual humor and charm, and portrayed the bumptious Botts with almost uncanny accuracy. She makes great fun of her characters, but they are still real for she seems able to temper satire with sympathy to the advantage of both."
+ N Y World p11m F 17 '29 240w

"One of the best novels this English woman has ever written, and very much in the bitter mood of her Vera, a book of hers that seems to be forgotten, which is unfortunate, as it is by all odds one of her finest pieces of fiction." Herschel Brickell
+ No Am 227:adv Ap '29 80w

"Holding her pen gently but firmly, Elizabeth continues to write novels made dramatic not by external events but by the play of character upon circumstance. Her strokes are pitilessly distinct, but without malice. She is at her wittiest, most urbane and most penetrating in this story of Milly who sinned and expiated her sin."
+ Outlook 151:228 F 6 '29 200w
Pratt p41 summer '29

"The behaviour of the Botts, the behaviour of Fate, everything puts a great strain upon credulity. But improbability and surprise are weapons in 'Elizabeth's' armoury; she uses them at the bidding of her caprice. A hundred diverting observations and reflections distract the reader from the wretchedness of Milly's plight." L. P. Hartley
Sat R 147:219 F 16 '29 500w

"From her cold, sharp phrases that flick one's lips into a pucker, from her long parenthetical sentences with humorous twists in their middles, there emerges a highly diverting and essentially plausible comedy of manners, a comedy of manners that is none the less comic for the fact that its actors believe themselves engaged in a tragedy of morals." Grace Frank
+ Sat R of Lit 5:659 F 9 '29 680w

"Expiation is both entrancing and incisive; it has the tingling derision of a Restoration play only softened by compassion for a victim." R. A. Taylor
+ Spec 142:210 F 9 '29 200w
Springf'd Republican p7e My 19 '29 200w

"This is a comedy of the elderly and the old, as deft, as witty as anything 'Elizabeth' has ever done; she is out for discipline this time, but she can lightly satirize it none the less. We miss those lovely glimpses of natural beauty which she can call up so enchantingly in a few words. So many Botts have crowded them out."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p96 F 7 '29 550w

RUSSELL, PHILLIPS. Emerson, the wisest American. 320p il $5 Brentano's

B or 92 Emerson, Ralph Waldo 29-21614

"In this biography of Emerson, Phillips Russell has re-created not only a man, but his perfect and native setting—a tiny civilization

RUSSELL, PHILLIPS—Continued
which endured hardly more than a moment in our national life, but which contained the roots of what may one day become a beloved American legend. If one could do so before, one cannot after reading Mr. Russell's biography imagine Emerson without Concord, or Concord without Emerson."—Bookm

"In this book we see Emerson as his neighbors saw him—as a careful citizen who kept his fences in repair. We see Emerson's whole system of thought developing from his life and character and environment. Surely, there is no better way to write the biography of a thinker. Mr. Russell has added nothing new, in the way of factual material, to what we already know of Emerson; but he has integrated the facts into a memorable form." Margaret Wallace
+ Bookm 70:330 N '29 550w

"The weakest part of the book is the final chapter in which Mr. Russell rather gingerly skirts the topic of the significance of Emerson's career. Here the defect is a lack of full development. There are several better biographies of Emerson than this for the literary student, but none that can be read with more pleasure by the browsing business man." G: F. Whicher
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p39 D 1 '29 550w

Cleveland Open Shelf p154 D '29

Reviewed by R. M. Lovett
New Repub 61:47 D 4 '29 1000w

"Mr. Russell's hardihood has given us one of the spiritually most exciting biographies in many months, the biographer having here provided us with a John Paul Jones of the mind, showing us that cerebral adventures may be quite as thrilling as the more active kind. A sensitive student of the American scene past and present, the author has brought to his current task a set of thoroughly unmuddled and unparading values which qualifies him to speak as one possessed of some authority." S: Putnam
+ N Y Evening Post p11m O 12 '29 850w

"Mr. Phillips Russell has written his best biography in 'Emerson: The Wisest American.' Anyone who desires a simplified and adequate presentation of Emerson's career, a career decidedly unmarked by tempestuous vicissitudes or unexpected occurrences, may turn to Mr. Russell's book with confidence. . . If there is one crying lack in Mr. Russell's 'Emerson' it is certainly his failure to make the reader visualize the period."
+ — N Y Times p4 D 1 '29 1200w

"Mr. Phillips Russell's book gives the reader a clear picture of Emerson. Without being very profound, he has succeeded in bringing before the reader's mind a man thinking. He has not written a world-shaking book but an exceedingly useful one." C. H. Grattan
+ N Y World p11m O 13 '29 900w

RUSSELL, PHILLIPS. Red tiger; adventures in Yucatan and Mexico. 335p il $5 Brentano's

917.2 Mexico—Description and travel. Yucatan—Description and travel 29-7505

"Straight across the fascinating, uncomfortable jungle state of Tabasco and Chiapas, east of the Isthmus of Tehuantepec, Mr. Russell and a companion artist journeyed at leisure. Strange region, it is known through few such living narratives as 'Red Tiger,' for rarely enough comes a chance to meet its people with intimate friendliness, to watch its exotic landscapes appear in full color. Here you can do that."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

For biographical sketch of the author see Wilson bulletin 3:376 D '28

Booklist 25:390 Jl '29

"His story reflects that charm which Mexico lays upon the responsive heart, the affection which persons of other races who are themselves considerate and sympathetic always come to feel for the southern Indian. Moreover, it glows with an unforced humor; warmly human and convincingly unpretentious. . . But the power which gives the book its deeper merit is that unassuming gentleness of mood which makes it possible for the author to comprehend the Indian's feeling about leisure, his gift for minding his own business, his excellence at his own peculiar jobs, his innate decorum. These are not the Mexicans of headlines." Marian Storm
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p24 Ap 21 '29 800w

Boston Transcript p6 Ap 13 '29 830w

Cleveland Open Shelf p71 My '29

"They render a discerning, faithful, sympathetic, and charming picture of a unique and colorful people. I know of no other book of our time which so completely conveys the atmosphere of Yucatan. . . 'Red Tiger' is one travel book in a hundred." Ernest Gruening
+ Nation 128:676 Je 5 '29 560w

"Mr. Russell, I think, has written a distinctly beautiful book, which, by implication, may gravely concern the Mexicans." Enrique Munguía, Jr.
+ New Repub 59:241 Jl 17 '29 620w

" 'Red Tiger' is pleasant stuff. It is a friendly, lazily curious account of Yucatan and the Mayas, the Isthmus of Tehuantepec and its picturesque natives, the stretch of sand, jungle and sierra between. Really it is an artist's notebook. Pictures and text are sketched, anecdotes noted with casual touch. There is no overdramatization of either travelers or country, no unwarranted generalizations about the nature and future of Mexico. The travelers are not equipped with cumbersome statistics nor sociologic and political axes, that they would grind, which is rare in books about Mexico. Good taste and personal inclination determine what they see." Anita Brenner
+ N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 27 '29 670w

"The book is characterized by verisimilitude, a rambling continuity, and a sturdy first person narrative style. The drawings by Leon Underwood are exceptional, and suggest a modernistic transcription of early Egyptian art."
+ N Y Times p7 My 26 '29 790w

"Russell's book has fire and spirit, and he tells his tale of adventure amid primitive surroundings in the way of a man of fidelity." C: J. Finger
+ N Y World p11m My 12 '29 450w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 79:12 My '29 80w

St Louis 27:313 N '29

"Mr. Russell's is a sound and workmanlike book, done with sensitiveness and affection; free from the meretriciousness which has characterized some of our other recent literary adventures into the American tropics and for all these reasons deserves to be mentioned in the same breath with the delectable Stephens." Arthur Ruhl
+ Sat R of Lit 5:1017 My 18 '29 820w

"Mr. Russell's narrative and Mr Underwood's art are natural, easy, and interesting, and through them we encounter novel and entertaining places, persons and experiences."
+ Springf'd Republican p6 Jl 15 '29 320w

World Tomorrow 12:426 O '29 100w

RUSSIA (U. S. S. R.) STATE PLANNING COMMISSION. Soviet union looks ahead; the five-year plan for economic construction. 275p $2.50 Liveright

330.947 Russia—Economic conditions. Russia—Industries. Industry and state—Russia 29-19889

"A co-ordinate, centralized plan for the control and development of industry. In the land of the Soviets they call it the Gosplan, code word for the State Planning Commission. The Gosplan authorities some twelve months ago prepared a very specific program for the encouragement of industrial prosperity during the next five years, and the detailed charts and figures are now available in English for study and comment. It is beyond question the most audacious economic document ever to appear in print, the more so because ink and paper have already been transmuted into coal, wheat and steel, with the first year's actual accomplishment of the budget called for by the plan." Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

---

Reviewed by Stuart Chase
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 D 1 '29 2100w

Reviewed by M. P. Levy
New Repub 61:119 D 18 '29 600w

Reviewed by E: T. Devine
Outlook 153:469 N 20 '29 280w

RUTTER, ELDON. Holy cities of Arabia. 2v 317;294p $15 (42s) Putnam

915.3 Arabia—Description and travel. Mecca—Description. Medina—Description 29-1451

"A modest but thrilling narrative of a year's journey in 1925-6 in the Hejaz, during which Mr. Rutter spent several months in Mecca, performing there the full rites of the Hajj, and also visited the Prophet's grave at Medina and other shrines of the wide-spread Mohammedan world."—Sat R

---

"In the light that it sheds on this great Arab and his Wahabi rule in the Hijaz, as well as in the gossipy flavor of its pages, Mr. Rutter's book may justly be considered a valuable addition to the literature on Arabia." Ameen Rihani

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p28 D 1 '29 1000w

"The present reviewer hazards the opinion that 'The Holy Cities of Arabia' is the best work of travel to be published this year; and it is to be hoped that, amid the glut of merely superficial books, it will not be overlooked. . . Mr. Rutter's work combines scholarship, description, atmosphere, and anecdote in a very unusual degree, and his admirably clear style maintains a supple and unpretentious dignity. Here is a piece of true literature."

+ Nation and Ath 44:270 N 17 '28 260w

"Mr. Rutter's journeys—down to Massowa, across the Red Sea to El Gahm, and thence up to Mecca and Medina—were not particularly exciting, but they make interesting reading. He does not strive after effect, but he knows how to make the best use of his material, and the result is a first-rate book."

+ New Statesman 32:501 Ja 26 '29 900w

Reviewed by Manuel Komroff
N Y Times p40 D 8 '29 1250w

"A delightful travelogue, interspersed with the author's observation on the people's religion, habits and mode of livelihood, praising here and mildly, but understandingly chiding there, these two volumes are both amply informative and entertaining. One is forced to admire the patience of this obviously agnostic Briton who five times a day performs the ritual prayers and fasts the thirty days of Ramadan in order to get the viewpoint of the Moslem and, at the same time, disguise the object of his visit." Alphonse Tonietti

+ N Y World p11m N 10 '29 750w

"Mr. Rutter's book deserves a permanent place on our bookshelves beside Burckhardt's 'Travels in Arabia' and Burton's 'Personal Narrative of a Pilgrimage.' . . To a generation which has forgotten Burckhardt and does not read Burton, Mr. Rutter's book will appeal with all the freshness of discovery."

+ Sat R 147:19 Ja 5 '29 500w

"Mr. Rutter's book is, first, the most intimate and detailed account of the holy cities of Arabia that has reached the outside world. The author, a professing Moslem, was enabled to make not a hurried or furtive visit, but a leisurely stay, which included nine months in Mecca itself. . . But he is free from intolerance, and writes with as critical a detachment as any Christian could have shown. To all this he adds the excellence of a style innocent of all fine writing. It is not innocent of cunning, though; the reader will be conscious of the memory of Doughty's disdainful, impersonal aloofness from his narration and of an austerity that is studied and deliberate." E: Thompson

+ Sat R of Lit 6:286 O 19 '29 600w

"Mr. Eldon Rutter's volume is extremely interesting and well written—up to a point. The sticking point in the reader's mind is hard to define. . . He lacks something. It is not knowledge, certainly, nor descriptive power. Can it be personality? It seems ungrateful and invidious to ask such a question after his unparalleled adventures, yet there is a certain thinness in that living fibre which must run through any book worth reading. We would add, however, that no one who cares for Palgrave, Doughty, Burton, or Lawrence, can afford to miss such an addition to his desert library." F. Y.-B.

+ — Spec 141:sup783 N 24 '28 300w

"A narrative which, even had it confined itself strictly to the sober facts of the author's own experience on this remarkable journey, would still have glowed with many of the rich colours of romance."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p107 F 14 '29 1750w

RYALL, WILLIAM B. See Bolitho, W:, pseud.

RYERSON, FLORENCE, and CLEMENTS, COLIN CAMPBELL. All on a summer's day and six other short plays. 123p $1.50 French

812 28-29800

Seven one-act plays in various moods, for amateur acting with small casts.

---

"On the whole it is a pleasant little collection not devoid of merit, though lacking in originality."

+ Boston Transcript p3 F 16 '29 200w
Wis Lib Bul 25:100 Mr '29

S

SABATINI, RAFAEL. Romantic prince. 353p $2.50 Houghton

29-8985

A fifteenth century love story, in which Prince Anthony d'Egmont of Guelders gives up his duchy to marry the daughter of a Flemish burgher.

---

Booklist 25:396 Jl '29

"The story of valiant knights and maidens in distress is told with all the glamour and charm that keep Sabatini's romances far beyond the reach of any possible rivals and imitators."

+ Bookm 69:xxv Ag '29 50w

"'The Romantic Prince' is picturesque, swift and suspenseful—a thoroughly readable Sabatini item."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 S 8 '29 220w

"For brilliant description of the life of the times, for masterly delineation of character, for an historical accuracy that is never allowed to make the story dry or didactic, 'The Romantic Prince' is worthy of a high place among modern historical novels." Gertrude Bayley

+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 22 '29 1250w
Cleveland Open Shelf p127 S '29

"The story is interesting, well told and dramatic."

+ N Y Times p6 Je 30 '29 530w
N Y World p7m Jl 7 '29 240w

"Sabatini, who has been out of his stride in his last few books, is back in step here. Sabatini knows his historic background and uses it well. For a period so remote, this one happens to be rich in intimate contemporary records and he has drawn on some familiar ones for two or three of his most vivid scenes." F. L. Robbins

+ Outlook 152:310 Je 19 '29 70w
Pratt p38 autumn '29
Sat R of Lit 6:322 O 26 '29 200w

SABATINI, RAFAEL—Continued

"Mr. Sabatini has wound and unwound the usual complications of plot and incidentally revealed his thorough saturation in the history and manners of the period."

Times [London] Lit Sup p671 Ag 29 '29 250w

Wis Lib Bul 25:277 Jl '29

SABIN, EDWIN LEGRAND. Wild men of the wild West. 363p il $2.50 Crowell

923.4 Outlaws. Frontier and pioneer life. Crime and criminals 29-19891

"A book of biographical sketches about the men who did their best to hold back law and order as civilization spread Westward. The author harks back in the first chapter to the old frontier of the Wilderness Trail and the Ohio River, the brutal, killing Harpes and the river pirates of Cave-in Rocks. The bad men and bullies of the Mississippi River of a hundred and more years ago, the pirates of the Gulf, especially Jean Lafitte, the smuggler chief; the wild, early days of California, the bad men of the Northwest and the famous gun men of the border when Colorado and Kansas and Texas were the frontier, are among the outlaws of whom Mr. Sabin writes. He gives a bit of color also by telling of certain wild women of border days and a few red men who were as bad and wild as any white ruffian."—N Y Times

Boston Transcript p6 N 13 '29 200w

Nation 129:602 N 20 '29 40w

"It is much more comprehensive than such books usually are, because it covers so much time and so much space."

+ N Y Times p34 O 20 '29 220w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 153:350 O 30 '29 40w

SABUROV, PETER ALEXANDROVICH. Saburov memoirs; or, Bismarck and Russia; being fresh light on the league of the three emperors, 1881, by J. Y. Simpson. 304p $5.50 Macmillan [15s Cambridge univ. press]

327.47 Russia—Foreign relations—Germany. Germany—Foreign relations—Russia

A translation of the memoirs of P. A. Saburov, the Russian diplomatist who negotiated the League of the three emperors in 1881. The League, according to Mr Simpson, had the following principal aims: the consolidation of general peace, maintenance of the monarchical principle, and the regulation of the Balkan question. The memoirs are an exposé of the failure of the old diplomacy.

Sat R 148:517 N 2 '29 570w

Spec 143:553 O 19 '29 700w

SACCO, NICOLA, and VANZETTI, BARTOLOMEO. Letters; ed. by Marion Denman Frankfurter, and Gardner Jackson. 414p il $3 Viking press

B or 92 28-31094

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

Booklist 25:234 Mr '29

"It would be difficult for anyone to read the letters without coming to believe that these were two simple, honest and kindly men, incapable either of murder or of hypocrisy." R. N. Linscott

Bookm 69:106 Mr '29 500w

"The letters themselves are not subject to criticism; the consciousness of guilt which swayed a Massachusetts courtroom is not in them, nor is there more than a passing trace of rebellion against fate or rancour against men. Sacco, the more gentle soul, wrote letters full of romantic beauty: Vanzetti wrote philosophical letters. Both of them mastered an alien tongue and, more difficult, an alien style. . . It is reasonable to believe that many years from now [the letters] will have a place both as human documents and, in part, as literature."

+ Dial 86:439 My '29 130w

Reviewed by Raymond Mortimer

Nation and Ath 45:18 Ap 6 '29 660w

St Louis 27:168 My '29

"There are clear signs of carelessness in the book. Sacco in all but a few of the letters was noticeably the more uncouth of the two in his handling of English. It is these few which create the problem. One or two of them have beyond doubt been translated from Italian originals, though the editors tell us that there are no translations in the collection, and some arouse the suspicion that they have been touched up to an unknown extent in transcription. I do not doubt that the bulk of the letters are genuine, and the worst that can be said of the remainder is that Miss Frankfurter and Mr. Jackson seem to know very little of where they came from." E: Shanks

Sat R 147:435 Mr 30 '29 1500w

"The 'letters' constitute a remarkable human document and revelation of character."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 13 '29 1150w

"The importance and interest of this volume lie in the light it casts upon the psychologies of the two men executed in 1927 after 'the most sensational trial of modern times.' It may be said at once that it strongly supports a widespread conviction that the men were innocent. . . Though the interest of these letters is not primarily or even largely intrinsic, they by no means lack many passages of the widest human appeal."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p294 Ap 11 '29 1100w

Reviewed by E. M. Root

World Tomorrow 12:314 Jl '29 950w

SACKETT, ROBERT LEMUEL. The engineer, his work and his education. (Engineering ser.) 196p $1.40 Ginn

620 Engineers. Engineering—Study and teaching 28-25763

For the student who is considering engineering as a profession the book summarizes the qualities and qualifications necessary to the engineer; outlines briefly the history of engineering; and gives in an appendix short biographies of outstanding men in the profession.

Booklist 25:195 F '29

"The book is an admirable exposition of the theme indicated by the title. A wide reading of it by secondary school students and by those who may have an opportunity to advise such youths as to a choice of their life work would keep thousands of boys from ever going to an engineering college and would direct hundreds of others from some other profession or calling to that of engineering."

+ Eng N 101:743 N 15 '28 120w

N Y New Tech Bks 13:46 O '28

Pratt p15 summer '29

SACKVILLE-WEST, VICTORIA MARY (MRS HAROLD GEORGE NICOLSON). Twelve days; an account of a journey across the Bakhtiari mountains in south-western Persia. 143p il $3 Doubleday, Doran [10s 6d Hogarth press]

915.5 Persia—Description and travel. Bakhtiari 29-5723

Miss Sackville-West describes an arduous journey on foot across the Bakhtiari country, up mountains and down by precarious trails, thru stony pass to grassy plain, from Isfahan to Gurghir. Illustrated with camera pictures of the travellers, their caravan and the country they passed thru.

Booklist 25:317 My '29

"The book is redeemed from triviality by the author's random reflections which reveal more than a casual acquaintance with Persian politics, manners and customs. More detailed descriptions of persons and places would have made 'Twelve Days' vastly more entertaining."

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 My 5 '29 280w

Boston Transcript p2 F 23 '29 800w

" 'Twelve Days' is a book which fascinates. Its charm, apart from the interest of the subject-matter, lies in its truthfulness, sincerity, and prose style so expressed as to give the reader the illusion of feeling himself to be included in the company as one of the friends who go to make it up."
+ Nation and Ath 44:270 N 17 '28 330w

"Thirty-two photographs add to the value of a book that is a delightful thing to read."
+ New Statesman 32:136 N 3 '28 210w

"Her philosophical interjections give added interest to this slim volume and she has been able to create color in incidents that the average traveler would miss completely. . . Some of the snap-shots are of surprising beauty." G: Joel
N Y World p11m F 10 '29 240w

"Out of these simple events and their primitive setting, V. Sackville-West has made a charm to tempt and at the same time to console the arm chair traveler. Her fifteenth chapter is a delicate essay on solitude. And in her fourth, a description of an old Persian carpet might apply to her book, 'complete in itself as a lyric poem.' "
+ Outlook 151:267 F 13 '29 260w
Sat R of Lit 5:938 Ap 20 '29 320w

"There are beautiful pictures here, with pen and camera. If this edition has only a limited sale (for the way of descriptive writers is hard) it will be remembered and will come to be prized by collectors, when the author has achieved the fame which awaits her." F. Y. B.
+ Spec 141:sup781 N 24 '28 400w
Times [London] Lit Sup p770 O 25 '28 680w

SADLER, WILLIAM SAMUEL. Mind at mischief; tricks and deceptions of the subconscious and how to cope with them; introds. by Robert H. Gault and Meyer Solomon. 400p $4 (17s 6d) Funk
132 Subconsciousness. Psychology, Pathological. Psychoanalysis 29-20311

A study, for laymen, of the problems pertaining to abnormal psychology. The origin and nature of complexes and treatment of complex-neurotic victims, and the study of hysterics, paranoiacs and spirit mediums are the main subjects Dr Sadler discusses. The text is preceded by introductions by a psychologist, and a neurologist.

---

"This book constitutes just another portion of psychiatric hash—and not very good hash at that. . . As far as those parts of the book are concerned which represent Dr. Sadler's own thinking, there is little to recommend. His premises often are sketchy, his deductions frequently weird, and his thinking is shallow." G: K. Pratt — Am J Pub Health 19:1394 D '29 300w
Bookm 70:xii D '29 140w

"Dr. Sadler here embodies in a well-written, non-technical, and exceedingly readable volume practically all that the average citizen needs to know on the subject of those workings of the subconscious which so often put acting as well as thinking out of gear, and create for both individual and community problems of the most serious kind." E. N.
+ Boston Transcript p5 S 28 '29 830w

"In plan and content this readable survey of the ways of the mind as it tends to unmake or mar the scheme of living in which sanity and sense dwell securely, is easily commendable. Its purpose is to interest and inform; it touches somewhat unsystematically upon high-spots of the interest which the Freudian wave has brought into human concerns. Its tendencies are sound even in controversial matters; and the over-emphasis upon popularization which appears in Dr. Sadler's earlier books is avoided in the present instance." Joseph Jastrow
+ Sat R of Lit 6:476 N 30 '29 500w

SAGHAPHI, MAHMOUD KHAN, mirza. In the imperial shadow. 403p $3.50 Doubleday, Doran
B or 92 Persia—Social life and customs 28-27858

The autobiography of a high-born Persian lad whose father was court physician and who himself became courtier to the mad Shah. The book draws an intimate picture of Persian life in its highest court and family circles a generation ago.

---

"A book in which colorful things are told with a combination of good breeding, gentleness and naive, not clever simplicity." W. B. Seabrook
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 N 25 '28 250w
Cleveland Open Shelf p72 My '29
Reviewed by Dudley Nichols
+ N Y Evening Post p9m N 10 '28 900w

"Whether the book is the genuine document it purports to be, or a creative fiction wrought out of wide and deep knowledge of Persian realities, it is the work of a very sensitive and sympathetically human artist. . . 'In the Imperial Shadow' is certainly not only one of the most delightful books ever written about the East but one of the most real." R: Le Gallienne
N Y Times p3 D 30 '28 950w
Reviewed by C: J. Finger
N Y World p10m D 2 '28 1000w

"This is a book for the lovers of drama, line, and color, in an Oriental setting. For the more sober-minded, merely alien ways of living may intrigue, while the person with a flair for history, may find in this story of the longest Kajar reign both background and clues to Pahlavi Persia of Reza Shah." M. F. Labaree
+ Sat R of Lit 5:948 Ap 27 '29 380w

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH. Drift of civilization, by the contributors to the fiftieth anniversary number of the St. Louis post-dispatch, including Charles G. Abbot, Richard E. Byrd, Benedetto Croce, and others. 268p $3 Simon & Schuster
901 Civilization. United States—Civilization. Science—Addresses, essays, lectures 29-24354

"The twenty-six essays that comprise 'The Drift of Civilization' made their first appearance last December in the pages of the Fiftieth Anniversary number of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch. These essays are the work of twenty-six of the world's outstanding men in science, industry, literature, history, philosophy and sociology. From their widely varied points of view they discuss the future of man, the future of science and the future of America. And when such a discussion is engaged in by men like Wells, Henry Ford, Dean Inge, Einstein, Bertrand Russell, Keyserling, Gorky, Ferrero and Andre Siegfried the resultant symposium is sure to be a gold mine of observation and suggestion."—N Y World

---

Boston Transcript p10 N 23 '29 750w

"What makes this volume particularly valuable is not only that its authors are gifted and qualified to speak, but that each of them seems to have seized his opportunity with a sort of zealous eagerness to speak his mind. It is a remarkably frank and bold volume. Only an intelligent newspaper like the Post-Dispatch would have invited such men to discuss such matters at its birthday party, and the honorable guests have taken their host at his word and have spoken forthrightly and to the point." Arthur Strawn
+ N Y World p10m N 3 '29 480w

"Some of the articles have obviously been cramped because the authors are not popular writers but men of research. They are all necessarily brief, which in a number of cases forced the writers to take refuge on important points behind apologies such as 'space does not permit.' On the other hand, this awareness of space and brevity has forced the numerous contributors to pack in neater parcels,—and this on the whole makes the book pleasant reading." Nels Anderson

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH—Continued
+ — Survey 63:172 N 1 '29 500w

SAIT, EDWARD MCCHESNEY. Democracy. 108p $1.50 Century
321.8 Democracy 29-12734

These four lectures are a sort of readers' guide to the literature of democracy during the last decade. The survey reveals the conflicting opinions held by the more prominent writers and calls attention to the books that ought to be read.

---

"In the author's treatment of the views of those whom he calls the 'fundamentalists' he hardly presents an adequate view of their opinions, and he ignores the historical background of democracy and the influence of democratic ideals and principles which had their roots in the American and French Revolutions. Apart from this, the book is well written and has its value as a clear and consecutive picture of the present-day criticism of popular government." J: S. Penman
+ — Am Pol Sci R 23:1032 N '29 600w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 O 6 '29 130w

"Professor Sait gives us the pros and cons of the arguments that are going on about democracy. He seems to be rather inclined to the cons than the pros. He is spicy and spirited, however, and his book bears the marks of the popular lecture given before a college audience."
+ — Boston Transcript p1 S 7 '29 250w

"Dr. Sait's book makes a fairly inclusive, though rapid, and so of necessity somewhat superficial survey of the literature on the subject that has been collecting during the last few years. The author makes his survey in a judicial spirit and reports fairly the contentions of both sides."
+ N Y Times p16 Ag 11 '29 480w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 80:14 Ag '29 180w

"At certain points his book seems to be analysis and criticism, at others merely a survey. Moreover, he leaves unchallenged some of the citations which go farthest toward sheer absurdity. Professor Sait's own comments are apt to be more relative. To him, democracy is neither heaven nor hell, but a mundane instrument of government which, with all its limitations, is our best hope. His book would be greatly improved by a steadier cross-examination of the witnesses he puts on the stand."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:276 O 12 '29 200w

SAKI, pseud. See Munro, H. H.

SALE, JOHN B. Tree named John. 151p il $2 Univ. of N.C. press
398 Folklore, Negro 29-20773

Stories about the little white boy named John who was brought up in the South, where he learned the ways and superstitions of the Negroes on his grandmother's plantation. Many of the stories are reminiscent of Uncle Remus.

---

Booklist 26:104 D '29

"It is a simple book, with no literary airs, but it contains a great deal of shrewd and careful observation, and its dialect is nearly perfect. . . Mr. Sale's book helps to preserve its full share of material that is very much worth preserving; it has, too, an affected simplicity that may keep it alive long after more pretentious books have had their day and passed on."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 S 8 '29 530w

Boston Transcript p3 O 11 '29 330w

"A distinguished addition to Negro folk-lore. The idea of a tree planted in expectation of the birth of a child, and named for him, is beautiful and arresting. The education of that child, largely under the tutelage of Ole Ain' Betsey and Henry Po'ter, and embracing post-graduate courses in the most curious Negro superstitions and in tales of Br'er Rabbit which challenge comparison with those of Joel Chandler Harris, will be of absorbing interest to other children if read aloud."
+ Nation 129:599 N 20 '29 200w

N Y Times p7 N 17 '29 680w

"Mr. Sale is reproducing, in his own natural boyhood dialect, plantation life as seen through the eyes of a child some thirty-five years or so ago. These intervening years and the naïvete of childhood have smoothed the harsh details and the crude barbarities of folk life, the biting humor and the stark pathos, into a softly blended mosaic with that mellow, wistful quality which appeals to the youthful spirit in everyone, be he age six or sixty. The unpretentious simplicity of style, almost classic in its absence of artificialities, is admirably adapted to the subject matter, and the twenty-two graceful silhouettes by Joseph Cranson Jones embody and intensify these same delightful qualities. Apart from its purely entertainment value the folklorist will find rich material in the hundred and fifteen superstitions and the eight folk tales, woven with related details, into the volume." N. N. Puckett
+ Sat R of Lit 6:471 N 30 '29 920w

SALMON, GERALDINE GORDON (J. G. SARASIN, pseud). Fleur de Lys; the story of a crime. 337p $2 Doubleday, Doran
29-20967

France during the reign of Louis XIV is the scene of this novel of mystery, crime and intrigue. A strange, unknown fate threatens each member of the house of Rochechouart. Mlle de Lys seeks the aid of Martial Berenger to unravel the mystery. The clues lead to a den of devil worshippers. Several historical characters—Ninon de Lenclos, Madame de Montespan and Madame de Maintenon, move thru the pages of the story.

---

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 D 15 '29 160w

"The story is really more of a cloak-and-sword melodrama than a mystery tale, but it is not a particularly brilliant example of either type of fiction."
— N Y Times p48 D 1 29 100w

N Y World p10m D 15 '29 140w

Times [London] Lit Sup p365 My 2 '29 160w

SALMON, LUCY MAYNARD. Why is history rewritten? with an introd. by Edward P. Cheyney. 217p $2.50 (8s 6d) Oxford
901 History—Historiography 29-22815

"In order to answer the question of her title Miss Salmon glances along the vista of the history of history, and all this brings her to an exposition of the influences which have made necessary so much rewriting of history. There has been an extension of method which has made it possible for the historian to have the cooperation of many kinds of other workers in the field of knowledge, new material is constantly accumulating, the development of historical criticism has greatly influenced methods and aims, the very base on which history rests has been much enlarged, the audience for whom it is written is constantly growing larger, its interpretation has been changed and modernized. . . She finally comes to the conclusion that history will constantly have to be rewritten in order to keep its content and method abreast of world changes and developments of knowledge."—N Y Times

---

"Miss Salmon, who was a scholar of unusual distinction, brought to the discussion a large and finely assimilated fund of knowledge, real insight into the problems of the historian and an agreeable and fluent style, making her book not only of value to the professional historian but also to the general reader, particularly since history now forms so large a part of the popular mental diet."

+ Current Hist 31:827 Ja '30 230w

"To each of [these factors] she devotes an illuminating, scholarly chapter, vital in its intimate relation to our own time, fresh, vigorous and smoothly flowing in its style and always interesting."
+ N Y Times p29 N 10 '29 450w

"Much common sense accompanies the discussion. This book is a useful work to look at before attempting to formulate an answer of one's own. It goes without saying that there is interesting matter by the way. But it is clear that the book hardly reaches quite to the heart of the subject, and one experiences some sense of disappointment on laying it down."
+ — Sat R 148:516 N 2 '29 800w

"Miss Salmon strives to be fair and is often generous in her appreciations, but there is a certain antique and Transatlantic current of feeling which somewhat mars her judgments . . . Miss Salmon writes avowedly for the general public and not for the historian: he needs no conversion; and the general public is converted, if at all, by the history men write and not by what they write about historiography."
— + Times [London] Lit Sup p1014 D 5 '29 1200w

SALPETER, HARRY. Dr Johnson & Mr Boswell. 265p il $3.50 Coward-McCann

B or 92 Johnson, Samuel. Boswell, James
29-25497

Beginning with the details of the famous first meeting between Boswell and Johnson, Salpeter draws a conscientious picture of Boswell in the light of Johnson's personality and influence. It is the biographer's belief that Boswell from the beginning planned to turn his companionship with Johnson to his own literary advantage. While recognizing the Scotsman's shortcomings, Mr Salpeter thruout his analysis of the characters of the two men treats Boswell with a great deal of dignity and respect.

---

Boston Transcript p1 D 21 '29 700w

"It is Mr. Salpeter's appreciation of all the character values of both Johnson and Boswell that makes his study of them so praiseworthy. To obtain such balanced portraiture he has spared himself no pains, as is shown by his citations of research in the postscript to the volume. The 'Life' has, of course, been his fountainhead of resort; to its abundant flow all other knowledge of the pair is merely supplementary. Except for that work the immortalizing of Johnson as a talker—his truest claim to genius—would never have been achieved. There we have not the hearsays but the evidence of that genius. What has been perhaps overlooked and what Mr. Salpeter emphasizes is the rôle Boswell filled as inspirator of it. Johnson's talk had to be provoked, and Boswell devoted himself to provoking as well as reporting it." Uffington Valentine
+ N Y Times p7 D 8 '29 2000w

"A lucid and scholarly recital. . . This book does not attempt to delve behind motives, nor to determine what made Johnson or Boswell act thus and so. The style, as well as the attitude, is respectful and traditional: Salpeter affirms, rather than questions, what other men have set down, and rebuilds, in his own fashion, the story of the Johnson-Boswell relationship—'history has no comparable example of interdependence.'" Harry Hansen
+ N Y World p16 N 7 '29 950w

"Mr. Salpeter has a fine knowledge of his subject and has had the advantage of new material recently made available. He has caught the spirit of both men, and he is illuminating on the subject of their influence upon each other. His book makes clear some of the reasons for the hold which Johnson and Boswell have upon the imagination of posterity. Such books as this always tempt readers into a rereading of the original material. Therein lies their greatest value and their writers' greatest satisfaction."
+ Outlook 153:466 N 20 '29 230w

SALT, SARAH, pseud. Sense and sensuality. 315p $2.50 Brewer [7s 6d Gollancz]
29-17276

Present day England in the throes of great unrest is the background for this story of married love and infidelities. In a mad attempt at revenge because of her husband's supposed infidelity Laura rushes from one night club to another, and finally collapses and dies in her lover's apartment.

---

"Miss Salt writes sharply and brightly without any attempts at smartness, and there is a depth of feeling in the book, a thorough understanding of the characters, together with a deep and genuine sympathy that arouses compassion and leaves the reader moved both by the story and the skill of its telling. Miss Salt's style is new and fresh and there is originality in the construction of her novel."
+ Bookm 70:200 O '29 750w

"Sarah Salt means business, but she handles her subject sharply, coldly, mechanically. She and her characters are pseudo-scientists in an age of experiment."
+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 Ag 25 '29 400w

New Repub 60:252 O 16 '29 250w

"Bringing to her first novel a peculiar and compelling technique, hinted at in an earlier volume of short stories, Sarah Salt has employed it brilliantly and unfalteringly in the construction of a somber and absorbing tragedy. With 'Sense and Sensuality,' she takes her place as an arresting and important figure among contemporary English authors."
+ N Y Times p6 Ag 11 '29 550w

Outlook 152:627 Ag 14 '29 240w

"An atmosphere of emotional desperation accompanies the characters on their way from the cocktail to the grave: they are too loose and fluid to engage one's sympathy; and their undoubted intelligence is somehow stultified by the hysteria that accompanies it. The book is partly a satire, partly an exposition of certain aspects of modern life. It is immediately stimulating but ultimately depressing." L. P. Hartley
+ — Sat R 147:441 Mr 30 '29 170w

"Her effortless introductions, the impersonal brilliance with which she induces her characters to confess the maladies and follies of their nerves, her acute divination of ultimate moments, compel sincere appreciation of her craft. But her personages, on the whole, do not live with the fierce actuality of the figures in her first book." R. A. Taylor
— + Spec 142:517 Mr 30 '29 320w

Springf'd Republican p7e N 10 '29 120w

"Always very crisp, modern and sometimes highly seasoned. Nevertheless, its unquestionable cleverness deserves our admiration."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p292 Ap 11 '29 310w

SALT, SARAH, pseud. Tiny seed of love, and other stories. 287p $2.50 Brewer [7s 6d Gollancz]

"'A tiny seed of love' is a collection of short stories dealing with the sexual maladjustment among the English lower and middle classes."—N Y Times

---

"This book is a real find and the opening story is one of the most distinguished tales by a contemporary English writer. Miss Salt has the intensity, the fearlessness and the understanding that make for distinction, and a fine grasp of the essentials of her medium."
+ Bookm 69:xxv Jl '29 70w

SALT, SARAH, pseud.—Continued

"These are not happy tales. Each breaks off—one cannot say ends—in disappointment or frustration. They are studies in incompetence, done with keen observation."

\+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Je 23 '29 420w

Boston Transcript p4 Jl 6 '29 170w

"Miss Salt is clever, but her work lacks savour." Raymond Mortimer

— + Nation and Ath 44:112 O 20 '28 60w

"In spite of the wide range of attempted characterization and incident the stories make very monotonous and dreary reading. And the implications are neither very subtle nor very original, although the psychology as far as it goes is authentic enough."

— N Y Times p19 My 26 '29 300w

"With the passing of Katherine Mansfield, there are astonishingly few women writing in England today who can handle the genre short story with the psychological piquancy and the technical expertness of Sarah Salt. In each of them the authoress reaches down tenderly and sympathetically into the shadowy, tormented mind of an actress, a bank clerk, an artist, a harlot, a neurotic mother, or a spiritually starved wife, and brings forth gems of the highest penetrative refraction."

\+ Outlook 152:78 My 8 '29 130w

"Miss Salt evidently feels that life is bound to make fools of most of us. We suspect her judgment, but we admire her chronicles of defeated seekers after love. In itself, this volume is not really important, but it may well be the prelude to further and far more distinguished writing."

\+ — Sat R of Lit 5:961 Ap 27 '29 280w

"These short stories, within their limited range, display genuine powers of description and analysis. But the writer's vision is unpleasantly warped. Her gifts are worthy of being used to better purpose."

\+ — Spec 141:745 N 17 '28 80w

"Passion it is which distinguishes the book from the great body of modern depressing literature—passion and the gift of a pure icy style. For the harassed creatures of whom Miss Salt writes are indebted for the author's attention to something more than the fact that they are bogged in a miry world; and these tales are not the simple catalogues of domestic mishaps which are so often set before us disguised as fiction."

\+ Times [London] Lit Sup p182 Mr 7 '29 420w

SAMUEL, MAURICE. Outsider. 333p $2.50 Stratford

29-10742

A novel of American expatriates and the cheap Bohemian café life of Paris. Mortimer Long, remaining in Paris after the war, hopes to live a life of personal freedom. His companions are frequenters of the Lapin Cuit café. There he meets Carmen, a girl worker in a Paris toy-factory, who falls in love with him. When Mortimer's temporary funds are exhausted life becomes for him a mean struggle for existence. He spurns Carmen's pathetic offer of aid and affection, he descends to the degradation of peddling opium; and when a check for $240 arrives from America, he is overjoyed to be able to return to the States.

---

"There is much that is sordid in the tale and little that is engaging. . . Yet the author writes with a vigor that assures his reader that he has a firm belief in what he writes."

Boston Transcript p2 My 29 '29 250w

"The novel seems to be Mr. Samuel's protest against the literary glorification of the American expatriate—against the glamour given to Paris by Hemingway, Huddleston, et al.—against the conventional notion of Paris as the bright home of wine and women. If it is in truth so intended, it fails of complete persuasiveness. It is too narrow, too blind to the other side."

— Sat R of Lit 6:298 O 19 '29 280w

SAMUEL, MAURICE. What happened in Palestine; the events of August, 1929; their background and their significance. 222p $2 Stratford

956.9 Palestine—History. Jews in Palestine. Arabs in Palestine 29-23711

The recent trouble between Jew and Arab in Palestine and the responsibility of the British administration in connection with the matter is the subject of Mr Samuel's book.

---

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p36 D 1 '29 280w

"From the pen of an able and accurate observer comes the first-hand story of what really happened in Palestine a few months ago. This is more than a mere recital of catalogued facts, of dates and of names. It is a well-written and dispassionate account of a turmoil of no little diplomatic significance." A. S. R.

\+ Boston Transcript p2 N 30 '29 620w

Reviewed by W: Schack
N Y Evening Post p13m N 16 '29 100w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 80:28 D '29 130w

SAMUELS, CHARLES. Frantic young man. 289p il $2 Coward-McCann

29-5413

A very young man alone in the great city makes earnest efforts to lose his virtue. But in several successive episodes his romantic ideals defeat his own ends. Under the sophistication and irony of the tale there is amusement and sympathy for the dilemma of the adolescent hero.

---

"In spite of its subject matter, 'The Frantic Young Man' is an intellectual and not an emotional book. The characters are not entities in themselves; the situations, however technically heated, convey no warmth. They exist only in the light of the author's openly satirical attitude. The book lacks depth, but contains a fundamentally sane viewpoint that has not often, if ever, been expressed in print." G. T. Hellman

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Mr 17 '29 580w

"No doubt Mr. Samuels had the honest intention of portraying the troubles that beset adolescents, but his book appears to be hardly more than a chain of amorous adventures pieced together from a locker-room hubbub, and certainly no psychological entity results. It is not injudicious to guess that Mr. Samuels is rather too close to the things he is writing about to see them in the necessary larger perspective."

— Boston Transcript p4 Ap 13 '29 250w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver
N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 2 '29 100w

Reviewed by Margery Latimer
N Y World p11m Ap 14 '29 280w

SANBORN, PITTS. Prima donna; a novel of the opera. 2v 616p $5 Longmans

[29-1195]

A musical critic has written this story of the career of an opera singer. The story starts in a small Ohio town, with Helma's first lessons under an old Italian teacher. It follows her to New York and her first love affair, then to the continent where thru experiences that develop both woman and artist she is launched on a triumphant career.

---

Booklist 25:287 Ap '29

"It is an unusual novel for a number of reasons, some of these reasons by their very paradox make it difficult of just appraisal. Its story is far from new, but there are in it color, dramatic episodes, characterizations, which raise it far above the level of most contemporary American fiction. In his knowledge of French character and of the codes and freedom and inhibitions of French life, Mr. Sanborn displays an insight and mastery which have been approached by no living American." Grenville Vernon

\+ Bookm 69:90 Mr '29 700w

"Mr. Sanborn is eminently fitted to write of that entrancing world that has drawn so many moths to its bright flame." A. B. Parsons
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 F 24 '29 1050w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 2 '29 1050w

"Mr. Sanborn writes an easy and competent narrative, but the interest of the book depends upon the author's obviously thorough knowledge of his subject rather than upon the display of any conspicuously original literary gifts."
Nation 128:290 Mr 6 '29 150w

+ New Repub 58:235 Ap 10 '29 240w

"One of the chief excellences of 'Prima Donna' is its perfect balance. Nothing is set down in malice—surely a difficult temptation for a music critic to resist—and very little in extenuation. One sees all the intrigues and chicanery of the operatic world, but they are not thrust into improper prominence. A thoroughly just emphasis is laid upon the part played by her affaires de sexe, but they again are kept strictly in their place." L: Sherwin
+ N Y Evening Post p11m F 16 '29 1150w

'Prima Donna' is a novel that is profound in its reading of mankind; astounding in its brilliancy of conception, serene and sure in execution." Percy Hutchison
+ N Y Times p2 F 17 '29 1650w

"Out of his long experience as a music critic, and his close acquaintanceship with many musicians, Mr. Sanborn has written a book that is unceasingly interesting, which is done with intelligence and skill, and which never even momentarily does violence to its basic material. It has an air of complete verisimilitude." Herschel Brickell
+ No Am 227:adv Ap '29 140w

"Out of scores of novels read in the line of duty 'Prima Donna' stands as one of the very few which this reader, having begun it of necessity, finished for pleasure. And that not only because of its absorbing interest, both as to incident and characterization, but also because it is long enough and solid enough to offer to the reader's mind a substantial resting place."
+ Outlook 151:310 F 20 '29 750w

"Mr. Sanborn has written an indifferent novel, but has given us an intensive and enlightening study of an American prima donna."
+ — Sat R of Lit 5:980 My 4 '29 430w

Reviewed by R. A. Taylor
Spec 142:870 Je 1 '29 130w

"May very well be the best novel on a musical subject, ever written in this country. As a novel, however, it has apparent structural weaknesses which tend to rob it of strength and effectiveness. Compensating for such defects to a considerable degree, is the basic narrative of Helma Seymour's career as an opera singer."
+ — Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 10 '29 580w

"One more instance of the strange fact that musical enthusiasm produces very dull novels."
— Times [London] Lit Sup p418 My 23 '29 360w

Wis Lib Bul 25:103 Mr '29

SAND, GEORGE, pseud. (MME AMANTINE LUCILE AURORE [DUPIN] DUDEVANT). Intimate journal; ed. and tr. by Marie Jenney Howe. 198p $3.50 Day

B or 92 29-12464

Three documents which George Sand's family have held unpublished for many years and which have recently been released in France by her granddaughter are here brought together: her journal to Alfred de Musset; the Piffoël journal, composed of conversations between George Sand's masculine and feminine selves; and a scrap-book containing personal recollections and reflections, letters and other miscellaneous jottings.

Booklist 26:30 O '29

"The Journal to Musset should be of extraordinary interest to nearly all readers, because the letters which compose it are vividly alive. It is true that they contain nothing likely to alter fundamentally our previous notion of that extraordinary love affair. They serve, however, enormously to elaborate, to illuminate, to punctuate its progress." Margaret Wallace
+ Bookm 69:435 Je '29 400w

"The book is a most interesting collection, and the amazing hodge-podge of contradictions that was George Sand emerges to astonish us again. Real thought hides in her flamboyant language, real passion in her hysterical laments." A. B. Parsons
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 My 19 '29 1050w

"While they are evidently written to relieve the over-emotionalism under which she suffered during the period of her early thirties, yet they do show glimpses of the masterly intelligence, the intense mysticism, the constant idealism, which were characteristic of her genius." G. R. B. R.
+ Boston Transcript p3 Je 8 '29 400w

Cleveland Open Shelf p11 Ja '29

"Marie Jenney Howe has provided us with much valuable and original material by the translation of these memoirs. The inclusion of the work of Madame Aurore Sand, George Sand's favorite granddaughter, gives a chivalrous as well as an authentic touch to the volume. For, in addition to its other admirable qualities, the book is the personal tribute of one much-revered woman to the memory of another. Marie Howe has laid a golden wreath on George Sand's monument." Katharine Anthony
+ Nation 129:496 O 30 '29 1100w

"In Mrs. Howe's notes there are many facts given, without which much of the journal would be unintelligible, and her translation, in spite of some American 'idiom,' is by no means unreadable. Unfortunately, however, she has also provided some 'interpretation.' Here, side by side with an embarrassing naïveté of expression in the more lyrical passages, there is paraded all the jargon of psychoanalysis and the facile and irritating assumption of omniscience as to character and motive which not infrequently accompanies it. It is the greater pity as this sham profundity serves only to emphasize the essential crudity of too much of Mrs. Howe's thought, and to obscure what is really valuable in her work."
+ — Nation and Ath 46:406 D 14 '29 550w

Reviewed by Gertrude Diamant
New Repub 59:160 Je 26 '29 750w

"Mrs. Howe's translation is nimble and faithful to the quality of Sand's mind. Her opinions, usually sound and sometimes penetrating, might better have been confined to her introduction and the interpolated notes confined to facts." Clarence Britten
N Y Evening Post p10m My 11 '29 850w

Reviewed by Herbert Gorman
N Y Times p3 My 12 '29 2000w

"Even more completely than from the finest biography, her personality emerges from the pages of these journals in all its freedom, humanity, and courage. Mrs. Howe has added greatly to the readability of the journals by her prefatory and explanatory notes." F. L. Robbins
+ Outlook 152:106 My 15 '29 580w

Reviewed by Alrert Feuillerat
Sat R of Lit 6:20 Ag 3 '29 1000w
Springf'd Republican p5e Je 2 '29 90w

SANDBURG, CARL. Rootabaga country; sel. from Rootabaga stories and Rootabaga pigeons. 258p il $2.50 Harcourt

29-22258

Selections from the two Rootabaga books with humorous illustrations by Peggy Bacon.

"Peggy Bacon has made delightfully humorous illustrations. It was a fortunate day for our children when Peggy Bacon turned to the illustrating of their books. No artist could have caught more aptly the spirit of Carl Sandburg's stories than she." Helen Ferris

SANDBURG, CARL—Continued
+ Bookm 70:309 N '29 100w
Nation 129:600 N 20 '29 50w

"Peggy Bacon's drawings for the new edition of Carl Sandburg's 'Rootabaga Stories' are such extraordinary examples of American graphic art that they should bring readers to the book who are both old and young. The two artists in one book, while they may not always chime, make an exciting dissonance." Ernestine Evans
+ N Y Times p37 O 27 '29 120w
Springf'd Republican p7e D 15 '29 100w
Wis Lib Bul 25:326 O '29

SANDERS, GERALD DE WITT, and NELSON, JOHN HERBERT, eds. Chief modern poets of England and America. 705p $3; college ed $2.25 Macmillan

821.08 English poetry—Collections. American poetry—Collections 29-9273

Brief biographical sketches and a selection from the poems of each of the following English, Irish and American poets: Thomas Hardy; Robert Bridges; A. E. Housman; W. B. Yeats; George W. Russell (Æ); W. H. Davies; Ralph Hodgson; Walter De La Mare; John Masefield; W. W. Gibson; Harold Monro; Alfred Noyes; James Stephens; Siegfried Sassoon; Robert Graves; Edwin Arlington Robinson; Amy Lowell; Robert Frost; Carl Sandburg; Vachel Lindsay; Sara Teasdale; Ezra Pound; John Gould Fletcher; Hilda Doolittle (H. D.); Conrad Aiken; Edna St Vincent Millay.

---

Booklist 25:386 Jl '29
Boston Transcript p2 Ag 31 '29 480w

"Here is an anthology of contemporary verse which has the good sense to confine itself to the work of a few poets and to give a great deal of that. . . The selection is almost everywhere good, and—another uncommon virtue—almost always brings the poet in question down to date instead of going over the familiar ground of his early work."
+ Nation 129:500 O 30 '29 150w

"A good conventional anthology which seeks not to present many poets, but to present each one fairly. There is a bibliography, and biographical notices of all the poets represented."
+ Outlook 152:148 My 22 '29 40w
Pratt p27 autumn '29
St Louis 27:311 N '29

"If one is to judge by the space allotted, the second greatest poet in England and America is W. W. Gibson who is represented by all of thirty-five poems, while the untheatrical bucolics of Edward Thomas and the genuine unforced outcries of Wilfred Owen are not even mentioned. When the editors shift to America, the disproportions are still more startling. Here are forty selections from Sara Teasdale, five from Edna St. Vincent Millay, nothing from Elinor Wylie or Lizette Woodworth Reese. . . These are faults of commission, not of kind. That this type of anthology has a place is demonstrated by the excellent groups of poems by Masefield, Yeats, 'A.E.,' W. H. Davies (almost offsetting the meagre one by de la Mare), Robinson, and Sandburg. And Conrad Aiken, a poet who has received insufficient notice, is given ample space for a change. It is for such sections that this volume, in spite of its lapses, will prove valuable as supplementary reading."
— + Sat R of Lit 5:1084 Je 1 '29 480w

"Some of the American writers—as, for instance, Sara Teasdale and Carl Sandburg—seem to have a disproportionate amount of space, but the collection well fulfils its purpose of exhibiting the more meritorious work of various contemporary writers."
+ — Springf'd Republican p12 Jl 5 '29 210w

SANDIFORD, PETER. Educational psychology; an objective study. 406p il $3.50 (10s 6d) Longmans

370.15 Psychology, Educational 28-17887

"The author, professor of educational psychology in the University of Toronto, defines his subject as 'the application of psychological principles to the problems of the schoolroom.' His present treatment begins with a discussion of the nature and methods of educational psychology, then passes to the various phases of 'man's equipment for learning,' and finally to the learning process, its general features and special applications."—J Home Econ

---

Cleveland Open Shelf p117 S '29
J Home Econ 21:130 F '29 80w

"His book is a very full account of the present state of educational psychology. The array of names and figures is imposing. But the reader who lays the book down and asks himself honestly what he has really learned will be at a loss. The plain truth is that most of the fundamental questions which lie at the base of the science of teaching still wait for an answer; indeed it is not too much to say that some of them have yet to be formulated."
Times [London] Lit Sup p238 Mr 21 '29 1250w

SANDWELL, BERNARD KEBLE. Privacity agent, and other modest proposals. 224p il $3 Dutton

814 [29-26264]

A number of brief essays, humorous and informal, by a Canadian professor and humorist. Some of the titles are: Collecting cathedrals; I sing the bathroom; The case against "How-d'ye-do?" Holidays ltd.; and The knight has a thousand sighs. Illustrations by A. Lismer.

---

Booklist 25:278 Ap '29
Sat R of Lit 6:164 S 21 '29 230w

SANGER, MRS MARGARET (HIGGINS). Motherhood in bondage. 446p $3 Brentano's

613.94 Mothers. Woman—Social and moral questions. Marriage. Birth control 28-28778

"During the years since the first of the popular editions of 'Woman and the New Race' was published, Mrs. Sanger has been in constant receipt of letters from women who have read her book, and who write, usually, to ask her help. That book was a very simple presentation of the message of birth control as the agency for the emancipation of wives from the burden of too frequent, or otherwise unwelcome, motherhood; it has had a very wide circulation, and these letters which pour in upon the author in an unending stream set forth, one after another to the number of thousands, the reasons why, in the individual instance, further motherhood is undesired. . . [The letters] simply stand by themselves, one story after another of ill-health, poverty, overwork, of children who were born weak or who could not be reared in health and normal living."—N Y Times

---

Booklist 25:231 Mr '29

"This is not a story of some far-away, probably immoral country. Its tragedy is being played out in the tenement house next door, on the farm next to one's summer cottage. It would be easier to change it than to invent a single one of the innumerable parts that send the cheapest automobile on its perky way." A. B. Parsons
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ja 6 '29 500w

"The dynamic effect of hundreds and thousands of emotional outbursts gathered into a single explosion is terrifying and hopeful. Such feeling, so strong and so despairing, rooted in the deep centers of energy and life, pushing up and bursting out under such irresistible pressure—this, it seems certain, must finally shatter the forces that oppose it, backed though they are by gods and hobgoblins and all the more genteel forms of fear." Freda Kirchwey
+ Nation 127:661 D 12 '28 1000w

Reviewed by J. B. Temple
New Repub 57:252 Ja 16 '29 230w

"It is probable that many people who misunderstand the purposes of the birth-control movement will be brought to a clearer knowledge by reading these pathetic appeals from mothers who wish to hold to soundness and health in their children's lives and homes."
+ N Y Times p22 D 2 '28 440w

Reviewed by J: E. Lind, M.D.
Sat R of Lit 5:1114 Je 15 '29 460w

"Those who are against contraception would do well to read the message of waste and agony contained in this book of factual records."
+ Survey 61:515 Ja 15 '29 80w
World Tomorrow 12:236 My '29 20w

SANTA ANNA, ANTONIO LOPEZ DE, and others. Mexican side of the Texan revolution, 1836, by the chief Mexican participants; tr. with notes by Carlos E. Castañeda. 391p $5 Southwest press

976.4 Texas—History. Mexico—History. Mexico—Foreign relations—United States. United States—Foreign relations—Mexico
28-17278

"A book of general interest chiefly because of the light its documents throw on our whole past and present relations with Mexico. It contains not only Santa Anna's defense of his ill-fated Texas campaign, together with counter-charges by his secretary and leading generals and an endless attempt to shift the responsibility for the massacre of Fannin and his men at Goliad; it offers also a vigorous and rather prophetic analysis of the part which the United States Government played in the Texan Revolution. This is the work of General Tornel, written at the time he was Secretary of War."—Nation

---

"The aggregate historical value of this collection of controversial tracts is considerable, particularly in revealing enduring traits of Mexican psychology. The translation is well done. The English is precise, clean-cut, and idiomatic, and reads easily and entertainingly. The editorial notes are scant but are written with knowledge and discrimination." E. C. B.
+ Am Hist R 34:404 Ja '29 350w

Reviewed by Robert Redfield
Am J Soc 34:754 Ja '29 50w

"The translator possesses an idiomatic command of both Spanish and English. He has almost flawless appreciation of the peculiar turns of the two tongues." H. I. Priestley
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p16 S 23 '28 800w

"The book should make a nice text for schools and colleges in the Lone Star State and a splendid antidote for George Creel's biography of Sam Houston. It is well supplied with index and maps."
+ Nation 127:327 O 3 '28 150w

SANTANGELO, PAOLO ETTORE. Attila; a romance of old Aquileia; tr. by Nathan Haskell Dole. 336p $2 Crowell

29-8394

Romance of the days of Attila the Hun, in the fifth century B. C. The contest for the possession of the city of Aquileia on the Adriatic reaches fanatic heights, in which the Christian hermit Hilarion and the pagan priestess Axia are largely concerned. Then the city falls into Attila's hands; the people flee to the marshes where later Venice arises.

---

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 My 19 '29 280w

"The raw meat-eating Mongol king; Hilarion, the Christian hermit; Maxilla, disappointed in both divine and human love; Axia, a singularly unfortunate pagan priestess; and Elvidios, the tragic lover, are clearly and consistently drawn and action and excitement are unintermittent." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p10m My 4 '29 60w

"Once the fact is accepted that the book is not important it is easy to succumb to the lure of its decidedly vivacious theme."
+ N Y Times p9 My 26 '29 320w
Wis Lib Bul 25:324 O 29

SANTMYER, HELEN HOOVEN. Fierce dispute. 254p $2.50 Houghton

29-8837

Little Lucy Anne is brought up on the once fine old Baird place by her devoted but difficult grandmother. Lucy Anne's mother lives with them, at silent war with the old lady on the subject of Lucy Anne's father—a gifted unstable Italian who preferred his music to his love. The fierce dispute over Lucy Anne's musical heritage is occasion for some good character drawing of the conflicting personalities. The child is an engaging small person. The dispute ends with the grandmother's death, and with her capitulation acknowledged in her will.

---

Booklist 26:34 O '29

"Miss Santmyer has successfully shrouded her characters in an atmosphere of loneliness and decay, but she has failed to dramatize the stubborn, ingrowing conflict which absorbed them. . . Despite the excellence of the atmospheric tone, this novel suffers because one is never able to believe in the force of emotion that binds Hilary to Paolo." E. H. Walton
— + Bookm 69:431 Je '29 380w

"With an unobtrusive artistry, Miss Santmyer envelopes the situation in an atmosphere akin to a musical mood of which the charm is emotionally definite and intellectually elusive. It is in terms of tones and timbres that one recalls her work rather than in pictorial images. Her style is unadorned, and at times almost naive in its simplicity. She writes on a quiet plane, and her few departures into dramatic angularity are less effective than her habitual serenity."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 Ap 28 '29 250w

"There are inconsistencies, places where a situation is undeveloped that might have given strength to the structure. Yet it shows promise, a certain grace of style and a conception of the possibility of inarticulate conflict as a dramatic medium."
— + Boston Transcript p2 My 4 '29 250w
Cleveland Open Shelf p95 Je '29

"It is a dispute which, though it contains moments of effectiveness and even of beauty, seems neither reasonable nor probable. . . Lucy Anne herself is sympathetically and charmingly drawn. Her loneliness, her fanciful re-creation of the children who had been her grandmother's playmates, her feeling for the old house and its haunting memories, are all portrayed with insight and even beauty. She is the book's outstanding character."
+ — N Y Times p7 My 5 '29 450w

"After building up a real interest in an effectively simple conflict of personalities, the novelist resorts to the miraculous in order to avoid the tragic ending which has been carefully prepared. . . Had this theme been carried to a natural conclusion by a writer who clearly demonstrated an ability to portray ordinary domestic tragedy, a far more significant result would have been obtained."
— + Outlook 151:588 Ap 10 '29 140w

"It is an excellent situation with untold possibilities. But it fails because it is not made to seem sufficiently inevitable. . . Yet there is a good deal to be said for 'The Fierce Dispute.' Its faults, on the whole would seem to be faults of inexperience. The understanding and sincerity in the character-study of the child alone, save the story. And the simple, straightforward manner in which the whole morbid tale is told, raises it to the ranks of the significant."
+ — Sat R of Lit 6:41 Ag 10 '29 360w
Wis Lib Bul 25:162 My '29

SANZARA, RAHEL. Lost child; tr. from the German by Winifred Katzin. 359p $2.50 Longmans

[29-22338]

Anna, the four-year-old daughter of a prosperous German family, the light of her father's household, disappears. The reader knows the horrible secret of that disappearance, and the perpetrator of the deed knows it, but to all others it is unknown. The years pass in futile search, final discovery of the little body, and in the almost saint-like development of Anna's father in his care for the abnormal murderer of his child.

"As a symbolical novel, The Lost Child seems over-elaborated. Its strength lies in its fine portrayal of a pathological character; its weakness, in its lack of restraint."

+ — Bookm 70:xiv Ja '30 120w

"Rahel Sanzara has the Russian quality which moves freely among the buried motives of our lives and the German quality which dovetails a minute observation with the boldest forces. More than these, she has a sense of the universe. She keeps the balance between the febrile import of our struggles and the far-flung import of the stars." V. P. Ross

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 O 20 '29 950w

"It is unlikely that a story such as Rahel Sanzara's will ever attract much attention in America. Because of its theme, it will undoubtedly raise the familiar cry of 'morbid,' and this in spite of the fact that our newspapers are serving up daily accounts of things that happen in our own backyards. . . As an example of German mysticism, Rahel Sanzara's story is almost classical. It is pervaded with that folk mysticism, the spirit of naive wonder and also naive understanding, which found its perfect expression in the fairy tales." Gertrude Diamant

N Y Evening Post p12m O 19 '29 620w

" 'The Lost Child' is not a great novel. On the other hand, it is not entirely negligible, for it contributes to human knowledge. And it cannot be denied that as a book it compels the reader to continue to the end." Percy Hutchison

— + N Y Times p9 O 6 '29 950w

"This is a strong and beautiful book. It does not have the profound and disturbingly exact philosophies of its monumental predecessors but for that reason it has more of the suspense and emotional grip which properly belong to fiction. Of course it is not and will not be such a landmark in the history of human thought and human doubt as Job or 'The Brothers Karamazov' —it has not the proportion; it has not the intellectual mass—but it has the philosophic and literary quality to admit it to the limited ranks of minor classics." P. D. Stong

+ N Y World p11m O 20 '29 550w

"This reviewer has rarely read a book in which an atmosphere of violence and despair was as admirably created and sustained as in this novel. . . It is not a book for the impressionable, for its essence of madness, evil and apathy is hard to shake off. . . The action is sustained with great discretion and the characterization built up with no visible effort. The story is written in simple, direct narrative. And the flat monotony of the style creates to perfection that atmosphere of time and space suspended by a hair such as all of us have experienced in moments of tragedy."

Outlook 153:230 O 9 '29 280w

SAPPER, pseud. See McNeile, H. C.

SARASIN, J. G., pseud. See Salmon, G. G.

SAROJINI NAYADU. Sceptred flute; songs of India; [with an introd. by Joseph Auslander]. 231p $3 Dodd

821 28-30699

A new volume by the Indian poetess who is a distinguished figure in the national affairs of India as well as in letters.

"Over and above their imagination, their spiritual beauty and their strange, wan charm—an elusive charm reminiscent of Arab lyricists of the Ninth Century before, with Persian Sufism, came word-juggling and thought-juggling —lies the fact that Sarojini Naidu's 'Sceptred Flute' contains minor poems written by a major poet. Sarojini Naidu has not written a magnum opus. She has done more. She has given us life; Indian life." Achmed Abdullah

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 Mr 31 '29 330w

"The poems are not translations. Madame Naidu does her writing in English."

Boston Transcript p3 Ja 26 '29 800w

"Her poetry is exquisite in feeling, but not in form. There is distinction, but it lies half concealed behind an undistinguished, or less distinguished, surface. . . In general, in these songs of love and life and death, one is conscious of an exotic, passionate, delicate, sensitive, and beautiful spirit, which can indicate its presence, but cannot fully charge its medium with its own rare quality."

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:841 Mr 30 '29 500w

SASS, HERBERT RAVENEL. On the wings of a bird. 334p il $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

590 Natural history—Outdoor books. Birds—South Carolina 29-8877

The new collection of essays in natural history by Mr Sass, contains studies of bird life observed in a city garden and in the Carolina marshlands.

Booklist 25:383 Jl '29

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ap 28 '29 110w

"Herbert Ravenel Sass, while his medium is technically prose, is really writing poetry, because he sees nature 'properly, that is to say, emotionally,' to quote Hudson's penetrating phrase." C: Johnston

+ N Y Times p2 Je 30 '29 800w

"He is a little diffuse,—lingers too much on his pictures, overwrites them sometimes; but no one reads these nature sketches for their plots—that taste belongs to a very different order of nature writing. They read to let their imaginations go free and follow the author's memories; they read in a less degree for information, and for the excitement of the sensory nerves which in so many of us titillate among the egrets and ibises of the swamp, over the rhododendron-shaped pool at the flash of warbler wings, as never in the city."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:1092 Je 8 '29 320w

SASSOON, SIR PHILIP, bart. Third route; with an introd. by Thornton Wilder. 279p il $3 Doubleday, Doran [15s Heinemann]

629.13 Aeronautics—Flights. East—Description and travel 29-24054

The account of an air trip to the British oversea air stations in Egypt, the Sudan, Transjordania, Irak, India and Malta. The flight was undertaken for official purposes and covered nearly seventeen thousand miles. The illustrations are from photographs.

Reviewed by M. L. Becker

Bookm 70:444 D '29 100w

"It is a book which will please all those who enjoy a timely tale written with considerable charm." H: C. Lodge

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p32 D 8 '29 520w

"It is the intellectual pleasures of flight which invest Sir Philip's narrative with a vigorous charm. His photographs are of quite unusual excellence, and they show that only by getting off the earth can one round off one's acquaintance with it. . . It is possible now, if one is rich and hardy enough, to see Paris, Rome, Athens, Cairo, and Baghdad in a long week-end. The impact of such hustling on an empty mind would be purely devastating. But Sir Philip, who went rather more slowly than this, was able to keep his wits, and readers of his historical vignettes will get a good idea of what harvest a bird's eye view may bring to a cultured intelligence." Barrington Gates

+ Nation and Ath 45:339 Je 8 '29 550w

"Sir Philip gives us in this book what so few of those who have written about journeys by air have even touched upon: the emotional and intellectual reaction of a sensitive mind to this new view of the earth and its sights. Of no little interest also are his accounts of comments upon the British air service in various places—its success in Iraq and along the mountainous Indian frontier, its high importance, its general policy."

+ N Y Times p29 N 10 '29 430w

N Y World p10m D 15 '29 230w

"Sir Philip Sassoon tells a breathless story, in a style appropriate to its subject, marred only by one little trick of its author, which is to drop a leaf from history at unnecessary moments. Yet to a mind well stored and to a man seeing the monuments of the ancient world for the first time from this new angle such digressions may be forgiven." J. B. S. B.

+ Sat R 147:802 Je 15 '29 160w

"Pictures such as these, and a text which, like the picture, evokes and clarifies thought, combine to make this book not only delightful to read, but a real contribution to Imperial problems."

+ Spec 142:746 My 11 '29 700w

Times [London] Lit Sup p351 My 2 '29 1000w

SASSOON, SIEGFRIED LORRAINE. Heart's journey. 45p $2 Harper
821 29-26483

A poet stops at pleasant places in his heart's journey for a moment's quiet contemplation, a glimpse of spiritual autobiography or personal philosophy.

---

Booklist 25:353 Je '29

Bookm 70:xvi O '29 80w

"Technically, the work in this book is not above reproach. Especially in the poems that recall the war, Sassoon is betrayed by the fierceness of his rebellion into unnecessary explicitness. But though technique is of extreme importance in this art, it is not the whole of it. There is no reason to suppose that Sassoon will fail to master his instrument more completely. There is reason to rejoice in his mastery of the solemn music which it is to express." Babette Deutsch

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Mr 24 '29 800w

Boston Transcript p1 S 7 '29 500w

Christian Century 46:871 Jl 3 '29 50w

"In 'The Heart's Journey' Siegfried Sassoon seldom writes without self-consciousness; the thought is frequently strained into meter, and there are only a few natural lines. Yet, certainly, the emotions seem genuine and the moods essentially poetic. In Sassoon the war is by no means a dim memory." J. D. Tasker

Nation 129:96 Jl 24 '29 80w

"Scarcely anything more exquisite will be found in English poetry than some of Mr. Sassoon's softly moving lines, nor will the mysticism of devotion be found breathing a more gently perfumed loveliness." Percy Hutchison

+ N Y Times p12 Ap 29 '28 170w

Reviewed by Granville Hicks

N Y World p10m Ap 28 '29 100w

"Mr. Sassoon seems to be at pause. All the same, there are in this volume some tentative movements towards things which Mr. Sassoon has not much sought in the past, and these reachings out are the more promising for a certain timidity. . . With some new wistful moods Mr. Sassoon's style has acquired here and there a tinge new to it, and it is amusing to find in one stanza by this decidedly Georgian poet a faint echo of Mr. Yeats, in another piece a movement like that of a poem, also with the wind as subject, by Mr. Symons. But Mr. Sassoon is no mere imitator. Merely, in this pause in his evolution, he is listening to the voice within him and to those other voices, as that of Vaughan, on whom, surprisingly, he has a poem. We need not look for the emergence of Mr. Sassoon the Silurist; myself, I do not know what to look for; but there are here possibilities which three or four years ago would have been improbabilities." T. E. Welby

+ Sat R 146:122 Jl 28 '28 1000w

"This volume and its natural complement, 'The Memoirs of a Fox-Hunting Man,' give us both sides of the complete Sassoon, the richly molded, mature poet. . . The smallest of Sassoon's volumes physically, the largest in implications, it is strengthened by values that are not dependent on situation, not conditioned by temperament or time." L: Untermeyer

+ Sat R of Lit 5:825 Mr 30 '29 1000w

"His originality remains indisputable. He writes from an impassioned experience, and his cadence has the wavelike power which carries the words beyond mere rational significance into the mystery of music. It is aristocratic poetry, for all its compassion." R. A. Taylor

+ Spec 141:371 S 22 '28 350w

" 'The Heart's Journey' contains poetry that is born directly from lone wanderings in the inner reaches of the spirit. Mr Sassoon is a poet of a few words and his latest volume contains the very essence rather than the adornments of song." C. M. K.

Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 14 '29 700w

Wis Lib Bul 25:320 O '29

SASSOON, SIEGFRIED LORRAINE. Memoirs of a fox-hunting man. 376p $2.50 Coward-McCann [7s 6d Faber & G.]
29-3979

The quiet loveliness of the English countryside pervades the first part of the book. Here the writer recalls his childhood in his Aunt Evelyn's country home and his initiation, under the tactful insistence of Dixon the groom, into the joys and tremors of fox-hunting. These fox-hunting reminiscences rise to an exciting climax with the winning of a point-to-point race. Changing in mood and scene, the latter part of the story carries the reader to France during the war.

---

Booklist 25:287 Ap '29

"There is one astonishingly real character, built up ever so slowly, with hardly a trace of the writer's self-consciousness—that of Denis Milden, M. F. H. Altogether a singular and a strangely beautiful book." Robert Littell

+ Bookm 69:88 Mr '29 500w

"The book is undoubtedly the honest record of an average man; it has charm, modesty and love of nature and of home to recommend it. It has the even pace of Trollope and Surtees and follows a tradition well established in English letters. But there is no trace in it of the ironical and flaming individual who wrote 'Counter-Attack.' " M. C. Canfield

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 F 3 '29 920w

" 'Memoirs of a Fox-Hunting Man' is written in a style which should make many a better known writer envious. It is clear and simple: one enjoys it all." K: Schriftgiesser

+ Boston Transcript p3 Mr 2 '29 1350w

Cleveland Open Shelf p110 Jl '29

"As a contribution to sporting literature 'The Memoirs of a Fox-hunting Man' is successful, even brilliant. As a satire--and I persist in regarding it as satire in intention—it is far less so." J. W. Krutch

+ — Nation 128:261 F 27 '29 620w

Reviewed by Raymond Mortimer

Nation and Ath 44:150 O 27 '28 550w

Reviewed by T. S. Matthews

+ New Repub 58:208 Ap 3 '29 360w

"Here in these pages is an aspect of English life recorded by one who has shared it and, in a degree, understood it; and the book has a great value as an account of a life the participators of which are generally too absorbed to notice or to understand."

SASSOON, S. L.—Continued
+ New Statesman 32:162 N 10 '28 900w
New Statesman 34:308 D 7 '29 130w

"With an irony more insidious and gentle than satire, and more blighting, Mr. Sassoon has pictured human futility—the suave tragedy of an uninquiring mind immunized against doubt or wonder by the immediate, purposeless devotion to a sport magnified into a cult. . . His is the loveliest prose we have read in many months—clear and effortless as flowing water. His irony is an atmosphere, not a weapon, imperceptible, all pervading, inclosing some of the tenderest and most delicate pictures of English country life." F: F. Van de Water
+ N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 9 '29 800w

"It is a book of beauty, of pathos and of cheer, a book one will come to regard with affection."
+ N Y Times p2 F 3 '29 980w

"The really first-rate part of this book amounts to less than half of it, and not all of that is about hunting. But the last section, describing war experiences, continues on the same high level of excellence. Indeed, from the moment when he finds himself at home in the hunting-field the author never falters for a moment, and page follows page, each fresh, moving and vivid." E: Shanks
+ — Sat R 146:473 O 13 '28 980w

Reviewed by Robert Graves
Sat R of Lit 5:703 F 23 '29 1100w

"We have met no book which analyses better than this one the spirit in which the War was fought; which exposes more pitilessly the wickedness of warfare. Bitterness and irony tinge the narrative, but the poet's outlook remains. He has described with telling intensity that scenery, intersected by and superimposed with all the strange paraphernalia of war: and with all the birds wheeling round his billet. Beauty shines the brighter for the bleared background, and he is conscious of both."
+ Spec 141:sup449 O 6 '28 650w

"A novel of wholly fresh and delightful content, of classical lucidity and quiet poignance. . . The author's irony constantly sharpens his perception but never distorts it, because it is always linked with humaneness and poetic feeling."
+ Springf'd Republican p7e Mr 3 '29 1150w

"The writer's object was certainly 'la recherche du temps perdu' in the same sense that was Proust's, and though he has not a trace of the Frenchman's manner or of his profundity—to say nothing of his long-windedness—there are here and there touches of a similar spirit. A curious book this must be, it will be thought. Well, curious it is, but of fine quality. And if the lovers of sporting literature are perturbed by these comparisons or feel that it is not likely to be a work after their heart, they may be assured that there are a couple of scenes from the hunting-field, one from the racecourse, and one from the cricket-ground which we judge not to have been bettered by anything of their sort in recent times."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p727 O 11 '28 1150w
Wis Lib Bul 25:128 Ap '29

"As the record of a youth whose god was good sport in pleasant countryside, it is decidedly unusual. It is worth reading, if only to discover how little an average American knows about horses." Coley Taylor
+ World Tomorrow 12:282 Je '29 130w

SAUDEK, ROBERT. Experiments with handwriting. 394p il $5 Morrow [18s Allen & U.]
137 Graphology. Character [29-10232]

"As a method of analyzing character, many are inclined to rate graphology with palmistry, phrenology, astrology, and all other pseudo-scientific guessing-games of the sort. On the contrary, as Mr. Saudek reveals, graphology in this book is an exact science, and like chemistry or mathematics, subject to certain universal and invariable laws. Expert application of these laws provides not only a possible, but a decidedly practicable means of judging human character and intelligence."—Boston Transcript

"Designed as it is for the general reader rather than for the expert, it cannot fail to convert many a sceptic to an intelligent confidence in the scientific integrity and practical value of analytical graphology."
+ Boston Transcript p3 N 2 '29 250w

"We confess that we are not completely convinced that Mr. Saudek has made out a good argument for the scientific character of graphological psychology. A hundred factors enter into the art of writing, ninety-nine may be discerned and yet reveal only half a truth, worse than nothing. . . What may be of real value in this book, however, although even here we must remain sceptical until the theory has been tested for a longer period, is the author's assertion that he has an exact scientific method at his disposal by which honesty and dishonesty can be recognized."
Spec 143:342 S 14 '29 450w

"The chief fault we have to find with Mr. Saudek is that he comes so near to discouraging readableness. 'Delineative imitation,' that is, very careful writing, is not handwriting at all for Mr. Saudek's present purpose. Indeed, the more care a man takes to be readable, the more annoying he is to the handwriting expert. Mr. Saudek will hardly even credit him with good motives."
Times [London] Lit Sup p6 Ja 3 '29 1700w

SAUNDERS, HILARY AIDAN ST GEORGE. See Beeding, F., pseud.

SAUNDERS, KENNETH JAMES. Gospel for Asia; a study of three religious masterpieces: Gita, Lotus, and Fourth Gospel. 245p $2.50 Macmillan [10s 6d S.P.C.K.]
294 Mahābhārata. Bhagavadgītā. Saddharmapundarīka. Bible. New Testament—Gospels—St. John. Hinduism. Buddha and Buddhism. Christianity and other religions [28-6543]

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

"The work under consideration may be described as a comparative study of the Incarnation Idea in three of the great religions of humanity. As a study in the psychology of religion it seems to me that it is entitled to a wide reading." W: H. Roberts
+ J Philos 25:612 O 25 '28 950w

"While this book is an apologia to Asia, its greatest service may well be in giving the lay reader of the Western world an intelligent appreciation of the noble beauties of the religions which produced the Gita and Lotus gospels and 'a larger vision of the bonds uniting the races.'" A. E. Haydon
+ J Religion 9:116 Ja '29 1100w
Pratt p10 summer '29

Reviewed by B. B. Bacon
Sat R of Lit 5:466 D 8 '28 300w
Springf'd Republican p10 Ja 22 '29 750w

SAUNDERSON, HENRY HALLAM. Charles W. Eliot, Puritan liberal; with an introd. by William Allen Neilson. 253p $2 Harper
B or 92 Eliot, Charles William [28-24353]

Mr Saunderson has penetrated the austerity and reserve of Charles Eliot's public manner to the deeply religious nature that lay behind them. His book is a spiritual biography of Dr Eliot.

"To the reader who knows his New England history and literature Dr. Saunderson's quotations are trite, his comments superficial and his historical and biographical material of the slightest. Beyond the convenience of having the best sections of certain scattered addresses bound between two covers and the happiness of having at hand and in full the remarkable exchange of letters between Dr. Eliot and Professor George Herbert Palmer in 1894, the volume is useless." J: H. Holmes

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 Ja 6 '29 420w

"The book is decidedly interesting and while it can claim in no way to be a conclusive work, it is a clear-cut and well-thought analysis of the religious faith of Charles Eliot." K. S.
+ Boston Transcript p6 N 21 '28 750w

Reviewed by A. W. Vernon
+ — Christian Century 45:1590 D 27 '28 730w

J Religion 9:329 Ap '29 180w

"Mr. Saunderson tries to make up for the paucity of personal material by writing at length about Puritanism and the history of New England, Channing and the Unitarian movement, and the well-known figures who were Eliot's immediate predecessors or contemporaries."
— + N Y Times p3 Mr 24 '29 520w

SAURAT, DENIS. Blake and modern thought. 213p il $4 Dial press [14s Constable]

821 Blake, William 29-30433

"M. Saurat has roughly two purposes, to define and discover Blake's position in relation to other writers and thinkers in two ways. . . In his last chapter, M. Saurat sums up his conclusions about Blake's place in modern thought, and decides that this place is an important one."—Times [London] Lit Sup

---

"As lucid as any exposition of the prophet is likely to be, and may be commended to both novices and initiates."
+ Bookm 70:324 N '29 550w

"His book is a definite contribution to scholarship, needing only that kind of corrective which all such contributions need—comparison with other points of view. And there is a special pleasure to be obtained from his spare, specific style."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p35 S 29 '29 230w

"What Mr. Saurat offers is a clever speculation, and as such it should attract and interest all who 'love' and yet rather justifiably 'refuse' to understand Blake."
Boston Transcript p4 S 21 '29 550w

Reviewed by D. M. Stuart
Nation and Ath 45:767 S 14 '29 750w

"Though Professor Saurat's claims are modest, and his conclusions reasonable, his book as a whole suffers from a lack of proportion which no rationality can hide. But what unbalances the book more than anything else is its brevity. It is a series of notes rather than a finished work of criticism; in its few pages Prof. Saurat's learning and discrimination are glimpsed rather than displayed. And even as a series of notes it is unsatisfactory; in dealing with the obscurer Blakean mythology one cannot be short and clear."
— New Statesman 33:529 Ag 3 '29 1000w

"In 'Blake and Modern Thought' Denis Saurat comes nearer than any previous critic to supplying a complete key to the Prophetic Books, to Blake's thought and mythology. The problem of this genius is insoluble so long as it is assumed that he was madly irrational, but suppose, as M. Saurat does, that 'Blake always had a reasonable meaning. Only it frequently happened that he wilfully kept it hidden'. I do not know that Blake is greatly usable by our age, but the effect of M. Saurat's triumph of scholarship and original insight is to roll back some of the clouds about his head and let us see that Blake's stature was higher than has heretofore been estimated." G. B. Munson
+ — N Y Evening Post p4m S 14 '29 850w

"M. Saurat's not very happily entitled book is a learned, patient, and at many points successful attempt to discover the rough material out of which Blake fashioned his myths. The book is honourably distinguished from most of its kind not only by the merits just noted but by its terseness, its clarity, its pervading common sense, and its author's resolve not to tease his own meanings out of the prophetic books."
+ Sat R 148:134 Ag 3 '29 1100w

"By his industrious exploration of these queer byways of thought, and the insight with which he has applied his extraordinarily interesting discoveries, Mr. Saurat has produced a work of scholarship which no Blake student can afford to ignore."
+ Spec 143:229 Ag 17 '29 220w

"M. Saurat's book is at once one of the most admirable and lucid explanations of Blake's metaphysics and a serious blow to their reputation. This latter is not intended to be; but we do not see how Blake, except as a poet and a painter, can survive the discoveries and happy conjectures of M. Saurat. For the chief claim which admirers of Blake's prophetic books have hitherto made for them is their amazing originality, and a great deal of this M. Saurat strips from them."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p649 Ag 22 '29 1800w

SAVORY, THEODORE HORACE. Biology of spiders. (Biological handbooks ser.) 376p il $5.50 Macmillan [16s Sidgwick & J.]

595.4 Spiders 29-6944

The book is a study and a record of observations on the structure, habits and behavior of spiders. It has been the author's ideal to write so comprehensively that the reader need not refer to any other work for information about any topic pertinent to the biology of spiders. Illustrated from photographs and drawings.

---

"We advise the casual reader to treat this book as he would a sandwich made of hard bread and delicious filling; take the middle part and leave the rest for those whose teeth and appetite are more suited to difficult chewing. . . It is a book that is well worth having." F. E. Lutz
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p21 My 12 '29 350w

"That many authorities in this field were consulted by the author he willingly concedes, yet he spent half a lifetime in first-hand investigations of his own, and shows a skill in presenting the material thus accumulated which makes the volume well-nigh unique."
+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 12 '29 450w

Reviewed by J. A. Thomson
New Statesman 32:81 O 27 '28 1400w

"This book is an admirable monograph. . . The point of view of the author does not seem to be uniform throughout the book. In places, he addresses readers who would be lacking in the most rudimentary scientific training, and in other places he presumes a rather elaborate knowledge of spiders."
+ — Sat R of Lit 5:937 Ap 20 '29 500w

"An excellent and, in its field, extremely useful book. For one thing, Mr. Savory has a direct and lucid style, free from the affectations and the parade of a difficult jargon which are the curse of so much of the scientific writing of the day. For another he is master of his subject. . . The whole is a well-balanced and comprehensive presentation of the subject—a satisfactory collation of what is essential in our knowledge of spiders up to date."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p43 Ja 17 '29 960w

SAWYER, ROBERT V., and PERKINS, E. H. Water gardens and goldfish. 112p il $1.50 De La Mare

714 Water gardens. Water-lilies. Goldfish 28-15683

"Practical advice for the amateur on making pools and caring for water-lilies and other water plants. The second section discusses briefly the management of the small aquarium, SAWYER, R. V., and PERKINS, E. H.—Cont. the varieties, breeding, and care of goldfish."—Pittsburgh Mo Bul

Booklist 25:63 N '28
Cleveland Open Shelf p89 Je '29
Pittsburgh Mo Bul 34:13 F '29
Pratt p23 autumn '29

SAWYER, RUTH (MRS ALBERT C. DURAND). Four ducks on a pond. 380p $2 Harper 28-25817

Tad Mason left the squalid home farm to work her way thru normal college. Danny Herron was kind to the frightened waif and became her great friend. But with the sordid memories of her home life to combat, it was a long time before he could waken her love for him and for the land.

Booklist 25:214 F '29

"The author writes gracefully and with a grateful humor."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 Ja 20 '29 100w

"Unless the book falls into the hands of an over-critical realist, it will prove diverting enough and rather a welcome relief from the more sordid analysis of life and conduct so all-prevalent now."

+ — Boston Transcript p5 Ja 5 '29 200w
Cleveland Open Shelf p31 F '29
Springf'd Republican p7e Ag 18 '29 150w
Wis Lib Bul 25:31 Ja '29

SAXON, LYLE. Old Louisiana; illustrated by E. H. Suydam. 388p il $5 Century

917.63 Louisiana—Description and travel. Louisiana—Social life and customs. Plantation life 29-23366

"The chronicle of two centuries of Louisiana plantation life; a book of footnotes to history. It is a life which began when Louisiana was a colony of France, continued through the Spanish domination and emerged in the early nineteenth century as a development peculiarly American. Louisiana plantation life and Mississippi River steamboating are closely allied, developing, succeeding, and declining together."—Introd.

"There is a hodge-podge of historical information, a miscellany of social gossip, quotations from letters, tit-bits from legal history, diaries of young blades with vivid pictures of the society in which they rather gingerly moved, all flung together with a cheerful disdain of organization or articulation, and with at times a distressing lack of discrimination. Best of all are the descriptions of the once-extensive plantations and the splendid plantation houses. More than thirty full-page pen-and-ink drawings and numerous smaller sketches adorn the book. From these, more even than from Mr. Saxon's discursive text, we get a sense of the magic, of the charm and beauty, of sad forgotten things and the grace of a day that is dead." H: S. Commager

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 N 24 '29 680w
Boston Transcript p5 N 30 '29 320w
Cleveland Open Shelf p149 D '29

"The book is, by its own inner compulsion, all one piece; and though there is always a sense of passing, there is curiously no sense of death. This is one of the gifts that has fallen to the author, and that endows his book with so gentle and friendly a relish for life. It is a happy, wistful, busy, engaging book, persuasive and rich, full of lovely reminders and full of good sense." Stark Young

+ New Repub 61:43 D 4 '29 1600w

"Mr. Suydam most competently supplements Mr. Saxon's prose with drawings which catch in charming fashion the spirit of the older days. The book is nothing so serious as a history of Louisiana or a careful study of a social or economic system. But it is good entertainment and it has a flavor." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p8 N 17 '29 1600w
N Y World p11m N 24 '29 200w
Outlook 153:429 N 13 '29 120w

"The book is an olla podrida, but all the ingredients are good, and some of them are very good." Herschel Brickell

+ Sat R of Lit 6:583 D 21 '29 1000w

"Mr Saxon's method is largely that of the side-light and the exemplifying record, with now and then outright excursus—unorthodox and not uninteresting. For besides having known Louisiana all his life, he has obviously been led into extensive reading and research about it; so that his book is now the pleasant discourse of a man well informed on his worthwhile hobby, and now a reproduction of the interesting records he has come across such as the intelligent reader will find of interest in and of themselves."

+ Springf'd Republican p6e D 15 '29 500w

SAYAJI RAO III, mahárájá gaekwár of Baroda. Speeches and addresses, 1877-1927. 519p $6 (15s) Macmillan

915.47 Baroda

"One of the best governed of Indian states is Baroda and one of the most forceful personalities of India is His Highness Sayaji Rao III, the present ruler of that state. In the course of a long reign he has worked a healthy and permanent reformation in his dominions to the contentment of his subjects. The engineering, sanitary, social, educational, industrial, financial and administrative advances made in his state bring him the name of being 'Western.' His interest in preserving ancient Indian literature, in collecting and housing manuscripts in one of the finest collections of Indian manuscripts in the world, in encouraging private libraries to give proper care to their treasures and in publishing a series of important Sanskrit works justifies his claims of being a faithful Hindu."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"His speeches are less interesting as literature than as a record of the steps by which advancement has taken place against difficulties."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p26 O 27 '29 280w

"In this collection of addresses delivered by one of the most enlightened of Eastern potentates during the half century of his reign, one may gather a wide variety of most interesting information as to the social and religious conditions existing in Baroda." G. R. B. R.

+ Boston Transcript p2 My 15 '29 600w

"Many are of ephemeral interest only, but some are certainly worthy of permanent record as statements of policy and expositions of thought and reflection."

Times [London] Lit Sup p191 Mr 7 '29 200w

SAYERS, DOROTHY LEIGH. Lord Peter views the body. 317p $2 Brewer [7s 6d Gollancz] [29-1970]

"Lord Peter Wimsey, the exquisite sleuth, gambols through the tales, which deal with such marvels as the man with the copper fingers, Uncle Meleager's missing will, the cat in the bag, the footsteps that ran, the stolen stomach, the man without a face, and a modern cave of Ali Baba, with cyanide, jewels, a roast chicken, a classic cross word puzzle and what not as clews. Most of the tales stress the fantastic, grotesque and macabre."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Bookm 69:xxvi My '29 30w

"This department remains faithful to the mystery works of Dorothy L. Sayers—they're always delightful." Will Cuppy

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Mr 31 '29 110w

"The quality of the stories collected in this volume is uneven, some are disappointing, but others are as good as they could be. Miss Sayers writes good English—a rare quality among detective writers; she has a fine sense of humor and a genius for creating the most unexpected situations."

+ — Spec 141:896 D 8 '28 90w

Times [London] Lit Sup p968 D 6 '28 130w

SAYERS, DOROTHY LEIGH, ed. Omnibus of crime. 1177p $3 Brewer

Short stories—Collections. Detective stories
29-17283

A stout anthology of mystery, crime, and horror tales chosen from the whole range of such literature by a very able writer of the genre.

---

"Here are some sixty-two detective, mystery and horror stories by master craftsmen, arranged in neat and edifying pigeon holes and introduced by an erudite, sagacious and highly exciting essay of about 18,000 words on the currently popular genre, the whole running to upwards of half a million words, 1,177 sizable pages and 329 times more thrills than commonly come at three dollars. Truly, a bargain, herewith earnestly recommended to the faithful." Will Cuppy

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Ag 11 '29 1100w

Boston Transcript p3 S 4 '29 650w

"I find it, on the whole, to be easily the best and most complete anthology of crime stories I have seen. . . Not all of the good riddles of detection are there, and not all the incidents of the macabre—but there are sixty-odd, and that is aplenty." Milton MacKaye

+ N Y Evening Post p6m Ag 10 '29 850w

"The publishers of the book inform us that Miss Sayers's principal recreation is the busman's holiday of reading other people's detective stories. Her book is evidence that she has read them to some purpose." I: Anderson

+ N Y Times p2 Ag 11 '29 620w

"It's not only the best selection we've ever seen; it is, we believe, the best selection possible."

+ Outlook 153:70 S 11 '29 250w

"Miss Sayers has not only collected a miniature library of tales of crime, horror and detection, but has written an introduction that surveys with notable critical acumen the rise and growth of this class of literature. The book is of special value for this masterly summing-up in the introduction."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e S 1 '29 500w

SAYERS, WILLIAM C. BERWICK. Manual of classification for librarians & bibliographers. 345p $8 Wilson, H.W.

025.4 Classification—Books

Part one deals with the theory of classification; part two with the history of library classification and the systems in actual use today; part three with the practical work of classification and its application to the shelves, catalog, etc. The author is chief librarian of the Croyden public libraries and lecturer in the University of London school of librarianship.

SAYLES, MARY BUELL. Problem child at home; a study in parent-child relationships. 342p $1.50 Commonwealth fund

136.7 Parent and child. Children, Abnormal and backward. Child study 28-22566

Following a general discussion of the problems of parent-child relationships, the author cites a number of clinical cases in which the difficulties of the problem child were traced to their origins and an effort made at correcting faulty attitudes on the part of parents and wrong conditions in home environment.

---

"The common sense embodied in this book entitles it to wide circulation." A. J. Todd

+ Am J Soc 34:1200 My '29 130w

Booklist 25:192 F '29

Cleveland Open Shelf p75 My '29

J Home Econ 21:211 Mr '29 80w

"I know of no parents who would not profit by making themselves familiar with the material in this book, and I hope very much that its unfortunate title will not deter them from reading it. Every growing child is in one connection or another a problem child. Unfortunately 'problem child' now has connotations of abnormality and the clinic, which parents automatically seek to avoid." R. O. Kallen

+ — New Repub 57:224 Ja 9 '29 1050w

Pratt p6 spring '29

St Louis 27:43 F '29

"The careful analysis of the parent-child and equally important (but sometimes forgotten) child-parent relationship, based not only on concrete experience but thorough search of the literature, is a very real contribution and should be of great use to all those interested in 'thinking through' even the minor problems arising from these relationships."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:517 D 15 '28 700w

Reviewed by W. G. Kimmel

+ School R 37:232 Mr '29 520w

"The material on which it is based is taken from the study of some two hundred case records in clinics conducted during a five-year period. . . Twelve narratives from case records give an indication of how infinitely varied may be the patterns into which the differing, yet always similar, human elements and circumstances may be woven. Read, especially in connection with the preceding chapters, these narratives form a most valuable document for all who seek understanding." J. H. Whittlesey

+ Survey 61:383 D 15 '28 280w

Times [London] Lit Sup p167 F 28 '29 30w

"An extremely valuable work for teachers and parents who don't know what's the matter."

+ World Tomorrow 12:186 Ap '29 30w

SCANLON, WILLIAM T. God have mercy on us! a story of 1918. 338p $2.50 Houghton
29-22418

Sergeant Scanlon, of the 97th Company of the 6th Marines, writes his account of the part the marines played in the War. It is a story of battle in the regions of Belleau Wood, Chateau Thierry, Soissons, the Champagne, and the Meuse-Argonne, ending with the Armistice.

---

"Mr. Scanlon's tale is at once thrilling and horrible, as any true story of the war inevitably must be, but it is neither neurotic nor insensitive. . . As valuable and informative a record of the World War as has yet been produced by an American participant." Margaret Wallace

+ Bookm 70:460 D '29 180w

"Mr. Scanlon enjoyed the war a good deal more than Herr Renn, but after all he was a marine. There are some bloody passages in the story naturally, and Mr. Scanlon writes with a direct simplicity that results in an occasional smashingly dramatic sentence. This sort of war book has its inevitable thrills; it is also interesting as representing the psychology of a good soldier who got considerable pleasure out of his services." Herschel Brickell

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 O 27 '29 400w

"The history and adventure of the tale, its value as a chronicle of the events of those frightful, fateful months, does not excel its literary value." I. W. Lawrence

+ Boston Transcript p4 N 2 '29 1500w

Reviewed by J. B. Wharton

Nation 129:754 D 18 '29 200w

SCANLON, W: T.—Continued

"The sergeant writes as he fought. Seldom does he allow himself to be deflected into whimsical asides. If you have any curiosity about the life of the enlisted man at the front, here's the book for you." Byron Darnton

+ N Y Evening Post p11 N 2 '29 170w

"It is not written in a manner to distinguish it sharply from a dozen previously published war books."

— + N Y Times p6 N 17 '29 230w

"Mr. Scanlon's novel is wholly praiseworthy as a fine, direct statement of what the marines did and said." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p17 O 25 '29 420w

Reviewed by Johan Smertenko

Outlook 153:398 N 6 '29 150w

"He has written a true book, and I believe, as marines go, that he is a likable young man. The book is not a novel, it is the war as Mr. Scanlon saw it, from the time he left Meaux in June, 1918 until the Armistice, when his division was before Sedan. It is a plain, unvarnished narration of events, with no attempt at plot. . . Some of this book is great stuff to read in bed at night if you want something to put you to sleep, but some of it is extremely pleasant." L. H. Nason

+ Sat R of Lit 6:340 N 2 '29 800w

Springf'd Republican p7e Je 9 '29 220w

Springf'd Republican p7e N 24 '29 230w

SCARBOROUGH, DOROTHY. Can't get a red bird. 408p $2 Harper

29-20112

A portrayal of life among the cotton farmers in Texas, in which Johnny Carr, who struggled against poverty and doubt almost all his life, won out in the end.

---

Booklist 26:121 D '29

Bookm 70:xiii Ja '30 140w

"Miss Scarborough has marshalled her statistics like so much ammunition, she discourses learnedly and appositely upon the cotton market, tick fever and animal industry, diversification, the Texas homestead law, farm organization and co-operation. But as for relating the romance of cotton, or conveying its strange fascination as a crop and a gamble, Miss Scarborough has signally failed."

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p29 N 17 '29 750w

"Miss Scarborough knows all the problems of Texas by heart. She writes in a firm, lucid style, drawing you more and more closely in the net of her sympathies as you read."

+ Boston Transcript p10 N 23 '29 380w

"In places, 'Can't Get a Red Bird' seems a little overloaded with sociology, as if Miss Scarborough forgot, from time to time, in the enthusiasm of her argument that she was writing fiction. But, in the main, the story of Johnny Carr is a dramatic and absorbing romance."

+ — N Y Times p6 O 27 '29 800w

"The chief merit of the book lies in its accurate depiction of conditions among cotton farmers; Miss Scarborough has preached a sermon through a readable story. Her novel lacks the literary merit of some recent stories of farm life, but it is soundly grounded and truthful. It is enlivened with a number of folk-songs, which she knows so well, among them one that furnishes the book with its odd title." Herschel Brickell

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:450 N 23 '29 370w

SCHALIT, LEON. John Galsworthy. 333p $3 Scribner

823 29-15475

This book on Galsworthy was written by a German, the London correspondent of a Berlin literary review. It contains a biographical and personal sketch of the English author and an exhaustive account of each of his writings.

---

Booklist 26:24 O '29

Bookm 70:xvi O '29 80w

"As a reference book for those who want to know the facts of Galsworthy's writings, this volume can hardly be improved upon. As an exhaustive recognition of Galsworthy's value as an exposer of social evils, it can hardly be improved upon. But as literary criticism it contains little original thought; it does no more than lay the foundation for an intelligent appraisal of Galsworthy's position in literature." G. T. Hellman

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 Je 16 '29 820w

"The author of this exhaustive and fascinating study has accomplished a task of charity for all writers. Herr Schalit has done more than merely collect a group of ephemeral essays. He has written an incisive comment upon the whole sweep of Galsworthy's artistic life." W. E. H.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 13 '29 350w

"While a useful book, Schalit's 'John Galsworthy' is one that is very annoying to English readers. Its faithful analyses of every novel, every short story, every play, were, probably quite necessary in the original German, as, no doubt, much of Galsworthy's work was inaccessible to the German reader. The translators would have done better had they reduced the amount of exposition."

+ — N Y Times p2 Jl 28 '29 560w

Sat R of Lit 6:218 O 5 '29 80w

"Perhaps the book was designed mainly for Herr Schalit's compatriots; but anyone who wishes to take stock of Mr. Galsworthy's great contribution to modern literature will find it useful."

+ Spec 143:289 Ag 31 '29 150w

Wis Lib Bul 25:276 Jl '29

SCHAUFFLER, ROBERT HAVEN. Beethoven, the man who freed music. 2v 693p il $10 Doubleday, Doran

B or 92 Beethoven, Ludwig van 29-21494

A "modern" biography of Beethoven the musician and Beethoven the man, with a particularly searching light thrown upon the weaknesses of the latter. The most original contribution of the work lies in the author's examination of facts concerning Beethoven's method of composition in which he argues that most of his compositions were based upon a specific "source-theme." He also expresses an original theory concerning the unity of material in the first movement of the "Eroica."

---

"Mr. Schauffler lacks both a sense of taste and a feeling for proportion; and, in this book at any rate, he is beneath the temper of his subject. In his long technical discussion as to borrowings and 'germ motives' in Beethoven's music, Mr. Schauffler proves himself to be one of those musicians who take a curious delight in finding similarities between phrases in the works of composers. For the rest, the book is a fairly readable, straightforward and chronological account of Beethoven and his work, which tells us little that is new about him, although Mr. Schauffler has covered the ground very thoroughly." Jeffrey Mark

— + New Repub 61:175 Ja 1 '30 950w

"It is Beethoven's role as liberator that forms one of the main theses of Mr. Schauffler's notable study. There is no lack of books dealing with this artist. But when a work of the scope, sanity and originality of Mr. Schauffler's book appears, we can afford to receive it gratefully. . . Despite a taste in chapter headings that would make the fortune of a Hollywood caption writer, Mr. Schauffler moves to his theme with the easy grace and penetration of one who knows and exists for his subject." Bernard Rogers

+ N Y Evening Post p11m O 19 '29 900w

"Mr. Schauffler's book may be considered an important move for brighter Beethoven biographies. Though it is by no means lacking in thoroughness or in seriousness of intention, it is written in a very human style and keeps close to the ground of human interest and level common sense. He has adopted the modern way of treating his subject vivaciously as a man and not as a demigod." R: Aldrich

+ N Y Times p4 Ja 5 '30 700w

"A large study in two volumes with many illustrations devoted to a survey of the entire period of Beethoven's life and all of his music. One is impressed by a feeling of great sincerity about the whole thing and by an understanding of the quality of the music. There is a very readable retelling of the stories about the composer made familiar by Thayer, and there is considerable interesting and expert musical analysis of the most important compositions. It is a book that should prove interesting and valuable to a large public." Douglas Moore
+ Yale R n s 19:403 winter '30 600w

SCHAUFFLER, ROBERT HAVEN. Hobnails in Eden; poems of a Maine vagabond. 93p $2 Dodd

811 29-5941

Between the first poem, "Homesick in England," and the last, "London calling," there are songs of tramping in the Maine Woods, sonnet biographies, love songs, and ballads.

Booklist 26:24 O '29

"People who enjoy the Robert W. Service type of out-door verse will undoubtedly get pleasure from these lyrics. A healthy-minded cosmopolite with a certain facility for rhyme and meter contrasting the stuffiness of a great city with the expansiveness of the deep woods can invariably find readers."
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 My 12 '29 300w

"He imparts his pleasure in nature in a fresh, keen way which brings a responsive thrill in reading. Wood smells, incense from burning cedar logs, the scent of wild strawberries; all these are caught and vitalized. Vision and hearing are as quick and sensitive. In his own peculiar style, he communicates the experienced joy of each with a zest which is wonderfully compelling."
+ Boston Transcript p4 My 25 '29 330w

"This volume of his poetry, pleasantly as it reflects nature, can lay little claim to being other than vagabond verse. As such, however, it is wholesome, genuine, refreshing, and lyrically pleasant."
+ N Y Times p37 N 24 '29 150w

"Mr. Schauffler, though certainly not merely imitative, reminds us of the poets of Vagabondia, Hovey and Carman; and his work will be attractive to the large audience which they found for their poems." Granville Hicks
N Y World p11m Ap 7 '29 100w

"Mr. Schauffler's holiday in Maine is holiday for the reader as well. If the verse is a bit too regular, just a bit too popular, there is, nevertheless, much love of the wild country and its freedom. Mr. Schauffler has in this little book given another 'poetry cure' to the weary and city-confined." E. L. Walton
+ Sat R of Lit 5:884 Ap 13 '29 80w

SCHEIDEMANN, PHILIPP. Making of new Germany; (Eng title Memoirs of a social democrat); tr. by J. E. Michell. 2v 368;373p il $10 Appleton [42s Hodder & S.]

B or 92 Germany—Politics and Government. Social democratic party (Germany) 29-22415

Scheidemann's autobiography and his memoirs of German politics, with emphasis upon events of recent years. He describes the part he played as a social democrat in establishing the new German Republic.

Bookm 70:x Ja '30 280w

"It must be admitted that the opening chapters are a little disappointing. It is as if the author felt impelled to write them as a kind of personal counterpoise to the excessive political preoccupations of the main body of the book. They are vivid enough in their way and not without human interest, but they are singularly unilluminating as a revelation of character or personality. . . These memoirs, whatever their shortcomings, are a most valuable historical document. The publishers and the translator have done us a service in making them available to the English-speaking world." W: K. Stewart
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 D 8 '29 1750w
Boston Transcript p2 N 30 '29 1050w

"Scheidemann's account of his life, which is the history of the party to which he has been devoted, is vivid, dramatic, often humorous, and highly informing, especially for the period during and after the war, when the rest of Europe was less well informed as to the internal questions which were seething in Germany." S. B. Fay
+ Current Hist 31:424 D '29 1400w

"The book is rather a slight contribution to modern German history—it might have been a very big one if the author had not been so preoccupied with himself. But its perpetual fault-finding is far preferable to the hero-worship with which war-time Germany was reeking."
— + Nation and Ath 46:406 D 14 '29 900w

"Scheidemann's is no small contribution to the history of his country, neither in the part he played actively nor in the material he has here set forth. It is an indispensable addition to the record of the years up to 1920 when the memoirs end with an account of the Kapp Putsch." H. R. Knickerbocker
+ N Y Evening Post p10m N 9 '29 1450w

"A valuable work of reference for future historians. To the ordinary reader it gives an interesting and an unexpected picture of German political inefficiency during the war."
+ Sat R 148:728 D 14 '29 700w

"In the whole book there is not the slightest evidence that Herr Scheidemann ever engaged in constructive thinking after he had passed his teens. The petty sneers and petty jokes explain how Herr Scheidemann came to fall from power so swiftly and so completely. But they do not explain how he ever rose to prominence. It seems as though he had set himself to display his worst side; but there must have been something more to him, and the book gives glimpses of it. He has a nimble mind; he can express himself effectively with both tongue and pen."
Times [London] Lit Sup p808 O 17 '29 1150w

SCHERR, MARIE (MARIE CHER, pseud.). Charlotte Corday and certain men of the revolutionary torment. 238p $2.50 Appleton

B or 92 Corday d'Armont, Marie Anne de. Danton, Georges Jacques. Marat, Jean Paul. Robespierre, Maximilian Marie Isidore de. France—History—Revolution, 1792-1794. Girondists 29-4298

Marie Scherr has centered her picture of the Reign of terror and its chief actors, Danton, Marat and Robespierre, about the figure of Charlotte Corday. The knife of this young woman of twenty-five removed one of them, Marat, while the other two met deaths not less violent.

"The author writes her impression of these Titans with modern intensity. This book offers a swift, vivid account of an absorbing epoch."
+ Bookm 69:iv My '29 120w

"Miss Cher has all the aptitudes of a true historian. To scholarly patience and thoroughness she adds the power of organization. She has that breadth of view which, if not inhumanly impartial, at least enables her to understand diverse motives and to recognize honesty in antagonistic purposes. And with all these she has the creative power which comes of a true affinity for her chosen period." Isabel Paterson
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 F 17 '29 1080w

"Miss Cher has given with fresh and penetrating insight an account of Charlotte Corday which makes her stand forth against the bewildering turmoil of her times, in clear and impressive detail." W. S. B.

SCHERR, MARIE—Continued

+ Boston Transcript p2 F 23 '29 450w

"Miss Cher makes the most of romantic and dramatic possibilities and has produced a sparkling volume in the Hollywood manner."

+ Nation 128:624 My 22 '29 100w

Reviewed by T. S. Matthews

New Repub 58:313 My 1 '29 350w

"Miss Marie Scherr makes no pretence to profundity of research but trusts for her effects to vivacity of presentation, character-drawing and scene-setting. She certainly writes very well and has given us here a rapid and extremely readable sketch of the Revolution."

+ New Statesman 32:826 Ap 6 '29 160w

"Vivid, powerful and disappointingly unsymmetrical. The volume is more of an excerpt than a book. Reading it, you feel that somehow unfortunately Miss Cher has lifted 237 pages out of the context of a larger work and shipped it off to the printer." F: F. Van de Water

+ — N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 9 '29 100w

"In a modern manner, with a poignancy unalloyed by cheap sentimentality, the author gives us a Charlotte authentic if not 'romantic.'" F: H. Martens

+ N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 23 '29 380w

"Considering the size of her canvas, one feels that Marie Cher has succeeded in producing a remarkably valid picture—but in cold colors."

+ N Y Times p36 O 20 '29 480w

"Marie Cher is a writer for readers who demand that their history be accurate and hope that it may also be romantic. We recommend her books to them, and also to those for whom a new literary talent of uncommon order is always a source of interest and pleasure."

+ Outlook 151:267 F 13 '29 320w

"It is written with skill; personalities of the French Revolution are vividly drawn, and there is a feeling of breathlessness as we change from one scene to another."

+ Spec 142:341 Mr 2 '29 280w

"The book is marred in the earlier chapters by a style and a method of huddling incidents and facts that might be named cinematographic. Immediately she gets to the nerve of her book, describing Charlotte Corday at Caen, she ceases to be so vigorously eclectic, and continues with a self-control and confidence admirably suited to her material."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p271 Ap 4 '29 1000w

Wis Lib Bul 25:126 Ap '29

SCHERR, MARIE (MARIE CHER, pseud.). Up at the villa. 228p $2 Appleton

29-20439

A villa in Rome is the setting of this novel of love, jealousy and intrigue. A woman tells the story, showing how a group of English people comes into conflict with the Italian temperament. A Russian girl and a young Italian artist are perhaps the most interesting characters in the book.

---

"The oblique method which Miss Cher employs, though admirable as a medium for her swift and richly expressive prose, blurs the characterization by its lack of dialogue. Her people do not reveal themselves; they undergo dissection at her hands—'cerebral poking' she calls it. The book will be chiefly remembered for its exquisite portrayal of the Roman background. Some of its paragraphs distil an inescapable magic."

+ — Bookm 70:xxii N '29 170w

"Here is microscopic dissection of character of the most delicate and wellbred genre, a screen of words behind which you sense, but never actually feel the muffled pulse of reality. The plot is simple but the style is complex. Marie Cher's characters are wrapped like packages, some in thin paper, some in silk sheaths, and you must unwind the baffling cocoon carefully to reach substance. This is beautiful prose but hazardous. You are almost lost in a shower of velvet words." L. G. Marshall

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 S 15 '29 560w

"Exceedingly well written in poetic English, there is much that is lovely to be found in this novel of life in the artist colony in Rome, simpler and less cosmopolitan than that of the Latin Quarter, but no less interesting, infinitely more poetic and holding, for us at least, a greater charm."

+ Boston Transcript p3 S 28 '29 300w

"The story is slight; it is the atmosphere of Rome which the author so successfully evokes, the subtle delineation of character, and the exquisite prose in which she has enveloped her story that will linger in the reader's memory."

+ Nation 130:51 Ja 8 '30 120w

"For those who want a well written, rippling study of this side of the Roman scene it is more than an average book." C. A. Chapman

+ New Repub 60:330 N 6 '29 160w

New Statesman 33:160 My 11 '29 150w

"In its candid morbidity, its felicity of verbal ornament and its subtle preoccupation with the thought of death this book more truly conveys the veritable atmosphere of Rome than any recent book of the Eternal City. 'Up at the Villa' will weary those who prefer Gothic mist to Roman mysticism and who find the red and gold and bronze of a basilica fare too rich for their architectural eye. But in rejecting Miss Cher's unusual tale they will not be taken on the road to Rome, which—all evidence to the contrary notwithstanding—is not identical with the 'easiest way' in art—or in life either." J: Carter

N Y Times p7 S 22 '29 850w

N Y World p11m O 6 '29 300w

"The novel is elaborate and handsome in style. There is some wit in it but very little spontaneity. And, though undeniably well-written, there seems no good reason why it should have been written at all."

— + Outlook 153:189 O 2 '29 230w

"So oblique and ironical is her commentary, the reader is severely taxed to make the inferences necessary to understanding the drift of the story. When it comes to a generalization she can be explicit enough; but like a good friend she hates giving her characters away, and when she must make a statement about them she wraps it in a metaphor. Miss Cher's command of language does not mask a poverty of thought, however, and 'Up at the Villa' is an interesting and suggestive story." L. P. Hartley

— + Sat R 147:544 Ap 20 '29 170w

"'Up at the Villa' is a tale for mature minds and sophisticated palates. We repeat, more truly than any other book of which we know does it bring Rome to the reader, not the Rome of the tourists or of the poets, but the Rome which deals so lightly with life, love, and death that it alone of all cities exists sub specie aeternitatis." J: Carter

Sat R of Lit 6:179 S 28 '29 470w

Reviewed by B. E. Todd

Spec 142:433 Mr 16 '29 180w

Times [London] Lit Sup p292 Ap 11 '29 350w

SCHICKELE, RENE. Heart of Alsace; tr. from the German by Hannah Waller. 351p $3 Knopf

29-5694

In this second volume of "The Rhineland heritage," of which "Maria Capponi" (Book Review Digest, 1928) was the first, Claus von Breuschheim goes back to his home in Alsace-Lorraine, his affair with Maria Capponi definitely closed. Claus returns to a post-war Alsace, and in the political disturbances with which the story is largely concerned, Claus and his stepbrother Ernst play opposing parts.

---

Booklist 26:34 O '29

"It is a story whose interest is primarily local, touched to life and color by the passionate love of a lyric poet for his homeland, whose characters are less real than its backgrounds, whose admirers will be among those to whom a serene literary prose is a final test of achievement." Eugene Lohrke

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 F 10 '29 880w

"It is a gloomy tale of a confused time, its sombreness relieved by descriptive passages of high poetic beauty. One returns to it for a second reading, for despite the rather unconvincing characters there is manifest power in this portrayal of a cross-section of a shifting civilization, which is rarely found." G. R. B. R.

+ Boston Transcript p3 Ap 13 '29 360w

Reviewed by T. S. Matthews

New Repub 58:286 Ap 24 '29 260w

"The book is primarily a political manifesto and only incidentally a novel. It is an ardent plea for the autonomy of Alsace and, although at times incoherent in its ardor, it is often beautiful and convincing." Lillian Rogers

+ — N Y Evening Post p8m F 9 '29 630w

"The book cannot be read quickly, but given full attention it reveals a grasp of both character and situation that cannot fail to be of interest to those who have wondered how Alsatians took the changes brought about by the war."

+ N Y Times p16 Mr 3 '29 500w

"The whole book is brimful of vitality. It is the sort of foreign classic the translation of which is a distinct service to both literatures concerned." Herschel Brickell

+ No Am 227:adv Ap '29 90w

"The book is not convincing, and in its final cumulative effect it is as though the reader were taken into a half-lighted ballroom where a brilliant assembly of people, actually alive outside of fiction, are discernible only as an elusive glitter. Mussolini, Poincaré and many notable men easily to be identified appear under thin disguises, and one has the impression that the other characters also are taken from life, without sufficient refashioning in the imagination. It is a long book and in some respects a tedious and annoying one, but, read patiently, it discloses a fervent and delicate mind." V. S. Pritchett

— + Spec 143:284 Ag 31 '29 500w

SCHIFF, JACOB HENRY. Jacob H. Schiff; his life and letters by Cyrus Adler. 2v 398;396p il $10 Doubleday, Doran

B or 92 28-30273

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

"Jacob Schiff was no doubt a good man, as far removed from greatness as most average folks, and deserving of a better fate than a biography of sheer encomiums."

— Bookm 68:x Ja '29 120w

Boston Transcript p2 Ja 16 '29 630w

"Although the editor has filled in the narrative, his contribution is more explanatory than appreciative, and the writings of Mr. Schiff, which touch on many events that have an important place in recent American history, are sufficient to reveal both the man and his attitude toward his time." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p10m D 2 '28 920w

"Mr. Schiff had no gifts of literary expression, and to plod through long stretches of his letters is like journeying through the Great American Desert. Their style is dull and commonplace, and they make tediously heavy reading, especially through the writer's fondness for involved sentences of inordinate length. Yet those who have the patience to make their way through these 800 pages will be rewarded by making the acquaintance of a singularly fine character."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p283 Ap 11 '29 870w

SCHILPP, PAUL ARTHUR. Do we need a new religion? 325p $2.50 Holt

201 Religion—Philosophy 29-18534

Because of much that has been said regarding a steady decline of religion since the war, the author raises the question of a "new" religion. His conviction, in answering this question, is that what the world seems to need today is a revival of real Christianity. The book concludes with chapters on the new attitude of science, and "unbelieving youth."

"I commend the volume as the most useful that has recently come to my hand." J: H. Holmes

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Ja 5 '30 200w

"One very reluctantly offers any criticism of this volume. The author's earnestness is disarming; his perfervid impatience with the obvious weakness and prevalent failings of Christians and the church, and his eagerness to have Christianity a dynamic force in modern society, cannot fail to meet with sympathetic response. He voices a protest that calls for incessant iteration. Unfortunately, the very passion of his message detracts from its balance, breadth and effectiveness. Those interested in the question had better read Professor Schilpp's book before coming to any settled conviction on the subject." W: E. Hammond

+ — Christian Century 47:51 Ja 8 '30 850w

"The author, a professor of philosophy, has thought deeply and he writes clearly about the state of religion today. This is an excellent resumé of the religious situation in 1929, with constructive suggestions as to the way out." E. B. Chaffee

+ Outlook 153:271 O 16 '29 200w

SCHINDEL, BAYARD. Golden pilgrimage. 324p $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

29-17733

A story of America during the war years, 1914-1918, as experienced by a small boy, Peter Longman, whose father is a captain in American training-camps. The scene shifts from Washington at America's entrance in the war, to San Antonio and the barracks there; then to Little Rock, where young Peter goes to public school and watches the training at Camp Pike; and back to Washington again. During the four years Peter's child-attitude has changed from aggressive militarism to skeptical questioning of the supposed "glory" of war.

"The book is both an interesting human document and a clever piece of literary work. I think it is too long, that its various points are too often elucidated: but it is my failing to think most novels too long. Also I think it occasionally exaggerates. But these are minor points. It is a special merit of the book that on the whole it sees both sides so sympathetically." A. B. Parsons

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 Ag 18 '29 850w

"Mr. Schindel's book is remarkable among first novels for its ease of style and its clear picture of a boy's feelings. There are dialogues with French officers and Jewish refugees that are a bit too clearly staged to bring out the author's point; but the conversations of non-coms and privates, ranging from politics to tapeworms, are salty, and reminiscent of the days of khaki and dust." L. S. Morris

+ New Repub 60:181 O 2 '29 350w

"Obviously Mr. Schindel has, in his maturity, very thoroughly checked up and amplified his recollections of a vivid childhood. This book was made possible by a great deal that has been published since the boy grew older. That is what makes it such a thorough chronicle. To saddle it all on the mentality of a boy in his first decade is unnecessary."

+ — N Y Times p8 Ag 18 '29 700w

"Perhaps the greatest service of the novel is its vivid reminder of the rigors and hysterias that the United States experienced during the War. And yet Mr. Schindel's novel is not to be fully commended, in spite of its intelligent historicalness. It lacks continuity and energy; the weight of conscientiously developed background dulls the edge of both character and narrative."

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:256 O 12 '29 300w

SCHISGALL, OSCAR. Barron Ixell, crime breaker. 346p $2 Longmans

[29-18258]

In four stories, "The circle of terror," "The devil's pigeons," "The king of crime," and "Follow the red line," Barron Ixell, the American criminologist, comes to the aid of the police, respectively, in Brussels, Paris, Berlin, and Geneva. Thru a subtle knowledge of psychology and novel methods of deduction, he succeeds in solving the mystery in four crimes of a high order.

"A very well-written piece of detective fiction."

+ Bookm 70:xxv S '29 60w

"The Continental settings atone in part for the monotonous formula." Will Cuppy

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ag 25 '29 100w

"Barron Ixell has neither a Dr. Watson nor a Conan Doyle to record his exploits and make his deductions appear convincing. Lacking such a chronicler the stories seem a bit preposterous, although they do provide some very satisfactory thrills."

— + N Y Times p38 S 22 '29 130w

Sat R of Lit 6:140 S 14 '29 130w

Springf'd Republican p7e S 15 '29 110w

"Clever stories. . . In all [of which] Barron Ixell stands out as a vital person, not fantastically odd, but as a real flesh and blood detective."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p797 O 10 '29 110w

Wis Lib Bul 25:324 O '29

SCHLUMP; the story of a German soldier; told by himself; tr. from the German by Maurice Samuel. 299p $2.50 Harcourt

29-20435

Schlump was a very simple German boy when the war began. To him war was largely a matter of dirt, starvation, love and horseplay. In the end he came back to his own home, "a simple soldier, just as on the day when he had left."

"There are deliciously humorous passages in the book, particularly one quite broad story about a bear hunt, and it is altogether a highly readable account of a soldier's life. Whether it will find its thousands of readers depends really more upon the life of the vogue for war books than upon its intrinsic merit, for it has both validity and interest." Herschel Brickell

Bookm 70:333 N '29 430w

"There is vitality and integrity in this book. It is not a matter of fine writing, for that has been ignored, but it may be forgiven in an author whose contention is with the truth and who has not yet learned to sentimentalize over an episode which few men found moving at the time. 'Schlump' may have been written ten years later, but it sounds as if it were contemporary with the war." Larry Barretto

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 O 13 '29 760w

Boston Transcript p6 D 14 '29 330w

"This is another 'All Quiet on the Western Front,' not at all inferior to that amazingly vivid and revealing picture of the mind of the common soldier."

+ Christian Century 46:1251 O 9 '29 130w

Cleveland Open Shelf p158 D '29

Nation and Ath 46:sup226 N 9 '29 70w

Reviewed by T: Boyd

N Y Evening Post p7m S 28 '29 80w

" 'Schlump' is not well done. It is not badly done; it is articulate, sometimes vigorous, occasionally rich with life; but as writing it is purposeless, pushing on toward no recognized goal, guided only by the chronology of four years of fighting." L: Kronenberger

— N Y Times p9 N 17 '29 350w

Reviewed by Gustav Davidson

N Y World p11m N 3 '29 200w

"It is the most complete—if not the most provocative—evocation of the World War, as seen through the naïve eyes of a young Teuton recruit, that we have ever read. While not so authentic a manual of front line fighting as 'Storm of Steel,' nor so grandly conceived and beautifully written as Arnold Zweig's 'Case of Sergeant Grischa,' 'Schlump' will be remembered by its readers for its vivid comprehension of that portion of the German population which suffered in brave silence while the sons of Prussia were being eaten by the insatiable monster—War." E. M. Benson

+ Sat R of Lit 6:556 D 14 '29 800w

Reviewed by Mary Ross

Survey 63:166 N 1 '29 100w

"It is vivid and forcible, but so coarse that it sometimes seems to aim deliberately at shocking the average reader. Like 'All Quiet on the Western Front,' which it resembles in some respects, its grossness is by no means confined to scenes of the battlefields—indeed, if it were, there would be no cause for complaint. Many critics in this country as well as in Germany have lost their heads over the novels of this school and exaggerated their merits, but it must be admitted that all which have hitherto been translated into English have had considerable merits and that this is no exception."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p764 O 3 '29 450w

Reviewed by Paul Jones

World Tomorrow 13:39 Ja '30 360w

SCHMALHAUSEN, SAMUEL DANIEL. Our changing human nature. 510p $3.50 Macaulay

131 Psychology. Sex (psychology). Psychoanalysis

29-29854

The author of "Why we misbehave" continues his thesis in the present volume, in which he analyzes the conflicting elements in modern life and attempts to explain the bases of the changes which that life is rapidly undergoing. Part one is a discussion of the psychology of sex, with particular emphasis upon the modern woman's problem. In part two Dr Schmalhausen psychoanalyzes the work of contemporary writers, with special portrait studies of Bernard Shaw, Frank Harris, and H. L. Mencken. Part three, which he entitles The plight of the normal mind, is a survey of the new psychology. Part four is a treatise on re-educating the modern mind.

Boston Transcript p5 D 7 '29 350w

" 'Our Changing Human Nature' might be called a sequel to 'Why We Misbehave,' his former book. After teaching us why we misbehave, the author proceeds to advise us how to change our misbehaving nature. His is one of those minds created in order to mediate between the scientists and intelligent laymen. He soaks himself full of science, presses it through his personality, and presents it to his readers in a form that is easy to understand, so that they can benefit thereby. There are men who think out loud. Schmalhausen writes out loud. . . 'Our Changing Human Nature' contains valuable and important information presented in a rare and appetizing form, even where the author handles the most delicate subjects." Fritz Wittels

+ N Y Evening Post p12m N 16 '29 950w

SCHMUCKER, SAMUEL CHRISTIAN. Heredity and parenthood. 322p il $2.50 Macmillan

575 Heredity. Reproduction. Eugenics

29-17308

The forces of heredity as exemplified in plant and animal life are first stressed by the author. The questions as to the inheritance of disease, health and criminality are discussed. Parenthood from its earliest beginnings to its complex development in mammals is explained, together with the sex function, and how it should be regarded in the relationship of men and women and the teaching of children.

"This is expressed simply and demands no previous knowledge of the subject and is appropriate to those interested people who have lacked the opportunity of a high school education or more." W. D. Ludlam
+ Am J Pub Health 19:1278 N '29 350w
Booklist 26:107 D '29

"The book is recommended to those who would renew or acquire an acquaintance with modern biology."
+ Bookm 70:xii O '29 180w
Boston Transcript p3 S 28 '29 320w

"The presentation is simple and readable, with the least possible use of technical phraseology and lucid explanation of such terms as accuracy makes necessary while the matter is all of rather elementary kind. Throughout the volume there is a constant application to the affairs of everyday life of the principles that are developed. Although the work is as sound in its science and as clear in its exposition as are similar volumes written in the modern frank, realistic, call-a-spade-a-spade style the author has found it possible to adhere to an old-time delicacy of expression."
+ N Y Times p28 N 3 '29 330w

"It furnishes a vehicle for the teaching of a good deal of elementary but important physiology and biology that few persons get in their school days. It will be welcomed alike by students and parents, and can be recommended to them with confidence." Paul Popenoe
+ Survey 63:359 D 15 '29 170w

SCHNEIDER, HERBERT WALLACE. Making the Fascist state. 392p $5 Oxford

945.09 Italy—Fascist movement 28-31021

"Dr. Schneider has disclosed the roots of the movement in the economic distress, social collisions, parliamentary incompetence, and general disillusionment that followed the World War, illustrating general principles always by concrete citations. He has traced the rise of Fascist fighting units here and there over Italy, the evolution of Mussolini from revolutionary socialism to bourgeois patriotism, and the consolidation of the middle-class reaction under his leadership. Then follows an analysis of the Fascist state in the process of making. For the reader who likes to know what Fascist leaders have actually said on various significant themes, there is an appendix of extracts from their speeches, articles, orations and proclamations."—New Repub

---

"It is the first strictly scientific treatment of its subject available in English. The result is a surprisingly impartial examination of a remarkable political, economic, and sociological phenomenon." Leonard Manyon
+ Am Hist R 34:597 Ap '29 550w

"At last an adequate book on Fascism has appeared by an American scholar. It is of course no longer up to date, as events in the Fascist state are moving swiftly, but as a description of the development of Fascism down to the year 1928 it leaves little to be desired, and the author is to be congratulated upon having produced a book which is at once profound and dispassionate in its presentation of Fascism." C: A. Ellwood
+ Am J Soc 35:323 S '29 700w

"He has documented his work with the most valuable notes and appendices, generally preferring to let the Fascists speak for themselves. Although it is more a source book than an interpretation, it stands, at the present time, as the most useful work yet published in English on Fascism." W. Y. Elliott
+ Am Pol Sci R 23:478 My '29 1350w
Booklist 25:280 Ap '29

"Much new light is thrown on Fascism by this book as a result, partly of the author's success in gathering unpublished documents pertinent to the new situation in Italy, partly of the personal contacts he made with the leaders and opponents of the movement during a recent tour in that country." E. N.
+ Boston Transcript p4 D 26 '28 750w

"Of the half dozen fairly recent books in English which make some plausible pretense to adequacy in their presentation of the spirit and history of Fascist Italy Schneider's is incomparably the best."
+ Christian Century 46:617 My 8 '29 230w

"On the whole, this book is an excellent production. It is well written and comparatively free from technical errors." S. B. Clough
+ Hist Outlook 20:141 Mr '29 1000w

"The most competent, searching, and luminous analysis of this strange and arresting phenomenon which has yet appeared, certainly in the English language." Ferdinand Schevill
+ Int J Ethics 40:129 O '29 1500w

Reviewed by Hiram Motherwell
+ Nation 128:402 Ap 3 '29 960w

"Amid the swirl of many passions and opinions in Italy, Dr. Schneider has kept his head, and after years of study has given us a realistic and highly important study of Fascism. All is done in good form, without rancor and with the saving grace of humor. Result—a truly significant book." C: A. Beard
+ New Repub 57:277 Ja 22 '29 1450w

"By far the most lucid, the most penetrating and the most authoritative exposition of Fascist fact and fancy this reviewer has met with in four years of readings on the subject in the English, French and Italian languages. No one seriously interested in Italy or in modern political theory can afford not to read Mr. Schneider's excellent study. If only for the well chosen specimens of Fascist literature it contains it would be unusually valuable." Percy Winner
+ N Y Evening Post p9m D 22 '28 900w

Reviewed by W: Macdonald
N Y Times p3 F 3 '29 2600w

Reviewed by Walter Littlefield
N Y Times p3 O 27 '29 1000w

" 'Making the Fascist State' should take its place among the few authoritative studies of post-war Italy. The author's antagonism to the red revolt of 1919 leads him to view rather sympathetically the black defense of the Bourgeois Government, but otherwise he retains a dispassionate attitude that is really remarkable in an analysis of so explosive a problem." B. Smith
+ N Y World p10m Ja 13 '29 210w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell
+ No Am 227:adv F '29 80w
Pratt p33 summer '29

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 79:26 F '29 120w
St Louis 27:138 Ap '29

Reviewed by W. Y. Elliott
Sat R of Lit 5:1125 Je 22 '29 1350w

"The author of Making the Fascist State, who passed a sabbatical year (1926-27) in Italy as a Fellow of the National Social Science Research Council, deserves our warmest thanks for his masterly analysis both of Fascist fantasy and Fascist government. He supplies just that background which is essential to the understanding of current events in Italy or of such publications as the Year Book of the International Centre of Fascist Studies."
+ Spec 142:512 Mr 30 '29 1000w
Springf'd Republican p7e Ap 28 '29 150w
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p196 Mr 14 '29 1100w
World Tomorrow 12:426 O '29 40w

SCHNITZLER, ARTHUR. Little novels; tr. from the German by Eric Sutton. 279p $2.50 Simon & Schuster [7s 6d Constable]

29-18001

"Little Novels consists of ten of Arthur Schnitzler's short stories, all written between 1900 and 1910. Most of the ten are studies in feminine psychology, accomplished, clever, surprising, but rather on the romantic side of things. Love, it seems, was a desperate busi-

SCHNITZLER, ARTHUR—Continued
ness in the Vienna of a generation ago."—Times [London] Lit Sup

Bookm 70:xiv S '29 150w

"If there is something old-fashioned, and so slightly unreal, about most of these stories, all of them are skillfully written and are as easy to read as Viennese coffee is to drink. Several touch upon the supernatural, and handle this unlikely motif in a felicitous and thrilling fashion. Schnitzler does masterly work when he treads the borderline between truth and fantasy." Babette Deutsch

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 Ag 25 '29 1000w

Boston Transcript p5 N 13 '29 220w

"All these stories are told with a grace and delicacy that relieve them of horror without depriving them of force." E. S.

+ New Statesman 33:712 S 21 '29 430w

N Y Evening Post p12m N 9 '29 320w

"The stories are distinguished by the fastidious perfection of technique which has always characterized the author's work. Schnitzler scorns the superfluous, the extraneous. Nevertheless, we have the impression of something slightly outmoded." Mary Shirley

+ — Outlook 153:28 S 4 '29 320w

"His stories, although they are contrived with great skill and although they display a remarkable power of analysis, seldom strike the reader—the English reader more particularly—as being quite real. . . Mr. Eric Sutton's translations have the directness and the finish which Schnitzler requires in English."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p635 Ag 15 '29 540w

SCHOEPP, MRS META. Scrapped; adapted and tr. by Louise Tausig. 260p $2.50 Covici

29-10482

"It is a singularly objective story of two boys of nineteen, simple, unexacting fellows who saw war service, one as a junior officer on a sub, the other as an aviator in Unsere Marine, and have been let down—and out—into civilian life again. They crave, above all things, to be assimilated into the New Germany, to fit in somewhere and get to work. But they find themselves unwelcome, suspect."—N Y Evening Post

Reviewed by Clifford M'Guinness

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 Je 9 '29 230w

Cleveland Open Shelf p126 S '29

"The book is as sunless as a submerged cathedral, as tiresome as a diet of pig's knuckles." E. M. Benson

— Nation 129:45 Jl 10 '29 120w

" 'Scrapped' is rich in objective detail, handled with an unimpassioned literalness that bestows all sorts of conviction as to its honesty; and relieved, now and again, with robust Teutonic humor. I found it an extraordinarily interesting book." Florence Haxton

+ N Y Evening Post p4s Je 8 '29 520w

"The tragedy of this tale is lightened by bits of optimism and color. But the main tone of the book is the pathos of these men who are cast aside after having done long service and occasionally the pathos runs into sentimentality."

+ — N Y Times p19 Je 9 '29 480w

"Of the few novels depicting Germany in the chaotic months immediately after the revolution hitherto appearing in English none that we have read has surpassed this one. The story is told dispassionately, from a wholly detached viewpoint."

+ N Y World p11m N 3 '29 270w

"Told by the author with enough detail to make it realistically convincing. There is an element of humor in the story, and certain of its scenes would be effective in comedy." Amelia von Ende

+ Sat R of Lit 6:155 S 21 '29 450w

SCHOETTLE, EDWIN J., ed. Sailing craft; mostly descriptive of smaller pleasure sail boats of the day; with an introd. by A. Edward Newton; embodying writings of well known sailors. 786p il $12 Macmillan

797.14 Yachts and yachting. Sailing. Yacht racing. Boats and boating 28-23625

The title of the book is purposely ambiguous, for Mr Schoettle is describing here not only sailing craft of every kind including individual histories of famous racing yachts, but also has something to say about the building of yachts and the craft of sailing them.

"For the first time the many different classes of sailing craft that have arisen in various parts of the country are to be found in one volume where their merits and accomplishments may be compared. In addition there are chapters on yachting and yacht racing in all parts of the world. The large, handsome volume contains hundreds of photographs and drawings."

+ Bookm 68:xxv F '29 150w

"There is a great amount of invaluable information stowed away in the pages of the book, records of well known yachts and trophies, figures and measurements of various classes, names of boats in popular classes." E. B. S.

+ Boston Transcript p7 D 22 '28 400w

Nation 128:624 My 22 '29 50w

St Louis 27:22 Ja '29

SCHOONMAKER, FRANK. Come with me through Italy. (Traveler's ser.) 218p il $2 McBride

914.5 Italy—Description and travel. Art—Italy 29-11919

A guide-book to Italy which is divided into towns, each of which is considered separately. The history, art and beauties of the country are considered, as well as the actual expenses. There are illustrations and maps.

Booklist 26:27 O '29

Cleveland Open Shelf p142 N '29

"As a guide through Italy he is always interesting and enthusiastic, a lover of all that is beautiful and quick to see whatever has charm, interest, fascination. His little volume has in large measure a quality that is usually lacking in guide books—that of allure."

+ N Y Times p17 Je 16 '29 200w

St Louis 27:289 O '29

SCHRAM, FRU CONSTANCE WIEL (NYGAARD). Olaf, Lofoten fisherman; tr. from the Norwegian by Siri Andrews. 187p il $2 Longmans

29-16432

Olaf and Kari lived in Norway, and Olaf's greatest ambition was to be a fisherman and go to Lofoten. One summer a part of his dream came true, for his father went as doctor to Lofoten and Olaf accompanied him. While his father went visiting the sick Olaf played with his young cousin and learned much about the lives and ways of fishermen. But Kari visited in the city, for Kari was only a girl.

Booklist 26:38 O '29

Cleveland Open Shelf p132 N '29

"It is one of the nicest stories for little children we have come across in quite a while. It has so much Norwegian feeling and cool vividness and at the same time it has an understanding of childhood no matter where its locale." M. G. Bonner

+ N Y Times p5 Jl 28 '29 100w

St Louis 27:291 O '29

"Small in scope but well made and written." M. C. Dodd

+ Sat R of Lit 6:404 N 16 '29 80w

SCHREINER, OLIVE (MRS S. C. CRONWRIGHT-SCHREINER) (RALPH IRON, pseud.). Undine; with an introd. by S. C. Cronwright-Schreiner. 374p $2.50 Harper

29-694

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

"It is obviously autobiography of a sort. But Olive Schreiner was enough of a young person to breathe her own passion into this lay-figure of an Undine: so that although the novel is immature, written in a style and from a feminist point of view that now seem very much out of date, the emotional sincerity of the author carries us with her, and we see often in this book the promise which she afterward fulfilled in The Story of an African Farm." T. S. Matthews

+ — Bookm 68:687 F '29 420w

Boston Transcript p4 D 15 '28 80w

Churchman 139:28 My 11 '29 100w

"The thought in the book, although often immature and rashly expressed, is as fine as in all Olive Schreiner's writings, and its rashness has a nobility which quite redeems it from the pretentious insolence that disfigures so much modern revolt. It is not a great novel; but no one at all sensitive to literary genius could fail to see in it the certainty that its author would do moving and notable work."

+ — New Statesman 33:50 Ap 20 '29 900w

" 'Undine' is a remarkably bad novel. It is immature, it is verbose, it is stilted, it is very often as unreal as a fairy tale and twice as unconvincing; and it is only saved a little by the comparative modernity and fearlessness of its point of view."

— + N Y Times p13 D 30 '29 500w

" 'Undine's' lachrymose sentimentality today seems rather crude and innocuous stuff, though it could be far worse, and when one considers the immaturity of the author, one is inclined to accept the book as exactly the kind of tale a bright, gifted young girl of that time and environment should have written." E. C. Beckwith

N Y World p11m D 30 '29 150w

"A very bleak story, its sombre hues much intensified to satisfy a youthful craving for undiluted misery, and full of flagrant improbabilities." L. P. Hartley

— Sat R 147:410 Mr 23 '29 500w

"Youthful as it is, Undine is of one piece with Olive Schreiner's later novels, even From Man to Man. Emotionally, she remained, as a writer, in the state of adolescence, nobly gifted, richly fermenting, but not progressing in experience." R. A. Taylor

Spec 142:346 Mr 2 '29 240w

"The amazing feature of 'Undine' is that, with all its crudities and melodrama, it succeeds in giving a remarkably vivid sense of characters."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 6 '29 520w

"In some respects there is even more genius evident in 'Undine' than in 'The Story of an African Farm.' Olive Schreiner had not in 'Undine' perfected her technique, her imaginings and expression were at times a trifle crude; but her blazing sincerity burns with an even fiercer light than it did in her later novels and allegories."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p180 Mr 7 '29 570w

SCHUBERT, PAUL. Electric word; the rise of radio. 311p il $2.50 Macmillan

621.384 Radio 28-25513

A history of the development of radio from the discovery of the Hertzian waves to the great broadcasting systems and gigantic hook-ups of the present day.

"Mr. Schubert's book is neither romantic nor technical but gives a clear and straightforward story of ethereal communication during the past thirty-two years."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 F 17 '29 130w

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 2 '29 500w

Nation 128:291 Mr 6 '29 180w

"An exceedingly interesting history of radio development is here placed in the hands of the general public. And even the people who have neither scientific bent nor a liking for radio entertainment will probably find the book readable. For the book is nontechnical, informative and dramatic in its presentation of radio history."

+ N Y Times p9 N 25 '28 330w

"The book is an authoritative and accurate history of the development of radio giving the salient scientific developments and the attendant business and legal combinations and tangles that resulted. The reader will find the book interesting and instructive, possibly a bit prosaic." Paul Cloke

+ Portland Evening News p9 Ap 30 '29 1000w

Pratt p15 spring '29

Springf'd Republican p10 My 28 '29 60w

SCHULTZ, ALAN BRENER. Private secretary; the story of Mary Linden. 392p $2.50 Simon & Schuster

29-14909

"Mr. Schultz has turned an observant eye, directed by a brisk intelligence, upon the typical personnel of a New York office—almost any competent New York office—and drawn from it plenty of material to fill the pages of 'Private Secretary' full to overflowing with the rattle, rivalry, innuendo and productive work of the metropolitan business day. As contemporary as the daily paper, the story of Mary Linden must approximate at innumerable points the experience of thousands of attractive-looking young 'business' girls."—N Y Evening Post

"Mr. Schultz's book is not a universal epic of the Working Girl. Mary Linden is quintessentially a New York stenographer. Her talk reeks of hard-boiled smartness. Her ambitions and her sentiments would only be possible in this era of surface brass and putty substrata. Anyone, say in England, who chanced to open 'Private Secretary' to-morrow or ten years hence might easily mistake it for a purple-fantasy. It is the chronicle of a life entirely bounded by the fashions and enthusiasms in a moment of transition." V. P. Ross

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 Ag 4 '29 850w

"It is Mr. Schultz's inherent sincerity which makes the publication of a novel such as this dangerous to his future work. He has a keen sense for the dramatic. Someone with more knowledge of human beings could write a good story out of the material he has assembled; he himself does not follow the conventional, nor does his subject matter taste insipid, stereotyped although it is." W. E. H.

— Boston Transcript p2 S 4 '29 520w

New Repub 60:109 S 11 '29 150w

Reviewed by Florence Haxton

N Y Evening Post p6m Ag 3 '29 580w

"Mr. Schultz has stated the problem of the modern, independent and ambitious business girl too well for 'Private Secretary' to be taken at its face value as a novel. It is a document unfortunately invalidated by the weak conventionality of its conclusion."

+ — N Y Times p6 Jl 28 '29 700w

Reviewed by Gertrude Diamant

N Y World p11m D 22 '29 120w

"Is life beyond the frosted doors of big business as full of wise-cracking, flirtation, and general whoopee as 'Private Secretary' would lead one to believe? If so, why do the people who spend their days in offices spend their evenings at musical comedies? The two seem so much alike. So no wonder Alan Schultz's novel is amusing, and no wonder it is a little unconvincing, in its initial ebullience. The whole first half of the book is a running fire of modern badinage with every conversational opening answered on the spur of the moment with exactly the snappy retort which in real life can only be thought of hours after the party is over."

SCHULTZ, A. B.—Continued

Sat R of Lit 6:164 S 21 '29 320w

SCHULTZ, JAMES WILLARD. Skull Head the terrible. 208p il $1.75 Houghton

29-18927

A story for boys the theme of which is Indian revenge. Skull-head, so-called because of his terrible facial disfigurement, is so repellent to all people that he seeks revenge by making secret killing raids upon neighboring tribes. The father of Bear Child, a young warrior, is one of the victims. The hero determines to track down Skull-head and kill him in retaliation for all his brutal murders. With the cooperation of his tribe, Bear Child succeeds.

"Like Mr. Schultz's previous books, it is rich in intimate knowledge of Indian manners and customs, ways of thinking and doing."

+ N Y Times p12 N 17 '29 100w

"Contains a full measure of delicious shivers for boys of from ten to sixteen years of age who like to read Indian stories. . . The author has spent much time with the Indians about whom he writes, and this is his twenty-fourth story about them." A. B. Applegate

+ Sat R of Lit 6:406 N 16 '29 250w

SCHUMAN, FREDERICK LEWIS. American policy toward Russia since 1917; a study of diplomatic history, international law, and public opinion. 399p $3.75 Int. pub.

327.47 Russia—Foreign relations—United States. United States—Foreign relations—Russia 28-20123

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

"As a whole the book is loosely written, making use of such barbarous terms as 'motivated', yet it is a good historical survey which should be useful if read with a careful eye." A. L. P. D.

+ — Am Hist R 34:627 Ap '29 450w

"The amount of new material uncovered is not large. Although he has used extensively printed sources in English, Dr. Schuman appears to have read nothing in Russian, and to have relied largely on the New York Times, Current History, and the writings of journalists. Undaunted by the limitations of his sources, he ventures conclusions on many points on which adequate evidence seems to this reviewer not yet available." J. P. Baxter, 3rd.

Am Pol Sci R 23:216 F '23 480w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 O 28 '28 350w

"It is the merit of this scholarly book that it tells the story in a manner which helps us relive again a fateful period and to appraise the divisions and acts from a clearer perspective and with a cooler temper than was given to the troubled spirits who evolved them." P. H. Douglas

+ Christian Century 45:1260 O 18 '28 850w

"There was a need for this book. It is sober and scholarly and carries the record well into 1928. There is nothing argumentative or emotional about it; but all the author's effort to be impartial cannot conceal his conviction that refusal to recognize the existence of one of the great Powers is silly business. And, of course, it is." L: S. Gannett

+ Nation 128:200 F 13 '29 500w

St Louis 27:9 Ja '29

+ Springf'd Republican p12 N 7 '28 900w

"A well documented, statesmanlike presentation of an extremely controversial subject." L. L. W. Wilson

+ Survey 41:176 N 1 '28 160w

"Mr. Schuman's book is the first attempt yet made to make clear the principles underlying the policy of a civilized State towards Russia since the Revolution. It has serious faults. In his eagerness to defend the foreign policy of the Bolshevists Mr. Schuman has been drawn to the discussion of subjects, such as the extent of White propaganda abroad, which have little revelance to his main thesis; and others, such as the possible connexion between the recent oil war and the Arcos raid, about which there is as yet too little evidence available to allow of any reasonable deduction. But he does succeed in making clear certain general lines of policy which provide an interesting comparison with the attitude of the British and other European Governments."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p833 O 24 '29 1600w

SCHURZ, CARL. Intimate letters of Carl Schurz, 1841-1869; tr. and ed. by Joseph Schafer. (Collections) 491p il $3 State hist. soc. of Wis.

B or 92 29-9286

"Dr. Schafer's translation of Carl Schurz's letters covers the period of his life in Wisconsin, 1855-1866, beginning with a series written before his coming to America and setting forth the circumstances of his break with his old life, and extending for two or three years beyond the Wisconsin era to take in his election to the Senate. Some of the letters have been printed previously only in German, in the German edition of the Memoirs, the others appear here for the first time."—Wis Lib Bul

"It is in his letters to his wife, which constitute the bulk of the present collection and are by far the most interesting and instructive, that we gain the deepest insight into the character of Schurz and the secret of his success: the innate idealism of his nature, balanced by a keen sense of reality, his uncompromising devotion to fixed principles, his unbounded ambition, and his child-like delight in his successes as a speaker and growing political influence. True to his fixed habit of using only his native tongue in his family circle, the letters, with but one or two exceptions, were all written in German. Their present excellent translation into English was made by their editor, Professor Joseph Schafer, who also has written a lucid and instructive preface to the collection." Julius Goebel

+ Am Hist R 35:178 O '29 580w

Wis Lib Bul 25:194 Je '29

SCHUYLER, ROBERT LIVINGSTON. Parliament and the British Empire; some constitutional controversies concerning imperial legislative jurisdiction. 279p $3.75 Columbia univ. press

342.42 Great Britain—Colonies. Great Britain—Parliament. Great Britain—Constitutional history 29-11683

An analysis of the relations of Parliament to outlying parts of the Empire. In the past the legal right of Parliament to legislate on any subject for a British colony was disputed. Now it is an accepted principle of constitutional law; but Parliament has virtually lost its right, says Professor Schuyler, to legislate for the self-governing dominions.

"The volume is interestingly written, carefully documented, and well indexed." Howard Robinson

+ Am Hist R 35:356 Ja '30 550w

Reviewed by G: M. Wrong

Am Pol Sci R 23:1011 N '29 1100w

Boston Transcript p2 Jl 6 '29 550w

"Parliament and the British Empire is a thoroughly scholarly study and a valuable corrective of Professor McIlwain's American Revolution. Neither book can be ignored by students of constitutional history, though they should be read together." R. A. MacKay

+ Canadian Hist R 10:261 S '29 780w

"The first chapter, which ranks as one of the finest pieces of historical writing this reviewer has read in some time, satisfying as it does every canon of criticism, was largely stimulated by Professor C. H. McIlwain's contention that, in general, history sustained the radical arguments at the time of the American Revolution.

. . Parliament and the British Empire is a constitutional history of the British Empire, a closely knit and logical book. In it Professor Schuyler has given us a pioneer work of sterling scholarship marked by lucid presentation, which is worthy of a discriminative welcome." C: F. Mullett

+ Hist Outlook 21:33 Ja '30 1000w

"Professor Schuyler has done a sterling piece of work, and his book is a contribution of first rate importance to British constitutional history. Special attention should be directed to his voluminous notes, into which he has contrived to pack a very large body of information and criticism in addition to citations of his authorities." W: MacDonald

+ Nation 129:693 D 4 '29 750w

SCHWAB, SIDNEY ISAAC, and VEEDER, BORDEN SMITH. The adolescent, his conflicts and escapes. 365p $3 Appleton

136.7 Adolescence 29-16879

A survey resulting from years of clinical experience in the study of adolescence and its problems. The physiological aspects of adolescence and its mental conflicts are discussed, and there is a concluding analysis of the adolescent's problems in relation to sex, religion, business ambition, social relationship, etc.

---

"Dr. Veeder contributes three chapters that clearly distinguish fact from allegations, presumptions and possibilities. He presents the basic material that reveals the adolescent as a biologic social unit in physical organization and mode of functioning. . . It is encouraging to have adolescence discussed as something more than chemistry and physics or heredity and culture." I. S. Wile

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 O 6 '29 600w

"Clear in statement but perhaps somewhat formal in terminology for the parents for whom, as well as for teachers, the discussion is intended."

+ — J Home Econ 21:858 N '29 160w

"The reader leaves the book without any well-defined conception of the nature of the adolescent conflict. This may be due to the fact that the authors theorize without quoting any concrete facts or experience as the basis for their generalizations. The summary of the physiological changes occurring at adolescence is useful, but again there is constant unnecessary restatement. The book is verbose and contributes nothing new to the knowledge of the adolescent period."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:387 N 9 '29 130w

Reviewed by K: A. Menninger
Survey 63:229 N 15 '29 170w

SCHWIMMER, ROSIKA. Tisza tales. 225p il $5 Doubleday, Doran

398 Folklore—Hungary 28-28704

Folk and fairy stories of the river Tisza in Hungary and the fishermen and farmers along its shores, illustrated charmingly and with sly humor by Will Pogány.

---

"Rosika Schwimmer has done more than fill a gap in the existing literature for children. She has made a very real contribution in giving as a background for the stories a picture of the Hungarian people in their picturesque activities and homely occupations. . . The color plates, though gay and suggestive, seem hasty in execution and inadequately reproduced." Mary Palache

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Mr 24 '29 700w

"A collection of old Hungarian stories retold, and restrung on a rich, gold thread. They are as good as they are ancient and each one has that air of absolute and solemn verity that inhabits the true folk-tales of all countries, however preposterous and fantastic, if they are told as they should be. These stories are at once delicate and graceful and hearty and humorous and filled with a warm gusto." Freda Kirchwey

+ Nation 127:sup617 D 5 '28 530w

"More than anything else the stories lack vitality. Although they relate many exploits, they never seem to touch the virility that belongs so much to folklore. The pictures make it interesting, but a book can't live by pictures alone." M. G. Bonner

— N Y Times p8 D 16 '28 220w

"Though one may be little impressed by Miss Schwimmer's collection of stories, one cannot over-look the evidences she gives from time to time of a really fine raconteuse. Some of the descriptions of the villagers, the fishermen and the shepherds who gather about to hear the stories told are remarkably beautiful in their simplicity and dignity." Isabelle Houck

— + N Y World p11m D 23 '28 180w

"Madame Schwimmer has the real story-teller's gift in narrative and her book will do much to bring the spirit and atmosphere of her own countryside to American readers. Willy Pogany's brilliant color-work and decorations, with their motifs of Hungarian peasant art, make a gay and fitting accompaniment to the stories." M. W. Bianco

+ Sat R of Lit 5:812 Mr 23 '29 330w

"There is no war stuff in the treasure trove of this pacifist author—but there is a wealth of captivating imageries of boys and girls and rainbows and geese and caves and beggar-women's twins and brave tailors such as have fascinated children in all times, and as nothing else interpret the heart of one country to another."

+ Survey 61:386 D 15 '28 250w

SCHWOB, MARCEL. Book of Monelle; tr. by William Brown Meloney V; with preface by John Erskine and an introd. by the translator. 181p $2.50 Bobbs

848 29-9531

The book is a memorial to Marcel Schwob's little lost love whom he called simply Monelle. She was a girl of the streets whom he met one evening in Paris, and for the two short years that she lived Schwob gave her all his devotion. The preface to this small book is a biographical sketch of the author of Monelle. The book itself contains "the words of Monelle;" stories of her "sisters," and memories of her life with Schwob.

---

"In 1905 the author of 'Monelle' died, leaving behind him a robust contribution to medieval scholarship, a few fragile and lovely books, and —among those who knew him intimately—the memory of an enigmatic personality. Mr. Meloney deserves well of us for having so felicitously translated 'Le Livre de Monelle,' the most personal and the most recondite of Schwob's books; still more, for having given us, in his introduction, the first adequate account of Schwob's life and work in English." Lloyd Morris

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 My 5 '29 900w

"It is a rare and beautiful book, and Mr. Meloney cannot be thanked and praised too much for putting this treasure into the hands of English readers." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p4 My 18 '29 1250w

"Schwob's writing is too subtle and too sophisticated to be generally popular. Even those who derive great pleasure from it often find it obscure and occasionally cannot help thinking it inane. In rendering French precision into English simplicity Mr. Meloney has emphasized the latter characteristic."

— Nation 128:722 Je 12 '29 100w

"The delicacy and beauty are astonishing. It is true that portions of the work (particularly the second part) are obscure and liable to differing interpretations, but the essential spirit of the whole is plain. It is the tribute of a sensitive and scholastic soul to a dream woman who typified love. Mr. William Brown Meloney's translation is excellent and the short preface by John Erskine is graceful and intelligent."

+ N Y Times p2 My 26 '29 330w

SCHWOB, MARCEL—Continued

"In this rendering of what he calls the 'Vita Nuova' of Marcel Schwob, William Brown Meloney V has mastered happily the difficult task of conveying into English all the delicacy of one of the most lovely and subtle works in French literature. . . To readers who can perceive and care to follow the less obvious experiences of a highly sensitive and imaginative mind, the translator has made accessible a new beauty." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 152:592 Ag 7 '29 180w

Reviewed by Theodore Purdy, Jr.

Sat R of Lit 5:1110 Je 15 '29 350w

SCOGGINS, CHARLES ELBERT. John Quixote. 261p il $2 Bobbs

29-16083

"John Quixote, alias Harvey, an American medical student, finds himself at a bullfight in Valencia, whence, upon impulse, he follows a pair of dark eyes and ruby lips on a journey to a genuine castle in Spain. The girl is fleeing to her mystically insane Yankee grandfather because she does not choose to marry a certain hidalgo, and she does not at first like being followed, even respectfully. Her castizo Spanish father appears later on and is affronted at her want of filial obedience, and, more violently, at our hero's unconventional behavior."—N Y Times

Booklist 26:72 N '29

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 S 8 '29 260w

"Mr. Scoggins is more happy in his descriptions of action and landscape than in characterization—perhaps a desirable alternative in this type of story, since in an enchanting atmosphere we should never be too analytical of the people we meet."

Boston Transcript p2 S 18 '29 160w

"This is typical hammock reading, and better than most of its fellows. Mr. Scoggins knows how to use words. 'John Quixote' seems to us to have been done in a hurry, on a bet, perhaps, or to pay a deficit caused by a trip to Spain, where the scene is laid. If the author had spent twice as much time thereon, he would have done four times as good a yarn." F: F. Van de Water

+ — N Y Evening Post p6m Ag 10 '29 100w

"His plot is not very exciting, but his setting is romantic, and he has written a pleasing, unharrowing little tale to which the reader has much the same reaction as to a pretty face passed upon a street, worth looking at, even if to be forgotton in half a block."

+ — N Y Times p9 Ag 25 '29 230w

"Restraint, a gracious style, picturesqueness of settings, and vigor of characterization create from threadbare materials a story of no little beauty."

+ Sat R of Lit 6:276 O 12 '29 150w

SCOTT, MRS CATHARINE AMY (DAWSON). Is this Wilson? messages accredited to Woodrow Wilson; with an introd. by Edward S. Martin. 165p $2 Dutton

133.9 Spiritualism. Wilson, Woodrow 29-2490

Mrs Scott believes that the messages here transcribed and received by her thru automatic writing came from the spirit of Woodrow Wilson. The messages express the hope that friends may recognize places and people described in proof of authenticity.

"One feels that, however honest may be the intentions of their editor, these messages are but one step beyond the natural working of the highly trained and sensitive literary imagination, when it is creating a new story."

— Boston Transcript p8 Ja 26 '29 200w

"For the most part the messages are on a spiritual level and there is not often to be found among them the usual trivialities of spirit communications. The style is serious and matter of fact, sometimes becoming prosy and verbose and even a bit wearisome."

N Y Times p10 Ja 20 '29 530w

SCOTT, ERNEST, ed. Australian discovery by sea; with an introd. 412p il $4 Dutton [10s 6d Dent]

994 Australia—Discovery and exploration

In long extracts from the original narratives of the explorers—Tasman, Dampier, Cook, Flinders, Bligh and others, the story is told of the more important discoveries of Australia.

"A valuable contribution to Australian historical scholarship. These stories, full of romance and adventure, with more than a dash of tragedy, constitute one of the great and memorable chapters in the history of exploration and discovery." S. B.

+ Current Hist 31:440 D '29 350w

Nation and Ath 46:118 O 19 '29 140w

"The editor has very properly used only the original journals of Tasman, Dampier, Cook, Flinders and the rest. He has taken pains to choose the most telling passages—those which make good reading and, at the same time, mark a real advance in geographical knowledge. From this point of view, the selection is excellent. And the portraits and maps used for purposes of illustration are well chosen and reproduced."

+ New Statesman 36:754 S 28 '29 170w

"The volume is well provided with portraits and maps and is both readable and instructive."

+ Spec 143:508 O 12 '29 130w

"While the Introduction is work worthy of Professor Scott's high reputation as a historian, the editorial passages (and omissions) are not."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p733 S 26 '29 1000w

SCOTT, EVELYN, pseud. The wave. 625p $2.50 (15s) Cape

29-14106

"To say that 'The Wave' is an historical novel because it deals with the Civil War is to give an impression quite false on two counts. It is not a novel at all in the ordinary meaning of telling the developing story of a group of characters. And it has none of those qualities of varnished, static realism which are likely to invest the historical novel. . . 'The Wave' brings together some sixty separate narratives—sometimes a paragraph or two, or a fragment from a letter or a newspaper, sometimes a score of pages. They are the clear facets through which are reflected, in North and South, wild mountain country, Mississippi flatlands, prim New England village, in home, camp, battlefield and hospital, the central fire which is the war itself."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Booklist 26:34 O '29

"Though I witness soldiers in action, generals in conference, women behind the lines, camps, battles and all the paraphernalia of war, the struggle as a whole escapes me. Scene after scene passes before me until my mind is weary. It is regrettable that The Wave should have this effect on anyone, for the extreme care, the clear intelligence, and the intense application of Mrs. Scott are always in evidence. But there must be unity, harmony, and fusion in any elaborate attempt to write a great novel. I do not find them in The Wave. . . I cannot help but regard The Wave as an awe-inspiring failure."

— + Bookm 69:662 Ag '29 520w

"In vividness and poignancy 'The Wave' transcends Mrs. Scott's amazing 'Escapade.' It is impossible to write about it in anything but superlatives, so daring is its sweep, so magnificent its accomplishment. Here are literally hundreds of characters, flashed on the screen for a few paragraphs or pages, as they might pass in a motion picture, yet invested in this brief glimpse with a depth and authenticity which few authors attain in a whole novel." Mary Ross

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Je 30 '29 1450w

"It is a monumental and splendid effort, not wholly successful, but still splendid. The chief defect of the method pursued by the author must be apparent to everyone, namely, that you cannot see the forest for the trees. The book is far too long and after a while the picture reels before the eye." J. F. S.

+ — Boston Transcript p4 Jl 17 '29 850w

"Although 'The Wave' goes deep into the psychological reactions of moments, it is the drama of those moments rather than their spiritual significance which makes the book so powerful. It is not until the last bit of evidence is laid on the enormous heap that the reader realizes what a literary monument it really is. Sometimes she takes pages, sometimes only paragraphs to sketch the war's greatest moment of impingement on each of the characters, which must be almost a thousand in number. The scale of the book is so heroic that individuals and their number seem lost." Fanny Butcher

+ Chicago Daily Tribune p9 Jl 20 '29 550w

"I could wish that Mrs. Scott's senses were not so keen and excitable, that she would refrain from packing every sentence with more visual and auditory metaphor than it will bear. Her style is so agonizingly alive that it occasionally becomes confusing. . . But that Mrs. Scott's major conception has been fulfilled, cannot, I think, be denied; and only a carping critic would dare to disagree with Mr. Krutch's final judgment that here, if anywhere, the Civil War has received its most adequate treatment in fiction. There can be no doubt that 'The Wave' is an outstanding achievement in recent American letters." C. P. Fadiman

+ Nation 129:119 Jl 31 '29 1000w

"Miss Scott writes at times with real distinction, at other times turgidly, like a suppressed minor poet letting off steam. By far her greatest problem is selection and rejection." L. L. Irvine

+ — Nation and Ath 45:568 Jl 27 '29 160w

"Mrs. Scott knows the old South, its landscape and people. She has an acute perception of nature, and the part it played in that struggle, through its mountains and forests and swamps, its heat and dust and rain. She has an intimate sense of human consciousness in its account of the world without and that within, its discrimination of subtle shades of physical suffering and mental confusion. . . The reader will need patience to integrate a world presented in fragments, and to correlate a mass of constantly shifting shapes and colors. But he will have his reward." R. M. Lovett

+ New Repub 59:319 Ag 7 '29 660w

"These are no thumbnail sketches, no melodramatic anecdotes. It is as if Mrs. Scott had written a hundred full novels against the background of the Rebellion, each complete in scene, character analysis, motivation and action—and had then retained from each the one chapter best calculated to illuminate some angle in the mosaic of war. Her gusto for reality is insatiable." Clarence Britten

+ N Y Evening Post p6m Je 29 '29 2300w

" 'The Wave' is certain to be acclaimed a work of American fiction of more than usual significance and moment by those who are so incurably addicted to the method pursued by Evelyn Scott that they blind themselves to the serious defects of the method. Others, unable so to blind themselves, while conceding the virtues of the work, will be less enthusiastic. The great defect of 'The Wave' is that, while the reader, on closing the book, is conscious of the vast fraying to which his nerves have been subjected, he is somewhat at a loss to know why. The book is impressive, but it does not yield an impression." Percy Hutchison

+ — N Y Times p1 Je 30 '29 1400w

"Her book was nobly conceived and its execution is masterly. It is a delight to read and it will be cherished. But it is not 'the great novel of the Civil War.' That novel cannot be written today." F. L. Robbins

+ — Outlook 152:430 Jl 10 '29 620w

"Though her style for the most part is quiet and simple, sometimes she overwrites. Yet most of the book is kept at a high level; it was well worth writing, and it is well worth reading. Partly because of its novelty of form, it is one of the most interesting of all the efforts to deal with the Civil War in fiction. But many readers, while granting its power, will lay it down with the feeling that it embodies an artistic fallacy. A fluttering chaos of a hundred episodes and incidents, a rapid flickering of unrelated pictures on the screen, may achieve an arresting effect—but not the higher kind of effect." Allan Nevins

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:1142 Je 29 '29 1300w

"If one digs hard into this monotony, one may rescue such things as the march of the negroes with the northern Army, a stampede of horses or a fight with a bear and possibly many other incidents, from the bondage of Miss Scott's appallingly overcharged style. The whole book needs to be dug over with a spade before reading." V. S. Pritchett

— Spec 143:198 Ag 10 '29 120w

"Her description and analysis alike suffer from overelaboration. When she has employed her intuition in showing what southern women may have felt in various contingencies, particularly in contact with northern troops, she is frequently apt and revealing. But she has sought for tints and half-lights where colors of high intensity are needed."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7e Jl 7 '29 480w

"The creative energy is magnificent: the total effect vast and moving. Each of what may be called the victims is seized at some moment of inner crisis and revealed blindly making an atomic struggle for life, for sanity, for understanding and hope. . . The interest of character development and drama are sacrificed for the sake of massing up case studies. . . I doubt whether Miss Scott's method is successful, or that even success would give us the most intimate sense of tragedy. The victims are too much like casual passers on the street: we do not know them well enough to care. The succession is a moving-picture of unrelated scenes." Leon Whipple

Survey 62:575 S 1 '29 750w

"The whole, if such it can be called, is a phantasmagoria of civil war, and it is distinguished by a great amount of talent, industry, ingenuity and descriptive power. As episodes many of the sections are brilliant, but the criticism of the method is its effect of tedium. This book in one sense is easy to read because it does not matter where you open it: in a more important sense it is difficult to read because it leads nowhere."

Times [London] Lit Sup p574 Jl 18 '29 450w

SCOTT, EVELYN, pseud. Witch Perkins; a story of the Kentucky hills. 322p il $2 Holt 29-18257

Ella was a little girl who lived in a Kentucky town. Next door to Ella lived a family named Perkins. Everyone thought Mrs Perkins was a witch, and she certainly acted like one. Then Ella got the measles and had some very weird adventures in which the Perkins family, and especially poor thin little Maimie Perkins, figured. The upshot of it all was a fire which burned down the Perkins house and Maimie came to live with Ella and her parents.

---

"How seldom it happens that a novelist excelling in her own line of work is able to write a genuinely fascinating children's story abounding in the details small people love. Yet this is exactly what Evelyn Scott has done. . . In this particular field of her work, Evelyn Scott unleashes a gayety, a sprightly fancy, that waxes in strong contrast to the power and sardonic reality of her novels. Apparently, her talent flourishes equally well whether in the wasted South of the Civil War period or in the mischievous garden of 'Witch Perkins.' " Laura Benet

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 O 6 '29 1200w

N Y Evening Post p14m N 16 '29 50w

N Y Times p12 N 17 '29 100w

"Here is a child's book which is not cut to pattern. It is full of color and fantasy, it gives a sense of life. The themes it uses are native to our own ground. And there is not a trace of patronage in it. While, for the more horrific passages, I should think they would be the sort children read with fearful joy. Or used to, once upon a time." S. V. Benet

SCOTT, EVELYN, pseud.—Continued
+ Sat R of Lit 6:394 N 16 '29 420w

SCOTT, GABRIEL. Golden gospel; a legend; [tr. from the Norwegian by William Worster]. 313p il $2.50 Vanguard press
28-27588

St Peter and The Lord come down out of heaven to wander about the earth for a while. And from the vicissitudes of their stay among men Peter the impetuous learns the golden gospel of love and charity.

"Related with a sort of skittish humor, at times pleasant, at times sickly." C. P. Fadiman
— + Bookm 68:590 Ja '29 100w

"Such a theme presents boundless opportunities, and Gabriel Scott makes the most of them."
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 N 18 '28 150w
Cleveland Open Shelf p30 F '29

"In the very beginning it is not unamusing with its somewhat self-consciously naïve picture of heaven and of St. Peter shooing the little angels to bed; and the first experiences of the Lord and St. Peter in their pilgrimage to the earth are not too wearisome. But when these same experiences are repeated over and over again, with merely slight variations in form, the reader begins to yawn."
— N Y Times p13 D 23 '28 400w

"The tale is amusing for a few pages, largely because of its innocuous irreverence, but the author's invention presently runs dry."
— + Sat R 147:220 F 16 '29 70w

SCOTT, LEROY. Living dead man. 293p $2 Washburn
29-9005

"Peter Buchanan, as the result of an accident, was paralyzed to the point where he couldn't do much more than wiggle his eyelashes. He was also suspected of having murdered a couple of people. So that if he ever recovered he was sure of being arrested. How he managed to come back to life, avoid arrest and unmask the real murderer makes a very good mystery yarn."—Outlook

Reviewed by Will Cuppy
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p11 Mr 31 '29 80w
Boston Transcript p2 Ap 17 '29 380w
Nation and Ath 46:sup226 N 9 '29 60w

"The carrying out of the extraordinary scheme seems a bit thick and nonsensical, but the book is exciting enough to keep many of us entertained until the finish."
+ — N Y World p7m Je 23 '29 120w

"Doesn't get any blue ribbons but is nevertheless worthy of the mystery addict's attention." W. R. Brooks
+ Outlook 151:596 Ap 10 '29 70w
Springf'd Republican p7e D 22 '29 150w
Times [London] Lit Sup p1061 D 12 '29 200w

SCOTT, TEMPLE. Oliver Goldsmith bibliographically and biographically considered; based on the collection of material in the library of W. M. Elkins, esq.; with an introd. by A. Edward Newton. 368p il $25 Bowling green press, 475 5th av., N.Y.
012 Goldsmith, Oliver. Goldsmith, Oliver—Bibliography
29-913

"The book was prompted by Mr. W. M. Elkins's valuable collection of so-called Goldsmithiana; and there is no question that the owner of such material owed a public debt. Mr. Temple Scott was chosen to do the work. He has wisely extended his bibliographical comment to comprise a general biography, and in his account has given some fascinating new material. The book is beautifully bound and superbly printed. Mr. Edward Newton has furnished the preface."—Sat R of Lit

"A. Edward Newton in an introductory essay says: 'Mr. Elkins is fortunate in the selection of Mr. Temple Scott to rewrite the well-known life and reappraise the well-known books. He has produced a very remarkable book, as anyone who turns its pages will immediately discover. Bibliographies are too frequently dull and unreadable; we pick them up to ascertain a fact or verify a point, and promptly put them down again. But this book is more than a bibliography; it is biography as well, and the biography of a man whose very weaknesses endear him to us.' " S: H. Sargent
+ Boston Transcript p2 F 16 '29 1750w

"What Mr. Scott has undertaken to do, and what makes him not merely an expert compiler and cataloguer but a biographer and critic as well, is to weave into the story of Goldsmith's life an account of his books; and so dexterous is Mr. Scott's talent, one feels that all these rare and often shabby little books are indeed a part of Goldsmith's life, the essential part that remains to us so long after he has vanished from among men. This impression is deepened by the numerous beautifully reproduced facsimiles that accompany all the more important collations and descriptions." S: C. Chew
+ N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 13 '29 200w

"Mr. Scott's volume, with its many beautiful reproductions of eighteenth century portraits, facsimiles of letters and title pages of first editions from the Elkins Goldsmith collection, together with the charm of the typography, offers a feast in elegant and rare bookmaking. It is a unique contribution, giving access to a great collection in an edition which is limited to a thousand copies of which 750 are for sale." Edwin Clark
+ N Y Times p2 Mr 3 '29 900w

"It is indisputable that anyone seriously interested in Goldsmith must consult this volume. The chief interest is frankly announced as bibliographical. Of equal importance, however, is the 'history' of Goldsmith which is repeated with extraordinary lucidity, with the result that Goldsmith is seen from a fresh perspective. Mr. Scott has shown exceptional care both bibliographically and biographically." H. J. Smith
+ Sat R of Lit 5:788 Mr 16 '29 580w
Times [London] Lit Sup p161 F 28 '29 380w

SCOTT, MRS WINIFRED MARY (WATSON) (PAMELA WYNNE, pseud.). Conquering lover (Eng title Under the mosquito curtain). 311p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d P. Allan]
29-8830

Sir Frere was wealthy and forty-two; Dandelion was poor and seventeen. The chances for a happy marriage were slim. When they went to India there were further complications in the shape of a young and slightly mysterious major. Sir Frere was stubborn. He won and kept his wife.

"One may either quote Dandelion's mother on all this ('Oh, Hugh! Isn't it all perfectly entrancing?') or merely echo the 'Wah! Wah!' of old Ayah, the Afghan woman who saw most of it."
— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Je 2 '29 100w
N Y Times p18 Ag 11 '29 180w
Times [London] Lit Sup p836 N 8 '28 110w

SCOTT-GILES, C. WILFRID. Romance of heraldry. 234p il $4 Dutton
929.6 Heraldry

In this popular study of heraldry, the author traces the origin of heraldic emblems, and shows how historic events have left their record in the arms and devices of various families. Some of these coats-of-arms are collected here, arranged in rough chronological order and explained in non-technical language.

Boston Transcript p10 N 23 '29 480w

"The author of this handsomely made and profusely illustrated book is something of an enthusiast, but a discreet and temperate one, on his subject. . . His aim is to bring out the dramatic and personal element in history, and this he does interestingly by explaining the origin of the important arms and badges and pointing out their significance in the stories of the respective families."

+ N Y Times p34 O 20 '29 250w

"The author has an advantage over many writers upon history and heraldry in that he has been able to illustrate his own pages with vigorous draughtsmanship. . . There is a pleasantly imaginative touch and a welcome freshness of treatment in Mr. Scott-Giles's handling of his subject; his book should not only afford an admirable introduction to a knowledge of heraldry, but prove an illuminating companion to a more formal history book, and should appeal both to students and masters of the craft armorial."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p862 O 31 '29 1100w

SCOTT-JAMES, ROLFE ARNOLD. Making of literature; some principles of criticism examined in the light of ancient and modern theory. 396p $3 Holt [18s Secker]

801 Literature. Literary criticism 29-8755

The book is an inviting and engagingly written history of literary criticism. "Starting with the imaginary cave man with the first image of a reindeer before him, 'talking, for the first time, that talk which was to evolve one day into the very jargon of modern criticism,' he has taken them over the whole ground, acquainting them, by easy reference and narration, with the views of Aristotle, Plato, Longinus, Dante, Sidney, Jonson, Blake, Coleridge, Goethe. Sainte-Beuve, Arnold and so on to the moderns."—(Times [London] Lit Sup)

Reviewed by G: F. Whicher

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 Ap 28 '29 730w

"It is a sound book and a sane book; Mr. Scott-James's taste is impeccable and all his judgments have an air of sweet reason. But something in the structure or the motive of the book clogs its movement and destroys its vitality. . . He covers the whole history of his subject, and his summaries are fairly proportioned and accurate." Herbert Read

+ — Nation and Ath 44:sup227 N 10 '28 1100w

"Mr. Scott-James is an eminently sensible critic. Being of the school of such men as W. J. Courthope and Dr. Elton, he can be trusted to be appreciative of what he likes, respectful to what he does not care for, but never startlingly original or subtle, and quite without that massive impishness of idiosyncrasy which enables Dr. Saintsbury to decorate his Gothic with grotesque."

+ New Statesman 32:361 D 22 '28 480w

Reviewed by Arthur Colton

Sat R of Lit 6:105 S 7 '29 1900w

"Mr. Scott-James has performed a big task with thoroughness and affability. . . One may open his book anywhere and read with interest and acquiescence. He is humane, he takes always the humane view and admits the humane qualifications."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p76 Ja 30 '29 720w

SEABROOK, WILLIAM BUEHLER. Magic island. 336p il $3.50 Harcourt

917.294 Voodooism. Witchcraft. Haiti—Social life and customs. Negroes in Haiti 29-2970

First-hand revelations of voodooism, necromancy and black magic fill the first part of the book. Mr Seabrook went to live in the mountain jungles of Haiti with the family of Maman Célie, a voodoo priestess. He was initiated into the cult by her. These and other wild, barbaric rites he describes, and in the latter part of the book repeats stories of sorcery and witchcraft gathered in various circles of Haitian society from the most primitive to the most cultured.

"Mr. Seabrook's book is a series of excellent stories, about one of the most interesting corners of the American world, told by a keen and sensitive person who knows how to write. He has written as an artist, not as an ethnologist." Robert Redfield

+ Am J Soc 35:316 S '29 650w

Booklist 25:245 Mr '29

"It has been a long time since a volume has held my attention so completely as W. B. Seabrook's The Magic Island does. It is not a twice-told tale, but a vivid record of things seen; it is no ladylike book, but a man's story written for adult minds." Lyle Saxon

+ Bookm 68:712 F '29 1300w

"Here in its own field is the book of the year. . . The book is above everything the book of Voodoo. And it is written not by a student of the accounts of others, nor even by an external observer of the rites themselves. It is the tale of a white man's actual participation in the ceremonial practices and the emotional experiences of primitive black Africans." W: P. Montague

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Ja 6 '29 1100w

Cleveland Open Shelf p109 Jl '29

"I do not wish to decry Mr. Seabrook's efforts in their entirety. He is an accomplished raconteur, and where he loses his self-consciousness he writes incisively, humorously, and without that hysterical quality which comes when he describes the religious ceremonies of the people who live in the hills. . . One does not sense the essential kindliness, the utter lack of bloodthirstiness, and the entire gentleness of these people in the sensational presentations of rare moments in their lives given by writers such as this. And it is time for a tempered, intelligent presentation of the manner in which they live, one that, staying close to the facts, probing under the surface and eschewing rumor, will make quite as fascinating a tale." M. J. Herskovits

— + Nation 128:198 F 13 '29 1250w

— Nation and Ath 44:760 Mr 2 '29 330w

"Although Mr. Seabrook has seen a great deal more than the average white man sees in the island, he has become so excited about it all that he cannot hope to be taken as an altogether credible witness. In the chapters on Voodoo, particularly, he mixes quite valuable material with a lot of hearsay, legend and speculation which are merely sensational."

— + New Statesman 32:676 Mr 2 '29 140w

" 'The Magic Island' seems to us the best and most thrilling book of exploration that we ever have read. Mr. Seabrook has investigated Voodooism, not with the rigid superiority of the average white man delving into native lore but humbly, respectfully, as an initiate himself. . . He has done a sensational, vivid and, we believe, an immensely important book." F: F. Van de Water

+ N Y Evening Post p8m Ja 12 '29 480w

"It can be said of many travelers that they have traveled widely. Of Mr. Seabrook a much finer thing may be said—he has traveled deeply. It is apparent that he has penetrated as few white men have done, perhaps as no white man has done in so short a time, to the soul of Haiti." R. L. Duffus

+ N Y Times p6 Ja 6 '29 1400w

"A fascinating first-hand study, made by a traveler of wide experience. . . By all odds one of the most interesting books of recent months." Herschel Brickell

+ No Am 227:adv F '29 90w

"In 'The Magic Island' a 'courageous, imaginative and skilful man has investigated the soul of Haiti, reports upon it, brilliantly. The same success which attended the Seabrook book on Arabia should fall to 'The Magic Island.' It is a prize among travel books."

+ Outlook 151:70 Ja 9 '29 400w

SEABROOK, W: B.—Continued

St Louis 27:136 Ap '29

"Mr. Seabrook has done justice to his remarkable subject, not only in investigating its mysteries, but in presenting the results of his work."

+ Sat R 147:250 F 23 '29 730w

" 'The Magic Island' is ample proof that Mr. Seabrook was in Haiti long enough not only to learn what for years has been the obvious Haitian 'story,' but also to witness more mysterious and secret ceremonies than had any of his predecessors, and to enter sufficiently into the mood of magic to write about it effectively and sanely, if never brilliantly." J: W. Vandercook

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:796 Mr 23 '29 700w

Spec 142:287 F 23 '29 200w

Springf'd Republican p7e F 24 '29 1050w

"Mr. Seabrook writes in restrained style without superlatives. . . And he illustrates his pages with some of his own photographs of Voodoo temples, altars, priestesses, sorceresses, magical symbols, and other unusual objects."

Times [London] Lit Sup p174 Mr 7 '29 1000w

Wis Lib Bul 25:101 Mr '29

World Tomorrow 12:139 Mr '29 60w

" 'The Magic Island' treats of Haiti in three aspects—first as a final stronghold of Voodoo worship; next as a black republic bedevilled by the Jim Crow attitude of U.S. Marines; lastly, as a place of enchanting natural beauty, with possibilities of strange, unexpected adventure. As to the primary aspect the author gathered first-hand information by his presence at the Voodoo rites, but he spoils much of his material by his exaggerated style and his dubious psychology." Woodbridge Riley

— + Yale R n s 19:185 autumn '29 1000w

SEABURY, WILLIAM MARSTON. Motion picture problems; the cinema and the League of nations. 426p $3.50 The author, 36 W 44th st., N.Y.

791.4 Moving pictures. League of nations
29-4343

"Mr. Seabury, who has already written an enlightening book on the organization and methods of the American film industry, now makes a detailed proposal for the formation of a Cinema Committee of the League of Nations. . . Mr. Seabury is convinced that the power for good or ill of the film is so great that it is necessary to invest some sort of advisory and supervisory power in the hands of a permanent international organization, which shall assume the responsibility for, among other things, national and international film inspection. The gain, he argues, is likely to be twofold; the result will be, on the one hand, a better distribution of the world's trade in the film industry, on the other a higher and more educative standard of production."—Times [London] Lit Sup

---

Cath World 130:117 O '29 750w

"Mr. Seabury's book is a serious, thoughtful, and heavily documented work." Frank Tuttle

+ Sat R of Lit 5:1173 Jl 13 '29 980w

"There can be no question of the thoroughness with which Mr. Seabury has surveyed the ground on both the industrial and cultural sides; his thoroughness, indeed, is inclined to be excessive. But he has produced arguments for international cooperation in the sphere of filmmaking which emphatically deserve attention."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p543 Jl 4 '29 350w

SEABY, ALLEN WILLIAM. Art in the life of mankind; a survey of its achievements from the earliest times. 5v v 1, A general view of art; v 2, Art in ancient times. 105;114p il ea $1.75 Oxford [ea 5s Batsford]

709 Art—History 28-26931

"Professor Seaby's book, which will eventually consist of several volumes, is an extremely complete hand-book for teachers of drawing and art, and also of the appreciation of art. In the first volume he explains the appreciation and purpose of art. In the second volume he begins his survey of art proper, and in this volume he takes us from the earliest and most primitive art, through Egyptian, Assyrian, Babylonian, and many other periods to Cretan and Myceneæan art."—Times [London] Lit Sup

---

Booklist 25:152 Ja '29

"Mr Seaby prefers concrete examples to abstract principles; he believes that education should 'embrace art more freely'—and he practises what he preaches."

Dial 86:348 Ap '29 100w

New Statesman 31:596 Ag 18 '28 220w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell

No Am 226:adv N '28 60w

Pratt p21 summer '29

"In general, the treatment is clear and sufficiently accurate for the purpose in hand, and abreast of recent discoveries. In the scarcity of good general surveys in English, this series may serve a useful purpose in the classroom or private study."

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:543 D 22 '28 180w

"Mr Seaby has rather too much ground to cover in his first volume, 'A General View of Art,' but, as far as he is able to go, he does achieve this purpose from the teacher's or expositor's point of view. The second volume, 'Art in Ancient Times,' is a pictorial survey, and one assumes that other volumes are to bring the history through classical, medieval and renaissance periods down to today."

Springf'd Republican p10 N 10 '28 320w

"In a very short space and with great clarity he deals with a large and difficult subject, and there is no doubt that when this series is completed it should be indispensable to teachers of art, though, of course, the thoroughness of a specialist on one period cannot be expected."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p737 O 11 '28 200w

SEARS, JOHN HAROLD. New place of the stockholder. 260p il $4 Harper

338.7 Stock companies. Corporations. Corporation law 29-18220

"Ostensibly written for the lay reader this volume presents an adequate treatment by an experienced practitioner, with emphasis, however, unfortunately shifting from the point of view of the stock-owning public to that of the corporate management, particularly in discussions of methods to render stock issues more attractive."—Harvard Law R

---

Boston Transcript p8 O 11 '29 550w

"This volume in part fulfills its promise and in part does not. . . The occasional legal passages [are] couched in such technical language that their appreciation by any but lawyers is doubtful."

+ — Harvard Law R 43:161 N '29 70w

SEAVER, HENRY LATIMER. Great revolt in Castile; a study of the Comunero movement of 1520-1521. 393p il $5 Houghton

946 Castile—History. Spain—History—House of Austria, 1516-1700. Charles V, emperor of Germany 28-23577

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

---

"The author presents a complete and critical narrative of the rising and of its involved politics. The book is both thoroughly documented and attractively made." E. D. Salmon

+ Am Hist R 34:639 Ap '29 430w

"Professor Seaver has had the courage to plunge directly into his narrative, trusting that the rush of his story will carry his readers past the need for preliminary stage-setting. The book justifies his procedure. It moves with a vigor and a sense of life that even copious footnotes cannot dull." Mildred Adams

+ Nation 128:323 Mr 13 '29 250w

"Scholarly and almost too detailed study, illustrated by most striking photographs and admirable drawings by the author."
+ New Statesman 32:819 Ap 6 '29 980w

"Mr. Seaver's art goes little beyond an ability to write romantic chapter headings to congested chapters. One cannot see the wood for the genealogical trees. However, his chapters are short, and his photographs are astonishingly good." V. S. P.
— + Sat R 147:112 Ja 26 '29 780w

"The book is pleasing in format, illustration, and general appearance. In style it is irregular and confused. The author has made a genuine effort to popularize a rather complex situation. The chapter headings are clever and well chosen, and the chapters themselves are short and easy reading."
+ — Sat R of Lit 5:670 F 9 '29 120w

"Mr. Seaver has provided his readers very amply with the means of forming an enlightened judgment both of the events and of the persons to be judged. We could wish indeed that the author had provided an introduction for the purpose of explaining what the Cortes of Castile was about 1520 and also what was the social and political condition of Spain. Unless a man has a fairly good knowledge of these subjects he will not be able to understand the doings of the comuneros."
+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p88 F 7 '29 860w

SECRETT, T. Twenty-five years with Earl Haig. 288p il $2.50 Duffield [7s 6d Jarrolds]
B or 92 Haig, Douglas Haig, 1st earl.
29-13795

Many amusing and interesting anecdotes concerning Field Marshall Haig are included among these recollections of the author's twenty-five years as Haig's personal attendant, on service in South Africa, India, England and France.

---

Reviewed by W: MacDonald
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 Je 23 '29 850w
Boston Transcript p4 Je 22 '29 600w

"Sergeant Secrett writes vividly not only of Haig himself, but of many other famous men and women whom he has encountered. He displays a shrewdness of judgment and a terseness of style that some professional writers might envy."
+ Nation and Ath 45:210 My 11 '29 40w

"A very pleasant little book, affording on the face of it the most complete disproof imaginable of the ancient saying about no man being a hero to his valet. . . Sergeant Secrett does not live up to his name. He is extremely frank and consequently extremely amusing."
+ New Statesman 33:126 My 4 '29 210w

Reviewed by L. H. Titterton
N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 13 '29 300w

"Sergeant Secrett has written an entertaining book, filled to overflowing with good stories of people and events and situations, all of them cleverly told. And its quiet, revealing glimpses not only of the human side of Earl Haig but of many famous men are often illuminating."
+ N Y Times p5 Je 9 '29 600w

SEDGWICK, ANNE DOUGLAS (MRS BASIL DE SELINCOURT). Dark Hester. 300p $2.50 Houghton
29-7504

There is little action, but infinite analysis of motive and emotion in this portrayal of delicately balanced human relationships and clashing traditions. The conflict is between a thoroughbred English mother, Monica Wilmott, and her daughter-in-law Hester—a girl steeled to the hardness of her generation—over Monica's son Clive, whom both women love. Torn between his allegiance to his mother and to his wife, Clive is the innocent victim till Monica and Hester who, tho differing in all else, have a like sense of truth and honor, arrive at mutual respect and understanding.

---

Booklist 25:323 My '29

"To some readers 'Dark Hester' will not seem as exquisitely poised a book as, say, 'The Little French Girl.' To me it seems to achieve an infinitely more difficult equilibrium—the rhythm of motion rather than rest. It establishes beyond question Miss Sedgwick's own mastery of the swift adaptability that she so admires in Hester, carrying further that magnificent power of evolution that she showed earlier in the transition from 'A Fountain Sealed,' or 'Franklin Winslow Kane,' to 'The Little French Girl.' It discloses her as an artist whose work, at least for her own time, is living as well as lovely." Mary Ross
+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 Mr 24 '29 1100w

"A story that penetrates deeply into the hearts of the men and women who play their part in it, not as if they were walking on and off the stage whereon tread the actors in a drama, but as they are when they are walking through the highways and byways of real life." E. F. Edgett
+ Boston Transcript p4 Mr 23 '29 1350w
Cleveland Open Shelf p143 N '29

"The plot is most ingenious, the happy ending most unconvincing. But with all her preciousness and skill, Miss Sedgwick is apt to sing just off the note. Hers is the sentimentality that is the more offensive because it is so skilfully draped." Raymond Mortimer
— + Nation and Ath 45:114 Ap 27 '29 60w

Reviewed by G. T. Hellman
New Repub 58:289 Ap 24 '29 200w

"Miss Sedgwick's story-telling power is excellent, and if one can forget her thesis, if one can forget that she intended an illuminating psychological study and take the novel on its own merits as a story, 'Dark Hester' will stand fairly high in the realm of readable books." Tess Slesinger
+ — N Y Evening Post p10m Ap 27 '29 670w

"The story is told in Mrs. Sedgwick's best manner, with clear character delineation." Shaemas O'Sheel
+ N Y World p11m My 19 '29 50w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell
No Am 227:adv My '29 60w

"'Dark Hester' touches delicately upon changing social standards, and firmly upon the inability of people either emancipated from or deprived of background and family ties to understand their enduring strength. . . The legitimate popularity of Mrs. de Selincourt's novels lies in her urbanity, her unsentimental sympathy, her tolerance, the soundness of her characterizations and the warm grace of her prose."
+ Outlook 151:511 Mr 27 '29 180w
Pratt p41 summer '29

"Miss Sedgwick works up the situation magnificently; its aspect changes with every page. Only at the very end does it seem to lose touch with life. . . Apart from this, 'Dark Hester' is an excitement and a pleasure, and well worthy of its distinguished author." L. P. Hartley
+ Sat R 147:684 My 18 '29 660w

"The book is fashioned with the suave grace and penetrating insight of a finished artist who is blessed with sense as well as sensitiveness." Grace Frank
+ Sat R of Lit 5:905 Ap 20 '29 700w

"Miss Sedgwick is very nearly at her best in this engaging book." B. E. Todd
+ Spec 142:633 Ap 20 '29 120w

"The book is not Miss Sedgwick's best. The reader quickly realizes that the two central figures are not representative types of the forces they supposedly represent. They are exaggerations, in places almost caricatures; and this element of overemphasis in the book robs it of value as a study of a problem of human relationships, while it gives a certain sense of the melodramatic to the action. The narrative, however, is attractive and holds the interest from cover to cover, but one expects something more from its author." H. K.

SEDGWICK, A. D.—Continued
— + Springf'd Republican p7e Je 30 '29 500w

"With all the reticence, the steadiness of judgment, the dislike of extravagance and of violence which are hers, Miss Sedgwick brings surprise upon surprise, reveals change after change, and draws the reader along into states of emotion which he little anticipated."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p312 Ap 18 '29 480w

Wis Lib Bul 25:160 My '29

SEDGWICK, HENRY DWIGHT. France; a short history of its politics, literature, and art from earliest times to the present. 418p il $3.50 Little

944 France—History. French literature—History and criticism. Art—France 29-11617

"This book is intended for boys, young men, or girls at school and college, for travelers bound for France, or for readers that stay at home, content to avoid the restless sea, grimy train, and tumultuous motor car; and its aim is to give a slight but continuous sketch in outline of the political growth of France from the time when she first became a Latin country up to the end of the Great War—in short, a brief biography of France."—Preface

"Addressed to the general reader, but Mr. Sedgwick appears to have had particularly in mind the needs of the American tourist traveling in France. The principal defect in Mr. Sedgwick's book is that much of what he writes about art and literature is not well integrated with the remainder of his book. It is also open to criticism that in his anxiety to get in everybody worthy of mention he sometimes reduces these passages to little more than lists of artists and writers." F. M. Anderson
Am Hist R 35:396 Ja '30 250w

Booklist 25:388 Jl '29

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Je 23 '29 80w

"People going to France who want to brush up on French history, and people staying at home who want to recover an old magic once evoked by the name of Napoleon or Montaigne would do well to read Mr. Sedgwick's latest journey into the regions of the past." A. M. S.
+ Cath World 130:373 D '29 420w

"With sympathy for many interests in life, Mr. Sedgwick tells the history of France as if he were writing the biography of a beloved friend. It would be hard to find a clearer account of France. The charm of the text is enhanced by the publisher's skill in the format, especially in the choice of pictures. Both for the beginner and for the reader who knows much of French life this will be an illuminating volume." C: L: Slattery
+ Churchman p16 O 5 '29 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p141 N '29

"It is a question whether, as an intelligent readable popularization of its subject, the 'politics, literature and art' of France, in four hundred-odd pages, this volume could be improved upon." F. H. M.
+ N Y Evening Post p7m Je 15 '29 110w

N Y Times p2 N 24 '29 400w

"Kings and prelates, artists and authors jostle each other upon the stage in such throngs that in some instances they can scarcely be individualized. If the author had called his book by a less comprehensive title, as for instance Some Impressions of French History, Literature, and Art, one would have given a more cordial welcome to the pleasant pictures, charming quotations and lively anecdotes which make up so large a part of the volume." Eloise Ellery
— + Pol Sci Q 44:467 S '29 500w

"Mr Sedgwick chooses his material with fine selectiveness, composes it with excellent emphasis and writes with ease, charm and pictorial power. In short, this necessarily rather slight history is an informing presentation and a work of art."
+ Springf'd Republican p12 My 17 '29 420w

Wis Lib Bul 25:321 O '29

SEE, HENRI EUGENE. Modern capitalism, its origin and evolution; tr. by Homer B. Vanderblue and Georges F. Doriot. 225p $3.50 Adelphi co. [12s 6d Douglas]

331 Capitalism [29-5676]

"M. Sée tells the story of the development of capitalism in commerce, in finance, and in industry in a graphic and balanced narrative, throwing out ideas that guide the reader and stimulate reflection on the vast number of problems that this history raises. What forces and events determined the economic ascendancy of different parts of the world at different times? How have politics and religion affected the development of commerce and industry? How has the development of commerce and industry affected politics and religion? . . . On all these questions and many others the reader will find illumination in Mr. Sée's book, though the whole theme is skilfully compressed into 200 pages."—Nation and Ath

"This compact sketch of modern economic history will immediately take its place in the literature of the subject as the best introductory volume now available. It presents all the elements of recent critical study in their best form and with a balance of judgment frequently not found in the larger works. . . The translation is extremely well done, achieving an accuracy and felicity of expression that are seldom found associated." A. P. Usher
+ Am Econ R 19:98 Mr '29 780w

"The work is largely historical, with practically no attention paid to modern capitalism as we conceive of the term. This is not to minimize the value of the work; for we have here a very readable account of the evolutionary growth of the capitalistic regime as we meet it today."
+ Boston Transcript p3 D 1 '28 180w

Reviewed by J. L. Hammond
Nation and Ath 44:622 F 2 '29 680w

"Many readers must have desired to have an English version of Professor Henri Sée's Evolution du Capitalisme Moderne. They have here what is not quite the same thing—an American version, and a bad one at that. Moreover, Professor Sée's little book, published in France at a few francs, can hardly be recognised in its English dress, puffed out as it is into the outward semblance of a larger and imposing work."
+ — New Statesman 32:540 F 2 '29 120w

"The English edition is in a sense a second edition, for several changes have been made in the text and many titles have been added to the bibliography. The translation has been done with care and it will prove to be a very useful 'synthetic sketch of a very vast subject' for those who do not know French." S. B. Clough
+ Pol Sci Q 44:317 Je '29 130w

"The book is a sketch not a treatise, and the author disclaims comparison with Werner Sombart's larger works. It is stimulating and scholarly; it is written by one, it is needless to say, who is fully abreast of recent research; and it is more complete than the French original."
+ Sat R 147:82 Ja 19 '29 450w

"Such a sketch as M. Sée gives us has a distinct value. It is impartial and learned, yet light. No student can desire a better guide."
+ Times [London] Lit Sup p51 Ja 24 '29 920w

SEGUR, SOPHIE (ROSTOPCHINE) comtesse de. Sophie, the story of a bad little girl; tr. from the French by Marguerite Fellows Melcher. 175p il $1.75 Knopf

29-18177

A very lively little French girl and her small playmates, who are her able seconds in mischief, hold the center of the stage. In the background hovers a sensible mother with a sense of humor, who drags the small terrors out of difficulties.

Booklist 26:78 N '29

"The gay and spirited illustrations by Mrs. Barney present Sophie to us with renewed vitality."

+ Nation 129:599 N 20 '29 150w

"This perennial French favorite should be in the possession of our children. . . The book keeps its sweetness in the new language." M. L. Becker

+ Outlook 152:392 Jl 3 '29 200w

Sat R of Lit 6:544 D 7 '29 90w

SEI SHONAGON. Pillow-book; tr. by Arthur Waley. 162p $2.50 Houghton [6s Allen & U.]

B or 92 Japan—Court and courtiers. Japan—Social life and customs 29-26343

Japanese court life in the tenth century is known to us chiefly thru two documents, the "Tale of Genji," a novel by Murasaki Shikibu, and the "Pillow-book" of Sei Shōnagon, which consists partly of reminiscences, partly of entries in diary form kept by a young woman who entered the service of the little Empress Sadako in 991. The book is arranged under a series of headings, such as Disagreeable things, Amusing things, Disappointing things, and the like. Mr Waley has here translated about one-quarter of the "Pillow-book."

Booklist 25:358 Je '29

"The Pillow-Book is a delectable revelation of the wit, caprice and arrogance of a great lady, who would have been equally at home in the Egypt of Cleopatra or the Washington of President Hoover. One is impressed with the 'modern' tone of her observations. Her comments on spoiled children, letters of introduction, sympathy and admiration are as keenly true today as in the Kyoto of A.D. 1000. No book translated from the Japanese has a happier informality and a more inimitable flavor and universal quality of humor than these vivacious notes on life and manners set down in odd moments by Sei Shonagon." Elsie Weil

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 Jl 7 '29 1350w

Boston Transcript p2 F 20 '29 450w

Reviewed by H: McBride

Dial 86:354 Ap '29 430w

Nation 128:352 Mr 20 '29 70w

"The great length of 'The Tale of Genji' has frightened many people who would enjoy it, and some of these may read the little 'Pillow-Book,' and then be tempted to read the more important book. Sei Shonagon was a contemporary of Murasaki, and wrote even better prose than the novelist, Mr. Waley tells us. Both books describe, of course, the same civilization, in some ways the most delightful that has ever existed. . . Mr. Waley's style, with its clean outline and delicate rhythms, continues to be in the first rank of contemporary English prose." Raymond Mortimer

+ Nation and Ath 44:658 F 9 '29 730w

"This fin-de-siècle descendant of the fortieth emperor, this exquisite sophisticate in a perfumed and calligraphic civilization as islanded in time as in space, might sit for her portrait to the Master of the Green Hat. No cosmopolitan flapper could be more swankily insolent, more precocious in her sagacities and parochial in her wit, more blasé." Clarence Britten

+ New Repub 58:104 Mr 13 '29 680w

"The comments with which Mr. Waley has linked together his selections from Sei Shōnagon's book are as entertaining as the quotations themselves. And this Japanese court lady's observations, upon her life, her companions and the many varied things she liked or disliked, are themselves full of wit and wisdom. This book should be read by all who have admired The Tale of Genji."

+ New Statesman 32:364 D 22 '28 580w

"A delightfully contradictory lady, who wanted inordinately to be liked and admired, but whose behavior must have made her formidable even to the most courageous and polished Japanese gentleman. But if she was not very popular in her own day, her Pillow-Book, with Mr. Waley's skilful assistance, must surely earn her the affection of the twentieth century." Ruth Seinfel

+ N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 2 '29 850w

" 'She gives back in her pages,' remarks her translator, 'with apparently as little effort of her own as a gong that sounds when it is struck, the whole warmth and glitter of the life that surrounded her.' " J: Carter

+ N Y Times p2 F 17 '29 580w

"We can like Sei Shonagon at a distance of almost a thousand years. She is real. A thousand ladies at this very moment are writing diaries that will not approach her note book for veracity, vivacity and unpadded directness." I: Goldberg

+ — N Y World p5e F 24 '29 550w

Outlook 151:269 F 13 '29 130w

"If Mr. Waley translates anything, it becomes a beautiful masterpiece, and he never fails to transmit the clarity, sparkle, and strange flavor of the original writer into the English version. This is particularly true of this volume; it has the savor of the Japanese of a thousand years ago. The ambiguities of the text have been clarified and objectionable phraseology has been modified in the translation." Younghill Kang

+ Sat R of Lit 5:900 Ap 20 '29 400w

Spec 141:999 D 29 '28 80w

Wis Lib Bul 25:99 Mr '29

SEIFFERT, MARJORIE ALLEN. King with three faces, and other poems. 120p $2 Scribner

811 29-20129

The title poem is a long, symbolic narrative which satirizes a machine-age civilization dominated by the three kings, Bel, Gath, and Barab, who have thought to eliminate the factor of emotion from their kingdom. To them, however, comes Queen Kaela, representing an older force, love. The remainder of the book is composed of individual lyrics and a whimsical drama, "Noah's ark, a play for toys."

"She is a poet who wastes few words and never squanders the resources of her richly stored mind. Her sonnets and lyrics are clean-cut and firm; at the same time, they do not sacrifice realism and vitality for the sake of that high austerity which, though it is becoming rather fashionable in current verse, remains the true property of only a few writers. However, one misses in the shorter poems the creative freshness of her narratives." M. D. Zabel

+ — New Repub 60:303 O 30 '29 260w

" 'The King with Three Faces' teases us because we suspect allegory and are yet at a loss to fit it together. The truth is, probably, that this narrative poem was written merely for the story, for the dramatic contrasts and the strange atmosphere. Naturally, however, it has also psychological value. The most characteristic thing about Mrs. Seiffert is her dressing intimate experiences of her own in fantastic disguises and making of them such bizarre fables as this or such mordant ballads as that of Rad and Beeling in her former book. This is her peculiar contribution to contemporary poetry, and a fascinating one; though she can also comment upon life and love with directness, pungency, and force." W: R. Benét

+ Sat R of Lit 6:292 O 19 '29 170w

SEITZ, DON CARLOS. Famous American duels; with some account of the causes that led up to them and the men engaged. 345p il $3.50 Crowell

394.8 Dueling 29-9132

These spirited and closely documented pages from American history recall some famous and some forgotten duels between principals of more or less importance in the history of the country.

SEITZ, D. C.—Continued

Booklist 25:379 Jl '29

"Mr. Seitz has dug up from indisputable sources a number of interesting cases, set them against the proper historical background and has given us a series of picturesque sketches."

+ Bookm 69:xv Ag '29 140w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p17 Jl 21 '29 550w

Cleveland Open Shelf p108 Jl '29

"Another of those happy groupings of historic action stories under a collective title which the author's easy, journalistic style makes such pleasant reading." F: H. Martens

+ N Y Evening Post p6m Jl 27 '29 160w

"He gives accounts of events of which the average man knows little or nothing; he is never pedantic; he never fills up space by digressions; he is a stranger to the melodramatic. Each incident is told well. The writing is always informed with vividness and realistic force." C: J. Finger

+ N Y World p7m Je 2 '29 220w

"The book is perhaps over-documented, but is intended for popular reading and written in an easy newspaper style."

+ Outlook 152:351 Je 26 '29 60w

"A journalistic but on the whole trustworthy account of the exciting encounters which used to cast their blight over human relations in the United States."

+ World Tomorrow 12:378 S '29 50w

SEITZ, DON CARLOS. From Kaw teepee to Capitol; the life story of Charles Curtis, Indian, who has risen to high estate. 223p il $2 Stokes

B or 92 Curtis, Charles 28-23644

In this biography of Charles Curtis Mr Seitz emphasises for his boy readers the interesting fact that Mr Curtis was not only the descendant, on his mother's side, of an Indian chief, but that he spent many of his boyhood years living with the Kaws as a real Indian boy.

"Mr. Seitz has collected a store of historical data about the Indians of the Middle West to go with that section of his biography. It provides much the best material in his book. The next best has to do with the youthful Curtis as a jockey. For the rest he trails off into a mild imitation of Horatio Alger, climaxing with the eulogies pronounced on his hero in the nomination speeches at Kansas City." W: M. Houghton

— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p18 N 4 '28 430w

Cleveland Open Shelf p135 D '28

Pratt p32 winter '29

"Written not as a campaign biography, but as a book of more permanent interest for juveniles, Mr. Seitz's little volume quite achieves its purpose. There is a great deal in Senator Curtis's life to enlist the admiration of the ordinary active boy. His Indian blood, his childhood among the Kaw Indians on the Neosho River, his adventures with the hostile Cheyennes, his life as a jockey riding races at county and State fairs, his schooling in Topeka, and his plucky struggle for admission to the bar, make up a narrative with many exciting pages."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:490 D 8 '28 150w

Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 20 '29 180w

Wis Lib Bul 24:348 D '28

SEITZ, DON CARLOS. James Gordon Bennetts; father and son; proprietors of the New York Herald. 405p il $5 Bobbs

B or 92 Bennett, James Gordon, 1795-1872. Bennett, James Gordon, 1841-1918. New York herald 28-28880

For descriptive note see Annual for 1928.

"It is doubtful if the New York press could have found a more competent biographer." R. E. Park

+ Am J Soc 34:912 Mr '29 900w

Booklist 25:212 F '29

Bookm 68:xviii F '29 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p42 Mr '29

"His is an engaging but superficial biography. He makes few comparisons, few judgments—even as to the ethics of the Bennetts' methods. He could have written a rich, informative biography which would have thrown light on both the past and the future of newspaper history, but he has succeeded only in constructing a swift, readable tale." E. H. Walton

+ — New Repub 57:304 Ja 30 '29 600w

"It is in dealing with the picturesque and the pungent that Mr. Seitz is at his best, and in this eminently readable volume he has full scope for his special flair. On the merely human side the story of the elder Bennett's adventures and achievements could not be better told. A historian would object that the study is too much on the surface. But simply as an enlivening tale this book is excellent." Allan Nevins

+ — N Y World p10m Ja 20 '29 1150w

St Louis 27:99 Mr '29.

SELDES, GEORGE. You can't print that! The truth behind the news, 1918-1928. 465p il $4 Brewer

940.5 World politics. Liberty of the press. Censorship 29-5424

"George Seldes, former international correspondent of the Chicago Tribune, took a holiday 'to write the truth behind the news.' The issue . . . is the record of personal experiences of a newspaper man let loose for ten years in half a dozen foreign countries, with a devil-may-care regard for personal safety, equipped with the combined qualifications of diplomat, secret service agent, military strategist and political economist, though, perhaps, less of the diplomat than of the others—and burning with an irrepressible desire to pluck the news clean of propaganda and to keep the cables hot with the incandescent truth."—N Y Evening Post

Booklist 25:316 My '29

"Whether the reader agrees with the statements or not, he will be vastly entertained by the authors' reckless impudence, interested by his inside information and impressed by his ardent honesty."

Bookm 69:xvi Ap '29 130w

"He is a first-rate, rapid-fire, colorful reporter; his book is a series of dramatic episodes told with fire and passion. . . 'You Can't Print That' may not solve the problem of inadequate foreign news reporting, but it gives an exciting picture of the process." L: Gannett

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p6 F 17 '29 1050w

"Here we have something far more than an attack on American journalism. It is more a philippic against foreign journalistic censorship in general, particularly as executed by the dictators of contemporary Europe, whose edicts allow little of the truth to cross the transatlantic cables. And Mr. Seldes goes much further. He enters into a violent attack on our own foreign service, its personnel, its method and its policies." A. S. R.

Boston Transcript p3 Ap 6 '29 330w

"For the most part the title 'You Can't Print That' hardly covers the contents of this book—indeed incident after incident which Mr. Seldes records goes to prove that precisely the opposite is true, that despite censorship at home and censorship abroad the American journalist reporting on foreign Powers can print almost anything he chooses. But Mr. Seldes gives a vivid picture of the difficulties which surround the foreign correspondent, difficulties deriving from censorships, propaganda, and corruption, and it is refreshing to read so spirited a defense of journalism." Dorothy Thompson

+ Nation 128:197 F 13 '29 1250w

"He is much too good a journalist to allow these stories to lose anything in the telling. His style has the leanness, picturesqueness, and 'punch' which is characteristic of the very best 'special correspondents.' In consequence his book is very readable, even exciting." Leonard Woolf
+ Nation and Ath 44:914 Mr 30 '29 450w

Reviewed by H. N. Denny
New Repub 58:310 My 1 '29 1200w
New Statesman 32:670 Mr 2 '29 700w

Reviewed by F: F. Van de Water
N Y Evening Post p10m F 6 '29 50w

"Hard-boiled newspaper men may resent the gusto with which Mr. Seldes has made a book out of their daily job. But it makes a first-rate yarn. And it's a book, too, for those outsiders who like their news served straight and, who won't mind the splotches of gall which Mr. Seldes occasionally spills, for, after all, this man had something to get excited about." Gerald Goode
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 9 '29 420w

"In addition to the interest of the stories themselves, Mr. Seldes makes good reading of the account of how he got the stories." Herschel Brickell
+ No Am 227:adv Mr '29 150w

Reviewed by Ernest Boyd
Outlook 151:233 F 6 '29 750w
St Louis 27:157 My '29

"However much his point of view may be discounted, his book remains a work of exceptional importance, which it would be unfair to him to summarize, since it fully deserves to be read in detail as it stands."
+ Sat R 147:400 Mr 23 '29 660w

"What I miss in Mr. Seldes's book is what I always have missed in his reporting; evidences of a sense of perspective and proportion—not to mention humor; of historic background, discerning realization of antecedent things and conditions. Appreciation of the traditions, habits, experiences, and education of peoples, such as the Russians and the Italians, leading them to tolerate the persons, the abuses, and the tyrannies about which he would like to write 'the truth behind the news.' So much depends upon what one means by 'the truth.' " J: P. Gavit
+ — Sat R of Lit 5:796 Mr 23 '29 850w

"An unusual book, full of significant stories and of things that wanted saying, yet not easy to read, and at times irritating because loosely put together (and containing every conceivable error of transcription whenever the author breaks into Italian). But decidedly a book we would not have missed for worlds."
+ — Spec 142:394 Mr 9 '29 900w

"A vivid and important book, readable to the last drop." Leon Whipple
+ Survey 62:315 Je 1 '29 250w
Times [London] Lit Sup p174 Mr 7 '29 1000w

SELDES, GILBERT VIVIAN. Hour with the movies and the talkies. (One hour ser.) 156p $1 Lippincott

791.4 Moving pictures. Moving pictures, Talking 29-27820

A critical discussion of the Hollywood industry from a music and dramatic critic's point of view. The book opens with a brief history of the silent film; the latter part is occupied with proffered answers to two questions: (1) Why no artist comparable to Chaplin in comedy has arisen in any other type of movie, and (2) Whether the movie has reached its destined end in the talkies.

---

"With eloquent compactness, our critic emeritus of the film-as-art, Gilbert Seldes, offers that mythical art to the layman in a critical pocket-history which contains more data and commentary than its brevity suggests. Indeed, no one else could have remembered to say so much so well. The major fault of Seldes' book is that while the author is almost always exacting, he is frequently not exact." H. A. Potamkin
+ — New Repub 61:118 D 18 '29 600w

"We find Gilbert Seldes's admirable essay on the Movies and Talkies the best volume, so far, in Lippincott's One Hour Series. For one thing, time-space and subject match. A man cannot learn enough about the English novel or about American history in an hour's reading to change his intellectual grasp or aesthetic appreciation of the subject one iota. But all that he needs or cares to know about an industry thirty-five years old at the most can be compressed into that space. And Gilbert Seldes has done it."
+ Outlook 153:189 O 2 '29 270w

SELDES, GILBERT VIVIAN. Wings of the eagle. 312p $2.50 Little

29-20885

Concerned with an idealist's attempt to establish a Foundation (the town named Unity) by providing farming land to further the Americanization of foreigners, who would otherwise have to work in sweatshops. Against this experiment runs the love story of Anne, wife of Arthur Gordon, and Lodor, who dreams that in Unity people could live simply and freely away from corruption. His dream fails of realization; a sense of personal disaster overtakes him when Anne's child is still-born; a final accident at the close of the story completes his disillusionment; and he dies without perceiving that Unity would fulfil most of the dreams he cherished.

---

"Mr. Seldes has written too deftly, has elaborated his design too carefully, has kept his reader too awake to his story to allow anyone to spot easily where he has failed to endow his people with life that will persist in the memory. Can it be that he himself was never completely inside their skins? His external treatment is skilful, but one misses a warmth of apprehension of the three main characters. In my judgment, Mr. Seldes is not wholly sympathetic with his present material. I have laid stress on this, because otherwise The Wings of the Eagle has many good points, and this complete externality seems to account for a certain sense of disappointment it gives."
— + Bookm 70:314 N '29 500w

"That the keen and versatile Mr. Seldes should produce a novel of this character is something of a disappointment. His story has all the requirements. The plot is more than adequate, the situations are full of emotional possibilities, the characters thoughtfully drawn. There are several high peaks in the action, including murder, rape and arson, and a background of gentle philosophic idealism. Yet the combination, the final result, is not arresting." M. C. Dawson
— + Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 O 20 '29 700w
Boston Transcript p12 D 14 '29 330w

"In his first novel Mr. Seldes shows that he is well along toward the mastery of plot and structure and not so far along in characterization. He realizes almost every opportunity that his idea and intention suggest. Let Mr. Seldes conceive and extend some more people like Gordon and his next novel will be richer and better."
+ — Nation 129:782 D 25 '29 170w

"Mr. Seldes is at his best when he writes in a low minor key, while his sensitive style preserves a unity of tone which is of the artist." R. M. L.
New Repub 61:177 Ja 1 '30 200w

"The characters have been developed with a fine, classic carelessness of the passing mood of fiction. The author's Spartan economy offends every rule of composition except those controlling works of passion, and for this failure to be slick his work must get along without the awards of popularity. Readers unused to the taste of hemlock will find obstacles, but it is a choice experience for those who care to feel between the lines of a book something of the essential agony of the world." Harris Russell

SELDES, G. V.—Continued
+ N Y Evening Post p12m O 19 '29 500w

" 'The Wings of the Eagle' bears resemblance at times to a long and elaborate tract which, if it points out no definite moral, at least deals with a subject in which there is a moral issue. . . The reader is often over-awed by Mr. Seldes's purposefulness. A little more fiction and a little less theme would not be unwelcome."
N Y Times p7 O 27 '29 550w

"It is hard to believe that so clever and able a critic as Gilbert Seldes could write so dull a novel. . . The incidents are dramatic enough in content but are not effectively presented, and the characters make little appeal to the reader's emotions. The novel is written competently, as one might expect, but it reads like a tract." F. L. Robbins
— Outlook 153:269 O 16 '29 220w
Springf'd Republican p7e N 3 '29 250w

SELEKMAN, BEN MORRIS, and SELEKMAN, MRS SYLVIA (KOPALD). British industry today; a study of English trends in industrial relations. 290p $3 Harper

331.1 Great Britain—Industries. Labor and laboring classes—Great Britain. Trade unions—Great Britain. Insurance, Unemployment 29-16882

"In 'British Industry Today' the Selekmans provide us with a carefully authenticated if sympathetic picture of the structure. But this is not their only service. They also diagnose briefly but clearly the essential malady that underlies the protracted depression from which the country continues to suffer. This, as they point out, is not a consequence of unionism, of unemployment insurance, or of any of the other devices that safeguard labor against exploitation, though it has put them to the acid test. It springs directly from the dependence of British industry on export markets and from its unwillingness to modernize its productive methods."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

Reviewed by W. M. Houghton
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p15 S 1 '29 900w

"The book is deeply interesting because its discussions are broadly based in social philosophy and are judicial in temper. Aside from its value as a presentation of industrial conditions and trends, it is timely and important for political reasons since it illuminates the background of the political situation in Britain and reveals, in its disclosures of the ideals and purposes of labor, much of the heart of the party in power."
+ N Y Times p16 S 8 '29 850w

SELIGMAN, EDWIN ROBERT ANDERSON. Economics of farm relief; a survey of the agricultural problem. 303p $3 Columbia univ. press

630.973 Agriculture—Economic aspects. Agriculture—United States 29-6427

The book was prepared during the presidential campaign of 1928 at the request of the chairman of the Democratic party, but publication was withheld until after the election. The author, an eminent economist, analyzes the position of the American farmer and recommends a program of farm relief, including the creation of a farm board to act as a center of discussion and to influence price control.

Reviewed by H. B. Price
Am Econ R 19:670 D '29 900w
Booklist 25:349 Je '29

"The volume is very readable, broad in its outlook and satisfying in its completeness. Students of this subject will find the excellent bibliography of great value." G. R. B. R.
+ Boston Transcript p4 Ag 3 '29 350w

"This is a useful book for back-to-the-land enthusiasts to read, because it discloses some of the inevitable causes of our agricultural depression. For farmers it is not such good reading, because it comes no nearer to a cure for their pains than Congress with its so-called relief measures."
+ — Nation 128:771 Je 26 '29 40w

"The scholarly equipment of the author, the acute plight in which a great and basic American industry finds itself and the evident interest of Professor Seligman to ferret out the truth of the situation have all combined to produce a notable contribution to the subject." R. M. Field
+ N Y Evening Post p11m Mr 30 '29 480w

"Dr. Seligman's book reveals a thorough examination of the better-known facts of the situation, with conclusions drawn accordingly, as might be expected from an able economist. If some of the conclusions are to be questioned it is because Dr. Seligman's necessarily hurried inquiry did not permit him time to consider fully some of the extremely important but not yet widely known agricultural circumstances." Wheeler McMillen
+ — N Y Times p5 Je 16 '29 280w
Sat R of Lit 6:114 S 7 '29 200w
Times [London] Lit Sup p559 Jl 11 '29 60w

SELLARS, ROY WOOD. Religion coming of age. (Philosophy for the layman ser.) 293p $2.50 (10s 6d) Macmillan

210 Religion. Christianity 28-23055

The keynote of the present book is the union of humanism and naturalism. The spiritual must be naturalized and humanized. "Moreover," the author writes, "human and social evolution must be taken seriously and fitted into the scheme of things. It is this result that the new naturalism is making possible. Something of this wider and more humanistic perspective I have tried to put into this book. A religion founded on realities is a religion coming of age." (Preface)

Reviewed by Reinhold Niebuhr
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 Ja 13 '29 300w
Boston Transcript p3 N 24 '28 700w
Christian Century 45:1326 N 1 '28 150w
Reviewed by D. A. Piatt
Int J Ethics 39:370 Ap '29 320w
Reviewed by E. E. Aubrey
J Religion 9:314 Ap '29 1200w

"The book is mercilessly critical; but it is written with a genuinely sympathetic appreciation of traditional beliefs, and with an entire absence of bitterness."
J Religion 9:333 Ap '29 60w

"During several years of fairly constant perusal of religious literature I have been looking for such a book as this. Professor Sellars raises the traditional theological questions. In answering them, he comes to the conclusion that there is no reason for belief in immortality and that man has no 'cosmic companion.' But this is neither the ranting of the professional atheist nor the bewildered, chaotic moaning of the romantic pessimist. The result is a view of the universe which provides the outlines at least of that synthesis of modern thought and knowledge which has been so long needed." Granville Hicks
+ Nation 128:49 Ja 9 '29 350w
Pratt p8 summer '29
R of Rs 78:adv36 N '28 50w

SELLERS, CHARLES COLEMAN. Lorenzo Dow, the bearer of the Word. 275p il $3.50 Minton

B or 92 Dow, Lorenzo 28-24263

Biography of the American itinerant preacher self-styled "the eccentric cosmopolite," but known by his contemporaries as "crazy Dow." Born in 1777 Dow was one of the earliest protestant preachers. In his wanderings he covered much territory in England, Ireland, the United States and Canada.

"Mr. Sellers's book on Lorenzo Dow is the first biography of the famous itinerant whose travels and preaching activities were exceeded only by John Wesley and Bishop Asbury, and deserves a permanent place in any one's library, for it presents faithfully and graphically the life and works of one of the greatest clerical clowns of all time. The unregenerate will chuckle over it, and the devout Christian, reading with his usual mental astigmatism, will find it satisfying." Herbert Asbury

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 N 25 '28 520w

"Lorenzo Dow has been much written about, but never more interestingly or with greater force of authority than in this volume. Mr. Sellers is a graduate of Haverford College with an A.M. degree from Harvard University, where he made a special study of American social history. The present study is based on thorough research and is a lively picture of the early days, in which the eccentric Lorenzo played so prominent a part."

+ Boston Transcript p5 D 15 '28 200w

Cleveland Open Shelf p30 F '29

Reviewed by Dwight Macdonald

New Repub 58:76 Mr 6 '29 180w

"It cannot be said that at every point the story possesses body. The material which has lain untouched for almost a century, wears rather thin in places. Yet, in spite of the book's striking anachronism as a theme for modern biography, the author has honestly and sympathetically set forth a significant chapter in American life." Gardner Harding

+ — N Y Times p11 Ja 13 '29 1650w

"This book is the story of how Lorenzo got religion and spent the rest of his life wandering over this country and abroad passing it on to others. Lorenzo and Peggy, his faithful 'rib,' were a peculiar pair and Mr. Sellers has made the most of his material. The author, we suspect, writes with his tongue in his cheek." M. B.

+ Outlook 150:1333 D 12 '28 100w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw

R of Rs 79:28 Mr '29 30w

St Louis 27:169 My '29

SELLERY, GEORGE CLARKE, and KREY, AUGUST CHARLES. Medieval foundations of western civilization. (Harper's hist. ser.) 633p $3.50 Harper

940.1 Middle ages—History. Civilization, Medieval 29-1452

"An interesting study of the influence of the Middle Ages upon our present civilization. Starting with the thesis, 'We are heirs to the Middle Ages' the two authors first sketch the salient features of mediaevalism, and then show the points of contact with the present day. Dr. Sellery is a professor in the University of Wisconsin, while Dr. Krey is on the faculty of the University of Minnesota."—No Am

Reviewed by E. Emerton

Am Hist R 34:796 Jl '29 750w

"The selection and organization of material show discretion and skill. The inclusion of a carefully selected classified bibliography, brought down to date, is by no means the least of the many obligations students and teachers of medieval history owe to Sellery and Krey." O. W. Elsbree

+ Ann Am Acad 144:152 Jl '29 280w

Booklist 25:280 Ap '29

"The story of medieval history here is told again, with good style and sound scholarship."

+ Christian Century 46:521 Ap 17 '29 130w

"It is a misplaced emphasis which, in the reviewer's judgment, is the most serious fault of this skilful, teachable, and scholarly book." L. H. Jenks

+ — Hist Outlook 20:144 Mr '29 950w

"Another well-written sketch of the history of Western Europe from the time of the barbarian invasions of the Roman Empire, quite as acceptable to the reader who is historically minded as it is likely to be to college or university students."

+ Nation 128:772 Je 26 '29 140w

"A book so stuffed with information, historical and literary, elementary and advanced, would seem to cater for a type of reader that scarcely exists this side of the Atlantic. We rarely buy such books; we yet more rarely read them. Those of us who reach maturity knowing absolutely nothing about Western civilisation, are seldom seized with a sudden desire to know all. This book will find a better market in America than in England. The illustrations are not remarkable, but the maps, as so often in American publications, could not be bettered."

— New Statesman 33:560 Ag 10 '29 250w

"To give the average intelligent reader a clear idea of so confused and disparate a period . . . is anything but an easy task. The authors deserve credit for having solved it in a manner as interesting as comprehensible. The 'Cambridge Medieval History,' with its wealth of specialist minutiæ, its rich elaboration of detail is a wonderful historians' history. This 'Founding of Western Civilization'—so far as a general cultural worth is concerned—is probably the more useful work." F: H. Martens

+ N Y Evening Post p10m Mr 30 '29 430w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell

No Am 227:adv Mr '29 90w

"The book is admirably well balanced and very readable. Taken with its bibliography it is to a passionate medievalist, both a guide and a témptation to further reading. And the casual reader who wants one book on the Middle Ages will find this one excellent."

+ Outlook 151:231 F 6 '29 120w

"It is a heroic effort of compression, not entirely successful. The style is dry; the observations necessarily superficial. The volume is expertly indexed, profusely illustrated with well chosen reproductions, many from medieval manuscripts, and provided with adequate maps and a valuable selected bibliography."

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:767 Mr 9 '29 230w

"The book records events but has little to say of social forces or currents underlying them. It offers no new or startling interpretations. In fact, it is a descriptive account only." E. P. K.

Springf'd Republican p10 Ap 26 '29 220w

"Their joint contribution to an historical series in single volumes is marked by the qualities of perspicuity and vividness. The interest is not allowed to flag. The essentials are here with a sufficiency of details; the process of events and ideas brings no confusion; the tone is at once sympathetic and detached."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p354 My 2 '29 1000w

Wis Lib Bul 25:159 My '29

SELTZER, CHARLES ALDEN. The raider. 294p $2 Doubleday, Doran [7s 6d Hodder & S.] 29-11671

Ellen Ballinger came west to her father's ranch determined to marry Jim Kellis. When she found Jim already had a wife her pride was so piqued that she married the first man who came her way. That man was Jeff Hale, a hard riding, stern young offshoot of an early settler. The conflict of wills between these two fine products of different environments completes the story.

Reviewed by Will Cuppy

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 My 26 '29 100w

N Y Times p24 Je 9 '29 130w

"The stubborn heroine of this briskly written story of the bitter and longdrawn-out struggle between the cattle kings of the West and the farmers who pressed them so hardly once the virgin land had been broken, is not presented in a very sympathetic light for the reader's consideration. . . The fights and rescues are more convincing than the plot."

— Times [London] Lit Sup p686 S 5 '29 140w

SENCOURT, ROBERT ESMONDE. Life of George Meredith. 342p $3.50 Scribner

B or 92 Meredith, George 29-21390

Because of Meredith's own opposition to the idea of a biography, no authoritative life of Meredith has appeared prior to Mr Sencourt's. In this volume the author's purpose has been to rectify some misleading estimates of the character of George Meredith, especially in regard to the tragedy of his first marriage. With the cooperation of Meredith's family and friends, Mr Sencourt has had access to many letters, notes on manuscripts, etc., hitherto unpublished, which add much to his study of Meredith the man, the poet, and the novelist.

"Mr. Sencourt's enthusiasm for Meredith is infectious. It is both the strength and the weakness of his book. His evident admiration for his subject carries him along and enlivens his pages while it also leads him to gloss over any of Meredith's actions which do not seem to fit the heroic rôle for which the biographer has cast him." H. R. Hays

+ — Bookm 70:329 N '29 320w

Reviewed by E: B. Hall

Boston Transcript p10 N 9 '29 1800w

"Mr. Sencourt has the data for a full judgment; I think he has succeeded in making a just one. His work is a brave sally in the battle to establish Meredith in the place he should rightfully occupy in English letters, a place usurped in our generation by the much more provincial figure of Thomas Hardy." L: Mumford

+ New Repub 60:355 N 13 '29 1600w

Reviewed by R. E. Roberts

New Statesman 34:87 O 26 '29 1600w

"It is unlikely now that an 'official' life will ever see the day. Happily, Mr. Sencourt's work largely discounts the need of it. It is built up on practically all the material that would have been laid open to the writer of such a biography, and has had, indeed, the approval and the furtherance of that diminished circle from which an official biography should appropriately have come. Its members could, indeed, hardly ask for a more reverential attitude than Mr. Sencourt has shown toward his subject—a reverence that carries weight in that it is reasoned, grounded on detached estimation of Meredith's art and human side, not an outflow of partiality arising from friendship's contact." Uffington Valentine

+ N Y Times p4 O 6 '29 2500w

"Readable and authoritative, and contains much material not hitherto available, in the light of which some earlier estimates of Meredith have been revised. The novels and poems are considered at some length, not critically, but in their relation to the man. This is a biography for which at least one reader has felt the need." W. R. Brooks

+ Outlook 153:312 O 23 '29 150w

Reviewed by T. E. Welby

Sat R 148:324 S 21 '29 400w

Reviewed by J. W. Cunliffe

Sat R of Lit 6:362 N 9 '29 1300w

"Mr. Sencourt has written the first 'authoritative' biography of Meredith. He has had access to private papers, and he has tried to make his work worthy of his subject. Mr. Sencourt has really given labour and intelligence to understanding Meredith's own writings—he has soaked himself in them, and he can often clear up obscurities merely by adducing the interior crises of Meredith's private life. On the whole, however, Mr. Sencourt's biography is peculiarly irritating. The narrative is never clear. Mr. Sencourt has no gift for order and proportion, or for leaving a tale to tell itself. His own English is quite monstrous: overcoloured and hysterical. None the less this 'Life' is indispensable to those who wish to study and understand Meredith; and out of the confusion of his story a real figure emerges." Alan Porter

+ — Spec 143:375 S 21 '29 1150w

"Mr. Sencourt approaches Meredith on his own high value and produces a portrait which cannot be called romantic because it is true; or rather, perhaps, it yields the truth of high romance, in language worthy of its theme."

+ Springf'd Republican p7e O 13 '29 900w

"Claiming to be the 'authoritative biography' of George Meredith, and written with the help of letters, poems and other sources of information not previously consulted by others, this book lends its authority to a view of Meredith's character which turns out to be much the same as that set forth by Mr. Priestley in the English Men of Letters series. . . It seems obvious that in this sort of pick-and-choose work, even more than in the old 'cumbersome biography,' two things are necessary. One is such clearness and precision of writing as Mr. Sencourt's; the other is accuracy in such details as are selected. Some of the sentences in this Life of Meredith are far from lucid; and we have noted a long list of small misstatements, misprints and, worst of all, misquotations."

— + Times [London] Lit Sup p814 O 17 '29 1000w

SENIOR, NASSAU WILLIAM. Industrial efficiency and social economy; original mss. arranged and ed. by S. Leon Levy. 2v 375;422p $8 Holt [32s King]

330.1 Economics 28-14391

"The publication of Industrial Efficiency and Social Economy makes a noteworthy contribution to the history of political economy, for it gives the world the mature and fairly complete writings of Nassau W. Senior. His position in the history of economic and social thought will be somewhat enhanced. It may be that time will accord to Senior credit for some of the restatement of classical economic theory which was formerly ascribed to Mill. Senior's reputation as a keen critic of contemporary economic conditions and of writers on political economy will surely be increased."—Ann Am Acad

"Every section of the work carries rich reward for anyone truly interested in the development of economics in the nineteenth century. Mr. Levy has earned our gratitude. He has revealed to us a Senior with economic theory developed far beyond his earlier writings, and it is to be hoped that he will soon publish the complete collection of manuscripts verbatim as found, arranged in their chronological order, for those who desire to see the manner of Senior's growth during the forty-two years of his activity as an economist." J: H. Sherman

+ Am Econ R 19:88 Mr '29 680w

Reviewed by S. H. Patterson

Ann Am Acad 141:275 Ja '29 660w

"A symmetrical and well-developed book, carefully arranged and presenting the views of a matured mind and a logical, though far from being pedantic or dry."

+ Boston Transcript p3 Jl 21 '28 220w

"These two massive volumes are a very Albert Memorial of misdirected energy. Nassau Senior was one of the most acute economic thinkers of the nineteenth century, and it has long been lamented that, apart from his short Political Economy, he left no systematic treatment of the subject behind him. He did, however, leave certain volumes of manuscript notes, prepared for his lectures at Oxford. Instead of reprinting what Senior wrote as he wrote it, Mr. Levy has rearranged his matter out of all recognition, according to his own ideas of how Senior might have rearranged it for publication himself. This rearrangement is an outrage. It is perhaps better to have Senior in this form than not at all. But what we want is Senior, and not Mr. Levy."

— New Statesman 32:774 Mr 23 '29 200w

Spec 142:sup592 Ap 13 '29 720w

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p324 Ap 25 '29 1250w

SERGEANT, ELIZABETH SHEPLEY. Short as any dream. 244p $2.50 Harper

29-24375

The story of several New England generations, told in a series of episodes: the Revolutionary times, pioneer Minnesota life, with Indian uprisings, the Civil war period, on down to the modern woman—a writer in a New York apartment—who inherits the family heirlooms and tells the story of her ancestors.

"Here is a record very different from the tight-lipped rigor that it has become fashionable to project on traditions of New England. It is a record of people who were restrained, yet gay, gallant and courageous; of a life that often was plain but never meager; of adventures that quickened both the mind and the senses." Mary Ross

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 N 24 '29 820w

"Miss Sergeant's fault is to distort her scene with sentiment. 'Short as Any Dream' is often vivid, and always sincere. It is unfortunate that Miss Sergeant has not looked at both past and present with equal detachment, and that sentiment was the tool which came most readily to hand." Louise Bogan

— + New Repub 61:50 D 4 '29 370w

"Her style is attuned to the age on which she dwells, febrile and mutinous in the present, tranquil and balanced in her depictions of the past. We do not know which to admire more—the tenderness that never grows maudlin or the frugal vividness of the descriptions in which she recreates beauty." F: F. Van de Water

+ N Y Evening Post p11m N 2 '29 220w

"The story evolves in the same sharp, unexpected way that life does and carries its people back and forth between New England, Minnesota in the frontier days just before the Civil War with Indians on the war-path and massacres of the settlers, California in the '70s, and back to New England. Miss Sergeant does not attempt to tell the story of all these people through all this period. She clips out a scene here and there, consequent, poignant, illuminating, and makes her characters relive it, re-creating them and it with much vitality, informally connecting these scenes in the talk of her people sufficiently to make of the whole a continuous story."

+ N Y Times p6 N 17 '29 520w

"The author has done a fine, sensitive and charming piece of work in this book. It comes so close to appealing to the fundamental emotions that it makes this reader suspect it must be art." E. G. Grady

+ N Y World p11m N 10 '29 230w

"Through its desire for economy and its timid handling of emotion it is occasionally obscure and inadequate in dealing with particular incidents, but on the whole it reveals the soul as well as the bones and sinews of New England." Johan Smertenko

+ — Outlook 153:398 N 6 '29 100w

Reviewed by F. L. Robbins

Outlook 153:669 D 25 '29 80w

"In her originality of handling the historical novel, Miss Sergeant has produced a distinguished book, remarkable for its freshness and beauty. . . Disjointed and exasperating as the book undoubtedly is at times, and somewhat dull and prosaic as it occasionally shows itself when the author's sureness of touch momentarily fails her, nevertheless it is on the whole a masterly piece of work, and one which no reader interested in the trend of American fiction can afford to miss." M. P. Montague

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:601 D 28 '29 1050w

"There is much in this novel to interest and absorb the minds of those who care for delicate character delineation and the swift pictures of changing times. Its appeal would, however, be more quickly sensed if the opening pages were less subjective in their approach."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7e N 17 '29 370w

SERMONETA, VITTORIA (COLONNA) CAETANI, duchessa di. Things past; foreword by Robert Hichens. 336p il $5 Appleton [21s Hutchinson]

B or 92 29-25939

The writer of these memoirs, descended from a famous medieval Roman family, the Colonna, married into an equally renowned one, the Caetani. From childhood she visited regularly in the Norfolk home of her English grandmother so that her recollections are divided between English and Roman society. Her book is the fresh outpouring of a gay and interesting experience, and full of anecdotes about her notable friends, among whom were King Edward VII, the Empress Eugénie, Lord Kitchener, Dusé, d'Annunzio, Alfred Rothschild, and many others.

Boston Transcript p8 Ja 4 '30 1250w

"The Duchess of Sermoneta belongs to that brilliant international aristocracy of the first water which is not yet altogether one of the 'things past,' but which can scarcely survive what reactionaries regard as the Dark Ages of Democracy. Her reminiscences differ from the usual products of people with similar advantages in that they exhale a continuous and delightful freshness, so that the friend of the Empress Eugénie, of King Edward, and of d'Annunzio, does not become, like nine memoirists out of ten, a mere period decoration, but continually impresses one with the sparkle and resilience of good breeding, and somehow seems to have found eternal youth." W: Plomer

+ Nation and Ath 46:114 O 19 '29 300w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p12m D 21 '29 280w

"We all fear memories, especially those published at a guinea or more, and it is therefore the greater pleasure to be able to say that those before us are of the better sort and distinctly worth reading. They are well written and are about interesting places and people—not least among whom should be numbered the gifted writer herself."

+ Sat R 148:386 O 5 '29 580w

"It would be a churlish soul that did not enjoy some part at least of the Duchess of Sermoneta's bright, fresh memories. . . The book, however, contains rather a large supply of stuff which savours of the Court Circular."

+ — Spec 143:496 O 12 '29 170w

"It is for the personal gossip that most people flick through light memoirs; and plenty is to be had in these pages."

+ — Times [London] Lit Sup p733 S 26 '29 400w

SERVISS, GARRETT PUTNAM. Story of the moon; a description of the scenery of the lunar world as it would appear to a visitor spending a month on the moon. new ed 247p il $3 (10s 6d) Appleton

523.3 Moon 28-17984

First published in 1907 under title, "The moon." "Really a story, but a true one, told by the author to an imaginary friend. The four chapters are on the four phases of the moon and one who reads it will never look at the full moon again without trying to trace the craters, mountains and plains so graphically described. Remarkable photographs from pictures taken at the Yerkes observatory."—Wis Lib Bul

"First printed in 1907, under title of 'The Moon,' this book is probably the first to give so intimate a description of lunar scenery. We have found it of absorbing interest." F. M. W.

+ Boston Transcript p6 Ag 22 '28 250w

St Louis 27:48 F '29

"This guidebook to the lunar surface is saved from the dulness of a mere gazetteer by the admirable series of photographs—taken by Wallace and Ritchey at the Yerkes Observatory—which accompany it. Twenty-one successive plates of the whole moon show the changes of illumination, from day to day, with its phases, and half a dozen more, on a larger scale, exhibit details of the surface with high magnification. . . The reviewer doubts whether the author's plan of presenting his material in the form of a succession of conversations with a charming but unnamed lady is fortunately chosen." H: N. Russell

+ — Sat R of Lit 6:7 Jl 27 '29 330w

Wis Lib Bul 24:301 N '28

SEYMOUR, BEATRICE KEAN (STAPLETON) (MRS WILLIAM KEAN SEYMOUR). Youth rides out. 318p $2.50 Knopf [7s 6d Chapman & H.]

29-2377

A new story of the poor young husband and the rich young wife. Camilla tries living with Lindsay on his income and at first the little apartment in Liverpool is great fun. But when the adventure stales and she asks him to try living her way, Lindsay refuses. Divorce follows, and sometime later he meets another woman.

---

"Miss Seymour succeeds in portraying the inevitable distance between persons of fundamentally different environments, persons who have not merely individual idiosyncrasies which must be adjusted, but, even more deeply, the traditions of a class."

+ Bookm 69:xxiv Ap '29 100w

Reviewed by A. B. Parsons

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p4 F 3 '29 800w

Boston Transcript p2 F 16 '29 380w

Cleveland Open Shelf p78 My '29

"The people in Youth Rides Out are alive; they move and talk as men and women do, but there is about them a continuous bright intelligence which I am afraid is not so noticeable in their flesh and blood equivalents." R. E. Roberts

— + New Statesman 31:760 S 29 '28 320w

"On the whole Mrs. Seymour has told her tale well. The story is unpretentious in structure; it unfolds logically and naturally; it holds the interest. The writing has clarity, and, at moments, distinction." Lillian Rogers

+ N Y Evening Post p9m Ja 26 '29 630w

"Mrs. Seymour writes competently and well. The charm of her style does much to cover the banality of her material and a certain superficiality in her characterizations. But in spite of her skill, there are large sections of the book which drag interminably."

— + N Y Times p7 F 17 '29 520w

"Not startlingly new, not particularly clever. Yet Mrs. Seymour writes with effect. . . Here is first class story telling."

+ N Y World p11m F 17 '29 110w

"Admirably done, although hardly so distinguished a piece of work as its predecessor." Herschel Brickell

+ — No Am 227:adv Ap '29 40w

"Mrs. Seymour is a most capable novelist, and 'Youth Rides Out' comes up to the high standard we expect of her. It is a sound, strong piece of work, a little over-permeated by love." L. P. Hartley

+ — Sat R 146:304 S 8 '28 420w

"Despite the banality of its thesis, the book contains a colorful drawing of this conflict of youth with the windmills of modern society, a drawing which confines itself to a sentimental genre, but which displays the rugged strength and dramatic accuracy which is born of sincere analysis and a well-disciplined selection of material."

+ — Sat R of Lit 5:838 Mr 30 '29 250w

"Youth rides out to adventure, but disillusionment lurks around the corner. It is a familiar enough theme, but Mrs. Seymour, a true artist, gives new life to it. She does so the more successfully because she avoids excitement and drama. . . Her people are real human beings, and their fortunes engross us because they are described not merely with accurate observation, but with sensitive and subtle understanding." G. T.

+ Spec 141:273 S 1 '28 450w

SEYMOUR, MRS FLORA WARREN. Story of the red man. 421p il $5 Longmans

970.1 Indians of North America—Legends

29-19704

A picture of the North America Indian as he was at the discovery of America and early colonization, opens the book. The tribes located in the eastern territories, with which the colonists first came in contact, are separately described, including the story of Pontiac. There follows a survey of the Indians of the West and Southwest, and the conflict with Indian tribes during the Civil war. The Indian's last stands against the white invasion, the schooling of Indian children, and the marking off of special land reservations are the topics which conclude this history of the red man. Illustrations and maps.

---

Booklist 26:64 N '29

Bookm 70:xii O '29 150w

"To page 350 Mrs. Seymour's book is a sketchy history of Indian wars, in flowing English of brief paragraphs, swayed by an unconscious race prejudice that has ceased to be popular since Grinnell, Mary Austin, Schulz, Lummis and Cushing began to write. The remaining fifty pages are discussion of present Indian questions, evidently written before President Hoover changed his Cabinet and embodying the standpoint of the former Indian Bureau regime." J: Collier

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p38 S 29 '29 500w

Boston Transcript p7 O 19 '29 350w

Reviewed by H: Chapin

New Repub 61:23 N 27 '29 280w

Reviewed by C: W. Thompson

N Y Times p3 S 22 '29 1850w

"A coherent, vivid, and frequently picturesque narrative. Her account is also valuable as a running record of the Government's relations with the tribes through commissioners and army officers. It is the first attempt to cover the ground comprehensively in a popular work." W: B. Shaw

+ R of Rs 80:24 S '29 150w

St Louis 27:343 D '29

"It is a plain, unvarnished tale, entirely, and almost disappointingly, without prejudice. Its appraisals are keen and its judgments clear. From the first meeting of Columbus with the supposed natives of India, with their mutual misunderstandings, to the corralled wards of the nation, it is a tale infinite in variety and unflagging in interest. . . Mrs Seymour's comments upon Indian personality are as illuminating as her views of their racial characteristics." J. T. Bramhall

+ Springf'd Republican p7e O 6 '29 1500w

Times [London] Lit Sup p1066 D 19 '29 350w

SEYMOUR, JOHN BARTON. British employment exchange. 292p $3 Coward-McCann

331.112 Employment agencies [L28-124]

"Tells how the British employment exchanges, unemployment-insurance laws, and poor-law regulations actually work. Indignantly rejecting the American description, 'dole system' [the author] points out that four-fifths of the British unemployment fund is contributed by the employers and workers. The book begins with a brief history of the employment exchange and ends with a chapter of excellent suggestions for expansion and improvement."—Nation

---

"This is a straightforward and unadorned account of the history, the present operation and the problems of the British employment exchange. Without undertaking to deal with the wisdom or unwisdom of the government's labor policies, it studies the exchange as an instrument for administering those policies. The book is not thrilling reading, but it treats competently every feature of the work of the exchange, and the reader lays it down with a fresh realization of the important part already played in the life of Great Britain's working people by this great institution, as yet scarcely twenty years old."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p12 D 30 '28 250w

"For approximately $7,000,000 a year Great Britain operates 410 employment exchanges and 752 branch employment offices as part of a comprehensive scheme for the relief of unemployment. That is less than one-third the cost of a capital ship, but it seems to be too expensive a venture for the richest nation in the world. It is possible that a few books like Mr. Seymour's will jar us awake; his analysis of the British system supplies valuable ammunition for an American campaign for a federal system of employment exchanges."

+ Nation 128:746 Je 19 '29 140w

SHAABER, MATTHIAS ADAM. Some forerunners of the newspaper in England, 1476-1622. 368p il $4 Press of the Univ. of Pa. [17s Milford]

072 English literature—History and criticism. Newspapers—England. Journalism 29-24766

The nature, format, and circulation of printed news in days prior to the first newspaper in 1622. Official proclamations, personal news, news of affairs of state, news published under partisan auspices, broadside ballads, and descriptions of monsters are among the types of printed news discussed.

"Mr. Shaaber has done an interesting and scholarly piece of investigation whose wide extent and thoroughness are proved by his documentation. It will have no little interest for the general reader to whom the subject is attractive, while for the student of the history of journalism it will be invaluable, since it is the first work to go carefully and extensively into its special field."

+ N Y Times p27 N 10 '29 500w

"Mr. Shaaber has shown so much learning and diligence in tracing and describing the various kinds of news pamphlets published after the invention of printing that it is much to be hoped that he will carry his researches a little farther back and describe the fascinating subject of the medieval bookshop and its wares."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p1073 D 19 '29 1000w

SHAND, PHILIP MORTON. Book of other wines than French. 224p $3.50 (10s 6d) Knopf

663.2 Wine and wine making

"Mr. Shand has already written about the wines of France. Here he deals with the wines even of Mr. Hoover's State of California. . . There is no country in Europe the wines of which are utterly neglected in this book—where the country grows wine at all. The survey wanders to Africa, Asia, South America, Australia and the islands of the sea."—N Y Times

Reviewed by F. M. Ford

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p3 Ag 18 '29 1100w

"It will not do to forget that beneath the literary froth we have been lightly skimming, this book is a very comprehensive 'who's who' in the international wine list." H. I. Brock

+ N Y Times p4 Ag 11 '29 2250w

SHANNON, FRED ALBERT. Organization and administration of the Union army, 1861-1865. 2v 323;348p il $25 Clark, A.H.

973.7 United States—History—Civil war. United States—Army 28-15871

"In vivid fashion the work supplements every existing history of the Civil War with the authentic story of the activities of government and people 'behind the lines' and the whole social history of the military part of the war. Its study of the Civil War's errors of omission and commission, moreover, offers many hints of practical value, in view of our next 'war to end war.' "—N Y Evening Post

"Dr. Shannon has written with such spirit that the interest never flags. He has gathered a mass of valuable information which, on the whole, he treats with discrimination; but he lays on the darker colors of the picture with so heavy a hand that the result is unduly sombre."

+ — Am Hist R 34:621 Ap '29 750w

Am Pol Sci R 23:222 F '29 150w

Ann Am Acad 141:280 Ja '29 280w

"It is a matter of regret that a work so unique in its field has been privately printed and that only seventy-five copies in excess of those subscribed for, are available, as it will not be long before it will be very difficult to secure a copy of a work that is of prime necessity to every student of American history."

+ Boston Transcript p4 O 10 '28 300w

"It is an admirable piece of research which should make the reputation of the author, who is professor of history in Kansas State Agricultural college, though the work is too expensive and the edition is too limited to circulate widely."

+ Christian Century 45:1430 N 22 '28 160w

"Its title does not suggest the live, continuous interest of Dr. Shannon's work. Based on original documents, absolutely authoritative, its presentation has the genuine 'reading' interest which insures a wide popularity." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p9m Ja 19 '29 120w

"The first comprehensive treatment of this subject."

+ R of Rs 78:adv34 N '28 30w

SHANNON, MONICA. Eyes for the dark. 311p il $2.50 Doubleday, Doran

Fairy tales 28-23339

While the stories in the book are separated into three groups—Fairy tales, Four old, old tales of gods and giants, and Here and how stories—they are all folk or fairy tales from the coast and the mountains of California. The drawings in black and white with one or two in color, are properly atmospheric.

Booklist 25:252 Mr '29

"All normal children will love this book."

+ Boston Transcript p5 N 7 '28 220w

"When Monica Shannon writes a story she seems to embark on a crusade of joy. Reading, you get the sensation of looking into a brimming, dancing pool of youth." C: J. Finger

+ N Y World p11m N 11 '28 50w

"We have no stories like these from anyone else to-day. The sights and sounds and smells, the sun, the moon, the stars, the winds, and living creatures of the high Sierras have passed through the creative nature of this author to come into being in the form of these gay fairy tales." B. E. Mahoney

+ Sat R of Lit 5:488 D 8 '28 370w

SHARP, DALLAS LORE. Boys' life of John Burroughs. 364p il $2 Century

B or 92 Burroughs, John 28-25867

This life of the sage of the Catskills, written for boys and girls, is founded on Dr Barrus's two volume "Life and letters of John Burroughs," and other books dealing with the life and personality of Burroughs. The author was a personal friend and admirer of John Burroughs.

" 'The Boys' Life of John Burroughs' is told in such a way that one becomes interested not only in Burroughs but in the humor and understanding given by Mr. Sharp. His writing has life and out-of-door strength to it." M. G. Bonner

+ N Y Times p28 D 16 '28 70w

St Louis 27:64 F '29

"It is a book strongly to be recommended to young people who love the woods, and can profit by a sense of the tradition of love and enjoyment and better knowledge which men like Audubon and Thoreau and Burroughs have carried on. Mr. Sharp, of course, was particularly fitted for his biographical task." H: S. Canby

+ Sat R of Lit 5:986 My 4 '29 150w

"The author of this book was happily chosen and the result is a sympathetic biography that would please many adult readers, possibly more than the boys for whom it was written. Full of the author's own personality."

+ Wis Lib Bul 24:348 D '28

SHAW, ALBERT. Abraham Lincoln; profusely [2] illustrated with contemporary cartoons, portraits and scenes. 2v set $8 Review of Reviews corp.

B or 92 Lincoln, Abraham. Caricatures and cartoons 30-572

"Dr. Shaw has begun an illustrated and critical record of Lincoln and the political history of his time which promises to supply the general reader with the most illuminating account yet produced. In the first of the two volumes now published fifty years are covered; in the second, only one. The first volume, entitled 'His Path to the Presidency,' traces and analyzes the slow process by which an obscure, awkward and poverty-stricken boy developed into a man who was recognized as Presidential 'timber.' The second volume entitled 'The Year of His Election,' covers the twelve months from the eastern speaking tour of which the Cooper Union speech was the 'high spot' to the inauguration."—N Y Evening Post

Boston Transcript p8 Ja 4 '30 600w

"With the instinct and the skill of an artist Dr. Shaw masses his innumerable details in such a way as to bring out rather than to confuse the main outlines of the picture. He is especially happy in his treatment of Douglas, making Lincoln's agile fellow Illinoisan a clear-cut figure in himself and in his relation to the two wings of his own party, to the Republican Party and to the nation, all without marring the proportions of the scene of which the 'Little Giant' was an animated and animating part." R. J. Davis

+ N Y Evening Post p11m D 28 '29 1000w

"The illustrations in these two volumes are splendid entertainment. As a matter of fact, there is as much reading matter as illustration, and this work may be classified as an actual life of Lincoln. But the pictures will hold your interest." Harry Hansen

+ N Y World p11 D 28 '29 1000w

"The free use of cartoons makes possible a fresh and graphic presentation of the politics of the period, which is immeasurably enhanced by the author's clear understanding of the whole course of American party contests, and especially of political action in the Mississippi Valley. One feels instinctively that a wealth of first-hand and definite information is behind every statement that is made concerning Lincoln or his political background."

+ R of Rs 81:12 Ja '30 600w

"Mr Shaw's volumes consist of pictures and of rather fragmentary but intelligent chapters which deal with the issues and personalities of the period. While these chapters add nothing to history, they perform a useful summarizing purpose for the uninformed reader, and show the major events and their backgrounds vividly and dispassionately, if at times a trifle evasively. They thus supplement the pictures in bringing before the reader's mind the early part of Lincoln's career and the issues which led to the rebellion. A serious defect of the work is that very often the original source of a caricature is not stated."

+ — Springf'd Republican p7e Ja 5 '30 850w

SHAWN, TED. Gods who dance. 208p il $7 Dutton

793.3 Dancing 29-10604

A book on the dance, its background and expressions, especially the dances of the Orient. The book is made from articles which appeared originally in The Dance magazine and have here been re-written.

Booklist 25:384 Jl '29

"Though the book reveals Mr. Shawn's deep interest in his art, and his almost naïve idealism, it was necessarily written a little hastily and superficially. It is always difficult to transcribe one art into the terms of another and so Mr. Shawn's verbal pictures never quite equal the emotion evoked by the dance he describes. In spite of these handicaps Mr. Shawn has written a pleasing diary, and is thoroughly aware of his limitations." Ruth Pickering

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 Jl 21 '29 1050w

"While one cannot say that Mr. Shawn writes as well as he dances, nevertheless he does write very well indeed in a simple, direct style that tries only to clarify into words the mass of impressions, observations and ideas that poured upon him in each country."

+ — N Y Times p20 My 12 '29 600w

St Louis 27:286 O '29

"A profusely illustrated book on the dances of the East, pleasantly and entertainingly written, vivid at times in the enthusiasm of his description and well adapted to supplement the scores of general travel books with a colorful glimpse into the dance. But as a study of the dance itself, it is superficial."

+ — Theatre Arts Mo 13:865 N '29 500w

SHAY, FRANK, comp. More pious friends and drunken companions; songs and ballads of conviviality. 190p il $2.50 Macaulay

811.08 Ballads, American. Folk songs, American. Drinking songs 28-22790

A second collection of ballads "snatched from a more beery and hilarious age," and illustrated like the first from engravings by John Held, jr.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p13 D 23 '28 170w

Springf'd Republican p7e N 11 '28 220w

SHEA, TIMOTHY, pseud. Sarah and son. 296p $2 Dodd

29-15478

Sarah, a Cockney girl in a New York music hall, has a baby. Her husband and professional partner, knowing that the child is a hindrance to their career, secretly deposits it as a foundling on the doorstep of a rich man whose wife, being childless, adopts the baby as her own. Sarah spends ten years thereafter searching for her husband in order to learn what has become of the child. She achieves fame in London as an actress, and finally learns, from the lips of her dying husband, the name of the boy's adopted parents. But when she sees her child at last, and learns of his love for the man and woman whom he calls father and mother, she makes the supreme sacrifice of motherhood and leaves her son with them.

"Despite the fact that the story covers a period of some ten years, it has the earmarks of a brief anecdote. It is not a slice of life, vivid and sharp and moving, as the author must have intended. It is one of those rambling confidences that you tell your friends over the dinner table, while the coffee is cooling. . . Timothy Shea writes about a passionate, frustrated mother. But because the mother is a living person, because the situation is almost incredibly curious, because the story calls for a rare and superb sense of irony which the author lacks, this dignified subject crumbles to a piece of idle gossip."

— Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Ag 25 '29 450w

" 'Sarah and Son' is a fairly good externalized story of mother love, with sufficient plot and fictional characterization to keep up the reader's interest until the not unexpected dénouement is reached. But it is not a powerful or moving transcript of real life."

— + Sat R of Lit 6:256 O 12 '29 170w

SHEEHAN, PATRICK AUGUSTINE. Tristram Lloyd; a novel; ed. and completed by H. Gaffney; with a biographical appendix by H. J. Heuser. 320p $2.50 (7s 6d) Longmans

28-25624

The manuscript of this novel was found, incomplete, among the papers of the late Canon Sheehan. The Rev H. M. Gaffney has edited and completed the book. The story is that of an Irish journalist, Tristram Lloyd, who loved his sister unselfishly all his life; of the unhappy life and miserable death of the sister, and of Tristram's final happiness.

"The speeches dealing with social evils in this Irish novel have more vitality and seeming actuality than the characters who utter them. The characters revolve around ideas, instead of the ideas evolving from the situations in which the author has placed them."

N Y Times p14 Ag 25 '29 300w

Pratt p38 spring '29

SHEEN, FULTON JOHN. Life of all living; the philosophy of life. 236p $1.75 Century [7s 6d Burns, Oates]

239 Christian life 29-3917

"A Roman Catholic work, in which Dr. Sheen, of the Faculty of Theology, Catholic University of America, writes not in proof of the truths of Christianity but a 'description and an analogy of these verities in terms of life.' The role of reason, he contends, is not to prove Christianity, but to offer persuasion that it is not contrary to reason; such is his purpose here."—Times [London] Lit Sup

"Dr. Sheen of the Catholic University of Washington is blessed with the happy faculty of being able to present the sublime mysteries of the Christian Gospel in a style at once clear cut and attractive, and in a language the modern age understands." B. L. C.

+ Cath World 129:373 Je '29 460w

Cleveland Open Shelf p120 S '29

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw

R of Rs 79:24 Ap '29 80w

Times [London] Lit Sup p727 S 19 '29 60w

SHEEN, FULTON JOHN. Religion without God. 368p $3.50 (15s) Longmans

201 Religion—Philosophy. Philosophy and religion. God 28-25556

"This book by a professor of theology in the Catholic University of America at Washington is divided into three logically connected parts. The first, fortified by abundant quotations, presents a summary of the religion without God which is now recommended to us by so many professors of the higher learning and so many preachers of the lower theology. The second part studies the antecedents of this position in the history of thought. And the third submits it to critical examination."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

"Particularly good, perhaps the best single feature of the book, is the discussion of the proposition that the revelations of modern science require a new religion and a new God. . . Dr. Sheen has given us a well-woven work which will do its share in recalling people from sentimentality to logic. It is an achievement very much to his credit." W: L. Sullivan

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 F 24 '29 720w

J Religion 9:663 O '29 100w

"This indictment of the treatment of the conception of God in modern philosophy forms a pendant to the writer's previous work on another aspect of the same theme, 'God and Intelligence.' Dr. Sheen is permeated with all the learning and acuteness of the school of Louvain, and if there is plenty of hard hitting in this work, there is also a shrewd perception of when and where to strike."

Times [London] Lit Sup p31 Ja 10 '29 200w

SHELLABARGER, SAMUEL (JOHN ESTE-[2] VEN, pseud.). Black gale. 381p $2.50 Century 29-19519

Jacklin Baron, the wife of Clifton Baron, New York lawyer, meets on their way to Europe Morier Ravanel, gambler and ex-flying ace. She goes to Paris with him. Clifton never learns of her unfaithfulness; when he discovers her love for Ravanel, he believes that she withstood temptation and returned to New York because of her duty to him. Following Baron's death some time later, Jacklin goes back to Paris, and finds Ravanel, as the result of a duel, paralyzed, poverty-stricken and demoralized. She declares her love for him, however, and nurses him back to something like normal physical and mental health.

"It is a distinctive treatment of an old theme that has so often been used by mediocrity that when a novelist of merit uses it, there comes a feeling of surprise. However, in this case, the result more than justifies the choice."

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 20 '29 450w

"From the audience that finds its pleasure in books of 'The Sheik' and Ethel M. Dell type, 'The Black Gale' should receive a hearty welcome. It possesses those ingredients which make books of that kind popular. . . The whole story is clothed in language that excites the emotions by its appeal to the reader's interest in vivid color, in rich apparel, in luxurious settings, in wealth, in riotous living, in superlative beauty."

N Y Times p31 N 24 '29 150w

SHELLEY, PERCY BYSSHE. Letters; sel. with an introd. by R. Brimley Johnson. 200p $2.50 Dodd

B or 92 29-11509

Mr Brimley Johnson has chosen these letters, some of which were discovered as recently as August, 1928, to represent, as far as possible every aspect of Shelley's mind at different crises of its development, and every stage of his life and character.

"Mr. Johnson's procedure is simplicity itself: He assumes none of the responsibilities of an editor, bothers neither with dates nor the accuracy of texts, but takes his letters as he finds them, relying upon the editorial work of others. In this case he has relied upon that of Roger Ingpen. Mr. Johnson's introductions are equally effortless; he simply recites familiar facts, contributing few original comments. But his account of Shelley's life would, I think, muddle the reader who was already familiar with the details of the story. The letters that Mr. Johnson has chosen reveal the variations of Shelley as a correspondent. We need not agree with Matthew Arnold (who placed Shelley's letters above his poems) to think that these are good letters." B. R. Redman

+ — Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p10 Je 9 '29 250w

"His letters show him to have possessed an understanding far above that of the youth of his time. . . His letters add nothing to his fame as a poet, nor do they reveal the imaginative side of his temperament. But they certainly markedly accent the serious tenor of his mind." C. K. H.

Boston Transcript p5 Mr 30 '29 350w

SHELTON, JANE DE FOREST. Salt-box house; eighteenth century life in a New England hill town. 302p il $2 Scribner

917.46 Connecticut—Social life and customs

A new edition of this bit of old New England life. It is a chronicle of eighteenth-century days in one of the quaint Connecticut "salt-box" houses, so called from the resemblances their high sloping roofs had to the old-fashioned table salt-boxes. The book is an intimate sketch of life as it was lived from day to day, humorous, pathetic, and full of interesting comment on domestic and social observances of the time.

Reviewed by H: S. Commager

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 My 19 '29 600w

Boston Transcript p10 Mr 30 '29 250w

"As the narrative record of one particular family, the book is not without interest, but its potent claim to the public's attention lies in the richness and detail of its reconstruction of Colonial and Revolutionary life."

+ N Y Times p5 Mr 17 '29 400w

SHEPARD, ODELL. Joys of forgetting; a book of bagatelles; with a foreword by Walter de la Mare. 278p $3 Houghton [7s 6d Allen & U.]

814 29-26265

A book of mellow and witty meditations on such diverse topics as unicorns, hobby horses, pigs and black magic. The title essay is an invitation to the luxury of forgetting and the last is a belated tribute to printers.

Booklist 25:278 Ap '29

"Mr. Shepard belongs to the stalwart but thinking ranks of those who look upon the battle against the commonplace as the most important of struggles. He is armed against the 'cult of gracelessness' and in defense of such inutile but beautiful things as dolls, hobbyhorses, unicorns and the joys of forgetting. They could not have a more winning champion."

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p25 Mr 24 '29 180w

Boston Transcript p2 Mr 30 '29 1100w

"The leisurely style as of a man waiting for an old scene or a long ago happy thought to come back to him gives to this volume, a peculiar charm, the sense of wandering in some old-world garden where the Freudians cease from troubling and the Einsteins are no more."

+ Cath World 129:506 Jl '29 270w

"It was worth a book of random papers to have the essay which gives its title to Odell Shepard's new book, for it is one of the finest essays by a contemporary." Edwin Seaver

+ N Y Evening Post p11m F 16 '29 130w

"Mr. Shepard is a little precious, a little too conscious of the sweet whimsicality of the essay form, and a little too concerned with the bright twist of phrases. Still, he has his moments of charm." Herbert Gorman

— + N Y Times p15 Ag 11 '29 150w

Reviewed by Herschel Brickell

No Am 227:adv Ap '29 50w

"A book of essays serenely gay, carrying a mellow wisdom beneath its irony and pleasant humour, is a particularly useful discovery as a pillow-book. This is a good bedside book, gently stimulating but not a soporific."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p90 F 7 '29 880w

Wis Lib Bul 25:125 Ap '29

SHEPARD, ODELL, ed. Contemporary essays. (Modern student's lib.) 348p $1 Scribner

824 English essays. American essays 29-10396

"These thirty-two essays by English and American contemporary writers center around Hanford Henderson's 'The Aristocratic Spirit.' By 'the aristocratic spirit' is not meant antagonism to or antithesis of democracy though it is opposed to all mob rule. It does mean individualism of the best type. 'The aristocrat is a devotee, a seeker after perfection, a knight-errant bent upon a tireless quest.' "—Boston Transcript

"The essays are chosen, not picked up in haphazard fashion. They are well chosen too—from the point of their writing and their spirit."

+ Boston Transcript p5 Je 8 '29 230w

Reviewed by Edwin Seaver

N Y Evening Post p11m Ap 27 '29 110w

"Mr Shepard's purpose of extoling individuality and variety in human character and an exacting standard of personal culture is one which is commendable in itself and very well served by all but a few of the essays chosen. In fact, few collections of general essays average so high a quality as this."

+ Springf'd Republican p8 Ap 20 '29 820w

SHEPARDSON, WHITNEY HART. Agricultural education in the United States. 132p $1.50 Macmillan

630.7 Agricultural education 29-11097

A survey of agricultural education in the United States, founded upon a report made for the officers and trustees of the General Education Board "in the hope that it might provide some suggestions as to the more important needs of agricultural education, and the way in which foundation funds might help to meet them." (Preface) Contents: The nation and its agriculture; The system of agricultural education; The history of the agricultural colleges; Service and education; Science, agriculture, and education; The botanical sciences—plant physiology; Observations on science and research in the agricultural colleges.

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p19 Ag 25 '29 130w

"A readable book on a subject of immediate interest to those concerned with state universities and colleges of agriculture."

+ J Home Econ 21:683 S '29 170w

Pratt p14 autumn '29

St Louis 27:308 N '29

SHERLOCK, CHESLA CLELLA. City and suburban gardening. 186p il $2 De La Mare

716 Gardening. Gardens 28-23004

An experienced gardener talks informally of the small garden in the city or the country, how to make it, what plants to choose for it, and how to make them grow.

Booklist 25:200 F '29

"In a conversational style that is at once concise and packed with information, he writes of the different phases and stages and elements of making a beautiful garden out of what would otherwise be an unsightly yard."

+ N Y Times p7 Mr 3 '29 120w

SHERMAN, MANDEL, and SHERMAN, MRS IRENE (CASE). Process of human behavior. 227p il $3 Norton

158 Child study. Behaviorism (psychology). Emotions. Nervous system 29-9637

"The aim is to outline the principles underlying the processes of human behavior and the important factors which influence it; to describe the working of the human organism as a whole, and the genesis and development of the methods by which adjustments of the individual to his environment are effected. Throughout the book experimental data have been presented in order to make clear the discussion of the various principles outlined."—Introd.

Am J Soc 35:516 N '29 220w

"The growth of personality is but one of the topics which Dr. and Mrs. Sherman discuss with skill and support with thoroughly convincing data."

+ Bookm 69:viii Ag '29 100w

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p29 S 8 '29 120w

Boston Transcript p5 Je 8 '29 450w

"The plan of the book from beginning to end has been excellently conceived, showing clearly and concisely how, with successive steps in the phylogenetic scale, behavior becomes increasingly complex." M. A. Durea

+ — J Home Econ 21:605 Ag '29 420w

Reviewed by M. E. Harding

N Y Times p2 Jl 14 '29 750w

Outlook 151:626 Ap 17 '29 40w

St Louis 27:303 N '29

"This is not a very juicy but it is a nutritious book. It describes in intelligent terms the early stages of the budding intelligence. . . This contribution to the process of human behavior will find its place among the useful source-books of information on the shelves of students, including parents, of children."

+ Sat R of Lit 5:1152 Je 29 '29 400w

"This is a lucidly written book, which, in its completely earnest tone offers a pleasant contrast to current attempts to set psychology to jazz. It sets forth the development of the individual from a very special point of view, namely the behavioristic descriptive one, and, though necessarily didactically, presents a great deal of interesting work in the field of infant behavior, prefaced by a general account of the growth and function of the nervous system, and followed by an attempt to carry on the same point of view into work with older children and adults." B. D. Lewin, M.D.

+ Survey 63:106 O '29 450w

SHERRIFF, ROBERT CEDRIC. Journey's end; a play in three acts. 204p $2 Brentano's

822 29-10492

" 'Journey's End' is utterly simple and quiet, consisting as it does of conversations among a handful of British officers in one undistinguished dugout before St. Quentin in March, 1918. There is very little booming of guns, though the Germans are only seventy yards away in dugouts which one realizes are just like this one. Death comes in due time, and comes to all of the men whose acquaintances we have made. They are all our good friends, all decent civilians like ourselves. It is only by a trick of fate that these particular men should be in this trench at this time, under orders to meet the great German attack on Thursday morning. . . After an almost intolerable suspense the worst happens, the trench is demolished, and the play ends."—Nation

Booklist 25:353 Je '29

"The characters in this play are real, their talk is real, the British pathos of emotion suppressed under irrelevancies, are real. Real. too, is the lack of beginning and end. The play is almost artlessly a slice of life from the trenches." W. P. Eaton

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p22 My 5 '29 150w

Cleveland Open Shelf p139 N '29

" 'Journey's End' is probably the best war play we have had so far. . . The English author may have had no other intention than to write a good play. He has done that, but in addition he has furnished all lovers of war a spectacle which will leave them thoroughly sick around the heart, or in the pit of the stomach, or wherever the imagination of man resides. They will remain free to believe that war is good for warriors. I do not see how they can ever suppose again that it is good for nine hundred and ninety-nine citizens out of a thousand." Mark Van Doren

+ Nation 128:434 Ap 10 '29 420w

"There is the story, there is the study of Captain Stanhope, and there is, finally—the dominant quality of 'Journey's End'—its lyricism. The most striking thing about this English play is this underlying poetic feeling, not a poetry of the imagination so much, but rather a poetry of human concern. . . Through this innate lyricism 'Journey's End' finds the basis on which it rests, and becomes true in its own way, and, with its sentiment, shyness and passion, is so moving and beautiful." Stark Young

+ New Repub 58:225 Ap 10 '29 1400w

Reviewed by Edgar Johnson

— N Y Evening Post p11m My 11 '29 150w

"The most interesting play the present season has seen, heart-breaking in its pity, wise with the wisdom of tolerance, rich in its sense of character, and magnificent in its restraint." J: M. Brown

+ Sat R of Lit 5:1021 My 18 '29 900w

"The essence of the play is fear and waste—and the study of what kinds of courage brought men through. . . You get the sense of what war does to gentlemen, not unafraid, but afraid, and there is a hint of the old idea that English wars are won on the cricket fields of Eton. Here is good sportsmanship, no grousing, dressing to hold up morale, and a constant play of burlesque, irony, wise-cracks, to keep the chin up and the mind level." Leon Whipple

+ Survey 62:575 S 1 '29 360w

"The play is moving to witness and scarcely less moving to read. It passes with admirable security between the two pitfalls that endanger present writing on the late War—the pitfall of flag-waving or, alternatively, of pacific sentimentality. Mr. Sherriff is unafraid of the sentiment that is part of the nature of man, but he never swerves from his own austere view of the truth to the flattery of legend. The result is a remarkably solid and satisfying transcription of life."

+ Times [London] Lit Sup p114 F 14 '29 430w

"It is a genuinely great play; in so short a space it is impossible to convey any real impression of its exceptional values, its individuality in 'war literature,' or in the theatre." Coley Taylor

+ World Tomorrow 12:314 Jl '29 350w

SHERWIN, OSCAR. Mr. Gay; being a picture of the life and times of the author of the Beggar's opera. 184p $2.50 Day

B or 92 Gay, John 29-10390

The life and times of England when the Beggar's opera was written and the London in which it was produced are vividly brought to life in this charming little book about John Gay.

Booklist 25:393 Jl '29

Bookm 69:vi Jl '29 170w

"Vivacious and engaging book, one of whose most absorbing chapters is devoted to that amazing case of frenzied finance, the 'South Sea Bubble.' " P: Bowdoin

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p5 My 26 '29 1450w

Cleveland Open Shelf p108 Jl '29

"The charm of this graceful biography of a light and—save for the production of 'The Beggar's Opera' and the warm friendship he inspired in Swift, Pope and hundreds of less famous contemporaries—ineffectual life lies in its sparkling faceting of the vivid early Augustan times in which Gay had his being." F. H. M.

+ N Y Evening Post p10m My 11 '29 100w

Reviewed by Edwin Clark

N Y Times p6 My 12 '29 1100w

Pratt p34 autumn '29

"Mr. Sherwin's book is obviously an attempt to profit by the amazing willingness of present-day Americans to purchase anything classified as biography."

— Sat R of Lit 5:1074 Je 1 '29 150w

Wis Lib Bul 25:194 Je '29

SHERWOOD, MERRIAM, and MANTZ, HAROLD ELMER. Road to Cathay. 251p il $3.50 Macmillan

915 Voyages and travels. Asia—Description and travel. China—Description and travel. Tatars 28-23074

A continuous story of the East in the thirteenth century made from ten stories of five famous travellers of those days and the tales in the Book of Sir John de Mandeville. The travellers are Friar John of Plano Carpini, Friar Odoric the Bohemian, William of Rubruquis, Ibn Batuta the Moor, and Marco Polo of Venice.

"This book is a practical guide to and from Cathay with interesting pictures and maps, but lacking an index for ready reference to such treasure as 'singing sands,' 'spirit voices,' 'the gorge of devils,' Gog and Magog, the Golden Horde and the discovery of Trade Winds." H. S. Wright

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 Jl 14 '29 500w

Boston Transcript p12 D 8 '28 280w

"Wholly satisfactory book for slightly older boys and girls."

+ N Y Evening Post p10m N 10 '28 50w

"The authors of 'The Road to Cathay' give us a good and fairly accurate picture of those times, deriving their information from standard and trustworthy sources." Manual Komroff

+ N Y Times p15 D 23 '28 700w

"The accounts of Marco Polo, of William of Rubruck, of 'Mandeville,' of friar John of Plano Carpini, of Friar Odoric the Bohemian, and of

SHERWOOD, M., and MANTZ, H. E.—Cont.
Ibn Batuta the Moor have been cleverly excerpted and compared in a running narrative retaining the fascinating phrase of the original account in copious quotation, while the whole story of the ancient Eastern World as it was known to the old traveller unrolls in the clear commentary and interesting explanation of the authors themselves." W: R. Benét
+ Sat R of Lit 5:486 D 8 '28 1150w

"This book is an excellent compilation of early Asiatic travels, and serves to recall important writings as well as to introduce the reader to realms of adventure."
+ Springf'd Republican p10 Jl 24 '29 500w

SHERWOOD, ROBERT EMMET. Queen's husband. 190p $2 (7s 6d) Scribner
812 28-27674

The queen of an imaginary kingdom rules her household with a firm hand, rushing her daughter into marriage with an unloved prince and her husband into acquiescence to the marriage. After a train of amusing complications, the king defies the queen to bring about a happy ending.

---

Booklist 25:65 N '28

Reviewed by W. P. Eaton
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p9 D 30 '28 100w
Cleveland Open Shelf p28 F '29
N Y Evening Post p10m N 10 '28 120w

Reviewed by Paul Sifton
N Y World p11m D 16 '28 700w
St Louis 26:286 D '28

Reviewed by J: M. Brown
Sat R of Lit 5:1093 Je 8 '29 100w

"The Queen's Husband, while not up to The Road to Rome is nevertheless a lively satire, if occasionally obvious. Mr. Sherwood, like Shaw, doubles the entertainment in a reading text with highly amusing directions and notes on characters."
+ — Theatre Arts Mo 13:387 My '29 160w
Wis Lib Bul 24:302 N '28

SHIBLEY, FRED WARNER. New way to net profits; with foreword by Donaldson Brown. 213p $3 Harper
658 Business management. Efficiency, Industrial 28-29895

The new way to net profits is here defined as a system of business administration so intelligently conceived as to effect the most profitable result with the smallest outlay of capital investment. This plan includes market study, scientific methods of merchandising and distribution, forecasting of sales, production planning, budgetary control, competent management, research and analysis.

---

Reviewed by C: P. Tolman
Am Econ R 19:297 Je '29 450w
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p14 Mr 10 '29 80w

"In the development of his subject matter, Mr. Shibley introduces new and novel treatment in the analysis of markets, methods of merchandising, and his chapter on distribution is certain to afford the reader decidedly constructive thinking."
+ Boston Transcript p4 Ja 2 '29 280w

Reviewed by Evans Clark
N Y Times p7 F 24 '29 1400w

Reviewed by W: B. Shaw
R of Rs 79:14 Ap '29 250w
St Louis 27:94 Mr '29
Wis Lib Bul 25:274 Jl '29

SHIEL, MATTHEW PHIPPS. Cold steel. 303p $2.50 Vanguard press [7s 6d Gollancz]
29-10223

"The scene of 'Cold Steel' is laid in the rousing time of King Henry VIII and its matter is adventure rather than mystery. Hairbreadth escapes fairly chase each other through its pages, plot foils or is vanquished by counterplot; gallant noblemen, fair maidens, necromancers, kindly friars, the king, Wolsey and all the rest are scrambled in its pageantry."—Books (N Y Herald Tribune)

---

For biographical sketch of the author see Wilson bulletin 3:612 My '29

---

Bookm 69:xxiv Ag '29 130w

"Mr. Shiel contrives a feeling of pleasant breathlessness—adventure lies ahead, but glamour all around, and one is fairly overwhelmed by the things to see and do in each overflowing moment." Mary Ross
Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p7 My 5 '29 530w

"The author apparently takes his work seriously, as the tale finally shapes itself to tragedy, but the reader can hardly do so, although he will be entertained through most of the pages of this historical thriller. The rapid pace of the tale is sustained throughout. And any one chapter might serve as material for a short adventure story."
+ Boston Transcript p4 Je 15 '29 120w

"It is a glorious excursion into the incredible. There is nothing remotely like it in the archives of English literature. What does it matter if the facts of history are shuffled or scotched so long as the men and women in this book breathe out their unreal lives in brilliant flames of permanent remembrance." E. M. Benson
+ Nation 129:45 Jl 10 '29 200w

"He knows much, many words and many facts, and he has a very fertile imagination; but he is stultified by complete inability to control his knowledge and his imagination. If Mr. Shiel possesses a sense of humor, he must have found it difficult to write this book: if a reader possesses a sense of humour, he will find it difficult to read."
— Nation and Ath 45:212 My 11 '29 100w

"Speed and quantity have never been pushed to such a pitch as in this historical romance. Such an astonishing book is obviously sufficient excuse for its shortcomings. Yet in the rush of the present work there is at times a satisfying sincerity of emotion. At other times the impulse for swifter action and more deeply contrasted colors drives the author's sentimental passages dangerously near to bathos." C. A. Chapman
+ — New Repub 59:269 Jl 24 '29 360w

"This romantic extravaganza of Mr. Shiel's is a curious treasury of beautiful prose." E. M. Benson
+ N Y Evening Post p7m Je 15 '29 680w

"The tale moves with the utmost swiftness. The reader is made fairly giddy with the constant flashing of swords. . . Mr. Shiel's somewhat turgid style is well suited to this fantastic tale."
N Y Times p9 My 12 '29 730w

"It is neo-romanticism; in style a collaboration of Swinburne, Wyndham Lewis, Maurice Hewlett, and a percussion instrument. We enjoyed the book; but let us give you a word of warning. Don't buy it as historical romance. Although many of its characters figure in history and its settings, in geography, it recreates no scene of this earth, recaptures no lost human essence. Read it as adventure, as poetic allegory, best of all as a literary curiosity; but not as a historical novel, for the quality of that form of art is lacking."
+ Outlook 152:69 My 8 '29 150w

"Mr. Shiel's imagination is well served by his vocabulary, a record-breaking vocabulary, surely the largest ever handled by a novelist. He uses so many words he hardly seems to use the same one twice. His imagination kindles at an odd word; the more such words he can cram in, the more turgid, passionate and effective does his style become. He writes in a high fever and he puts into the simplest statement (if he makes one) the maximum of rhetoric."
Sat R 147:364 Mr 16 '29 300w

"The power of Mr. Shiel is indeed of unique amalgam. You may rush through chapters of wild melodrama to find yourself shaken by a sudden crisis, impassioned and terrible, into awe and pity and wonder."

+ Spec 142:sup475 Mr 23 '29 170w

Times [London] Lit Sup p256 Mr 28 '29 500w

SHIEL, MATTHEW PHIPPS. Dr. Krasinski's secret. 337p $2.50 Vanguard press

29-20889

"It is a bizarre and complicated story of a sinister Polish doctor's devilish machinations to gain possession of an immense fortune through the sly murder of its two male inheritors."—N Y World

---

"This is a mystery story and a fairy tale and a scientific extravaganza and an Irish romance, written with tremendous gusto. Mr. Shiel pelts us with words as small boys pelt each other with snowballs. . . I had forgotten there were so many words in the language. That they can all be made to pull equably in harness is a triumph of legerdermain. What does it matter if some of them don't mean anything? What does it matter if all of them taken together do not mean very much? It does not even matter greatly if many of the things they do mean are not true." A. B. Parsons

Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p2 N 24 '29 750w

"Here is a narrative of events to hold one spellbound; to send that shiver down the spine which the poets declare to be the evidence of a mighty revelation in the embodied expression. Here is the sheer abandon of an imagination that is hypnotic, that sweeps the reader along on a winging brilliancy of phrasing that is as irresistible as magic. . . A brilliant and profound story compounded of almost every mode of fictional texture, romance, adventure, mystery, realism, mesmerism." W. S. B.

+ Boston Transcript p7 N 13 '29 850w

"Such fantastic material displayed with such fantastic rhetoric delights the reader while his mind is still between the covers, but once finished, this book slips easily out of memory." J. I. N.

New Repub 61:205 Ja 8 '30 220w

Reviewed by E. M. Benson

N Y Evening Post p10m N 2 '29 550w

"This new book of his, for all its talk of science, of Pasteur and bio-chemistry, is of the stuff of dreams. Not pleasant dreams, but those which all but verge on nightmare. . . 'Dr. Krasinski's Secret' is the curious, unusual and very interesting product of an imagination at once vivid and fantastic."

N Y Times p7 N 10 '29 1000w

"An extraordinary, curiously uneven tale, a strange and brilliant concoction indeed, which, whether one likes it or not, must be conceded a work of startling originality. . . The book should not be indiscriminately recommended, but for a necessarily limited field of congenial readers it should provide an imaginative debauch of staggering proportions." E. C. Beckwith

N Y World p11m O 13 '29 380w

Reviewed by W. R. Brooks

Outlook 153:387 N 6 '29 120w

"The book fairly bombards one with grotesque happenings. Some send the authentic shudder to the heart; some miss fire exaggeratedly and sputter off into the ludicrous. The latest biochemical profundity will be protected only by a bit of punctuation from mumbo-jumbo that might have come from the behexed neighborhood of York, Pennsylvania. M. P. Shiel has studied medicine and bacteriology, but he has loved magic. It is difficult to determine which gives him greater delight—the elaborate and minute tracing out of cause and effect, or the abrupt presentation of the uncaused and uncausable." Gladys Graham

Sat R of Lit 6:520 D 7 '29 680w

SHMELEV, IVAN SERGIEEVICH. Inexhaustible Cup; tr. from the Russian by Tatiana Dechtereva France. 147p $2 Dutton

28-21378

Ilia, a Russian peasant boy, is sent by his master to Rome to study painting. He returns to his village to dedicate his talent to the service of the church. The master's young wife is kind to him and with her Ilia falls reverently, ecstatically in love. Into his painting of her as the virgin of the Inexhaustible Cup, he pours all of his youthful genius, and having finished the marvelous ikon, dies.

---

"Shmelov's naïve, unquestioning mysticism, his elemental peasant-faith, somehow fail to carry over in the English version, which is awkward and ungrammatical in the extreme. Also, the book means very little unless one is familiar with the hagiology of the Greek Orthodox Church." C. P. Fadiman

— Bookm 68:589 Ja '29 230w

"It is a nice story, as naive and as pleasant to contemplate as an ikon." Dorothy Brewster

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p8 D 23 '28 220w

"Just how one is struck by Shmelov's story depends largely on how sentimental one is or how one feels toward the old Russia. It is the sort of thing which would make a Bolshevik throw back his head and bark like a dog. . . It has charm, rhythm, a sustained mood, but it is a bit too sweet." Arthur Ruhl

Sat R of Lit 5:214 O 13 '28 460w

SHOOK, MRS ANNA NOTT (STRUNK). Book of weaving. 190p il $10 Day

677 Weaving 28-30613

Weaving as an avocation has proved both delightful and profitable to many. For those who wish to learn the art Mrs Shook has written a helpful handbook of detailed instructions with diagrams illustrated in color from photographs of pieces woven by her pupils. The book gives also a brief history of weaving and valuable advice as to design and color.

---

Booklist 25:350 Je '29

"Mrs. Shook materially aids less experienced weavers with the admirable glossary and directions which she supplies. Chapters on Weaving as an Avocation, Weaving in Occupational Therapy and so on are very interesting, but beside the point from the practical weaver's view. Beautiful colored plates add to the charm of the book, but it may well be asked whether drafts of patterns would not be of greater utility." A. F. H.

+ — Boston Transcript p2 D 15 '28 350w

J Home Econ 21:209 Mr '29 80w

N Y New Tech Bks 14:15 Ja '29

"The loom and its equipment, the necessary materials, design, dyeing, color—everything essential and many things inspirational have been literally 'woven' into this fascinating book. Individual experiences of those who, under varied circumstance, have taken up weaving as an avocation add a practical as well as a human interest touch to a book of unusual excellence."

+ School Arts M 28:x Ja '29 170w

SHORE, P. R. Bolt. 299p $2 Dutton [3s 6d Methuen]

30-853

Tradition and superstitution centering about Foakes Green in a little English village contribute the background to this mystery tale. Following a Fair Day festival, the new Mrs Harrison—a lady with a somewhat misty past—is found killed by an "elf-bolt" (arrowhead) near the prehistoric altar on Foakes Green. She had not been popular in the village, and any of a number of people had sufficient motive for murder. But Miss Leslie, of Dower House, who tells the story, aids Inspector Grier by proving her theory that the murderer is X, the unknown, who was acquainted with the victim at some time in her mysterious past.

---

SHORE, P. R.—Continued

"Well written and thoroughly engaging baffler." Will Cuppy

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p20 D 8 '29 180w

"The sordid tragedy enacted on the superstitiously avoided Foakes Green is vividly and artistically drawn, and the unusual setting for a modern story of crime and death makes it all the more realistic and terrible." G. B.

+ Boston Transcript p6 N 30 '29 500w

"The story is carefully written, a great deal of pains has been taken over the characterization and the setting of an ingenious plot."

Times [London] Lit Sup p593 Jl 25 '29 220w

SHOTWELL, JAMES THOMSON. War as an instrument of national policy, and its renunciation in the pact of Paris. 310p $3.50 Harcourt

341.2 War. Pact of Paris. United States—Foreign relations 29-3416

Mr Shotwell's careful analysis of the Pact of Paris is preceded by a study of its diplomatic history. In the appendices may be found official papers bearing on the pact.

"Professor Shotwell is wise in not seeking to draw ultimate conclusions. He has given the documentary record enriched with dispassionate comment and the consequences will take care of themselves. To the reviewer, as to the author, the record shows that we have made a long step forward." N. D. Baker

+ Am Hist R 34:842 Jl '29 620w

"The book is well written and makes a contribution which will be appreciated by all students of world affairs. The title is somewhat misleading, for only the first forty pages deal with war as an instrument of national policy. They consist of little more than a brief summary of the conclusions that war has become a means of national self-destruction." F: L. Schuman

+ Am J Soc 35:130 Jl '29 750w

"With marked literary skill, Professor Shotwell contributes a broad historical background and a suggestive, if not wholly convincing, statement of the influence of public opinion on the negotiations. As a distinguished champion of popular diplomacy, Professor Shotwell sets high the contribution of public opinion and unofficial agencies to the result." J. P. Baxter, 3rd.

+ — Am Pol Sci R 23:779 Ag '29 230w

"While there are a few instances of what may be regarded as parental enthusiasm, the author is, on the whole, quite sound in his exposition of the subject. The book is to be warmly commended." B: H. Williams

+ Ann Am Acad 143:377 My '29 160w

Booklist 25:234 Mr '29

"This is an important book, meeting an obvious and immediate need." R. L. Buell

+ Books (N Y Herald Tribune) p1 Ja 20 '29 1200w

Boston Transcript p4 Ja 2 '29 630w

"These who agree that war can be done away with, or, to use the familiar term, outlawed, will find their opinions fortified and their faith strengthened by the generally hopeful tone of what Professor Shotwell has to say. On the other hand, the skeptics who doubt the ability of conferences or treaties to work a radical change in human nature, will put down Professor Shotwell's book with a feeling that it is, on the whole, more encouraging than convincing." W: Macdonald

Nation 128:136 Ja 30 '29 620w

"It should be read by everyone who is concerned with foreign politics and the problem of preventing war."

+ Nation and Ath 45:280 My 25 '29 70w

Reviewed by P. H. Douglas

+ New Repub 58:102 Mr 13 '29 680w

